The majority opinion states that "The act alone, however, cannot be the source of title to any mineral lands. As Justice Fields stated in Barden v. Northern Pacific R. R. Co., supra, the Railroad Grant Act of July 25, 1866, when it excepted mineral lands meant that title to all mineral lands was to remain in the United States, and no rights to such lands could in any way pass to the railroad."

But one conclusion can be drawn from the above-quoted statement attributed to Justice Fields in the Barden case, and that is, that the writer of the majority opinion did not read the whole of said decision. The point which is made in the Barden case and which the majority opinion seems completely to have ignored or overlooked is, and I solicit indulgence for repetition, that land known to contain mineral in paying quantities may not be patented under said act to the railroads, but that it is recognized that minerals are often not discovered at the time of the issuance of patent, or that the mineral content is not known at that time to be sufficient to classify the lands as being more valuable for mineral than for agricultural purposes; nevertheless, that title cannot be allowed to float around unsettled indefinitely ad infinitum; that the time of the issuance of patent is the best time to settle once and for all who shall have title to the land; that in view of the mineral land exception in the granting act, a determination as to the character of land is necessary before patent thereto can issue; that said determination shall be conclusive in order to make the title conveyed by said patent settled and permanent regardless of the fact that minerals might later be discovered therein.

The majority opinion criticizes the citation by plaintiffs of Burke v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., supra; West v. Standard Oil Co., supra; and Davis v. Weibbold, 139 U.S. 507, 11 S.Ct. 628, 35 L.Ed. 238, as authority for the statement that a patent to railroad land is conclusive as to the agricultural character of the land, stating that these cases concern only the rights of a mining claimant coming into existence after the securing of the agricultural patent.

It is true that in Davis v. Weibbold, supra, the town-site patent under which defendant claimed the lands in controversy antedated the discovery of minerals therein. The case of Burke v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., supra, however, did not involve a subsequent discovery of minerals. In said case certain lands were located as mineral claims in 1892. Subsequent thereto on May 9, 1892, the defendant railroad company with knowledge of said prior claims made application to have the same land patented to it under the Railroad Grant Act of July 27, 1866, 14 Stat. 292, and the Joint Resolution of 1870, 16 Stat. 382. The railroad company made a false affidavit, no notice of hearing was given, and a patent was issued on July 10, 1894. The original mineral claimants failed to perform their assessment work for one year, whereupon the present claimants in March, 1909, relocated said land as placer mining claims. The court held that the government had never brought a bill in equity to have the patent vacated or annulled, that the time for so doing had expired, that there was no privity between the plaintiffs and the original mineral claimants, that the patent could not be successfully attacked by strangers who had no interest in the land at the time the patent was issued and were not prejudiced by it. It was further held that the patent though issued without investigation on the part of the land officers was conclusive though the land was afterward ascertained to be mineral.

The case of West v. Standard Oil Co., supra, is authority for the proposition for which it was cited, but itself involves a different question. The Standard Oil Company claimed certain school lands under patent from the state of California. The Act of 1853, granting school lands to the states, made no provision for determining the character of such lands or for the exclusion from the grant of the land found to contain mineral; it did not provide for the issuance of patents; and no patent nor any evidence of title had been issued to the state. The Standard Oil Company contended that the nonmineral character of the land had been established by a final determination in the department. The court held that no final determination as to the character of the land had been made by the department, that no patent had been issued which would imply that a determination as to the character of the land had been made, and that, therefore, the Department of the Interior had not lost its jurisdiction over the land, and the original inquiry ordered by the Land Department as to the character of the land was subject to a reopening. The cases above-cited all stand for the proposition that a patent is conclusive as to the character of the land, but do not all involve situations in which the mining claim came into existence after the securing of an agricultural patent.

The majority opinion states that "a patent, however, issued merely on the basis of an ex parte hearing on behalf of the claimant to the land can in no way abrogate the existing vested extralateral rights of parties who had nothing to do with the proceedings." The facts in the cases cited in support of this proposition are not similar to the case at bar, but concern conflicts between mining claimants as to the ownership of extralateral veins. They hold that at the issuance of a patent all surface rights are determined, but that a patent does not necessarily determine all underground conflicts as between mineral claimants.

In my opinion the evidence in this case is not sufficient to prove that the owners of the Pennsylvania and Jefferson mines had followed their veins extralaterally to a point where they penetrated the Ames tract at the time of the issuance of patent thereto. Assuming for the time being, however, that such be the case, it seems to me that the fact that the alleged owners of said veins had knowledge of their existence and their location, makes out an even stronger case for the plaintiffs, for they sat idly by and permitted the railroad company to secure a patent to said lands as being nonmineral, when, if said alleged owners had asserted their claim to the same, the railroad company would have been permitted, in fact required, to select lieu lands in their stead—lands to which it unquestionably would have obtained a common law fee title extending to the center of the earth—and therefore, defendant should now be estopped to claim that the character of the land to which it now lays claim could not be determined in a mere ex parte hearing.

The grants in aid of railroads were not mere gratuities, they were designed to be compensation for the building of roads, and the mining claimants here, by their negligence or indolence, let the railroad company take lands which allegedly included their extralateral veins, then causing them to lose their right to select lieu lands in their stead.

It is unfortunate, of course, if the mineral claimants lose a portion of their mineral vein. But it is unfortunate also that the agricultural patentee should suffer. In rendering a decision between the two, it is my opinion that the party who has the knowledge and means of protecting his own rights but slept on them, must be the loser, and not the innocent party who acted to the best of his knowledge and in good faith.

By way of justification for its predecessor's inertia in not protecting the right to which it now lays claim, defendant points out that adverse proceedings are permitted only in case of surface conflicts; and that protest likewise would not have been recognized because the Land Department has no jurisdiction to determine underground conflicts in the issuance of patents to public lands.

In the first place, adverse proceedings are proper only between rival mining claimants, and, even if that were not true, had defendant's mining claim been located on the railroad land which was open to location at any time prior to patent, the lands would have been removed from the grant and such proceedings would have been unnecessary. Since notice by publication must be given before patent is issued, defendant's predecessor had at least constructive knowledge that such patent was about to issue and counsel for defendant do not negative that fact in their briefs. Having knowledge of the extension of its vein under the plaintiff's land, and notice that a nonmineral patent was about to issue thereon, defendant's predecessor then had two avenues by which it might have protected its extralateral right. It might either have entered upon the railroad land and located a mineral claim thereon prior to patent, or it might have "protested" the issuance of the patent to the railroad company. That protesting the issuance of patent is a proper method of securing a determination as to the character of land is well borne out by the following authorities:

According to Costigan on Mining Law (p. 387), "a protest may be filed at any time prior to the issuance of patent by any person who alleges a state of facts which should prevent the issuance of a patent. Except in the case of an excluded co-owner, the office of a protest is to show that the land claimed is not the kind it is represented to be, or that the applicant has failed to comply with the law in a matter which would avoid the claim."

Quoting from Lindley on Mines, 3d Ed., at p. 1752, I find the statement that:

"Often a protestant is a mere volunteer, an amicus curiae, who calls the attention of the department to an alleged noncompliance with the law on the part of the applicant, which otherwise might be overlooked, or raises the issues as to the character of the land, in the ultimate determination of which issue the protestant may or may not have an interest proximate or remote;" and on page 1757, in discussing section 2325 of the Revised Statutes, 30 U.S.C.A. § 29, said authority states:

"While controversies over the character of the land are not subjects of adverse claims under the sections of the Revised Statutes under consideration, they are, however, the subject of protest in any proceeding where title to public land is sought to be acquired, and where such issue is raised, it is the duty of the department to see that the lands are disposed of according to the law governing the quality of the lands under consideration."

In the case of German Ins. Co. v. Hayden, 21 Colo. 127, 40 P. 453, 456, 52 Am.St. Rep. 206, 210, after quoting section 2325, U.S.Rev.Stat. to the effect that no objection to the issuance of a patent shall be heard "except it be shown that the applicant has failed to comply with the terms of this chapter", the court said:

"The standing of the protestant seems to be regulated by the exception in the paragraph last quoted. The statement that he is not a party, and therefore not entitled to appeal, is immaterial to the real question at issue. The law does not knowingly permit a claimant to obtain patent under the mineral laws to agricultural lands, and when a patent is applied for it is quite unimportant as to how the attention of the land department may be called to the character of the land sought to be patented. That department certainly has the right to make necessary and reasonable rules governing the manner in which the character of the land shall be made to appear, both prima facie and ultimately; and if these rules are not complied with, or if it appears that the land is not such as can be entered under the particular claim advanced to it, as, for instance, where agricultural lands are applied for under the mining laws, it is not only the province, but the duty, of the land department to deny the entry. It should be unnecessary to cite authorities in support of the foregoing, but, as the contrary has been seriously urged in this case, we cite the following cases: Lindsey v. Hawes, supra [2 Black 554, 17 L.Ed. 265]; Pierce v. Frace, 2 Wash. 81, 26 P. 192, [807]; Harkness v. Underhill, 1 Black 316 [17 L.Ed. 208]; McCarthy v. Mann, 19 Wall. 20 [22 L.Ed. 49]."

If defendant's predecessor had taken advantage of either of the two methods open to it to preserve its claims, the railroad company would also have been protected, for upon withdrawal of the Ames land from its grant, the company would have been entitled to select other lands in lieu of those withdrawn. But, the mining company, having knowledge of the existence of the vein which it claimed, made no attempt to protect its claim. By this neglect it deprived the railroad company of the lieu lands which it might have selected, and now asserts that it is the owner of the vein which underlies the surface of the railroad company's land. I can reach but one conclusion from these facts, that the defendant's predecessor slept on its rights and that defendant now is estopped to come in and claim them to the detriment of the plaintiffs.

Let us assume an illustration for the purpose of demonstrating a situation which might exist if the position contended for by defendant and adopted by the majority opinion is correct.

"A" locates a mining claim on unpatented land. Shortly thereafter, "B" files an application for a homestead on a quarter section of land adjacent to "A's" mining claim. "A" proceeds to develop his mining claim and "B" his homestead. "B" proves up on his homestead and obtains a patent thereto from the government. "A" files no contest or protest against the patenting of the land to "B". Years after "B" obtains his patent, "A" finds that in following the vein which apexed on his mining claim, it penetrates "B's" agricultural land. The extraction of ore from this vein on "B's" land, may or may not interfere with the use and enjoyment of "B's" land.

Query.—As a matter of justice and equity or even public policy, should "A" be permitted to mine and extract gold from "B's" land, which had been conclusively determined to be nonmineral land at the time patent was issued to "B"?

Answer.—I think not. I believe that a rule more consonant with justice and equity would require "A" to pay "B" for the privilege of mining on "B's" land if sufficient gold is found thereon to justify mining operations. The fact that "A" located his mining claim before "B" filed his homestead application, should not give "A" the right to follow the dip of a vein apexing on his mining claim into "B's" agricultural land. The situation presented in the case at bar is substantially the same as that contained in the above illustration, and I am not persuaded that there are any considerations of equity, justice, or public policy, to justify the extension of the extralateral right doctrine so as to permit the owner of a vein apexing on a mining claim to follow the same on its dip into land conclusively determined to be nonmineral land even though such determination is made after the discovery and location of the mining claim on which said vein apexes.

The doctrine of extralateral rights is well recognized between mines and mining proprietors. As between them, I do not mean to disturb long-established rules. On the other hand, such extralateral right is purely statutory. The common law would give to each claimant all ore bodies beneath the surface of his tract. It is a special privilege or exceptional right which is conferred by statute as an incident of a valid lode location. It is my view that such special right should be confined and limited to the field in which it was intended to operate and in which it creates no injustice because of its reciprocal character.

As to mining proprietors, each takes his property anticipating that veins apexing thereon may extend extralaterally into the land of others, and that the veins of others may in like manner pierce his boundaries. But the agricultural patentee expects to acquire a common law fee in his land conferring complete ownership therein to the center of the earth. Therefore, those who claim extralateral rights in public lands which are being patented as nonmineral lands owe a duty to inform the General Land Office of said claim.

I do not mean to say here that owners of mining claims are put on notice to protect their extralateral vein from everyone who seeks to patent the land which overlies them. As to mining patentees, that is, of course, unnecessary. However, the means of ascertaining the extent and direction of his mineral veins, if not the actual knowledge, is within the power of the mineral claimant. It is upon him therefore that there devolves the duty of giving notice to the General Land Office about to issue a patent conveying a common law fee to the land overlying said veins that he claims a mineral right therein and that a nonmineral patent thereto should not issue, unless, of course, by some specific agreement the extralateral rights therein are to be excepted or reserved.

In view of the fact that most grants of public lands except mineral lands, and mineral rights therein may be protected by the methods hereinabove-mentioned, no great hardship is inflicted upon mining claimants by requiring them to notify the Land Office of their claims and thus prevent unintentional error on the part of the government officials, and hardship to innocent purchasers of agricultural lands.

The majority opinion states: "The subsurface of the Ames tract being clearly mineral could not pass under the terms of the act but remained in the government, and the Pennsylvania and Jefferson mines received full extralateral rights to mine therein by virtue of the Mining Act of July 26, 1866." The majority opinion further states: "It is well established that the government cannot convey away land which it no longer owns and that a patent cannot cut off previously existing vested rights in the patented property." It is obvious that the last statement quoted above is in direct conflict with the first quoted statement; that is, in the first statement above quoted, the majority opinion states that the title to the mineral-bearing subsurface of the Ames tract remained in the government at the time it conveyed the Ames tract to the railroad company, and in the last statement quoted above the majority opinion states that such mineral-bearing subsurface had already vested in the owner of the mining claims.

The case of Reynolds v. Iron Silver Mining Co., 116 U.S. 687, 6 S.Ct. 601, 29 L.Ed. 774, cited by the majority opinion as authority for the last statement quoted above, is not helpful because the court therein decided under a statute which provided that where a vein or lode was known to exist within the boundaries of a placer claim, application for patent which did not include application for the vein or lode, should be construed as a declaration that the claimant had no right of possession of the vein or lode claim, that the jury already had determined that the patentees of the placer claim knew at the time of application for patent of the existence of the lode and did not claim the lode in said application and therefore were precluded from subsequently exerting title thereto.

The fundamental error in the majority opinion is that it in effect holds that the government reserved the mineral in the Ames tract when it conveyed the same to the railroad company. This holding is contrary to all of the decisions rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States in the past eighty years and to all of the decisions of this court with the exception of the cases of Van Ness v. Rooney, supra; Brown v. Luddy, supra; and Chicago Quartz Mining Co. v. Oliver, supra, which, as pointed out hereinabove, were decided upon a theory which has been disapproved by the Supreme Court of the United States.

If both tracts of land had been mineral, it is elementary that each would have had the right to follow into the lands of the other, the extralateral dip of veins which apexed within their respective boundaries, and this without regard to the priority of the patents. But the reciprocal right to so follow mineral veins extralaterally is characteristic of mineral lands only.

That mineral veins extending extralaterally may not be followed into lands conveyed by prior agricultural patents has already been determined. The supreme court of Oregon in Reeves v. Oregon Exploration Co., 127 Or. 686, 273 P. 389, 391, commented on the right to follow an extralateral vein into agricultural lands previously patented under the Timber and Stone Act of June 3, 1878, 43 U.S.C.A. §§ 311–313, in the following manner:

"We find no merit in the contention that defendant has the same right to follow its vein under the surface of plaintiffs' land that it would have had if plaintiffs' land had been acquired under the mining laws. The right of a junior lode claimant, whether his claim be patented or unpatented, to follow the dip of his vein into an adjoining patented or unpatented lode claim, is one which arises under the mining laws, and is confined to titles acquired under the mining laws, and has no application to a case where the vein of a lode claim on its dip extends into lands the title to which has been acquired under agricultural patents. Between lode claimants the right of one to pursue his vein on its dip under the surface of the other is recognized by the courts. See 2 Lindley on Mines (3d Ed.) § 611, and authorities cited. But such right is not recognized by the courts as between a lode claimant and an agricultural claimant, whose title was acquired under a grant made prior to the location of the lode claim. We think that this particular question is settled by the decision of Judge Sawyer in Amador-Medean Gold Min. Co. v. South Spring Hill Gold Min. Co. (C.C.) 36 F. [668], 669, 13 Sawy. 523. The doctrine announced in that case has been recognized as the law for more than 50 years and we have been cited to no case holding to a contrary doctrine." See, also, Anaconda Copper Mining Co. v. Pilot Butte Min. Co., 52 Mont. 165, 156 P. 409.

To my mind, the whole fallacy of the majority opinion lies in the fact that it ignores the sanctity of a patent and the security which the obtaining of a patent is supposed to give a patentee.

I believe, there is nothing more important in our economic system than the certainty of the title under which real property in private ownership is held. Rules applicable to the determination of such titles should be so entrenched in our legal and economic systems that they should not be subject to change or variation or rendered uncertain by judicial decision of this or any other court. When a person receives a conveyance of land predicated upon a patent issued by the Government of the United States containing no reservations or restrictions, he should be able to rest secure in the belief that he is the owner of such land and that his right to exercise all of the incidents of ownership, occupation, possession and use thereof cannot be challenged by anyone not in privity with his legal or equitable title. If the majority opinion in this case is permitted to stand it will remove from the arch of title structure the keystone which renders that structure safe and secure.

It has long been the policy of the courts of this state and of the Supreme Court of the United States to recognize the sacred title of a patentee. The Supreme Court of this state has many times reiterated its policy to regard as final and certain a title acquired by patent. See Saunders v. La Purisima, etc., Co., 125 Cal. 159, 57 P. 656. And in Gale v. Best, 78 Cal. 235 at page 239, 20 P. 550, 551, 12 Am.St.Rep. 44, this court quoted with favor the words of Justice Field, in the case of Steel v. Smelting Co., 106 U.S. 447, 1 S.Ct. 389, 27 L. Ed. 226:

"In Steel v. Smelting Co., supra, Justice Field, whose exhaustive opinion we cannot here undertake to reproduce, among other things, says as follows:

"'We have so often had occasion to speak of the land department, the object of its creation, and the powers it possesses in the alienation by patent of portions of the public lands, that it creates an unpleasant surprise to find that counsel, in discussing the effect to be given to the action of that department, overlook our decisions on that subject. That department, as we have repeatedly said, was established to supervise the various proceedings whereby a conveyance of the title from the United States to portions of the public domain is obtained, and to see that the requirements of different acts of congress are fully complied with. Necessarily, therefore, it must consider and pass upon the qualifications of the applicant, the acts he has performed to secure the title, the nature of the land, and whether it is of the class which is open to sale. Its judgment upon these matters is that of a special tribunal, and is unassailable except by direct proceedings for its annulment or limitation. Such has been the uniform language of this court in repeated decisions.' And again, speaking of the lands held by the possessor of a patent, he says: 'If intruders upon them could compel him, in every suit for possession, to establish the validity of the action of the land department and the correctness of its ruling upon matters submitted to it, the patent, instead of being a means of peace and security, would subject his rights to constant and ruinous litigation. He would recover one portion of his land if the jury were satisfied that the evidence produced justified the action of that department, and lose another portion, the title whereto rests upon the same facts, because another jury came to a different conclusion. So his rights in different suits upon the same patent would be determined, not by its efficacy as a conveyance of the government, but according to the fluctuating prejudices of different jurymen, or their varying capacities to weigh evidence.' [St. Louis Smelting Co. v. Kemp] 104 U.S. [636], 641 [26 L.Ed. 875]. And the pith of the whole matter is aptly expressed by the same learned justice in [St Louis] Smelting Co. v. Kemp, supra [104 U.S. 636, 26 L.Ed. 875], where, speaking of the land department, he says: 'Indeed, the doctrine as to the regularity and validity of its acts, where it has jurisdiction, goes so far that if in any circumstances under existing law a patent would be held valid, it will be presumed that such circumstances existed.'"

If the rule that patents to railroad lands are conclusive as to their nonmineral character were otherwise, to quote from Judge Farrington's decision in Southern Development Co. v. Endersen, D.C., 200 F. 272, 275:

"A title which to-day is valuable because the land is apparently nonmineral to-morrow may become utterly void and worthless by reason of the discovery of mineral. Methods of extraction and reduction may be devised of such cheapness and efficiency as to render mining highly profitable on lands which, at the date of selection and listing, had and could have had no value for mineral purposes. The courts have never yielded to the argument that Congress intended to provide for titles so elusive."

Therefore the answer to the statement in the majority opinion that title to the vein underlying the Ames tract had passed out of the hands of the government into the hands of mining locators is that that question was determined adversely to said locators by the issuance of the patent to the railroad company. If we do not take this view we place the patentee of land in the situation so roundly condemned by Justice Field in the case of Steel v. Smelting Co., supra [106 U.S. 447, 1 S.Ct. 396, 27 L.Ed. 226], where "his rights * * * upon the same patent would be determined, not by its efficacy as a conveyance of the government, but according to the fluctuating prejudices of different jurymen, * * *."

That the patent so issued determined the mining locators' claims adversely to them is supported by the case of Thomas v. Horst, 54 Mont. 260, 169 P. 731, 733, wherein a patent was issued to a railroad company subsequent to the location of quartz mining claims upon the same land. Instead of determining the character of each parcel of land at the time of patent, the character of all lands granted to the railroad company therein were classified by a commission under authority of an act of congress, and notice of such classification was published prior to the issuance of patent. If no protest was filed, the classification was declared to be final except for fraud. This classification was held to have the same legal effect as a determination at the time of patent such as that held in Barden v. Northern Pacific R. R. Co., supra, to be conclusive.

The court then said, "If lots 1 and 2 outside the limits of the Homestake claim were classified as nonmineral, and no protest was filed, or if protest was filed and, after hearing, was overruled, such classification, in the absence of fraud, became final, and settled for all time that the land was in fact nonmineral in character. * * *

"If we indulge the presumption declared by the Supreme Court that the issuance of patent is in the nature of a judicial determination, that every fact has been found which is necessary to entitle the patentee to the legal title to the land, the conclusion appears inevitable that the allegation in this complaint that patent issued to the Northern Pacific is tantamount to an allegation that the land in controversy was duly classified as nonmineral, and the classification approved before the mineral claims were located; and since the determination of the mineral or nonmineral character of the land presented a question of fact for decision by the land department, its judgment thereon is conclusive upon the courts in the absence of fraud.

"Of course, if the mineral or nonmineral character of this land was open to investigation notwithstanding its classification, then the allegation in the complaint that it was and is mineral land is sufficient to show that the land department was without jurisdiction to convey it to the railway company; but, as we have observed before, if the classification did not finally determine the character of this land, the utmost that can be said of it is that it was an idle ceremony, and the act of February 26, 1895, was a meaningless piece of legislation."

In conclusion, I desire to summarize the principles of law, which in my opinion are applicable to the case at bar, and which, when applied to the facts of this case must result in a reversal of the judgment of the trial court insofar as it grants to the Pennsylvania mining claim extralateral rights in the Ames tract.

The Railroad Grant Act of July 25, 1866, created a present grant of nonmineral land to the railroad company; that is, the grant took effect as of that date, if and when the railroad company complied with the provisions of the act with reference to the location and construction of a railroad and filed its map of location with the General Land Office. The grant of such land remained a float until the filing of such map, and title thereupon vested in the railroad company subject to the determination by the General Land Office as to whether or not said land was mineral or nonmineral in character. If the Land Office determined that any of the land covered by the grant was mineral in character, the same was excluded from the grant, and the railroad company was given other nonmineral land in lieu of the mineral land so excluded. If the Land Office determined that the land covered by the grant was nonmineral, and a patent was issued to the railroad company, the issuance of such patent conclusively determined the nonmineral character of the land, and the railroad company got a common law fee in the land granted, including all mineral deposited therein. Unless discovery of mineral in paying quantities was called to the attention of the government officials before patent was issued to the railroad company, all claims to the mineral in such land was cut off by the issuance of such patent. The provision in a patent issued to a railroad company excepting mineral or mineral land from the grant was and is void, and the railroad company was granted a common law fee including all mineral deposits in the land upon the issuance of the patent.

A valid mineral location gives to the locator the right to follow extralaterally on their dip downward all veins apexing on his claim which penetrate other mineral lands, but extralateral rights do not exist in agricultural or nonmineral lands.

When the Land Office determined that the Ames tract was nonmineral in character and the government issued a patent thereto to the railroad company, the latter was granted a common law fee in said land which related back to the date of the passage of the Railroad Grant Act of July 25, 1866, and cut off all intervening rights of those asserting that said land was more valuable for mineral than nonmineral purposes. The defendant therefore is barred from asserting the right to extract mineral from the Ames tract upon the theory that it may do so under the extralateral right doctrine.

Defendant admits that the Jefferson title is not as "clear cut" as that to the Pennsylvania, but argues that once said title was in existence, it will be presumed to continue so until the contrary is proved. Although the Jefferson claim was relocated in 1891, and subsequently disputed by various claimants, defendant states that it has acquired by various options and deeds or leases the rights of those rival claimants. In further defense of its right to mine on the Jefferson vein, defendant offers the "Ebert reservation", of which it is the assignee.

I find it unnecessary to give further consideration to the contentions of either party so far as the Jefferson claim is concerned, for the reason that the conclusion which I have reached as to defendant's right to follow extralaterally the dip of the vein apexing on the Pennsylvania claim is equally applicable to that of the Jefferson claim.

The right of the defendant to follow the Jefferson claim on its dip under the Ames land is finally determined, however, upon a reservation in the deed from Ebert to Ames hereinabove referred to as the "Ebert reservation". Under this reservation, Ebert reserved to himself, his successors and assigns, "the right to follow the Jefferson gold quartz ledge with its dip, and to mine and extract the ore from the same in and upon said (the Ames) land, without disturbing the surface of said land". I am of the opinion that by this reservation, Ebert retained the right to follow the Jefferson vein under the surface of the Ames land, and that this right was transferable.

By mesne conveyances, defendant succeeded to the rights of Ebert under this reservation. Although it cannot be said that defendant did thereby acquire an estate in the lands of the plaintiffs, it did obtain the right to remove the ore from said vein and title to the ore so mined. Since a right carries with it the incidents necessary to its exercise, defendant has a right of entry which constitutes a complete and ample defense to this action.

Whether or not such right is exclusive is a matter of interpretation depending in part on the intention of the parties and the surrounding circumstances at the time of the grant. For the present, in the absence of evidence, I deem it neither necessary nor proper to reach a determination on that point.

In view of the conclusion which I have reached in the foregoing opinion, the judgment of the trial court should be reversed.

SWEESY v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY PEACE OFFICERS' RETIREMENT BOARD et al.

L. A. 17579.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 17, 1941.

1. Officers ⇐94

Unless contrary intention plainly appears in law creating pension, persons having a pensionable status are entitled to receive any increase of benefits which may be provided.

2. Counties ⇐69(3)

The pension rights of retired county peace officer under County Peace Officers' Retirement Act vested at time he was retired from service. St.1931, p. 477.

3. Officers ⇐94

Provisions creating a pension system can properly have a retroactive operation, if such intention clearly appears.

4. Counties ⇐69(3)

The widow of a peace officer, retired from service of a county, at time when the County Peace Officers' Retirement Act provided for a pension to such officer but made no provision for a pension to his widow in the event of his death, would be entitled to a pension under an amendment to such act adopted after officer's retirement, but before his death, in view of provisions of amendment. St.1937, p. 664, § 11.

5. Counties ⇐69(3)

Under amendment to County Peace Officers' Retirement Act granting widow of retired officer a pension from time of officer's death until her death or remarriage, provided she had been married to officer at least five years prior to date of his retirement, the rights of any prospective grantee is an "inchoate right" which may be taken away at any time before it becomes vested in her by the happening calling for the fulfillment of the grant. St.1937, p. 664, § 11.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Inchoate Right".

6. Officers ⇐94

That a "pension" would be a "gratuity" in one case does not mean that it would also be a "gratuity" in another.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Gratuity" and "Pension".

7. Counties ⇐69(3)

The amendment to County Peace Officers' Retirement Act granting widow of retired officer a pension from time of officer's death until her death or remarriage, provided she had been married to officer at least five years prior to date of his retirement, is valid as applied to widow of officer, who had retired before enactment of amendment, but whose death did not occur until after its enactment. St.1937, p. 664, § 11.

8. Counties ⇐69(3)

Under amendment to County Peace Officers' Retirement Act granting widow of retired officer a pension from time of officer's death until her death or remarriage, provided she had been married to officer at least five years prior to date of his retirement, a petition which alleged that petitioner was wife of deceased officer at date of his demise and for more than five years prior to his death was insufficient to show compliance with requirement of the amendment. St.1937, p. 664, § 11.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Proceeding by Mary Estelle Sweesy against the Los Angeles County Peace Officers' Retirement Board and others, for a writ of mandate requiring respondents to make an order allowing petitioner a pension. From a judgment dismissing petition after demurrer to petition had been sustained without leave to amend, petitioner appeals.

Reversed with directions to permit amendment of the petition, if requested.

For prior opinion, see 101 P.2d 732.

Rehearing denied; EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

Francis A. Cochran and Carl B. Sturzenacker, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, and Beach Vasey, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, Justice.

Mary Estelle Sweesy filed in the superior court in Los Angeles county a petition for a writ of mandate praying that the respondents be directed to order the payment to her of certain monthly instalments under the 1937 amendment to the County Peace Officers' Retirement Act, Stats.1937, p. 664. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the petition without leave to amend. The petitioner appealed from the judgment of dismissal which followed the court's order.

The Los Angeles County Peace Officers' Retirement Board exists pursuant to an act entitled, "An act to authorize the counties of the State of California to establish systems for the retirement and pension of certain county and township officers and employees, namely county peace officers as defined in the act, and to provide certain benefits for their dependents, and empowering county boards of supervisors to levy a special tax." Stats.1931, p. 477. The board of supervisors of Los Angeles county accepted by ordinance the provisions of said act in 1934, whereupon Norris M. Sweesy became a member of the pension system as contemplated by the provisions of the act. Sweesy was employed by the county of Los Angeles as a peace officer, to-wit, a deputy sheriff, from January 13, 1911, until May 31, 1935, when, having arrived at the age of fifty-five years and having served more than twenty years as such county peace officer, his retirement was ordered by the retirement commission. From the time the system was accepted by the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county to the date of his retirement, Sweesy contributed the specified percentage of his salary to the retirement fund. After his retirement he was subject to call for performance of services as a deputy sheriff in cases of emergency. In 1937 the legislature adopted the amendment to section 11 of the act. By the amendment the widow of a retired peace officer became entitled to a pension of $75 per month until her death or remarriage, provided she had been married to the deceased pensioner at least five years prior to the date of his retirement.

In addition to the foregoing, it was alleged that Sweesy died on February 26, 1939; that the petitioner was then and had been married to him for more than five years; that she had not remarried; and that under the act she was entitled to the pension. It was also alleged that the petitioner had made application for the pension provided by the amendment of 1937, and that her application had been denied by the Retirement Board on the sole ground that the widow of a member who had retired from service prior to the effective date of the amendment to section 11 of the act was not eligible to receive pension payments thereunder.

It is apparent that the trial court sustained the demurrer on that ground. For the purpose of the discussion of the question presented we shall assume that the petitioner has stated facts which otherwise bring her within the terms of the amendment. Thus, the question is whether the widow of a retired pensioner is entitled to a widow's pension rights created by an amendment adopted after the retirement but before the death of the retired member of the pension system.

Prior to the amendment of 1937, the act made provision for pension payments to surviving widows of pensioners who became retired by reason of disability ensuing from service. The 1937 amendment purports to extend the provisions for widows' pensions to widows of members retired by reason of age and years of service, and no question arises herein in that respect. It is expressly stated in amended section 11 that its provisions shall be retroactive as to the past service of any member who shall be entitled to the benefits "contained herein."

It is contended on the part of the respondents that in order to avoid constitutional invalidity the amendment may operate prospectively only; and that such prospective operation contemplates pensions to surviving widows of pensioners only who were in active service at the time of the adoption of the amendment, that is, members who were in active as distinguished from retired service, or who later entered such active service. It is argued that if the amendment by the prescribed retroactive operation grants a pension to the widow in this case, it amounts to a gift of public money and is in violation of constitutional prohibitions; and that in any event the prescribed retroactive operation refers only to past service of members on active duty at the time of the amendment, as distinguished from retired members.

On the other hand the petitioner relies on cases such as Home v. Souden, 199 Cal. 508, 250 P. 162; O'Dea v. Cook, 176 Cal. 659, 169 P. 366; Kavanagh v. Board of Police Pension Fund Commissioners, 134 Cal. 50, 66 P. 36; Klench v. Board of Pension Fund Commissioners, 79 Cal.App. 171, 249 P. 46; Aitken v. Roche, 48 Cal.App. 753, 192 P. 464, which she contends require the payment of the pension to her as surviving widow of a retired member.

In Home v. Souden, supra, the member was killed while performing duties as an employee of the fire department of the city of Los Angeles. At the time of his death his widow became entitled to a pension equal to one-third of the salary attached to the rank held by her husband at the time of his death. Subsequently the yearly pension was increased to one-half the amount of such salary. This court, relying on O'Dea v. Cook, Kavanagh v. Board, etc., and Aitken v. Roche, supra, held that the widow was entitled to the increase and that there was no merit in the contention that the increase constituted a gift of public money. The decision in O'Dea v. Cook, supra, recognized that a pension ordinarily is not a gift or a gratuity. It was there said [176 Cal. 659, 169 P. 367]: "A pension is a gratuity only where it is granted for services previously rendered, and which at the time they were rendered gave rise to no legal obligation. * * * But where, as here, services are rendered under * * * a pension statute, the pension provisions become a part of the contemplated compensation for those services, and so in a sense a part of the contract of employment itself." See, also, Klench v. Board of Pension Fund Commissioners, supra, 79 Cal. App. at page 185, 249 P. 46.

In the Kavanagh case, supra, Kavanagh had served for more than twenty years as a police officer and had been retired on a pension. After his death from natural causes his widow applied for payment to her of $1,000 pursuant to an amendment enacted prior to Kavanagh's retirement. The amendment provided that whenever a member of the police department after ten years service died from natural causes his widow should be entitled to one thousand dollars from the fund. The question was whether Kavanagh after retirement was a member of the department so as to entitle his widow to the payment prescribed by the amendment. The retired officer was required to perform duties in case of emergency and to report to the department at stated times. Membership in the pension system could be terminated by death, resignation or dismissal. Following the policy approving liberal construction of pension laws, the court held that retirement did not terminate membership on the police force or in the department; that the retired officer was still a member of the force at the time of his death; and that his widow was entitled to the specified payment.

In Klench v. Board of Pension Fund Comrs, supra, it was held that under the law there involved a pensioner was entitled to the benefits afforded by the increases in the pay attached to the rank he held at the time of his retirement, and that his right to payment was not limited to the amount he was receiving at the time of his retirement. The conclusion was based on the observation that one who has been regularly placed on the pension roll is entitled to all the benefits of the system. That case followed Aitken v. Roche, supra, wherein it was held that under the system and the charter provisions the pensioner was afforded the benefits of subsequent increases in the pay attached to the rank he held at the time of retirement. See, also Rumetsch v. Davie, 47 Cal.App. 512, 190 P. 1075; Jones v. Cooney, 82 Cal App. 265, 255 P. 536.

[1-3] It must be accepted as the settled law of this state that unless the contrary intention plainly appears persons having a pensionable status are entitled to receive any increase of benefits which may be provided. Sweesy's pension rights vested at the time he was retired from service, that is, upon the happening of the contingency upon which the pensionable right depended. O'Dea v. Cook, supra; Kavanagh v. Board of Police Pension Fund Commissioners, supra; Jordan v. Retirement Board, 35 Cal. App.2d 653, 96 P.2d 973. In Whitehead v. Davie, 189 Cal. 715, 719, 209 P. 1008, it was recognized that provisions creating a pension system could properly have a retroactive operation, if such intention clearly appeared. See, also, Jordan v. Retirement Board, supra.

[4] In view of the foregoing decisions the contentions of the petitioner must be held to prevail over those of the respondents. Sweesy had a status as a pensioner at the time of the adoption of the amendment granting pensions to widows of retired members of the department. The provisions were made expressly retroactive so as to include past service of any member entitled to the benefits "contained herein". Unquestionably Sweesy was a member entitled to the benefits of the system. No distinction is made by the legislature between members in active duty on full pay and those on retirement, in so far as the retroactive provisions are concerned, and no distinction may here be drawn on that basis. Therefore, the provisions must be held to apply to members who had a vested as well as to those who merely had an inchoate right to members' pension benefits at the time of the adoption of the amendment. That the widow's pension affords a benefit to the pensioned member cannot be gainsaid. A pensioned member, as has been held, is as much entitled to increased benefits of the pension system as is any other member, unless the legislative body clearly indicates that such application is contrary to its intention. A provision for a pension to his widow obviously benefits the member's economic status in a way similar to an increase of his wages or pension. The problem cannot be solved merely by stating as a proposition that a provision will not be upheld which purports to grant a pension after the completion of the services for which the pension is contemplated as additional compensation. The law is well settled that additional benefits may constitutionally be provided for members of the system who have acquired a pensionable status. This is not a case where the member was already retired and whose services were terminated before the creation of the pension system. There is some language in the decisions which refers to pension benefits as additional or increased compensation for services performed and to be performed. O'Dea v. Cook, supra; Jordan v. Retirement Board, supra; Douglas v. Pension Board, 75 Cal.App. 335, 340, 242 P. 756, citing cases. But that designation may not be strictly accurate in every case. As in this case, the members of the system make contributions to the pension fund, even though contributions may also come from public funds. Such systems are usually founded on actuarial calculations. Therefore, the question of what benefits would be warranted by either the individual or mass contributions to the fund is for the legislative body, and not for the pension board or the courts, whose respective functions in such cases are to administer and interpret the provisions of the law as written. An appropriate restriction of the widow's rights under such a system is indicated by the requirement that the applicant must have been married to the member five years prior to his retirement, if he was retired, or five years prior to his death if he died from injuries received in the performance of his duties. Those provisions and the assumed facts herein serve to distinguish this case from Jordan v. Retirement Board, supra. In the latter case the pension law required that the widow be married to the decedent prior to the injury which resulted in his death. The widow had not married the pensioner prior to the injury which subsequently and during retirement resulted in his death, and for that reason was not entitled to the pension.

[5] It is not to be understood from the foregoing, however, that the provision for an increase in benefits to the retired member by means of a pension to his widow becomes a vested right prior to the happening of a contingency upon which the payment of the widow's pension depends. As aptly shown by the decision in Jordan v. Retirement Board, supra, the grant of a pension to the member's widow is an increase of benefits which may be taken away before the right vests by the happening of the event of calling for the fulfillment of the grant. In this case the provision for pensions to members' widows benefits all members, whether on active or retired duty; but as to any prospective grantee of the pension it is an inchoate right which may be taken away at any time before it becomes vested in her.

[6, 7] The case of Lamb v. Board of County Peace Officers' Retirement Commission, 29 Cal.App.2d 348, 84 P.2d 183, has no persuasive force herein. In that case there was no applicable pension system in existence at the time the officer was retired for disability resulting from performance of duty. The answer to the question whether a pensionable status may be created retroactively to include persons who had already been retired may not afford a guide in resolving the question whether an amendment to the pension law may afford additional benefits by way of a widow's pension to members who already had acquired a retired pensionable status under the law. It does not follow that because the pension would be a gratuity in the one case, it also is in the other. This state and other states (see People v. Board of Trustees of Firemen's Pension Fund, 103 Colo. 1, 82 P.2d 765, 118 A.L.R. 984; Board of Trustees of Policemen's Pension Fund v. Schupp, 223 Ky. 269, 3 S.W.2d 606), recognize that increased benefits to one already having a pensionable status are constitutional and economically appropriate. The amendment in the present case is one providing for such an increase of benefits, and must therefore be held to be valid and constitutional as it applies herein, provided the petitioner can prove the facts which are required to bring the amendment into operation.

[8] The foregoing requires a reversal of the judgment based upon the order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend. However, an uncertainty appears on the face of the petition which leaves the application of the amendment to the facts in some doubt, but this is a matter which may be rectified by amendment, if the petitioner sees fit so to amend. The petitioner alleges that the amended section of the retirement act entitles the widow of a retired member to payment of the pension provided she shall have been married to the pensioner at least five years prior to the date of his retirement. The petition shows that the decedent was retired in May, 1935, and died in February, 1939. The petitioner then alleges that she was the wife of the decedent at the date of his demise and for more than five years prior to his death. These allegations would not show compliance with the alleged requirement of the amended section.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to permit an amendment to the petition, if requested, so that the petitioner may allege sufficient facts to bring herself within the purview of the amendment to the pension act, and then to proceed in accordance with the foregoing conclusions.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J.; TRAYNOR, J.; CURTIS, J.; CARTER, J; EDMONDS, J.

PEOPLE v. SKINNER.*

Sac. 5360.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 8, 1941.

1. Licenses ⇐30

Where notices of additional assessments under Retail Sales Tax Act were mailed to retailer at his place of business, statutory requirements respecting notices were sufficiently complied with by State Board of Equalization, though no summons or notice of any kind was ever served personally on retailer. St.1935, pp. 1259, 1261, 1262, §§ 17, 21, 26.

2. Licenses ⇐32(2)

Under provisions of Retail Sales Tax Act empowering State Board of Equalization to appoint assistants to enforce its powers and perform its duties, the fact that certificate of amount of tax filed by board in county clerk's office with request for judgment against retailer was signed by tax counsel appointed by board rather than by board itself, did not render certificate invalid. St. 1935, pp. 1262, 1264, §§ 26, 27.

3. Taxation ⇐572

A more summary method may be provided for the collection of taxes due to the sovereign than is provided for the recovery of judgment for debts between private citizens.

4. Constitutional law ⇐284(2)

"Due process of law" is satisfied if notice and an opportunity to question the validity or amount of the tax is provided for at some stage of the proceedings, the notice does not have to be personally served, notice of every step in the proceeding is not required, and it is sufficient if the finality of the assessment is determined by the taxing authorities. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14; Const.Cal. art. 1, § 13.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law".

5. Taxation ⇐1

A "tax" is an exaction by the sovereign, and the sovereign has an enforceable claim against every one within the taxable class for the amount lawfully due from him.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Tax".

6. Constitutional law ⇐280, 283, 289

In judging what is "due process of law", respect must be had to the cause and object of the taking, whether under the taxing power, the power of eminent domain, or the power of assessment for local improvements, or none of these, and if found to be suitable or admissible in the special case, it will be adjudged to be "due process of law", but if found to be arbitrary, oppressive and unjust, it may be declared to be not due process of law. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14; Const.Cal. art. 1, § 13.

7. Constitutional law ⇐284(2)

The sufficiency of a notice, as constituting "due process of law", must be determined in each case on the particular circumstances, and in matters of assessment and taxation the same character of notice is not required as in ordinary actions in a court of justice. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14; Const. Cal. art. 1, § 13.

8. Constitutional law ⇐283

The Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution places a limit on all the powers of the state, including, among others, that of taxation. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1.

* Subsequent opinion 115 P.2d 488.

9. Constitutional law ⇐287
Licenses ⇐7(1)

The Retail Sales Tax Act provision that State Board of Equalization must file a certificate specifying amount of delinquent tax, interest and penalties, with the name and last known address of retailer liable, and requesting that judgment be entered against retailer in amount set forth and that county clerk shall immediately enter judgment against the retailer, is not violative of the "due process" clauses of the Federal or State Constitutions. St.1935, pp. 1259, 1260, 1261, 1262, 1265, §§ 17, 18, 20, 21, 26, 33 U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14; Const.Cal. art. 1, § 13.

10. Licenses ⇐32(2)

The use of the word "judgment" in section of Retail Sales Tax Act providing that "judgment" shall be entered against retailer in amount of delinquent taxes set forth in certificate issued by State Board of Equalization and filed with county clerk does not of itself require all the antecedent steps in a judicial tribunal usually applicable when private debts are the subject of collection. St.1935, p. 1262, § 26.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Judgment".

11. Constitutional law ⇐284(2)

The sovereign may adopt any appropriate procedure known to the law to collect taxes, and it is not required to provide for hearing in a judicial tribunal before it may use the processes which follow upon the entry of a judgment in such a tribunal in order not to violate requirements of "due process of law" of State and Federal Constitutions. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14; Const.Cal. art. 1, § 13.

12. Licenses ⇐32(2)

Under provision of Retail Sales Tax Act requiring that judgment be entered against retailer in amount of delinquent taxes set forth in certificate of State Board of Equalization filed with county clerk with request that judgment be entered against retailer in amount thereof, a hearing in a judicial tribunal was not intended nor required for the entry of the judgment. St.1935, p. 1262, § 26.

13. Licenses ⇐32(2)

Under provision of Retail Sales Tax Act that county clerk shall enter a "judgment" against retailer for delinquent taxes on filing of certificate stating amount of such taxes and requesting entry of judgment, the "judgment" referred to, not being one ordered by a judicial tribunal, is not governed by provisions of Code of Civil Procedure in like matters, such as requirement for notice of entry of judgment with right to resort to an appellate tribunal. St.1935, p. 1262, § 26.

14. Licenses ⇐7(1)
Statutes ⇐95(3)

The provisions of Retail Sales Tax Act that State Board of Equalization may file in county clerk's office a certificate specifying amount of delinquent tax, and requesting that judgment be entered against retailer in amount set forth in certificate, and that county clerk shall immediately enter a judgment against retailer, do not vest in board arbitrary or unreasonable powers nor constitute "special legislation", law being "general law" applicable to all retailers of tangible property. St.1935, p. 1262, § 26; Const. art. 4, § 25.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "General Law" and "Special Legislation".

EDMONDS, J., and WARD, Justice pro tem., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

The State Board of Equalization filed in the county clerk's office a certificate of the amount of the tax due under Retail Sales Act of 1933, St.1933, p. 2607, with interest and penalty and request for judgment, and pursuant to the request a judgment for the retail sales tax was entered against defendant Roy J. Skinner for the total shown by the certificate to be due. Thereafter the defendant filed a motion to set aside and vacate the judgment. From the judgment entered on the order granting the motion, the People appeal.

Reversed.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and James J. Ardetto, H. H. Lenney, and Adrian A. Kragen, Deputies Atty. Gen. (Roger J. Traynor, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Norman Elkington, of San Francisco, for respondent.

Howard B. Crittenden, of Tracy, and H. R. Whiting and Morgan V. Spicer, both of San Francisco, amici curiae for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

The defendant moved to set aside as void a so-called "judgment" entered in accordance with the provisions of section 26 of the Retail Sales Act of 1933, St.1933, p. 2607, as amended, Stats.1935, p. 1262. The plaintiff appealed from the judgment entered on the trial court's order granting the motion.

The appeal presents the question of the correctness of the trial court's conclusion that the provisions of said section 26 are unconstitutional.

The defendant conducted as "owner" an auto sales company in San Francisco. Therefore, as a retailer of tangible personal property, he was required, under permits duly issued pursuant to the Retail Sales Act of 1933, to make accurate returns of sales and to pay the tax found to be due on account of sales of tangible personal property.

On June 22, 1936, the State Board of Equalization filed in the county clerk's office in Sacramento, pursuant to said section 26, a "certificate of amount of tax, interest and penalty due and request for judgment". The board itemized the tax due as $9,413.81; interest, $569.39; penalty, $1,220.08; total, $11,203.28. Pursuant to the request and on the same day a "judgment for Retail Sales Tax" was entered against the defendant for the total tax shown by the certificate to be due.

About one-third of the tax was computed on voluntary returns made by the defendant. The balance comprised two additional assessments made by the board on sales not reported by the defendant. By the defendant's testimony it appeared that several auditors occupied a month or six weeks in examining his records before the final additional assessment was made, and total tax, interest and penalties computed. There was evidence that notices of such additional assessments were duly mailed to the defendant. A notice was mailed to the defendant on March 20, 1936, which showed that on January 25, 1936, there was due from the defendant a total of tax, interest and penalty of $10,904.85. The defendant was adjudged a bankrupt, and on May 25, 1936, under oath in the bankruptcy proceeding, he listed his sales tax liability to the State of California as $10,904.81.

[1] Subsequent to the filing of the certificate of the Board of Equalization in the county clerk's office in Sacramento, and on May 17, 1939, the defendant filed his affidavit and notice of motion to set aside and vacate the "judgment" entered pursuant to said section 26. The motion was made on the ground that the judgment was void because it violated the due process clauses of the state and federal constitutions, Const.Col. art. 1, § 13; Const.U.S. Amend. 14, and the prohibition against special legislation contained in section 25 of Article IV of the state Constitution. It was stipulated that no summons or notice of any kind was ever served personally on the defendant. As stated, there was evidence that notices of the additional assessments were mailed to the defendant at his place of address in San Francisco. In his affidavit the defendant alleged "that all notices served upon him by the State Board of Equalization under the provisions of the 'Retail Sales Act of 1933' as amended, were served upon him by mail". He also alleged that "during all of said times he was actually living and employed in said city and county of San Francisco; that during all of said times and more particularly at the time of the mailing of said notices of additional assessment and of estimate, tax and penalty, the home address, the business address and the personal whereabouts of said defendant were known to the State Board of Equalization". The foregoing testimony and admissions are sufficient upon which to predicate a conclusion, at which the trial court arrived, that the requirements respecting the notices provided by the pertinent portions of the act were complied with by the board. As noted, the trial court granted the defendant's motion on the grounds that the provisions of section 26 deprived the defendant of due process, and that they constituted special legislation. Therefore the principal question for determination is whether the pertinent provisions of the act are in harmony with constitutional requirements.

Section 17 of the act provides that if the board is not satisfied with the return and payment of tax made by the retailer, it may make an additional assessment based upon the facts contained in the return or upon any information that it may have or obtain; and provides also for certain penalties on account of such additional assessment which it is not necessary to note specifically. That section also requires written notice to be given to the retailer, which may be served either personally or by mail. Section 18 makes similar provisions with respect to assessments imposed by reason of the failure of the retailer to make any return.

Section 20 gives to the retailer against whom an assessment was made pursuant to sections 17 or 18, the right to file, within fifteen days after the service of notice, a petition for reassessment. It states: "If a petition for reassessment is not filed within said fifteen day period the amount of the assessment becomes final at the expiration thereof." The section also provides for a hearing by the board in the event a petition for reassessment is filed within the time specified. The act (secs. 20 and 33) also makes provision for resort to a judicial tribunal for a consideration and determination of the question whether there was an abuse of discretion on the part of the board.

Section 21, as applied to the facts of this case, requires that every notice of additional tax proposed to be assessed be mailed to the retailer within three years after the retailer's return is filed. No question arises with respect to the time of the mailing of the notices herein.

Section 26 of the act provides that when any tax, etc., is not paid when due, the board may file in the office of the county clerk of Sacramento county, or any other county, a certificate specifying the amount of the tax, interest and penalties, with the name and last known address of the retailer liable therefor; stating that the board has complied with all the provisions of the act in relation to the computation and levy of the tax; and requesting that "judgment be entered against the retailer in the amount * * * set forth in the certificate. The county clerk immediately upon the filing of such certificate shall enter a judgment * * * against the retailer * * *." It also provides that an abstract of the judgment may be recorded in any county, whereupon the amount shown shall constitute a lien upon all the real property of the retailer in such county, which shall have the force, effect and priority of a judgment lien, and that execution shall issue upon such judgment upon request of the board in the same manner as upon other judgments under the Code of Civil Procedure. By the same section the board is also given power, after delinquency in the payment of tax and notice thereof by registered mail and notice of an intended sale by mail and publication any time within three years, forthwith to collect such taxes by seizure and sale of sufficient real or personal property not exempt from execution to satisfy the amount due. That section also expressly provides that the remedies of the state shall be cumulative, and that the pursuit of one remedy shall not be deemed an election to the exclusion of any other remedy.

[2] The trial court concluded that the certificate of the board was executed and filed in accordance with the provisions of section 26. There is no merit in the contention that the certificate was invalid because signed by tax counsel appointed by the board, rather than by the board itself. Section 27 of the act specifically empowers the board to appoint such assistants as it may deem necessary to enforce its powers and perform its duties under the act. The execution of the certificate through such duly appointed administrative assistant is a compliance with the provisions of the act.

The defendant contends that section 26 of the act offends the constitutional due process clauses in two respects, namely, that a personal judgment is permitted to be entered against the retailer without provision for prior personal notice and hearing in a court as provided by the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the section confers on the Board of Equalization arbitrary and unreasonable powers. In urging that the provisions of section 26, permitting a judgment to be entered against the retailer in the manner therein prescribed, is special legislation, the defendant argues that the "judgment" provided by said section is a "judgment in personam", is governed by the rules of due process, that said rules require personal service of notice and a judicial hearing before such judgment may be entered, and is further governed by the general laws relative to actions in personam.

The defendant and the trial court have misapprehended the requirements of due process involved in proceedings for assessment, levy, and collection of taxes, and the significance of the procedure prescribed by section 26 in relation to the constitutional provisions invoked by the defendant.

[3] Obviously if an action in a court or other judicial tribunal be necessary for a judgment for the collection of taxes, the state is bound by the provisions applicable to the conduct of such action, and by the general law governing jurisdiction of parties and subject matter. But as long standing as the common law itself is the rule that a more summary method may be provided for the collection of taxes due to the sovereign than is provided for the recovery of judgment for debts between private citizens. This power of government received early recognition in this country. The case of Den ex dem. Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co., 59 U.S. 272, 18 How. 272, 276, 15 L.Ed. 372, involved the collection of moneys from a defalcating customs inspector. Summary seizure of property to satisfy the debt was objected to on the ground of lack of due process. The court said: "The words, 'due process of law,' were undoubtedly intended to convey the same meaning as the words, 'by the law of the land,' in Magna Carta. * * * We apprehend there has been no period, since the establishment of the English monarchy, when there has not been, by the law of the land, a summary method for the recovery of debts due to the crown. * * * It is certain that this diversity in 'the law of the land' between public defaulters and ordinary debtors was understood in this country, and entered into the legislation of the colonies and provinces, and more especially of the States, after the declaration of independence and before the formation of the constitution of the United States. * * * For, though 'due process of law' generally implies and includes actor, reus, judex, regular allegations, opportunity to answer, and a trial according to some settled course of judicial proceedings * * * yet, this is not universally true. There may be, and we have seen that there are cases, under the law of England after Magna Carta, and as it was brought to this country and acted on here, in which process, in its nature final, issues against the body, lands, and goods of certain public debtors without any such trial. * * * The power to collect and disburse revenue, and to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying that power into effect, includes all known and appropriate means of effectually collecting and disbursing that revenue, unless some such means should be forbidden in some other part of the constitution. * * * It may be added, that probably there are few governments which do or can permit their claims for public taxes * * * to become subjects of judicial controversy, according to the course of the law of the land. Imperative necessity has forced a distinction between such claims and all others, which has sometimes been carried out by summary methods of proceeding, and sometimes by systems of fines and penalties, but always in some way observed and yielded to."

Springer v. United States, 102 U.S. 586, 593, 26 L.Ed. 253, involved a summary method of execution and collection of personal income taxes, objected to under the constitutional guaranty of due process. In holding that congress could provide the power to distrain realty as well as personalty, the court said: "The proceedings of the collector were not in conflict with the amendment to the Constitution which declares that 'no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.' * * * The prompt payment of taxes is always important to the public welfare. It may be vital to the existence of a government. The idea that every taxpayer is entitled to the delays of litigation is unreason. If the laws here in question involved any wrong or unnecessary harshness, it was for Congress, or the people who made congresses, to see that the evil was corrected. The remedy does not lie with the judicial branch of the government."

[4] It has been held that due process is satisfied if notice and an opportunity to question the validity or amount of the tax be provided for at some stage in the proceedings; that the notice does not have to be personally served; that notice of every step in the proceedings is not required; and that it is sufficient if the finality of the assessment be determined by the taxing authorities. Weyerhaueser v. Minnesota, 176 U.S. 550, 20 S.Ct. 485, 44 L.Ed. 583; Hodge v. Muscatine County, 196 U.S. 276, 25 S.Ct. 237, 49 L.Ed. 477; In re Sutter-Butte By-Pass Assess. No. 6, etc., 191 Cal. 650, 218 P. 27; Wulzen v. Board of Supervisors, 101 Cal. 15, 35 P. 353, 40 Am.St. Rep. 17.

[5] In the discussion of the general subject of the system of enforcing the government's claims for taxes, the court said in Bull v. United States, 295 U.S. 247, 259, 55 S.Ct. 695, 699, 79 L.Ed. 1421: "A tax is an exaction by the sovereign, and necessarily the sovereign has an enforceable claim against every one within the taxable class for the amount lawfully due from him. The statute prescribes the rule of taxation. Some machinery must be provided for applying the rule to the facts in each taxpayer's case, in order to ascertain the amount due. The chosen instrumentality for the purpose is an administrative agency whose action is called an assessment. The assessment may be a valuation of property subject to taxation, which valuation is to be multiplied by the statutory rate to ascertain the amount of tax. Or it may include the calculation and fix the amount of tax payable, and assessments of federal estate and income taxes are of this type. Once the tax is assessed, the taxpayer will owe the sovereign the amount when the date fixed by law for payment arrives. Default in meeting the obligation calls for some procedure whereby payment can be enforced. The statute might remit the government to an action at law wherein the taxpayer could offer such defense as he had. A judgment against him might be collected by the levy of an execution. But taxes are the lifeblood of government, and their prompt and certain availability an imperious need. Time out of mind, therefore, the sovereign has resorted to more drastic means of collection. The assessment is given the force of a judgment, and if the amount assessed is not paid when due, administrative officials may seize the debtor's property to satisfy the debt.

"In recognition of the fact that erroneous determinations and assessments will inevitably occur, the statutes, in a spirit of fairness, invariably afford the taxpayer an opportunity at some stage to have mistakes rectified. Often an administrative hearing is afforded before the assessment becomes final; or administrative machinery is provided whereby an erroneous collection may be refunded; in some instances both administrative relief and redress by an action against the sovereign in one of its courts are permitted methods of restitution of excessive or illegal exaction. Thus, the usual procedure for the recovery of debts is reversed in the field of taxation. Payment precedes defense, and the burden of proof, normally on the claimant, is shifted to the taxpayer. The assessment supersedes the pleading, proof, and judgment necessary in an action at law, and has the force of such a judgment. The ordinary defendant stands in judgment only after a hearing. The taxpayer often is afforded his hearing after judgment and after payment, and his only redress for unjust administrative action is the right to claim restitution."

[6] The courts of this state have given full recognition to the foregoing precepts. From a discussion of the question of sufficiency of notice in a street improvement condemnation proceeding appearing in the opinion in the case of Wulzen v. Board of Supervisors, supra, 101 Cal. at pages 18–20, 35 P. at page 354, 40 Am.St.Rep. 17, we quote the following:

"Justice Bradley, in discussing what is due process of law in Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U.S. 97 [24 L.Ed. 616], uses the following language:

" 'In judging what is due process of law, respect must be had to the cause and object of the taking,—whether under the taxing power, the power of eminent domain, or the power of assessment for local improvements, or none of these, and, if found to be suitable or admissible in the special case, it will be adjudged to be due process of law, but, if found to be arbitrary, oppressive, and unjust, it may be declared to be not due process of law.'

[7] "In commenting upon the above quotation in Lent v. Tillson, 72 Cal. [404], at page 414, 14 P. 71, Temple, J., says: 'In other words, the sufficiency of the notice must be determined in each case from the particular circumstances of the case in hand. And, further, in matters of assessment and taxation, the same character of notice is not required as in ordinary actions in a court of justice, for the reason, I presume, that in such summary proceedings it is not practicable or usual.' * * *

"The power of taxation is confided to the legislative department of the government, and 'an act for levying taxes and providing the means of enforcement is within the unquestioned and unquestionable power of the legislature. It is therefore the law of the land, not merely in so far as it lays down a general rule to be observed, but in all the proceedings and all the process which it points out or provides for in order to give the rule full operation.' Cooley, Tax'n, pp. 48, 49. It was said in Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U.S. [78], 80 [26 L.Ed. 658]: 'Taxes have not, as a general rule, in this country since its independence, nor in England before that time, been collected by regular judicial proceedings. The necessities of government, the nature of the duty to be performed, and the customary usages of the people have established a different procedure, which, in regard to that matter, is, and always has been, due process of law.' "

The court concluded: "In matters of taxation and assessment the state is not bound to accord personal service of process upon the citizen."

In People v. Central Pac. R. Co., 105 Cal. 576, 38 P. 905, the question was whether provisions for taxation of a distinct class of railroads was special legislation. It was said at pages 588, 589, of 105 Cal., 38 P. at page 908: "The collection of taxes is not, however, the mere collection of a debt, but is a sovereign act of the state, to be exercised as may be prescribed by the legislature. Whether the tax is collected by an action in court, or by summary sale by the tax- collector, is immaterial. The state, through its legislature, can avail itself of the judicial power as the means by which it will collect the tax; and in such proceedings it may prescribe such procedure as may best avail for that purpose, irrespective of the mode of procedure provided for the determination of controversies between individuals, just as it may avail itself of the executive branch of the government by authorizing the sheriff to sell the property upon which the taxes are delinquent, without requiring him to pursue the same course as is required in sales upon judgments between individuals. Although the tax is an obligation from the citizen to the state, it is not of the same character of obligations as exist between citizens, and for the purposes of its collection the state is not limited to the same mode or to the same procedure which it prescribes for individuals in the collection of obligations between themselves."

The contention was made in Merchants' Trust Co. v. Wright, 161 Cal. 149, 118 P. 517, 518, that the sale of an entire tract of land to satisfy a tax lien, when sale of a smaller portion would produce sufficient, was a deprivation of property without due process of law. The court said, "That the Legislature may provide for the present system of taxation under which the state acquires title to the property of one who permits the taxes thereon to become delinquent and may authorize a subsequent sale thereof is not open to question. While it is undoubtedly true that a delinquent owner cannot be deprived of his property under such proceedings without due process of law, this due process of law, as far as tax proceedings are concerned, means only that due notice of sale shall be given to the delinquent owner, and this is fully accorded him by sections 3764-3767 of the Political Code, which provide for a notice to him by publication of the sale to the state. This is all the notice he is constitutionally entitled to, and when this is provided for by law, as it is here, he has been accorded the full measure of his constitutional right in that respect", (citing cases).

We also note the case of East Tennessee Brewing Co. v. Currier, 126 Tenn. 535, 150 S.W. 541, where the plaintiff, in addition to its brewer's manufacturing license tax, became liable for a liquor dealer's tax. A warrant issued to distrain sufficient property to satisfy taxes of $9,909, interest and penalties. The tax was paid under protest and suit was brought to enjoin further proceedings and to recover the tax paid. It was contended that the distraint, issued without notice or demand, was illegal and in violation of the rule of due process. The statute provided what facts would constitute a prima facie showing of liability for the tax and placed the burden on the dealer to prove that he was not engaged as such liquor dealer. There was no question that the brewer was in fact engaged in dealer's activities. It was held that under the authorities he was not entitled to advance notice that the tax was due; that if he was engaged in the wholesale or retail liquor business, he, of course, knew it, and was charged with notice that he was liable for the license tax exacted by the state. The court relied on Hagar v. Reclamation District, 111 U.S. 701, 709, 710, 4 S.Ct. 663, 28 L.Ed. 569, to the effect that from the nature of a vast number of different kinds of taxation as poll or license taxes, or taxes on things, persons, or occupations, notice to the taxpayer would be of no particular advantage and was, therefore, unnecessary. It quoted the following from 37 Cyc. p. 1233: "Laws providing summary remedies for the collection of delinquent taxes are not open to the constitutional objection, because they dispense with some of the formalities of ordinary judicial procedure, or cut off technical defenses, or authorize the seizure of the property first and the hearing afterward, provided only that the taxpayer is given an opportunity at some stage of the proceedings, and before his rights are finally cut off, to contest the validity of the tax or his liability in respect thereto." [126 Tenn. 535, 150 S.W. 544.] Continuing, it said: "The question of summary remedies for the collection of taxes is also discussed at length by Judge Cooley, in Cooley on Taxation, vol. 2, pp. 827-830, and the question of due process and the law of the land are discussed in the same work, in volume 1, p. 51 et seq.

"From all the authorities, it is evident that the state has the power to assess taxes and fix methods for the collection thereof, and it does not matter if these remedies be summary in their nature, so long as the taxpayer is in some way, at some stage of the proceedings, given an opportunity to be heard and have his rights determined before some competent tribunal.

"The statute in this case directed the issuance of a distress warrant upon certain conditions made to appear to the clerk of the county court.

"The statute might have prescribed that notice be given to the delinquent taxpayer before the issuance of a warrant; but the Legislature did not see proper to include such a provision, and it was entirely within their power to omit it, inasmuch as the taxpayer has open to him the several methods, heretofore pointed out, of calling in question the validity of the demand made against him."

[8-12] Unquestionably the "first section of the fourteenth amendment places a limit upon all the powers of the state, including, among others, that of taxation." County of Santa Clara v. Southern Pacific R. Co., C.C., 18 F. 385, 397. But the limit in respect to the levy and collection of taxes is well exemplified by the authorities herein discussed. The conclusion to be drawn therefrom is that the provisions of section 26 of the Retail Sales Tax Act do not contravene the constitutional inhibitions upon the legislature. The retailer knows or should know the amount of tax due on the sales reported by him. The statute provides for adequate notice of any additional assessment and an opportunity for mistakes to be rectified upon the filing of a petition within the time prescribed. He is notified by the provisions of the statute that the tax will become delinquent and collectible summarily and without further notice unless he makes objection within the specified time. Nothing further is necessary in so far as the objections raised by the defendant are concerned. No contrary significance may be inferred from the provision that a "judgment" is to be entered against the retailer upon the filing of the board's certificate, or that the lien created thereby "shall have the force, effect and priority of a judgment lien." The fact that the word "judgment" was used to designate the method of the summary procedure does not of itself require all the antecedent steps in a judicial tribunal usually applicable when private debts are the subject of collection. The foregoing authorities are clear to the effect that the sovereign may adopt any appropriate procedure known to the law for the purpose of collecting taxes and that it is not required to provide for a hearing in a judicial tribunal before it may use the processes which follow upon the entry of a judgment in such tribunal. It is plain that a hearing in a judicial tribunal was not intended and is not required by the statute here in question. The use of the word "judgment" in tax collection provisions for the purpose of calling in operation summary execution on and sale of property subject to tax liens is not strange nor unfamiliar. Section 3716 of the Political Code before its repeal in 1939 provided that "every tax has the effect of a judgment against the person, and every lien created by this title has the force and effect of an execution duly levied against all property of the delinquent; the judgment is not satisfied nor the lien removed until the taxes are paid or the property sold for the payment thereof." See California Loan, etc., Co. v. Weis, 118 Cal. 489, 50 P. 697; see, also, State of California v. Hisey, 9 Cir., 84 F.2d 802; Bull v. United States, supra; Simpson v. Warren, 106 Fla. 688, 143 So. 602, 144 So. 324; State Revenue Comm. v. National Biscuit Co., 49 Ga.App. 409, 175 S.E. 607; In re State Tax Commission, 136 Misc. 104, 240 N.Y.S. 309.

[13] Such a "judgment", not being ordered by a judicial tribunal, is not governed by provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure in like matters, such as the requirement for notice of entry of judgment, with the right to resort to an appellate tribunal.

[14] The foregoing also leads to the conclusion that the provisions of section 26 do not vest in the board of equalization arbitrary or unreasonable powers, and do not constitute special legislation. As indicated, the legislature may employ such procedure without providing for a judgment ordered by a judicial tribunal. The law is general, applicable to all in the class specified, viz., persons engaged in retail sales of tangible personal property. No serious question is or may be raised that that class of taxpayers may not be subjected to the method of tax collection provided by the statute, if otherwise its provisions are in accord with the requirements of due process. Roth Drug Co., Inc. v. Johnson, 13 Cal.App.2d 720, 57

P.2d 1022; see, also, People v. Mahoney, 13 Cal.2d 729, 91 P.2d 1029.

Cases relied upon by the defendant do not require or justify a contrary conclusion. State v. Security National Bank, 143 Minn. 408, 173 N.W. 885, involved a judicial proceeding wherein a judgment was reversed which was entered without notice or hearing against certain bank stockholders for a proportion of a tax assessed in the name of the bank. The court there, however, recognized that personal service of notice is not considered essential to due process in respect to the assessment and levy of taxes. As we have noted, the provisions of the Retail Sales Tax Act here in question relate solely to the assessment and collection of taxes and not to any proceeding in a judicial tribunal. The case of Griffin v. Cook County, 369 Ill. 380, 16 N.E.2d 906, 118 A.L.R. 1157, involved a statute which provided for a court proceeding to confirm a certain tax levy, and an appeal to the Supreme Court. It was held that the substituted service of notice by publication only in such judicial proceedings was not a compliance with due process of law. That case likewise is inapplicable to the facts involved here.

The case of Johnson v. Diefendorf, 56 Idaho 620, 57 P.2d 1068, 1072, involved the Idaho sales tax law. Laws 1935, 1st Ex.Sess., c. 12. That law contained provisions with respect to the filing of a notice of lien which should have the force and effect of a judgment duly docketed against the retailer. Section 17 of that act provided that if fraud or evasion on the part of a retailer be discovered by the commissioner, he should determine the amount by which the state has been defrauded, add to the amount so determined a penalty equal to twenty-five per cent thereof, and assess the same against the retailer, the amount so assessed to become immediately due and payable. Notice to delinquents and notice of sale were provided for, but apparently without any opportunity to make any objection to the finality of any additional assessment except by way of payment of the tax under protest and suit for recovery thereof. It was held that the arbitrary processes authorized by section 17, among others, were a deprivation of due process. It was also held that the powers sought to be conferred belong to the judicial branch of the government and could not be conferred upon the department of finance nor its commissioner. The court relied on the provisions of its state Constitution, and authorities stating the rule that "due process of law requires that one be heard before his rights are adjudged." It is questionable whether the court there would have come to any different conclusion had the act and particularly section 17 thereof provided for notice and an opportunity to object to the amount or validity of the tax before the finality of the assessment therein provided; but in any event the absence of any such provision in section 17 of the statute there involved distinguishes that case from the present. Aside from that distinction, if the decision be deemed to be support for the defendant's contentions herein, we must conclude that it is not in accord with the weight of authority.

The foregoing disposes of all the contentions presented by the defendant.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J.; CARTER, J.; PETERS, Justice pro tem.

TRAYNOR, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

EDMONDS, Justice (dissenting).

In my opinion, the decision of the majority authorizes a procedure which ignores constitutional rights, and is directly at variance with the fundamental principles of our government. The question for decision, it seems to me, is not answered by reference to the well established rule that the sovereign may provide a summary method for the collection of taxes.

I fully recognize that the maintenance of government is dependent upon the prompt collection of revenue for public purposes. But the provision of the Retail Sales Tax Act (Stats.1933, p. 2599, as amended; Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937 Ed., Act 8493), which is upheld in this case, permits an administrative body to usurp the functions of the superior court in violation of the constitutional provision: "The powers of the government of the State of California shall be divided into three separate departments—the legislative, executive, and judicial; and no person charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of these departments shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others, except as in this Constitution expressly directed or permitted." Art. III, sec. 1, Const. It is, of course, true that although there are different departments of our government, and each must act within its own prescribed limitations, executive agencies and judicial tribunals may cooperate for the accomplishment of governmental purposes. However, the constitutional provision contemplates independent action. To require the superior court to enter a judgment against an individual upon the mere demand of an administrative agency, in effect, subjects the judicial department of government to the other branches which are coordinate with but not superior to it.

According to section 26 of the Retail Sales Tax Act, supra, the clerk of the superior court, immediately upon the filing of a certificate made by the State Board of Equalization, "shall enter a judgment for the people of the State of California against the retailer. * * * Execution shall issue upon such a judgment upon request of the board in the same manner as execution may issue upon other judgments and sales shall be held under such execution as prescribed in the Code of Civil Procedure". Under these provisions a judgment in personam is entered against the retailer without any compliance with judicial procedure.

This is not a determination which, under section 3716 of the Political Code, has the "effect" of a judgment. "A judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding." Sec. 577, Code Civ.Proc. But a determination of liability which is given the "effect" of a judgment is an obligation collectible by administrative proceedings. And although by section 3716 of the Political Code tax liens are given the "force and effect" of an execution, the execution to be issued upon the judgment provided for in section 26 is the same kind of execution as is issued "upon other judgments".

In my opinion, therefore, the contention that the proceedings authorized by section 26 of the Retail Sales Tax Act are purely administrative cannot be sustained. "The state, through its legislature, can avail itself of the judicial power as the means by which it will collect the tax", and for that purpose may prescribe procedure summary and different than is provided for the determination of controversies between individuals. People v. Central Pacific R. Co., 105 Cal. 576, 38 P. 905, 908. But where at the instigation of the state the courts are called upon to aid another department of the government and to add judicial action to administrative order, the indispensable prerequisites of judicial action must exist. Notice by an administrative board of a hearing to be held by it is not a substitute for the due process which must underlie judicial action.

Not one of the cases relied upon by my associates concerned procedure similar to that which is here challenged. In accordance with long established principles they hold that summary methods of an administrative body in the levy, assessment and collection of taxes do not violate due process of law if, somewhere in the administrative proceeding, the taxpayer had notice and an opportunity to be heard. However, these cases are not authority for the enforcement of an administrative determination as the judgment of a court of law.

For example, in Springer v. United States, 102 U.S. 586, 26 L.Ed. 253, the tax collector caused a warrant to issue and levied upon real estate. It was urged that the summary levy and sale deprived the taxpayer of property without due process of law. The court held that this administrative process did not violate the constitutional guarantees. In the case of Bull v. United States, 295 U.S. 247, 55 S.Ct. 695, 699, 79 L.Ed. 1421, the court held that administrative procedure of a summary nature is valid, yet its opinion indicates that there is a clear line of demarcation between the administrative and judicial process in the collection of taxes. In this connection it is said that if the amount assessed by the taxing authorities is not paid when due, "administrative officials may seize the debtor's property to satisfy the debt."

So also in People v. Central Pacific R. Co., supra, an administrative procedure to assess and collect taxes upon railroads was upheld, but the decision is not authority for the conclusion reached in the present case. The court said: "The collection of taxes is not, however, the mere collection of a debt, but is a sovereign act of the state, to be exercised as may be prescribed by the legislature. Whether the tax is collected by an action in court, or by summary sale by the tax collector, is immaterial." In other words, the court in that case clearly recognized the distinction between an administrative remedy and judicial process. For, as my associates have pointed out, a statute may require the government to proceed by an action at law or it may authorize the summary seizure of property by the administrative officers. The government may choose its remedy, but if it proceeds by way of judicial authority, it must follow the due process required in actions at law.

I concur: WARD, Justice, pro tem.

17 Cal.2d 380

BACKUS v. SESSIONS et al.

L. A. 17700.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 17, 1941.

1. Automobiles ⇐244(13, 37)

In action for injuries sustained by motorcyclist colliding with truck at intersection at which prima facie speed limit was 15 miles per hour by reason of obstruction of view of traffic within statutory distance, evidence that truck driver cut corner at speed of 25 miles per hour, and that collision occurred while truck driver was cutting the corner, warranted finding that truck driver was negligent and that his negligence was "proximate cause" of collision. Vehicle Code, § 511, St.1937, p. 618.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Proximate Cause".

2. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)

An appellate court will not disturb finding of trial court where evidence is conflicting.

3. Release ⇐57(1)

Evidence warranted finding that injured plaintiff, at hospital on day after accident, was not competent and was not aware of what transpired when he signed release because of his physical and mental condition, so that release was void.

4. Release ⇐16

Under statute plaintiff suffering cuts and bruises around the eye did not, by cashing and endorsing draft which was delivered at time of execution of release covering all his injuries, release claim for impairment of vision and ultimate blindness resulting from optic nerve injury and not from cuts and bruises, where plaintiff had no knowledge of optic nerve injury at time of executing release or at time of endorsing and cashing draft, whether or not other parties to release had knowledge of optic nerve injury. Civ. Code, § 1542.

5. Contracts ⇐97(1)

A void instrument cannot be ratified or confirmed where person alleged to have made the ratification did not know what the agreement contained or all the facts when the alleged confirmation took place.

6. Appeal and error ⇐989

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff asserting that release executed by him did not cover impairment of vision resulting from unknown injury to optic nerve, Supreme Court would not, on defendants' appeal from adverse judgment rendered by trial court sitting without jury, consider evidence of conversation between plaintiff and physician relating to plaintiff's knowledge, at time of execution of release, that vision was permanently impaired, where trial court found on substantial evidence that plaintiff's condition was such that plaintiff was not mentally accountable for what transpired at time of execution of release.

7. Release ⇐57(2)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff asserting that release executed by him did not cover impairment of vision resulting from unknown injury to optic nerve, evidence warranted finding that plaintiff, who knew of cuts and bruises about his eye when he executed release, did not, when he cashed and endorsed draft delivered to him at time of execution of release, know of injury to optic nerve and of permanent impairment to vision.

8. Tender ⇐3

The statutes providing that offer in writing to pay sum of money if not accepted, is equivalent to actual production and tender of money, and that person to whom tender is made must specify any objection he has to tender or objection is waived, are not affected by statutes requiring offer to be made in good faith and that offeror must be willing and able to perform according to offer. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 2074, 2076; Civ.Code, §§ 1493, 1495.

9. Release ⇐24(2)

Where plaintiff received $800 and executed release covering known injuries but not covering unknown injury to optic nerve resulting in progressive loss of vision, plaintiff could subsequently sue for injury to optic nerve without rescinding release and offering to restore the $800. Civ.Code, § 1542.

10. Automobiles ⇐247

In motorcyclist's action for injuries sustained in collision with truck making left turn at intersection, finding that motorcyclist's negligence was not a proximate cause of collision and was remote, and that truck driver's negligence was the proximate cause of collision, was sufficient to negative defense of contributory negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Robert E. Burch, Judge.

Action by J. W. Backus against Milton Sessions and Edward J. Bonnin to recover damages sustained in collision between motorcycle and delivery truck. From a judgment for the plaintiff, the defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

For prior opinion see 104 P.2d 719.

Wright, Monroe, Hardin & Thomas and Monroe & McInnis, all of San Diego, for appellants.

Joseph S. Campbell, of San Diego, for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

Defendants appeal from a judgment rendered by the court sitting without a jury awarding plaintiff $3,500 damages for injury to the optic nerve of his left eye, and progressive impairment of vision and blindness resulting therefrom. That injury and other injuries resulted from a collision on April 5, 1939, in the daytime between plaintiff's motorcycle and defendant Sessions' delivery truck, being driven by Sessions' employee, defendant Bonnin. The collision occurred in the city of San Diego at the intersection of India and Redwood streets, each of which is paved and curbed and 52 feet wide. By reason of the obstruction of the view of traffic within the statutory distance on Redwood street to northbound traffic on India street, the prima facie speed limit at the intersection was 15 miles per hour. California Vehicle Code, § 511, St. 1937, p. 618. Under these circumstances plaintiff drove south on India street and made a "U" turn about three-fourths of a block south of the intersection. He then drove north on India street. Defendant Bonnin was driving south on India street, and at a point about 16 feet north of the north line of the intersection with Redwood street commenced to make a left turn into Redwood street and in so doing crossed to his left of the center line of India street, "cut the corner", and proceeded across the northeast quarter portion of the intersection. Just prior to the collision both plaintiff and Bonnin were traveling 25 miles per hour. The collision was head-on and occurred three feet south of the north line and 16 feet west of the east line of the intersection. As a result of the collision plaintiff suffered mental and physical shock, a fractured left ankle and wrist, bruised back and arm, and cuts and bruises on the left side of his head and on the left eye; the optic nerve to his left eye was injured resulting in partial atrophy and 80 per cent loss of vision and the prognostication is total blindness in that eye. The damages were found to be $3,500 for the injury to the optic nerve and the results flowing therefrom, and $800 for all other damages.

[1] Defendants denied that Bonnin was negligent and pleaded as special defenses a release from plaintiff and contributory negligence. From the foregoing facts it is obvious that the finding of the trial court that defendant Bonnin was negligent and that his negligence was the proximate cause of the collision is supported by the evidence.

Defendants contend that the release was a complete defense to the action. After the accident, plaintiff, being a member of the United States Marine Corps, was taken to the United States Naval Hospital in an unconscious condition. He was totally unconscious until 9 o'clock that night. While at the hospital he was under the care of Dr. Grindell, a physician attached to the hospital. The following day, April 6, 1939, at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, A. B. Severance, an insurance company adjuster, from defendant's public liability carrier, called on plaintiff at the hospital. Severance was accompanied by Dr. Findley, who also came on behalf of the insurance carrier. At that time, according to Severance's testimony, there was a conversation with plaintiff with reference to plaintiff's injuries and the settlement thereof. Dr. Grindell was present and Dr. Findley examined plaintiff. The conversation between Severance and plaintiff related to the settlement of the case. Plaintiff wanted a new motorcycle and $1,000 and was hesitant about settlement until he knew the extent of his injuries. The upshot was that plaintiff executed a general release of all damages suffered, both personal and property, for the sum of $800; the release provided among other things, that section 1542 of the Civil Code was waived. A draft for $800 was given to plaintiff; he was told about the draft being held for him the following day but had no recollection of it. On the face of the draft appeared the following: "in full satisfaction, compromise and discharge of all claims against Milton P. Sessions and Edwin Bonnin for damages as result of auto accident at India Street and Redwood Street, San Diego, San Diego County, California." The draft also provided that the sum was ordered paid to plaintiff in full satisfaction of the above-mentioned damages. On the reverse side of the draft was the following:

"In full payment and complete satisfaction of all claims against Milton P. Sessions and Edwin Bonnin under policy Number 8130402 for damages as result of accident occurring 4/5/39 at Redwood and India Streets, San Diego County, San Diego, California.

"The Endorsement must be made in conformity with the claim or claims as written on the face of the draft.

"In consideration of such payment of said———Milton P. Sessions and Edwin Bonnin is hereby discharged from all further claim by reason of said settlement, leaving———Dollars $.....only in force under this policy.

(Signed) "Joe Wright Backus."

[2, 3] The court found that at the time the release was executed and the draft delivered on April 6, 1939, and for several hours thereafter, plaintiff was in a dazed and semi-conscious condition and was without capacity to contract and was unaware of his rights and injuries; and further that he had no knowledge of the contents of the release until presented to him at the trial of the case. There is ample evidence to support those findings and, although there is a conflict in the evidence, under the familiar rule that an appellate court will not disturb a finding of the trial court where the evidence is conflicting, that finding cannot be here questioned. Hartman Ranch Co. v. Associated Oil Co., 10 Cal.2d 232, 73 P.2d 1163. Plaintiff testified he had very little memory about what took place on the afternoon of April 6, 1939, that he did not remember signing any release or being examined by Dr. Findley. The evidence shows that less than 24 hours before the signing of the release and the conversation on April 6, 1939, he had suffered a fractured wrist and ankle, bruised arm and back, and injuries on the face, head and left eye and concussion. His left eye and left side of his face were bandaged. He did not recognize friends who called at the hospital. To them he was in a dazed condition. Opiates had been administered to him the night before. We believe that this and other evidence was adequate to support the finding that plaintiff was not competent when the release was executed; and due to his physical and mental condition was not aware of what transpired on the afternoon of April 6, 1939. It must be concluded therefore that the release was void.

However, defendants claim that regardless of what plaintiff's condition may have been when the release was executed and the draft delivered, the subsequent cashing of the draft by plaintiff and his endorsement with the releases stated thereon, on April 17, 1939, was a ratification of the release of April 6, 1939, or was a complete release in itself. It is not disputed that when plaintiff endorsed and cashed the draft he was fully competent and knew what he was doing. The theory of the trial court on this proposition clearly appears from its findings. It found: "and (insurance carrier) having such knowledge, and concealing the same from plaintiff, who first discovered the fact in June, 1939, left at the hospital on April 6, 1939, a draft for Eight Hundred Dollars ($800.00) for plaintiff, which was in release of all claims for injuries on account of the accident. Plaintiff cashed this draft on April 17th, 1939 by endorsement. At that time plaintiff was in full possession of his mental faculties and was aware of and intended to release all of his damages then known to him which were in fact all except as for the injuries to his optic nerve of the left eye, which was then not known to him, and of which he remained in ignorance until after he had spent all of the $800.00."

The court then proceeded to determine that the damages for all of the injuries, except the injury to the optic nerve, was $800, the sum plaintiff had received on the draft. Under these circumstances it is clear that it was the court's conclusion that plaintiff was not bound by the release arising from the endorsement and cashing of the draft because he did not then know of the injury to his optic nerve and therefore the case came within the provisions of section 1542 of the Civil Code.

Defendants state in their brief that neither plaintiff nor defendants knew of the character of the injury to plaintiff's eye. They state: "* * * it is entirely unreasonable and improper to conclude that when Dr. Findley, who was not an eye specialist, made the superficial examination on the day after the accident, he was charged with any accurate knowledge of the injury. The unquestionable fact is that no one knew at the time whether the injury was permanent or otherwise."

The trial court found that defendants did know of the injury to plaintiff's optic nerve and of the permanent impairment of vision, at the time he (Dr. Findley) examined plaintiff on April 6, 1939, and that having such knowledge defendants were fraudulent in concealing it from plaintiff. Be that as it may, it is not material whether or not they had such knowledge. Conceding that neither defendants nor plaintiff knew of the injury to the optic nerve at any time until after the draft was cashed, the trial court's conclusion that plaintiff was not bound by the release or cashing of the draft was proper. Section 1542 provides:

"A general release does not extend to claims which the creditor does not know or suspect to exist in his favor at the time of executing the release, which if known by him must have materially affected his settlement with the debtor."

[4, 5] Assuming that the release, and draft and endorsement and cashing thereof may be considered all one transaction, it does not follow that the cashing of the draft was a ratification of the release in all its phases. This is true for the reason that there cannot be said to be a ratification or confirmation of a void instrument or agreement when the person alleged to have made the ratification did not know what the agreement contained or all the facts when the alleged confirmation took place. International M. Co. v. National R. Co., 67 Cal.App. 498, 227 P. 918; Schmidt v. Mesmer, 116 Cal. 267, 271, 48 P. 54. Plaintiff knew nothing of the release or what it contained until after the draft was cashed; he knew nothing of it until it was exhibited to him at the trial. It is true he knew the draft contained release provisions and that by cashing it he was making a settlement but nothing was said in the release provisions of the draft about known or unknown injuries or waiving section 1542 of the Civil Code as appeared in the release. Under such circumstances it is not material whether the cashing of the draft with the release thereon be considered as a ratification of the release or as an independent instrument constituting a release and settlement. The essence of the problem is therefore, whether the case comes within the terms of section 1542 of the Civil Code, providing that a release does not include claims for injuries not known or suspected to exist by the releasor when executed. Plaintiff could not know of the injury to his optic nerve when he signed the release because at that time he was not mentally competent and was not aware of what was transpiring. The lower court found that plaintiff did not know of the injury to his optic nerve and the impairment of vision and ultimate blindness which would result therefrom, when he endorsed and cashed the draft. Defendants urge that that finding is not supported by the evidence in that the most that plaintiff can be said to have been ignorant of was that the impairment of his vision would grow progressively greater to the final tragedy of blindness.

[6, 7] In this connection plaintiff testified that he had injuries on the left side of his face and around the left temple and eye; seven stitches were taken, some being in the eyebrow. His eye and the side of his forehead were bandaged for about two weeks. He did not know of his optic nerve being injured and that he would probably lose the sight of his eye until he consulted an eye specialist while still at the hospital, about June 17, 1939, two months after he had cashed the draft. He stated that he had difficulty with his eye since the injury, but what difficulty does not appear. It may have been because of the cuts and bruises alone. Defendants would have the court consider evidence of the conversation between Severance, Dr. Findley and plaintiff on April 6, 1939, as bearing on plaintiff's knowledge that his vision was permanently impaired, (and other matters) but the trial court has found on substantial evidence, that plaintiff's condition was such that he was not mentally accountable for what transpired at that time; thus, such evidence should not be considered by us. It follows then that the evidence justifies the trial court's finding that plaintiff did not know of the injury to his optic nerve and of the permanent impairment of his vision when he endorsed and cashed the draft. The case is simply one then where a person, when he signs a release for all injuries, has suffered cuts and bruises around the eye and other injuries of which he knows but he is also suffering from an injury to the optic nerve which will result in a permanent impairment of vision and ultimate blindness of which he does not know. Uuder these circumstances section 1542 is applicable. It is not a situation where unexpected and unknown consequences develop from a known injury. The impairment of vision and ultimate blindness are not consequences flowing from the bruising of the eye and the cuts thereabout, rather they are from the unknown injury to the optic nerve. O'Meara v. Haiden, 204 Cal. 354, 268 P. 334, 60 A. L.R. 1381, is controlling here. There the action was for wrongful death of a minor, occurring seven months after the accident, caused by an injury to the spleen. The defense was a release of all known and unknown damages given prior to the minor's death. It appeared that there was a bruise over the abdomen causing a hemorrhage in the spleen not visible to the naked eye; the bruise on the abdomen however was observed and known. This court held the release did not cover the damages for the death resulting from the injury to the spleen, stating at page 360 of 204 Cal., at page 337 of 268 P., 60 A.L.R. 1381:

"It appears, therefore, beyond question, that at the date of the release the injury which was the cause of the boy's death was not known to either party. It was not in the minds of the parties at the time of settlement which resulted in the execution of this written release. Accordingly, although the release may purport upon its face to extend to the plaintiff's claim for damages arising from the death of his son, yet, in reality it does not do so. Section 1542, Civ. Code. It is unreasonable to suppose that plaintiff would have entered into said agreement of settlement whereby he released the defendant of all damage for the sum of $250 had he known that there was any possibility that the boy had received this fatal injury to his spleen. Such knowledge would have materially affected his settlement with defendant. To hold him to the terms of the release would not only be manifestly unfair and unjust, but it would be against the law of this state as we understand the same and as we have attempted to state it in the foregoing pages of this opinion."

In Gambrel v. Duensing, 127 Cal.App. 593, 16 P.2d 284, a general release for personal injuries was signed by plaintiffs when they were not aware of what they were doing and under their impression that the $350 received therefor was for property damage and hospital expenses rather than the personal injuries. The court said at page 601, et seq. of 127 Cal. App., at page 287 of 16 P.2d:

"It is further contended that the release was signed when the plaintiff was not in a physical or mental condition to properly apprehend the effect of the instrument which was being signed by her and that the obtaining of her signature under such circumstances constituted a fraud. * * *

"That there was a mistake of the parties as to the extent of the injuries suffered by the plaintiff, and especially as to the injury upon which this action is specially predicated, unquestionably appears in this case. The damages which entered into the $350 as the basis of the settlement was apportioned as follows: $180 for damages to the automobile, and the remainder for hospital bills, doctors' fees, etc.

"There is further testimony in the record to the effect that neither the plaintiff nor Louis Gambrel would have signed the release had they known of the resulting injury to the plaintiff's eyesight. The release signed by the plaintiff and Louis Gambrel is in the words and figures following, to wit:

" 'We, Mrs. Lilly Gambrel & Louis Gambrel, of the city of Yuba City, County of Sutter, State of Calif., for and in consideration of the sum of three hundred fifty dollars paid to us by State Farm Mutual Auto. Ins. Co., the receipt is hereby acknowledged, do hereby release and discharge C. E. & L. E. Duensing and State Farm Mutual Auto. Ins. Co. of the City of Bloomington, County of McClean, State of

Ill. from any and all claims or demands of any nature whatsoever accruing prior to this date, and particularly from all claims and demands arising out of accident 99 highway 1½ miles north of Roseville, Calif. on or about the 8th day of Jan. 1931, in or near the city of Roseville, County of Placer, State of Calif.'

"Irrespective of the question of fraud, or of any undue influence, or whether the plaintiff was in a physical or mental condition to fully comprehend and appreciate the legal consequences of signing the paper which she thought was a receipt, the fact of mutual mistake is fully disclosed by the record. The plaintiff had no knowledge whatever at the time of signing the release that her eyesight had been impaired, or would become impaired by reason of any injury that she had suffered. If the representatives of the insurance company had any knowledge of such fact, then their concealment thereof amounted to a fraud. We do not need to cite authorities that a release can be set aside for a mistake of fact, as section 1542 of the Civil Code provides for such procedure." See, also: Hudgins v. Standard Oil Co., 136 Cal.App. 44, 28 P.2d 433; Wetzstein v. Thomasson, 34 Cal.App.2d 554, 93 P.2d 1028; Touhy v. Owl Drug Co., 6 Cal.App.2d 64, 44 P.2d 405.

Defendants next urge that there was no proper tender of the $800 paid on the draft when plaintiff sought to rescind the release, and that such an offer of restoration was vital to plaintiff's case. By letter to defendants from plaintiff's attorney on May 12, 1939, notice of rescission was given together with a statement of an offer to restore the $800. In reply to that letter the insurance carrier replied that they were going to investigate the matter and would advise of their decision later.

[8, 9] The court found that at the time of the written offer to restore, "plaintiff had assets convertible to cash in the amount of $200.00 and could have borrowed $600.00 to have completed restoration of $800.00, but did not have the sum of $800.00 in cash to restore if defendants had surrendered their claims under said writings of April 6, 1939." That finding is supported by the evidence. Section 2074 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an offer in writing to pay a sum of money if not accepted, is equivalent to actual production and tender of the money and section 2076 provides that a person to whom a tender is made must specify any objection he has to it or it is waived. It is true that those sections do not affect sections 1493 and 1495 of the Civil Code which require an offer to be made in good faith and that the offeror must be willing and able to perform according to the offer. Allen v. Chatfield, 172 Cal. 60, 156 P. 47. But we cannot say that when plaintiff had assets convertible in cash of the value of $200 and had sufficient credit and was able and willing to borrow $600, he was unable or unwilling to restore the $800 to defendants. It is quite evident that the offer of rescission and to restore was not accepted by defendants. Apparently plaintiff heard nothing further from them after the offer was made; and after he commenced his action defendants claimed in their answer that the release was in full force and effect and a complete bar to plaintiff's action. In any event rescission and an offer of restoration are not necessary under circumstances such as are here existent. The original release made on April 6, 1939, was absolutely void and no rescission was necessary. There was clearly no meeting of the minds because plaintiff was incompetent at that time. The release contained in the draft considered either as a separate release instrument or as a ratification of only the general release provisions of the original release required no rescission or offer to restore for the simple reason that there was nothing to restore. The release, in the language of section 1542, did not extend to unknown injuries, that is, the injury to the optic nerve. Putting the matter affirmatively it did extend to all injuries except that to the optic nerve, and therefore the $800 was the settlement figure agreed upon for all other injuries and being such there would be no occasion for restoring it to defendants. They had received for that sum a release for all of such other injuries and they are not in any way prejudiced. The injuries to the optic nerve being unknown were simply not a part of the release contract, or stated another way, no release was made with reference to the optic nerve. It is not dissimilar to a release which specifies on its face that it covers only part of the injuries suffered. In either case the release stands as the agreement of the parties as to the known injuries. Realizing this the trial court found, as heretofore shown, that the $800, the amount of the draft, was the amount of damages suffered by plaintiff by reason of all injuries, except the optic nerve. This reasoning finds support in Meyer v. Haas, 126 Cal. 560, at page 563,

58 P. 1042, at page 1043, where it was held that the release extended only to the loss of time item of damages, and the court said:

"The contract, under such circumstances, will be held to be what the maker of it intended it should be, and not what it was made to appear to be by the deception practiced. The $25 paid plaintiff may, therefore, properly be said to have been received in payment for the loss of time during his illness, and not in satisfaction of anything that his mind never consented that it should satisfy. The claim sued upon does not include this loss of time, and the court instructed the jury that they could find nothing against defendants for loss of time. No offer to return the money was necessary, for the reason that the plaintiff in this case 'is not attempting to avoid a contract which he has made, but is showing that he did not make the contract which he apparently made.' Mullen v. [Old Colony] R. R., 127 Mass. 86 [34 Am.Rep. 349]; [Chicago, etc.] Ry. Co. v. Lewis, 109 Ill. 120; Senter v. Senter, 70 Cal. 619, 11 P. 782; Wilson v. Moriarty, 77 Cal. 596, 20 P. 134; Id., 88 Cal. 207, 26 P. 85; Sullivan v. Moorhead, 99 Cal. 157, 33 P. 796."

It is said in Wetzstein v. Thomasson, 34 Cal.App.2d 554, 560, 93 P.2d 1028, 1032:

"The objection has also been raised by defendant that in order for plaintiff to maintain this action she should have offered to restore to defendant the sum paid at the time of signing the releases. No offer to restore the consideration received is necessary where a party is tricked or deceived into signing a contract different in its terms and objects from the contract which she has made and which she understands that she is executing. No offer to return the money was necessary because plaintiff is not seeking to avoid a contract made by her but is merely showing that she did not make the contract which was apparently made by her. Meyer v. Haas, supra; Tyner v. Axt, supra [113 Cal.App. 408, 298 P. 537]. Plaintiff understood that the release covered only doctor bills incurred to date and the cost of obtaining a helper in the flower shop for thirty days. The judgment covered only such items of damage as have accrued since the date of the settlement. The rule is well stated in Garcia v. California Truck Co., supra (183 Cal. 767, 192 P. [708] 710): 'In other words, if the situation is such that reforming the release to make it read as it would have read except for the fraud upon the plaintiff, the release would still purport to be a bar to the plaintiff's cause of action, then in order to maintain his action he must rescind and avoid the release, and for rescission an offer of restoration is necessary.'" See also: O'Meara v. Haiden, supra.

It follows then that because of the ignorance of the existence of the injury to the optic nerve, the payment of the $800 necessarily covered all damages except those flowing from such injury, and the trial court found plaintiff's damages for injury to the optic nerve was $3,500 and that "for all other damages are the sum of Eight hundred Dollars ($800.00).", and also that "the draft for $800.00 was a full release and satisfaction of all plaintiff's damages known at the time it was negotiated by plaintiff, and these include all damages except injury to optic nerve of his left eye and progressive loss of vision thereof". Under these circumstances defendants are not in a position to object to the sufficiency of any offer of rescission or restoration.

[10] Finally defendants complain that the finding against contributory negligence is insufficient and that the evidence establishes contributory negligence as a matter of law. From the foregoing discussion of the facts it is apparent that there was adequate evidence from which the trial court could find a lack of negligence on the part of plaintiff contributing proximately to the collision. The mere fact of the speed at which plaintiff was traveling, 25 miles per hour, was not necessarily a proximate cause of the accident. It is true that due to the view being obstructed the prima facie speed limit was 15 miles per hour, but that limit has reference to traffic entering into India street from Redwood street rather than traffic turning left from India street into Redwood street as was done by defendant Bonnin. The obstruction of view did not affect the parties involved in the collision here involved. The trial court found:

"After defendant Bonnin turned left into the east half of India Street neither operator could have avoided the collision. Plaintiff had no knowledge of defendant Bonnin's intention to turn in front of plaintiff until defendant Bonnin had begun his left turn. Plaintiff's negligence was not a proximate cause of the collision and was remote. Defendant Bonnin's negligence was the proximate cause of the collision." Although more precise findings could have been prepared, we believe that such finding was sufficient to negative the defense of contributory negligence. In Frazzini v. Cable, 114 Cal.App. 444, 455, 300 P. 121, 126, it is said:

"However, finding No. 15, as follows, 'That it is not true that the death of Renardo Frazzini occurred proximately and directly through and by reason of the unlawful and wrongful act of said plaintiff in any manner at all,' read in connection with finding No. 3, which fixes the negligence of the appellant as the proximate cause of the death of Renardo Frazzini, is sufficient to constitute a finding negativing contributory negligence, even considering the pleading sufficient to raise the issue of contributory negligence." See also: Squier v. Davis Standard Bread Co., 181 Cal. 533, 185 P. 391; Miner v. Dabney-Johnson Oil Corporation, 219 Cal. 580, 28 P.2d 23; Katz v. T. I. Butler Co., 81 Cal.App. 747, 254 P. 679.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; TRAYNOR, J.; EDMONDS, J.

17 Cal.2d 364

WALLING et al. v. KIMBALL et al.

L. A. 17653.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1015(5)

On motion for new trial for misconduct of counsel, trial court's finding that there had been no prejudicial misconduct was justified, for all matters covered by affidavits took place in presence of trial judge who was in the best position to observe the demeanor of the parties and to gauge any possible effect it might have had upon the jury.

2. Appeal and error ⇐933(1)

Where motion for new trial for misconduct of counsel was denied, trial court must be deemed to have concluded that no prejudice was suffered by movant.

3. Appeal and error ⇐978(2)

The trial judge is in a much better position than an appellate court to determine whether the verdict in a case is probably due wholly or in part to misconduct of counsel and trial judge's conclusion should not be disturbed unless under all the circumstances it is plainly wrong.

4. New trial ⇐32

Any prejudicial effect resulting from assertion by counsel that an attorney for two defendants was attempting to confuse the issues and that such attorney also represented witness whose deposition was being read, and that two attorneys were representing the three defendants jointly, was removed by trial court's direction to jury to disregard such assertion.

5. New trial ⇐29

Denial of motion for new trial for alleged misconduct of counsel was proper.

6. Damages ⇐43

A husband has a right of action which he may pursue in his own name for damages to himself by reason of his wife's injuries, such as medical and other expenses incurred by reason of such injuries.

7. Damages ⇐216(9)

In husband's action against master and servant for special damages by reason of injuries sustained by wife through servant's alleged negligence, charge that if jury found for plaintiff jury might assess stipulated sum expended for wife's treatment was proper as to both defendants.

8. Appeal and error ⇐900

An appellate court will never indulge in presumptions to defeat a judgment, but every intendment and presumption not contradicted by or inconsistent with the record on appeal must be indulged in favor of orders and judgments of superior courts.

9. Appeal and error ⇐901

All presumptions and intendments are in favor of supporting the judgment or order appealed from, and appellant has burden of showing reversible error, and in absence of such showing the judgment or order appealed from will be affirmed.

10. Appeal and error ⇐932(1)

Presumption was that verdict for husband was for general damages for husband's personal injuries alone to exclusion of special damages for expense of treating wife also injured in same automobile collision, particularly where husband's injuries would sustain verdict for amount awarded and verdict for wife would otherwise be excessive under statute to amount of special damages allowed husband. Vehicle Code, § 402(a, b), St.1935, p. 153.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; W. L. Bradshaw, Judge.

Action by Jones D. Walling and Grace Walling against David K. Kimball, Kimball Motor Car Company and Noah Hastings for damages resulting from automobile collision. From judgments for Jones D. Walling for $5,000 and judgments for Grace Walling for $5,000, David K. Kimball and Kimball Motor Car Company appeal.

Affirmed.

For prior opinion, see 103 P.2d 984.

Bronson, Bronson & McKinnon and Paul C. Dana, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Jack W. Bradley, of Bakersfield, for defendant Noah Hastings.

Ira J. McDonald, of Los Angeles, and J. K. Lilly, of Bakersfield (Harvey D. Taylor, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

CURTIS, Justice.

Defendants David K. Kimball and Kimball Motor Car Company appeal from a judgment for plaintiffs in an action for damages sustained by the latter in an automobile accident which occurred on November 24, 1935, some twenty-five miles south of Bakersfield on Highway No. 99. The car in which plaintiffs were riding collided with a Cadillac automobile owned by the defendants Kimball and driven by the defendant Noah Hastings. David K. Kimball is the sole owner of Kimball Motor Car Company and does business under that trade name in Huntington Park.

The first trial of the case before a jury resulted in a disagreement. On the second trial the jury returned the following verdicts: (1) In favor of Jones D. Walling for $5,000 as against all defendants; (2) in favor of Grace Walling for $20,000 as against the defendant Hastings and for $5,000 as against the defendants David K. Kimball and Kimball Motor Car Company. Motions for new trial were made by all defendants and denied, whereupon said defendants David K. Kimball and Kimball Motor Car Company appealed from the judgments entered against them.

This appeal is based upon two grounds: prejudicial misconduct of counsel, which prevented appellants from having a fair trial, and erroneous instructions as to statutory liability. Consideration of the first point—misconduct of counsel—requires a somewhat detailed discussion of the facts and circumstances forming the substance of this charge.

Hastings was represented at both trials by his own counsel, Mr. Bradley, who was paid, however, by appellants. During the course of the first trial Hastings, while on the witness stand, acknowledged Mr. Bradley to be his attorney and stated he would cooperate with said counsel. During cross-examination by appellants' counsel in the course of the first trial and contrary to court order, Hastings disappeared and has never been located by court or counsel. Consequently Hastings did not appear at the instant trial.

From the evidence it appears that Hastings first started to work for the appellants on November 18, 1935, just six days before the accident. Since his work as a general utility man—his principal duties being to wash cars and do janitor work—required him to open the place in the morning, he had a key to the premises. On Saturday, November 23, 1935, he was told to take a Dodge car and go to Long Beach on a specific errand. He did not return until 11 o'clock that night, at which time no one was at the garage, which was closed at 9 p. m. He left the Dodge on the premises and took the Cadillac for the purpose of making a trip to Bakersfield to see his sister. The accident happened en route to Bakersfield. The next morning when the Cadillac was missed, the matter was reported to the police. That afternoon the appellants received a wire from Hastings advising them of the wreck. Respondents concede that Hastings was not acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident, and liability is sought to be imposed upon appellants under subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 402 of the Vehicle Code St.1935, p. 153.

The pivotal point of the entire case on appeal centers on the question of Hastings' permission to drive the Cadillac. The evidence presented in support of this permissive use consists of a portion of the deposition of Hastings, taken by respondents under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the testimony of Jones D. Walling and his investigator concerning certain oral admissions by Hastings made some months after the accident to the effect that he had had such permission. With reference to this matter Hastings testified that he began working for the appellants seven or eight months before the accident occurred; that he had used their cars for his own personal convenience some forty or forty-five times; that about a week after he went to work David K. Kimball and his brother had told him to take a car whenever he needed it; and that on the first day he went to work there the brother told him he could take a car whenever he wanted it for his own personal use.

This evidence was contradicted by the testimony for appellants and by a portion of the testimony of Hastings himself. In this connection it was conclusively shown that the business operated by the appellants was not opened until September 10, 1935, a little more than two months before the accident; that Hastings did not go to work for them until November 18, 1935; that he worked for and was paid by a firm in Long Beach up to November 15, 1935; and that he later paid the appellants for the damage to the Cadillac.

There was testimony on behalf of the appellants that no general permission to take cars was given, and that Hastings had been allowed to use a car for his own personal purposes only once, November 16, 1935, when he drove to Long Beach, where he had previously been employed, to pick up some of his belongings. When his deposition was taken Hastings was confronted with his signed statement of November 26, 1935, two days after the accident, wherein he said: "I had no permission to use the Cadillac and no one at the Kimball Motor Company knew I had the Cadillac until I reported the accident on Sunday afternoon," and also: "I was acquainted previously with Mr. Vaus (manager of the used car sales department) and I presumed that I could use a car without asking for permission." In his deposition Hastings testified that these statements were true.

The appellants contend that, in view of the weak and unsatisfactory character of the evidence on the most important issue in the case, i. e., whether or not Hastings had permission to use the Cadillac, certain statements made by the respondents' counsel during the reading of Hastings' deposition in the course of the trial amounted to prejudicial misconduct which prevented them from having a fair and unbiased hearing. With reference to this instance, after he had finished reading the direct examination of Hastings, counsel for the respondents objected to the reading of his cross-examination by the appellants' counsel on the ground "that Mr. Dana (appellants' counsel) in this case as a matter of fact is the representative of Mr. Hastings, and that he is attempting to indulge in this cross-examination to confuse the issues, and that he and Mr. Bradley (Hastings' counsel) are representing these parties jointly, and that Mr. Dana * * * employed Mr. Bradley in this case, and that due to that relationship they are certainly not entitled to put Mr. Hastings on the 'pan' and have their cake and eat it". In the ensuing argument, respondents' attorney claimed that his own integrity was challenged by the charge of appellants' attorney that he (respondents' attorney) had broken his word to the court, that his statement was false and untrue and the breach of a stipulation setting forth the facts as to the employment of counsel for Hastings. Finally, the objection to the introduction of the cross-examination was overruled, and respondents' counsel concluded the altercation with the following statement: "I will later then have to call both Mr. Bradley and Mr. Dana to the stand and find out the true facts of this matter." Counsel for the appellants assigned these quoted remarks as misconduct and requested the court to strike them from the record, which was not done. Subsequently, in the course of the hearing on a motion for mistrial, which was denied, counsel for respondents withdrew the accusations thus made, though the jury was not advised of this. Later in its general instructions, the court told the jury not to consider any statements of counsel as evidence.

Appellants urge that the statements so made before the jury contained all of the prejudicial elements in that they injected a false quantity into the case; they were not made in good faith; and coming as they did, during the most important part of the evidence relating to whether or not Hastings had permission to use the automobile in question, their purpose was to mislead the jury by accusing the appellants' counsel of conniving with the attorney for Hastings for the purpose of suppressing the evidence.

[1] The entire controversy and every issue here set up as misconduct were before the trial court upon the motions for new trial and the affidavits filed by respective counsel in support thereof and in opposition thereto. Upon the issues thus raised in the trial court, the court decided that there had been no prejudicial misconduct, and this was a finding of fact which the trial court was justified in making when the motions for new trial were denied, for all of the matters of which complaint is made also took place in the presence of the trial judge, who was in the best position to observe the demeanor of the parties and to gauge any possible effect it might have had upon the jury. In the leading case on this subject, LaFargue v. United Railroads, 183 Cal. 720, at page 724, 192 P. 538, at page 540, this Court said:

[2, 3] "The trial court denied a motion for a new trial based upon the ground, among others, of misconduct of plaintiff's attorney. In doing this the court must be deemed to have concluded that no prejudice was suffered by defendant by reason of any of the matters to which we have referred. Conceding some of the statements made by counsel, whatsoever the provocation thought by him to exist therefor, were improper, we are satisfied that this conclusion of the trial judge should not be disturbed by an appellate court. The trial judge is in a much better position than an appellate court to determine whether the verdict in a case is probably due wholly or in part to such alleged misconduct as we have here, and his conclusion in the matter should not be disturbed unless, under all the circumstances appearing, it is plainly wrong. * * *"

The fundamental logic of the reasoning underlying this basic principle was given equally strong recognition and support in Roddy v. American Smelting & Refining Company, 34 Cal.App.2d 457, 93 P.2d 841; Behrendt v. Times Mirror Company, 30 Cal.App.2d 77, 85 P.2d 949; Pandolfo v. Jackson, 12 Cal.App.2d 232, 55 P.2d 550; and Aydlott v. Key System Transit Company, 104 Cal.App. 621, 286 P. 456.

In support of their argument that the action of the respondents' counsel during the course of the instant trial constitutes misconduct sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal, appellants cite the cases of Merralls v. Southern Pacific Company, 182 Cal. 19, 186 P. 778; Keena v. United Railroads, 197 Cal. 148, 239 P. 1061; Gackstetter v. Market Street Railway Company, 130 Cal. App. 316, 20 P.2d 93; and Gee v. Fong Poy, 88 Cal.App. 627, 264 P. 564. These cases, however, are readily distinguishable from the instant one. In the Merralls case the appeal was by defendant from an order granting a new trial to plaintiff, and this court there refused to disturb the finding of the trial court where no abuse of discretion was shown.

In Keena v. United Railroads, supra [197 Cal. 148, 239 P. 1065], particular emphasis in the opinion is placed on the fact that "the misconduct consisted, not in a single utterance of the charge, but rather embraced iteration and reiteration thereof, and included hints, suggestions, and insinuations to such an extent that by no possibility could the meaning of counsel have been misinterpreted or misunderstood by the members of the jury." (Italics ours.) Likewise, in Gackstetter v. Market Street Railway Company, supra, and Gee v. Fong Poy, supra, there was repeated and persistent misconduct of such unmistakable character that the general inclination of this Court not to disturb the findings of the trial court could not be followed under the circumstances.

[4, 5] In the instant case there is but a solitary assignment of misconduct, which on its face is of such doubtful character that it cannot be said that the trial court, after a full hearing of the facts forming the basis of such charge, erred in denying the motions for new trial herein. Examination of the prejudicial statements to which appellants make objection reveals that they could have conveyed nothing to the jury other than a charge that one of the attorneys for the defendants was attempting to confuse the issues and a declaration that said attorney was in fact the representative of the witness whose deposition was being read, and that the two attorneys were representing the defendants jointly. Apparently, the respondents' counsel acted in good faith in reliance on the admitted employment of Hastings' counsel through arrangement of appellants' counsel, and it seems to us that any prejudicial effect which said statements might have had was removed by the trial court's direction to the jury to disregard entirely the remarks of counsel. Conceding that the statements made by respondents' counsel, whatever may have been the basis of his assertion, were improper, we are satisfied that the conclusion of the trial judge, after consideration of these same facts presented by the conflicting affidavits in the course of the argument on the motions for a new trial, should not be disturbed by this Court.

Appellants further contend that the trial court erroneously instructed the jury with respect to the limit of liability upon the owner of an automobile for injuries to one or more persons.

The court read to the jury subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 402 of the Vehicle Code. Subdivision (b) limits the liability of the owner in such a case as this to $5,000 "for the death of or injury to one person in any one accident," and subject to this limitation, to $10,000 "with respect to the death of or injury to more than one person in any one accident." At this point the court admonished the jurors to respect these limits as to appellants, naming them, even though they should award a greater sum as against the driver Hastings. This was followed by some instructions of a general nature, after which the court gave its charge as to the elements of damage to be considered by the jury in connection with each of the respondents. It is the concluding paragraph of this charge on the subject of damages which is attacked as erroneous:

"It has been stipulated that plaintiff, Jones D. Walling, incurred as special damages, for hospital, medical, x-rays and incidental expense for treatment of his own injuries, to-wit, the sum of $500.52, and expense of treatment of the injuries of his wife, Grace Walling, to-wit, the sum of $3,260.55, and as damage to his Chevrolet automobile, to-wit, the sum of $600.20, and that said items of expense were reasonable. If you find the plaintiff, Jones D. Walling, is entitled to recover you may assess said items as his special damages."

[6] It is contended by appellants that this instruction is erroneous in that it told the jury that the expense of treatment for the injuries to the wife in the sum of $3,260.55 could be recovered by the husband as his special damages. That a husband has a right of action which he is entitled to pursue in his own name for damages to himself by reason of his wife's injuries, such as medical and other expenses incurred by reason of such injuries, is so well settled that the proposition requires no citation of authority, but if authorities are desired, they may be found assembled in 13 Cal.Juris. at page 880, section 69.

[7] It is a little difficult to understand the position of counsel for either of the parties as to the propriety of giving this instruction. Counsel for respondents states that this instruction was proper as to the defendant Hastings. We see no reason to place any such limitation upon this instruction. Respondent Jones D. Walling sued for the exact amount stated in this instruction as special damage sustained by him by reason of his wife's injuries, the items making up this amount being set forth in said instruction. If Hastings' negligence was the proximate cause of the injuries to the two respondents, and he was driving the Cadillac machine with the consent of the appellants, and the respondents were free from negligence, then both Hastings and the appellants were severally liable for the amount of the special damage sustained by respondent Jones D. Walling as set forth in said instruction. The instruction, therefore, was proper as to each and all of said defendants.

The difficulty we find in this case relates not to the judgment in favor of Mr. Walling, but that in favor of Mrs. Walling. Her action was for general damages. She did not sue for special damages. Therefore, no part of the item of $3,260.55 is or could be held to be included in the judgment for $5,000 rendered in her favor. We have, therefore, this situation: a judgment for $5,000 in favor of the wife and against the appellants for injuries to her and a judgment for $5,000 against the appellants in favor of the husband for injuries sustained by him by reason of Hastings' negligence. If the judgment in favor of the husband included said sum of $3,260.55, then we have judgments aggregating $8,260.55 against the appellants for injuries to Mrs. Walling. But can we hold that the judgment in favor of the husband does include said sum of $3,260.55? It is true that he sued for this amount as his special damage sustained by reason of his wife's injuries. He also sued for $10,000 general damages sustained by him on account of his own injuries. The evidence in our opinion would sustain a verdict in his favor for $5,000 general damages. We will refer to this evidence in more detail later on in this opinion.

Did the jury in fixing the amount of his damage base its award upon his claim for general damages alone, or did it include as a part of said award his claim for special damages? According to appellants' theory the jury did include in its award of $5,000 in favor of Jones D. Walling his claim of $3,260.55 for damages sustained by him by reason of his wife's injuries and, therefore, having also awarded Mrs. Walling $5,000 damages against the appellants for the injuries sustained by her, this judgment in favor of Mrs. Walling against the appellants is excessive to the extent of $3,260.55. We will assume that appellants' construction of said section 402 of the Vehicle Code is correct, and that under said section of the code the combined damages of the husband and wife as against the owner of the machine for an injury to the wife cannot exceed the sum of $5,000. We expressly refrain, however, from deciding this point.

While the jury was instructed that it might include said item of $3,260.55 as special damages in its verdict in favor of Jones D. Walling, it was also instructed that it might award him general damages not exceeding the sum of $10,000, with a further instruction that the liability of the appellants was limited to $5,000 for injury to one person. We have already stated that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a judgment in Jones D. Walling's favor for $5,000 general damages. It was, therefore, within the power of the jury to render a verdict in his favor and against the appellants for the sum of $5,000 for general damages alone, or a verdict in that amount made up of both general and special damages.

If the verdict in his favor and against the Kimballs was for general damages alone, then the verdict for $5,000 in his wife's favor and against the appellants was a legal verdict. If, however, the verdict in his favor included special damage sustained by him by reason of his wife's injuries, then the verdict of $5,000 in favor of his wife and against the appellants would be excessive and erroneous to the extent of the special damage included in the judgment in his favor, according to appellants' construction of section 402 of the Vehicle Code. In this state of the case can we presume that the jury included in its verdict in favor of the husband his claim for special damages sustained by reason of his wife's injury, when such an award would have rendered that in favor of the wife excessive and to that extent illegal and erroneous?

[8] It is a well established rule in this state that "an appellate court will never indulge in presumptions to defeat a judgment. It will never presume that an error was committed, or that something was done or omitted to be done which constitutes error. On the contrary, every intendment and presumption not contradicted by or inconsistent with the record on appeal must be indulged in favor of the orders and judgments of superior courts." 2 Cal.Juris. 852.

[9] "It is well settled that all presumptions and intendments are in favor of supporting the judgment or order appealed from, and that an appellant has the burden of showing reversible error, and that, in the absence of such showing, the judgment or order appealed from will be affirmed. [Citing authorities.]" Hibernia Sav., etc., Soc. v. Ellis Estate Co., 132 Cal.App. 408, 412, 22 P.2d 806, 808.

[10] Under the requirements of this rule the presumption is that the verdict in favor of Jones D. Walling was for general damages alone. To presume that it included his special damages, sustained by reason of his wife's injuries, would render improper and illegal the verdict of Mrs. Walling to the extent of the special damages included in the verdict in favor of Mr. Walling. This would be contrary to the rule just stated.

An incident which took place after the case had been submitted to the jury sheds some light upon the intentions of the jury in rendering the verdict in favor of Mr. Walling. After the jury had retired, it returned into court and the foreman made the following statement and inquiry to the court: "There is a question in regard to the expenses to which Mr. Walling was,—had to pay the doctor bills, so forth. Is that assessable in addition to the $5,000.00?" To which the court replied: "No, except for property damages that is all. The property damage not to exceed, the evidence shows $600.20."

By the "doctor bills, so forth" the foreman must have intended to refer in part at least to the item of $3,260.55, which Mr. Walling had paid out as "expense of treatment of injuries to his wife". Evidently the jury wanted to know whether it could award this amount to Mr. Walling in addition to his general damages of $5,000. The court informed the foreman that this could not be done. The jury then retired and found a verdict for $5,000 in favor of Mr. Walling. The only reasonable inference to be drawn from the action of the jury after making this inquiry of the Court is that the jury designedly, in compliance with the information received from the court, awarded Mr. Walling a verdict for $5,000 exclusively as general damages. As we have stated before, the evidence was amply sufficient to sustain such an award. It shows that he was seriously injured about the head and back; his upper jaw was broken; he lost five teeth; he received a concussion of the brain; he was disabled for nine months; and was thereafter required to wear for two and a half years a special belt to hold his spine in place; his eyes, mind and memory were affected; he had not entirely recovered at the time of the trial more than three and one-half years after the accident, at which time he could not lift any appreciable weight and still suffered pain; he was required to wear a dental plate.

The judgment in our opinion should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J.; SHENK, J.; TRAYNOR, J.; CARTER, J.

17 Cal.2d 346

DRILLON v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

L. A. 17484.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

1. Workmen's compensation ⇐1452

Evidence disclosing that horse owner ordered jockey to permit horse to run his own race to last quarter mile and then to whip horse three or four times but, if that amount of whipping were not effective, to whip him no more, and that jockey's compensation was determined by whether he won or lost the race, supported Industrial Accident Commission's finding that jockey was an "employee" entitled to workmen's compensation for injuries and not an "independent contractor".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Employee" and "Independent Contractor".

2. Workmen's compensation ⇐1939

Industrial Accident Commission's finding of employer-employee relation is conclusive on court unless there is an entire lack of evidence to support finding or the only inference that can be drawn from evidence is contrary to it.

3. Workmen's compensation ⇐1349

Under Workmen's Compensation laws, burden of establishing defense of independent contractor relation rests on employer, not on employee, when services have been performed. St.1937, p. 299, § 5705.

4. Workmen's compensation ⇐338

Test in determining whether jockey was "employee" of owner of horse rather than "independent contractor" was whether owner had authority to discharge jockey, and it was immaterial that because of physical inability owner was unable to communicate his exercise of such authority to jockey after he was physically out of reach or that jockey was employed only for a single race.

5. Evidence ⇐47

Court takes judicial notice of rules adopted by California Horse Racing Board. Code Civ.Proc. § 1875; St.1933, p. 2046, as amended.

6. Workmen's compensation ⇐338

Rule of horse racing board that no jockey shall be weighed out for a race until fee in case race is lost is deposited or guaranteed did not make jockey an "independent contractor" rather than an "employee". St. 1933, p. 2046, as amended.

7. Workmen's compensation ⇐338

Rule of horse racing board that any change of jockey shall be exhibited by clerks of scales on the notice board had no bearing on whether jockey injured while riding horse was an employee or an independent contractor. St.1933, p. 2046, as amended.

8. Workmen's compensation ⇐338

Rule of horse racing board that, when owner shall discharge jockey, he shall upon demand of employee give written statement of discharge setting forth cause thereof, did not make jockey injured while riding horse an "independent contractor" rather than an "employee." St.1933, p. 2046, as amended.

9. Workmen's compensation ⇐338

Rule of horse racing board requiring jockey to register agent authorized to accept mounts for him and binding him to acceptance of mounts by his agent did not make jockey injured while riding horse an "independent contractor" rather than an "employee." St.1933, p. 2046, as amended.

10. Workmen's compensation ⇐338

Rule of horse racing board that jockey must report to scale room one hour before race and must remain there until all his day's racing engagements are fulfilled did not make jockey injured while riding horse an "independent contractor" rather than an "employee". St.1933, p. 2046, as amended.

11. Workmen's compensation ⇐338

Rule of horse racing board that if jockey engaged for certain race fails to abide by his agreement, unless excused by stewards, he shall be fined or suspended, merely imposed penalties in addition to right of employer to recover for damages for breach of contract and did not make jockey injured while riding horse an "independent contractor" rather than an "employee". St. 1933, p. 2046, as amended.

12. Workmen's compensation ⇐338

It was not purpose of legislature in adopting horse racing act, or of the horse racing board in adopting its rules under that act, to make jockeys independent contractors rather than employees or to exempt jockeys and owners from workmen's compensation laws. St.1933, p. 2046, as amended.

13. Workmen's compensation ⇐338

Horse racing act and rules of horse racing board adopted thereunder are designed to regulate horse racing to the end that races may be conducted in an orderly manner and without evil so often attendant upon contest in which wagering is permitted, and purpose is not to affect an owner and jockey insofar as their personal contract relations are concerned with thought of making jockey an independent contractor regardless of their personal conduct in their negotiations. St.1933, p. 2046, as amended.

14. Workmen's compensation ⇐234

Statutory or administrative regulations bearing upon conduct in action of a person furnishing services to another and on conduct of such other person do not operate to change relation between those persons or alter conclusion that must be drawn from facts.

15. Constitutional law ⇐52, 79

Issue of whether a person is an employee or an independent contractor is a "judicial question" and legislative and administrative regulations relating to affairs of person furnishing services to persons to whom furnished cannot control judicial branch of the government in its determination of that question.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Judicial Question".

16. Workmen's compensation ⇐306

In determining whether person injured is an employee or an independent contractor, essence of issue is whether the employer has right of authoritative control and direction over employee by reason of agreement between them and not what regulation some independent authority may impose on contracting parties.

Petition by E. Drillon for writ of review to annul an award of the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of Claude Hooper.

Award affirmed.

For prior opinion, see 104 P.2d 518.

Whelan & Whelan, of San Diego, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten, of San Francisco, for respondents.

Chas. A. Son, of Los Angeles, Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and John J. Daily, Deputy Atty. Gen., amici curiae for respondents.

Maurice P. McCaffrey, of San Francisco (Lee Stanton, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for California Employment Commission.

CARTER, Justice.

Petitioner seeks an annulment of an award made against him by the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of Claude Hooper, a jockey suffering injuries while riding a horse for petitioner in a race at Del Mar, California. The respondent commission found that Hooper was an employee, as against the defense that he was an independent contractor and accordingly made the award to Hooper including an increased indemnity as petitioner was found to be wilfully uninsured. Hooper was injured on August 22, 1939, as the result of a fall when the horse he was riding for petitioner stumbled.

Hooper was regularly employed by Senator Jack Metzger on a monthly salary basis to exercise Metzger's horses and to ride them in races when Metzger desired. However, his contract of employment permitted him to ride horses for other persons when that could be done without interfering with his duty to Metzger, and for such rides he received compensation in addition to his monthly salary. Hooper was licensed as a jockey by the California Horse Racing Board under the Horse Racing Act of California. Stats.1933, p. 2046, as amended. Pursuant to the rules adopted under the Racing Act, there are certain regulations pertaining to the conduct of jockeys; more will be said about those rules later herein.

During the racing season of 1939, petitioner, having a string of horses at the Del Mar track and racing them, engaged Hooper for the first time to ride his horse, Pomposa, in a single race on August 22, 1939; Hooper was to be paid $10 if the horse lost and $25 if he won. The engagement was made through Charlie Thompson, an agent of Hooper, who obtained mounts for him to ride. Hooper's first personal contact with petitioner was when the latter came to the paddock just before the race at which time petitioner instructed Hooper how to handle the horse in the race. In this connection Hooper testified:

"Q. What instructions did he (petitioner) give you that day? A. Well, as far as I can remember, Mr. Drillon (petitioner) told me the horse didn't have much speed and to let him run his own race until the last quarter of a mile and then do the best I could from there on * * * I think Mr. Drillon told me to hit him (the horse) four or five times and if he responded, all right, and if not, not to whip him no more.

"Q. * * * Did Mr. Drillon give you instructions as to how to ride that horse in that race? A. Well, yes * * * What I mean by that, you see any time an owner or a trainer puts a rider on the horse, he tells him how to ride. Now, his exact instructions, how many times to hit him * * * Mr. Drillon give me orders and told me how to ride the horse.

"* * * The stewards at any time at all if Mr. Drillon went in there and said, 'I don't want this boy to ride this horse,' and the stewards could take me off his horse, * * *

"Q. Now, what was Mr. Drillon's language when you went down to the paddock? A. Well, I tell you, that has been three months ago and to remember his exact words, I couldn't do it, but as far as getting any, you can ask any horseman or any rider or anybody that has ever rode a race, and he will tell you the owner gives you instructions how to ride the horse. * * *

"Q. I thought I understood you to say to the commissioner that when you were there in the paddock, ready to mount the horse, that Mr. Drillon told you to let the horse run his own race to the last quarter of a mile and then do the best you could? A. Yes, and then to hit him three or four times, and if he didn't run for the whip, then to hit him no more.

"Q. Now, you knew when you accepted the mount from Mr. Drillon, did you not, that the stewards had authority to instruct and advise the jockeys in the race how they should ride the particular horse they were riding? A. No, the stewards don't tell the riders how to ride the horse. The owner or the trainer tells the rider, gives them their instructions. * * *

"Q. And if a horse is inclined to bear out wide as he goes around the curve, they tell you to watch as he goes around the curves and make him go straight? A. Once in awhile, if it is a very unusual horse, why they (stewards of racing clubs) might tell you at curves, but as far as giving you any instruction or telling you how to ride, no, they don't. That is up strictly to the owner or the trainer."

[1-8] Petitioner contends that the evidence shows that the only purpose of the instructions was the final result sought to be accomplished, that is, winning the race, rather than an exercise of control and direction over the means to be employed in accomplishing that purpose, and that therefore Hooper was an independent contractor and not an employee. We cannot agree with that contention. Those instructions advised Hooper precisely how to ride the mount; he was ordered to permit the horse to run his own race to the last quarter mile and then to whip him three or four times but if that amount of whipping were not effective to whip him no more. Ordinarily there would be no occasion for being more particular in the instructions as to the method and means by which the ride should be made. There were ends to be gained by the instructions, other than winning the race, notably the effect of whipping on the horse's health and on his performance in future races. Certainly if a horse is improperly managed in a race, that mismanagement will be reflected in the condition and performance of the horse thereafter. It is of no consequence that it might be inferred that petitioner was merely acquainting Hooper with the characteristics of the horse to assure success in the race or that other inferences from those instructions might arise supporting the independent contractor theory, when we are mindful of the rule that the commission's finding of an employee-employer relation is conclusive on this court unless there is an entire lack of evidence to support it or the only inference that can be drawn from the evidence is contrary to it. Los Flores School Dist. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 13 Cal.App.2d 180, 56 P.2d 581; Hillen v. Industrial Accident Commission, 199 Cal. 577, 250 P. 570; Schaller v. Industrial Accident Commission, 11 Cal.2d 46, 77 P.2d 836. And also it must be kept constantly in mind that under the workmen's compensation laws the burden of establishing the defense of independent contractor relation rests on the employer, not the employee, when services have been performed. Labor Code, Section 5705, St. 1937, p. 299; Murray v. Industrial Accident Commission, 216 Cal. 340, 14 P.2d 301. Nor is it important that Hooper was paid $10 if he lost and $25 if he won, as indicating that the final result to be accomplished was the only purpose of the instructions. On the contrary the very fact that he would receive $10 if he lost, establishes that the winning of the race was not the only result sought, otherwise he would receive nothing if he lost. In any event, it is a situation not dissimilar to an employee whose compensation is based solely on commissions on the sales made by him. The fact that his compensation is thus contingent does not of itself make him an independent contractor. Brown v. Industrial Accident Commission, 174 Cal. 457, 163 P. 664. Petitioner also urges that because he could not have communicated with Hooper and discharged him after the race commenced and as only a single race was to be run, he did not have authoritative direction and control of Hooper and could not discharge him. Of course the power to discharge a person furnishing services is a significant factor in the issue involved, and here the evidence shows that petitioner had the power and authority to discharge. He could have dismissed Hooper any time until he was physically out of reach. But the test is whether petitioner had the right or authority to discharge Hooper, and it is of no consequence that because of physical inability he was unable to communicate his exercise of such authority to Hooper. Certainly if Hooper in response to petitioner's instructions on how to ride the horse, had replied that he would ride him as he pleased and ignore the instructions, petitioner would have had the right to immediately discharge him in response to such refusal to obey. The fact that Hooper was employed for a single race only is not controlling. In the Murray v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, the applicant, an airplane pilot, was engaged for the sole task of delivering a plane owned by his employer to a certain place. His compensation was to be his expenses enroute. The pilot was held to be an employee and not an independent contractor, although he was entitled to choose the route to his destination. That case is so closely similar to the case at bar that it is determinative of it. Although the precise issue here involved has never been determined in California, there are very persuasive authorities from other states. In Moore v. Clarke, 171 Md. 39, 187 A. 887, 107 A.L.R. 924, the jockey was employed for a single race for a compensation fixed by the Jockey Club. It appeared that the owner of the horse or the trainer gave instructions as to how to ride the horse but generally with experienced jockeys few instructions were given. Nevertheless the jockey was found to be an employee. Pierce v. Bowen, 247 N.Y. 305, 160 N.E. 379, involved an employment of a driver to drive horses in four races for $15 per race. He received an injury in the first race. The court said at page 379 of 160 N.E.: "He [driver] was directed by the respondent to drive the horse with the rein not too tightly drawn. He was directed to drive on the outer circumference of the track in order to avoid frightening the horse. These instructions, and many others which might have been given, it was claimant's duty to honor under the penalty of a discharge for disobedience. Consequently the claimant was a servant and the respondent was his master."

We think it is clear therefore that the evidence is sufficient to support the respondent commission's finding that Hooper was an employee and not an independent contractor. However, petitioner makes the further contention that by reason of certain rules adopted by the California Horse Racing Board pursuant to its power so to do under the Horse Racing Act, Hooper is an independent contractor, because those rules involved the right of petitioner to discharge Hooper and the latter's right to refuse to ride the race. The court of course takes judicial notice of those rules. Code of Civil Procedure, sec. 1875. It is worthy of note that the declaration of the board in making the rules states that "They have been compiled with the hope that they will promote racing on a high plane and encourage the breeding and ownership of thoroughbred horses in this state." These rules embrace comprehensive regulations designed to safeguard the public and to prevent the evils and corruption which have been too frequently characteristic of horse racing. An analysis of the few of those rules which could possibly have a bearing here reveals that they are not determinative. Rule 158 provides that no jockey shall be weighed out for a race until his fee, in case the race is lost, is deposited or guaranteed and the failure to abide thereby will declare the horse out of the race. That rule could have no effect on the issue here. The labor laws are replete with provisions securing to the laborer assurance that he will receive his pay such as fixed times for pay days, making it a criminal offense to fail to pay laborers, requiring the contractor to pay the prevailing rate of wages in public contracts, and like provisions. Surely, it cannot be said that such provisions make a laborer an independent contractor. Rule 149 states that any change of jockey shall be exhibited by the clerk of the scales upon the notice board. Obviously, that has no significance; indeed, if it has any bearing it may be said it contains the inference that the jockey is wholly subject to the control of the owner of the horse as he may be changed, that is, discharged. Rule 292 reads: "When an owner or trainer shall discharge a jockey, groom or attendant, he shall, upon demand of the employee give a written statement of discharge setting forth the cause thereof. Upon refusal to do so the owner or trainer may be fined or suspended." There is nothing in that rule inconsistent with the master-servant relationship. Rather it recognizes the right of the owner to discharge his jockey. The only requirement is that he give the jockey, if demanded, a written statement of the reason for the discharge. Similar requirements are not unusual in labor contracts between a union and the employer which require an investigation by the union before a man is discharged. The National Labor Relations Act, 29 U. S.C.A. § 151, et seq., has various restrictions on the right of the employer to discharge; for illustration he cannot discriminate in regard to hire an employee for or time of employment by reason of membership in a union.

[9] Rule 279 requires jockeys to register the agent authorized to accept mounts for him and binding him to acceptance of mounts by his agent. He would be bound in any event under ordinary laws of contracts under such circumstances. The rule creates no greater obligation.

[10, 11] Rule 274 provides that the jockey must report to the scale room one hour before the race and must remain there until all his day's racing engagements are fulfilled; no one except jockeys, officials and attendants are permitted in the scale room. It is wholly reasonable to infer that that rule was designed to protect the public and legitimate horse racing from the vice of bribery and "fixed races". There appears no intention to establish or affect the relationship between a jockey and the owner. The essence of petitioner's contention is that by Rule 281, the jockey may not quit or refuse to ride a horse once he has engaged to do so, except upon suffering penalties greater than for ordinary breach of contract. That rule provides as follows: "If a jockey, engaged for a certain race or for a specified time fails or refuses to abide by his agreement, unless excused by the stewards, he shall be fined or suspended; and if a jockey refuses to ride a horse on the order of the stewards he shall be reported to the racing board." This rule, insofar as the owner is concerned, does not prevent the jockey from quitting. It is the case of a third party, the State, providing a penalty for breach of an employment contract in addition to the damages that could be recovered by the owner. The essential relationship between the jockey and owner is not altered. The owner still has direction and authoritative control over his employee, and the employee still is subject to an action by the owner for damages for quitting the same as he would have been if there were no such rule. It is elementary that a master may recover from his servant any actual damages suffered by reason of his servant's breach of the contract of employment by unjustifiably refusing to perform the services required. 39 Corpus Juris, 133, 134. We fail to see how the fact that a third person, the state here, through the California Horse Racing Board, may impose penalties in addition to the right secured to the master, has any effect or bearing on the question of whether the relationship is that of independent contractor rather than master and servant. It would not be doubted that in many instances a servant would suffer penalties for refusing to perform his contract of employment, in addition to his liability to his master for damages. An airplane pilot regularly employed to operate a passenger plane would certainly be subject to dire penalties if he should decide to quit, don his parachute, jump and abandon the ship full of passengers in midair. Nevertheless, he is unquestionably not an independent contractor.

[12-14] But on a broader basis than the particular effect of each of the rules above considered we do not believe it was the purpose or intention of the legislature in adopting the Horse Racing Act, or the Horse Racing Board in adopting its rules under that act, to make jockeys independent contractors rather than employees, or by that method or any other method, to exempt the jockeys and owners from the workmen's compensation laws. To say such was the intent of the legislature would be fanciful and unreasonable. It would be tantamount to deciding that the legislature by conferring the power to make rules on the Racing Board thereby authorized the board to amend the workmen's compensation laws, by particularly exempting jockeys from its operation. The Act and the rules are designed to regulate horse racing to the end that races may be conducted in an orderly manner and without the evils so often attendant upon contests in which wagering is permitted. It is the aim and purpose to protect the public against immoral practices and to place horse racing on a high plane. It is not to affect an owner and a jockey insofar as their personal contract relations are concerned with the thought of making the jockey an independent contractor regardless of their personal conduct in their negotiations. This finds support in the declaration of policy made by the Racing Board when it established its rules, where it is said: "They (the rules) have been compiled with the high hope that they will promote racing on a high plane and encourage the breeding and ownership of thoroughbred horses in this state." Even aside from the legislative intent we believe it is clear that statutory or administrative regulations bearing upon the conduct and action of a person furnishing services to another and on the conduct of such other person, do not operate to change the relation between those persons or alter the conclusion that must be drawn from the facts. It is said in the American Law Institute's Restatement of the Law of Agency, Vol. 1, section 220, page 487: "The fact that the State regulates the conduct of an employee through the operation of statutes requiring specific acts to be done or not to be done does not prevent the employer from having such control over the employee as to constitute him a servant."

[15, 16] In any event the issue of whether or not a person is an employee or an independent contractor is a judicial question and not a legislative or executive one. Legislative and administrative regulations relating to the affairs of persons furnishing services to the persons to whom furnished cannot control the judicial branch of the government in its determination of that question. It is doubtful that even an outright declaration in the rules that a jockey was an independent contractor would be in any way binding upon the courts. The essence of the issue is whether the employer has the right of authoritative control and direction over the employee, by reason of the agreement between them, and not what regulations some independent authority may for one reason or another impose on the contracting parties.

The award is affirmed.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; TRAYNOR, J.; EDMONDS, J.

COTTON v. HUDSON et al.

Civ. 11282.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 13, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 5, 1941.

1. Evidence ⇐183(3)

Where there are circumstances indicating that a document is intentionally withheld, the sufficiency of the proof of its loss is a precise, definite, and certain showing of a thorough and exhaustive search, and the exactness of proof may be relaxed in proportion to the evidentiary weight or value of the document, with due consideration given to the interest in its production of the party offering to prove loss. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1855, 1937.

2. Appeal and error ⇐970(2)

The sufficiency of the proof of loss of a written instrument is a "question of law" addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and unless there is an abuse of that discretion, its determination will not be disturbed on appeal. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1855, 1937.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Law".

3. Evidence ⇐183(1)

After there has been a sufficient showing of loss of a written instrument, the contents may be proved by secondary evidence addressed to the trier of facts. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1855, 1937.

4. Evidence ⇐183(1)

Where the surrounding facts demand an inquiry concerning a lost document, the law requires only a diligent investigation of every person who, according to the evidence, would be likely to have the document or to know of its whereabouts. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1855, 1937.

5. Appeal and error ⇐992

In action on notes, sufficiency of preliminary proof of loss of collateral handwritten agreement making payment of notes conditional on a contingency was for the trial court. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1855, 1937.

6. Appeal and error ⇐1050(1)

In action on notes, evidence did not show that plaintiff was prejudiced in the admission of evidence of the contents of a lost handwritten collateral agreement making payment of notes conditional on a contingency before proof of diligent search in good faith to locate the agreement. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1855, 1937.

7. Appeal and error ⇐1041(3)

Plaintiff appealing from a judgment for defendants in action on notes could not urge error in permitting defendants to amend their respective answers without notice and after plaintiff's case had been closed, so as to plead the loss of a collateral agreement making payment of notes conditional, where it was not contended that plaintiff was prejudiced or suffered a disadvantage in the trial as a result of the amendment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; H. G. Jorgensen, Judge.

Action on two notes by Harriet F. Cotton against James J. Hughes and his wife. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Following the trial of the case, both defendants died, and W. G. Hudson and another, executor and administrator, respectively, of their estates were substituted in their places.

Affirmed.

Fred B. Mellmann, of Oakland, for appellant.

Hudson, Martin & Ferrante and Webster Street, all of Monterey, for respondents.

Geo. K. Ford and Simpson Finnell, Jr., both of San Francisco, for respondent Lee Crawford.

WARD, Justice.

Plaintiff, assignee of the payee of two promissory notes, appeals from a judgment in favor of defendant makers of the notes. The main question presented on appeal is whether the trial court erred in receiving testimony of the contents of a collateral written agreement, which defendants claim was lost. Following the trial of the case, both defendants died and the executor and administrator respectively of their estates have been substituted in their places.

The facts of the case are as follows: L. C. Walters and W. Y. Bewick had been employees of Reid Bros., Inc., and each of them was the owner of a claim against the corporation for wages, the claim of Walters being in the sum of $5,885, and that of Bewick in the sum of $1,832.50. These claims were assigned to James J. Hughes, who, with his wife, gave each a note for the amount of his claim pursuant and subject to a handwritten agreement already entered into between the claimants and defendant Hughes, by the terms of which payment was to be made only in the event Reid Bros. of America was successful in acquiring title to and possession of all the corporation assets of Reid Bros., Inc., within one year from the date of the agreement. At the time of the assignment of these labor claims, a third employee of Reid Bros., Inc., also assigned his claim to defendant Hughes on the same basis, but he does not appear in this action.

While no allegations of the loss of the collateral agreement above mentioned were made in the pleadings, or until the close of plaintiff's case, defendants were permitted by the court to amend so as to allege the loss of the instrument.

Plaintiff admitted the execution of the agreement, but disputed its terms and claimed the court erred in admitting evidence of its contents where there had been insufficient proof of a diligent and bona fide search therefor; also that the court erred in permitting defendants, over objection, to amend their respective answers so as to allege the loss of the collateral agreement.

Defendants argue that the court did not abuse its discretion in permitting secondary evidence of the contents of the document to be admitted, also that there was sufficient evidence to support the court's finding that the payment of the notes was conditioned upon a contingency that never occurred.

[1, 2] Where it is contended that a writing has been lost, proof of loss must be made before evidence of its contents may be given. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1937, 1855. When there are circumstances indicating that the document is intentionally withheld, the sufficiency of the proof of its loss is a precise, definite and certain showing of a thorough and exhaustive search. The exactness of proof may be relaxed in proportion to the evidentiary weight or value of the instrument, with due consideration given to the interest in its production of the party offering to prove loss. The sufficiency of the proof is a question of law addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and unless there is an abuse of such discretion its determination will not be disturbed on appeal.

[3] After sufficient showing of loss, the contents may be proved by secondary evidence addressed to the trier of the facts. Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 34, 73 P. 803; White v. White, 39 Cal.App.2d 57, 102 P. 2d 432; Wolf v. Donahue, 206 Cal. 213, 273 P. 547.

In the present case the agreement was in the handwriting of the receiver for Reid Bros., Inc. It was signed by the wage claimants and defendant Hughes. On the day following its execution, during a luncheon at which were present the receiver, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Hughes' then attorney and a Mr. Peters, the receiver, according to his testimony and that of Mr. Hughes, handed the agreement to Mr. Hughes' attorney who read it and placed it in his pocket. Mr. Peters testified that he accompanied the attorney to his (the attorney's) office and saw him place the document on his desk, saying he would make copies thereof. The attorney remembered reading the agreement, but did not recall taking it with him after the luncheon. He testified that at the request of the receiver and of Mr. Hughes he had made a diligent search of his papers and files but was unsuccessful in locating the instrument. Later he permitted Mr. Hughes to make a search of his files, which at that time had been removed to the attorney's home.

Appellant lists ten persons as possible sources of information in connection with the lost document, only four of whom were questioned. Of the remaining six, only one, another attorney, had any representative business connection with Hughes. This attorney had drawn certain documents in connection with the organization of Reid Bros., Inc., some years prior to the time of the preparation of the lost agreement. There is no evidence from which an inference may be drawn that anyone was given possession of the agreement except the attorney representing Mr. Hughes at that time. A diligent search was made of his office and his home, the most likely places where it might be found. The evidence does not indicate that any of the ten persons enumerated by appellant, other than those of whom inquiry was made, was reasonably likely to have possession of the agreement or any knowledge of its whereabouts. Alvord v. Spring Valley Gold Co., 106 Cal. 547, 40 P. 27.

[4, 5] There is no suspicion of wrongdoing in connection with the loss of the instrument in question. When the surrounding facts demand such inquiry, the law requires only a diligent investigation of every person who, according to the evidence, would be likely to have the document, or to know of its whereabouts. As stated, the question of the sufficiency of the preliminary proof of loss was one for the trial court on the evidence introduced, and the suggested grounds for disturbing its finding thereon are not sufficient as a matter of law. In Wolf v. Donahue, supra, 206 Cal. at pages 219, 220, 273 P. at page 550, the court said: "* * * this court will not review its ruling unless the proof is manifestly insufficient to warrant the secondary evidence or unless the evidence offered to establish the loss is inherently improbable or incredible."

[6] Witnesses for the defendants in substance agree that the lost instrument provided the notes should not be payable or collectible unless within one year all assets of Reid Bros., Inc., were acquired by Reid Bros. of America. There was a conflict on other matters, namely, whether a certain witness was present when the agreement was signed, whether the agreement was handed to the attorney before or during the luncheon and whether in fact it provided for a reassignment of the wage claims in the event the plan for reorganization failed. The recollections of the witnesses are not entirely in accord with letters written by Mr. Hughes to the payees of the notes two days after the signing of the agreement, which letters were accompanied by the promissory notes. Each letter refers to the agreement and states that the note is to be paid off "at the rate and in proportion of three and four-tenths (3 4/10ths %) per cent per month of the total of said note as the same shall appear to be due from month to month". According to Hughes' testimony, the monthly payments were not to commence until the reorganization of the company was consummated; if not consummated within the year there was to be no liability on the notes. There is testimony that Hughes "wanted" to reassign to the wage claimants. Whatever the understanding may have been relative to the time for the payment of the notes, the trial court did not have the advantage of the testimony of either of the payees, assignors of plaintiff, who were not called as witnesses.

The question before this court is whether the evidence is sufficient as a matter of law to support the finding of an express provision for conditional liability. The letters of transmittal were not complete statements of the contents of the agreement. Their evidentiary value primarily was not to prove the contents of the lost instrument, but rather to impeach the testimony of Hughes. In Nicholson v. Tarpey, 124 Cal. 442, 447, 57 P. 457, 459, the court said: "The same rule which declares incompetent the statements of one of the contracting parties made before or contemporaneously with the execution of the written agreement equally declares incompetent his declarations made after such execution. The reason in both cases is the same. In neither are the declarations evidence of the contents of the paper, the only thing which, the paper lost or at hand, the law allows to be proven."

Some of the witnesses testified to the search and also to the contents of the agreement. It does not appear from the record that plaintiff was prejudiced in the admission of evidence of the contents of the lost instrument prior to proof of diligent search in good faith to locate it.

[7] Appellant contends that the trial court erred in permitting defendants to amend their respective answers, without notice and after plaintiff's case had been closed, so as to plead the loss of the collateral agreement. Appellant admits that such an amendment is addressed to the sound discretion of the court. It is not claimed that plaintiff was prejudiced or suffered a disadvantage in the trial as a result of the amendment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PETERS, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 90

ALLEN et al. v. STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION et al.

Civ. 12800.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

1. Constitutional law ⇐1

The primary purpose of a constitution is to place limitations upon the legislative authority as well as upon the powers of its co-ordinate branches of government.

2. Constitutional law ⇐38

Where constitution contains a provision prescribing a course to be pursued by a department, board, commission, or an official, all statutes must be consonant therewith and any resolution, order or decree contrary to such provision by whatsoever body ordained is void.

3. Officers ⇐11

A state civil service employee, who had performed duties of one of a higher class than class in which his position was rated, could not require personnel board to classify him in such higher position for the period during which he served in such position and recover a judgment to compel the controller to pay the differential between the salary of the lower class and that of the higher class, in view of constitutional provision that permanent appointment and promotion in civil service should be made exclusively under a general system based upon merit, efficiency and fitness as ascertained by competitive examination. St.1937, pp. 2086, 2093, §§ 5, 60, 61; Const. art. 24, § 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Proceeding by Elisha S. Allen and others against the State Board of Equalization of the State of California and others, for a writ of mandate requiring respondents to reclassify and reinstate petitioners to the position of investigators, State Board of Equalization, for periods during which they were collectors; to correct the books and records of the California State Personnel Board to conform to the duties, services and work performed by the petitioners during such periods and to direct respondents to pay to each of petitioners the respective amounts alleged to have been earned by them while performing the duties of investigator when they held positions of collectors. From a judgment denying writ, after order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend, petitioners appeal.

Affirmed.

Leo B. Wayland, Frank L. Stearns, and Aaron Ziony, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Bayard Rhone, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appeal from judgment after order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend. Petitioners had been certified as eligible for, and had been appointed to positions of "collector", State Board of Equalization. While holding those positions at salaries of $120 per month, they were assigned to, and for different periods performed the duties of the position of "investigator" which is classified as a higher position, requires a different examination and pays a salary of $150 monthly. Subsequently they all qualified for and were certified as eligible for the position of investigator or took other positions in the classified service.

By a writ of mandate, petitioners sought to require respondents to reclassify and reinstate them to the positions of investigator, State Board of Equalization, for the periods during which they were collectors; to correct the books and records of the California state personnel board to conform to the duties, services and work performed by the petitioners during the respective periods in which they performed the duties of investigator while classified as, and drawing the salary of the position of collector; and to direct respondents to pay to each of the petitioners the respective amounts alleged to have been earned by them while performing the duties of investigator when they held positions of collector.

The question for our determination is whether a civil service employee, who has performed the duties of one of a higher class than the class in which his position is rated, may require the personnel board to classify him in such higher position for the period during which he served in that position and may recover a judgment to compel the controller to pay the differential between the salary of the lower class and that of the higher class of civil service.

In substance the petition alleges that each of the sixteen petitioners was at various times from July 2, 1935, to August 26, 1937, appointed to the position of collector of said board of equalization at a salary of $120 per month during said period; that each petitioner, except Davis and Garrett, passed a "promotional examination for investigator" on or about May 19, 1937; that each was thereafter placed upon the eligible list for the positions of investigator; that thereafter between December 1, 1937, and March 1, 1938, they were appointed to the positions of investigator at a salary of $150 per month; that Davis accepted civil service employment with another department of the state August 7, 1937; that petitioner Garrett did not qualify by a promotional examination for the position of investigator and is now connected with another department of the state service; that all petitioners, except Davis and Garrett, demand payment of the difference between the salaries of investigator and collector, from the dates of their original appointments as collectors to the dates of their promotional appointments as investigators; that at all times they performed the duties of investigator while holding the office of collector "with the consent, authorization and requirement of respondents"; that David and Garrett demand the differential between the salary of an investigator and that of a collector during the period they respectively served as investigators while classified as collectors.

Petitioners contend that in enacting sections 5, 60 and 61 of the Civil Service Act, Stats.1937, p. 2085, the legislature intended that employees were to be paid for the duties performed under a certain classification and not according to classification without regard to the duties performed and that, therefore, it is mandatory upon respondents to make payment of salaries according to duties performed. They base this contention upon the language of those three sections. Section 5 requires that the commission grade all positions within each class with respect to salaries to the end that like salaries shall be paid for like duties. Section 60 provides that the board shall adjust classes of positions in the state civil service; while section 61 provides that "the allocation of a position to a class shall derive from and be determined by the ascertainment of the duties and responsibilities of the position and * * * that substantially the same requirements as to education, experience, knowledge and ability are demanded of incumbents, that substantially the same tests of fitness may be used in choosing qualified appointees, and that the same schedule of compensation can be made to apply with equity, shall be included in the same class."

[1-3] They, therefore, urge that notwithstanding the requirements of the Civil Service Act that civil service examinations must be taken in order to be reclassified, yet, by the conduct of the appointing power, an employee may obtain a status different from and a position higher than that in which he was classed at the time of his original employment by virtue of the actual performance of the duties of the advanced status. Having performed the duties of investigator over a period of almost three years, petitioners insist that they acquired the status of that position without regard to the constitutional requirement of examination, certification and appointment to the advanced position. But their contention pales in the light of section 1, Art. XXIV, of the Constitution which provides that "permanent appointments and promotion in the State civil service shall be made exclusively under a general system based upon merit, efficiency and fitness as ascertained by competitive examination". The acts of the head of a department of the state do not have the sanctity of even a legislative enactment. Far short do they fall of the force of a provision of the organic law. Of this effective constitutional provision, petitioners, as well as the members of the respective boards, had knowledge and by it they are all bound. The primary purpose of a Constitution is to place limitations upon the legislative authority as well as upon the powers of its co-ordinate branches of government. When, instead of forbidding an act, it contains a provision prescribing a course to be pursued by a department, board, commission, or an official, all statutes must be consonant therewith and any resolution, order or decree contrary to such provision by whatsoever body ordained is void. In view of the quoted language of Article XXIV, no official or board could by order made, or by services performed, promote an employee in the classified service to a position in a higher class.

A situation similar to that of petitioners was presented to the court in the case of Pinion v. State Personnel Board, 29 Cal. App.2d 314, 84 P.2d 185, 187, wherein the petitioners sought by mandate proceedings to compel the personnel board to recognize petitioners as holders of certain positions and to allow them to continue to perform the duties of such positions and to assume the official title thereof. The court there held that sections 60, 61, 62 and 63 of the Civil Service Act were not enacted "for the purpose of giving Civil Service employees status in positions higher than those for which they were examined." If the appointing power could, by assigning duties of a higher nature to an employee, and the state personnel board could, by classifying those duties to a higher class than that of the employee's original position, give to an employee a permanent civil service status, the entire fabric of the civil service system would fail. Promotion and appointments in civil service would then no longer be made "exclusively under a general system based upon merit, efficiency and fitness as ascertained by competitive examination".

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WOOD, J.; McCOMB, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 65

ALLEN v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES.

Civ. 12619.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐821(5, 6)

In actions under Public Liability Act against municipalities for injuries allegedly sustained as result of defective sidewalks or streets, question whether defect in sidewalk or street is of such a nature as to render city liable is for jury. St.1923, p. 675.

2. Municipal corporations ⇐755(1)

The Public Liability Act making a city liable for injuries resulting from defective condition of streets or sidewalks must be strictly construed against the claim. St.1923, p. 675.

3. Municipal corporations ⇐791(1)

Where a defective condition in a sidewalk is of a trivial nature, court will hold as matter of law that its existence is insufficient in and of itself to charge the city with constructive notice thereof, so as to create liability under Public Liability Act. St.1923, p. 675.

4. Pleading ⇐214(3)

In action against city for injuries to pedestrian who fell on sidewalk, allegation that city had actual notice of defective condition must be accepted as true on demurrer. St.1923, p. 675.

5. Municipal corporations ⇐821(6)

In action under Public Liability Act against city for injuries to pedestrian who fell upon defective sidewalk at night wherein complaint alleged that there was elevation in sidewalk two inches high, six inches in width and as long as width of sidewalk of which condition pedestrian had no knowledge, issue of city's liability was for jury. St.1923, p. 675.

6. Municipal corporations ⇐816(3)

A complaint in action against city for injuries to pedestrian who fell on sidewalk was not demurrable on ground that there was no allegation that there was anything unusual about method of construction of temporary portion of sidewalk where complaint merely alleged that temporary portion was constructed in such manner as to constitute a dangerous and defective condition of which city had knowledge. St.1923, p. 675.

7. Municipal corporations ⇐821(6)

In action under Public Liability Act against city for injuries to pedestrian who fell on sidewalk at night, whether temporary structure used as a sidewalk was constructed in customary or usual manner was for jury. St.1923, p. 675.

8. Appeal and error ⇐863

On appeal from judgment entered after sustaining a demurrer to complaint in action against city for injuries to pedestrian who fell on sidewalk, appellate court had to consider nothing except legal doctrine with reference to insufficiency of defective condition of sidewalk to create an actionable cause. St.1923, p. 675.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence M. Hanson, Judge.

Action by Laura Allen against the City of Los Angeles for injuries sustained when plaintiff fell on a sidewalk. From a judgment after an order sustaining a general demurrer without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed with instructions.

Dempster & Dempster and Jerrell Babb, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., Frederick von Schrader, Asst. City Atty., and Victor P. Spero and Louis A. Babior, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

From a judgment after order sustaining a general demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals.

The complaint alleges that prior to December, 1938, the city commenced the construction of a storm drain within an alley, which intersects Indiana street, 150 feet west of Lincoln avenue, both public highways in the city of Los Angeles; that such construction required an excavation across the sidewalk, along the side of Indiana street; that a board bridge was built across the excavated portion of the sidewalk; that "in the construction and building of said board bridge the defendants caused same to be built by the laying of boards across said excavation the top of which boards were of even height with the top of said sidewalk and that said boards were so laid and nailed in place by the defendant without due or any regard for the protection of people using said sidewalk and said bridge and carelessly and negligently caused to be placed across said sidewalk and bridge at each end where said bridge met said sidewalk a timber which was approximately 2 inches thick and 6 inches wide and which timber of said dimensions at each end of said bridge where it met said sidewalk were securely nailed and fastened, said two timbers each extending clear across said sidewalk and caused an obstruction to be in said sidewalk which was raised 2 inches above the level of said sidewalk and above the level of said bridge; * * * that said obstruction above described was not guarded or protected by any warning signs, barriers, lights or signals of any kind or nature whatsoever"; that upon such bridge was a dangerous and defective condition for all pedestrians; it was not guarded or protected by any signs, lights or barriers; that defendant had notice and knowledge of the existence of the dangerous condition but failed to remedy the same within a reasonable time; that on December 24, 1938, at 9 o'clock p. m., while passing along the sidewalk and without any knowledge that the obstruction was upon the bridge, and no barrier or light being at the point, plaintiff caught her foot on the obstruction and was thrown violently upon the paved sidewalk and sustained injuries, which were described.

[1] The city's liability for plaintiff's injuries is predicated upon the provisions of the Public Liability Act of 1923, Stats.1923, page 675; Deering's General Laws, 1931, Act 5619. That act makes a city liable for injuries to persons "resulting from the dangerous or defective condition of public streets [and] highways" etc., where the governing board of the city, after notice or knowledge of such condition, fails for a reasonable time to remedy such condition. From an examination of the numerous decisions which have considered the question of liability, under the provisions of the above act, it is evident, as we have heretofore held, "that as a general rule it is a question for the jury to determine whether a defect in the sidewalk or street is of such a nature as to render the city liable". Ackers v. City of Los Angeles, Cal.App., 104 P.2d 399, 400, If this general rule is to be applied to the facts alleged in plaintiff's complaint, we must of necessity hold that the demurrer thereto was improperly sustained.

Notwithstanding the universal acceptance of the doctrine announced by the rule as declared, respondent urges that an exception thereto should prevail as against the complaint at bar. The exception referred to is that where the defect from which the accident resulted is of a minor or trivial nature, the court may then determine as a matter of law that the city is relieved from liability. Citing Whiting v. National City, 9 Cal.2d 163, 69 P.2d 990; Nicholson v. City of Los Angeles, 5 Cal.2d 361, 54 P.2d 725; Taylor v. Manson, 9 Cal.App. 382, 99 P. 410. But the cited cases do not support defendant's position. Each of those cases involves an appeal by the defendant from a judgment following a trial on the merits. In the Whiting case, the court found that one square of the cement walk was gradually raised three-fourths of an inch above the adjacent square; that this "unsafe and defective condition" which existed for six years during which four people had stumbled and fallen over the joint and suffered injuries; that the defendant city had constructive notice of the existence of such defect. No attempt was made to prove that the city had actual knowledge of the defective condition.

[2-4] On appeal by the defendant, the judgment was reversed because the existence of the defect was common knowledge in the community and plaintiff was familiar with it. She tripped over it in daylight while walking toward the exposed side of the risen square of cement. Although the city had constructive knowledge of the defective condition of the sidewalk, yet it had no notice of its dangerous character, which was essential to recovery in such cases. Nicholson v. City of Los Angeles, supra. The statute of 1923 creating liability in such cases must be strictly construed against the claim. Cook v. Superior Court, 12 Cal.App.2d 608, 55 P.2d 1227. In the Nicholson case, the defective condition complained of was very much like that in the Whiting case. It had existed for a long time and its character was so trivial as to be insufficient to charge the city with constructive notice of its existence. In the Taylor case the court expressly refrained from deciding whether the defect was too slight to be nonactionable as a matter of law. Judgment was reversed because of error in the instructions. Thus it will appear that the authorities relied upon by respondent merely support the principle that where a defective condition in a sidewalk is of a trivial nature, the court will hold as a matter of law that its existence is insufficient in and of itself to charge the city with constructive notice thereof. But in the instant case, the complaint alleges that the defendant had actual notice of the defective condition. Upon demurrer, such allegation must be accepted as true.

[5] We have considered the authorities cited by respondent (Kawiecka v. City of Superior, 136 Wis. 613, 118 N.W. 192, 21 L.R.A.,N.S., 1020; Kleiner v. City of Madison, 104 Wis. 339, 80 N.W. 453) upholding the doctrine that the court may declare as a matter of law that a trivial defect in a sidewalk is nonactionable. Both cases were tried on the merits. The Kawiecka case involved a defective sidewalk constructed with planks 2 inches in thickness nailed to the upper side of the walk on a bridge one-half mile in length, leaving the lower part of the walk unchanged. The Wisconsin court [136 Wis. 613, 118 N.W. 193, 21 L. R.A.,N.S., 1020], emphasized that want of repair in a highway "is always one for a jury, unless conditions and circumstances are so clear and convincing as to leave no room for reasonable controversy" and concluded that "it is not always easy to determine just where the province of the court in passing upon such a question ends and that of the jury begins". The Kleiner case arose out of the fact that a residential owner of Madison laid an apron less than 2 inches in thickness consisting of pine planks fastened with cleats, as a protection to the public against slipping on the frozen pavement. It was held that the apron was a proper covering of the walk for the purpose for which it was laid. But in view of our own decision, these cases at their best are without efficacy. The facts in the case at bar are not to be distinguished from those presented in the case of Ackers v. City of Los Angeles, supra, wherein we held that whether a defect in a sidewalk is of such a nature as to render the city liable is a question of fact. The Ackers case involved a depression in a sidewalk 2 inches deep, 12 inches long and 3 inches wide. In the case before us, the condition complained of consisted of an elevation in the sidewalk 2 inches high, 6 inches in width and as long as the width of the sidewalk. Also, it was a newly-created condition and plaintiff had no knowledge of it. There is no appreciable distinction between this elevation on a sidewalk and the 2-inch depression in a pavement. Certainly it cannot be said as a matter of law that the alleged condition is so trivial as to be nonactionable.

[6, 7] The final contention advanced by respondent is that the temporary portion of the sidewalk was constructed in the manner customarily followed in such construction work and that there is no allegation that there was anything unusual about such a method of construction. The cases cited in support of this contention are not in point. James v. City of San Francisco, 6 Cal. 528, 529, 65 Am.Dec. 526; Hammer v. Philadelphia, 104 Pa.Super. 119, 158 A. 659; Boughn v. Los Angeles City School District, 7 Cal.App.2d 347, 46 P.2d 223. It is sufficient to say that there is nothing in the record to support such contention. The allegation is merely that the temporary portion of the sidewalk was constructed in such a manner as to constitute a dangerous and defective condition, of which defendant had knowledge. Whether or not the temporary structure used as the sidewalk was constructed in the customary or usual manner is a question of fact to be proved at the trial of the case.

[8] Inasmuch as this appeal is from a judgment entered after sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, we have had to consider nothing except the legal doctrine heretofore discussed with reference to the insufficiency of the defective condition to create an actionable cause.

In view of the foregoing, the judgment is reversed with instructions to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: WOOD, J.; McCOMB, J.

42 Cal.App.2d 807

TEEL v. BANK OF EUREKA et al.

Civ. 6462.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 11, 1941.

1. Deeds ⇐210, 212

In grantor's suit to quiet title to realty and recover possession of deed which she had executed in favor of her son and deposited in escrow with bank, evidence sustained findings that deed was executed in consideration of grantee's promise to maintain grantor during remainder of her life and that grantee, since deceased, during his lifetime, failed to perform such conditions.

2. Covenants ⇐36

Covenants, in consideration of conveyance of realty, to support and maintain the grantor, are personal in character and not assignable and die with the grantee.

3. Deeds ⇐19

If grantees, in conveyances conditioned for maintenance or support of grantor, so neglect or refuse to fulfill the condition that there is a breach thereof, equity has jurisdiction to rescind the contract, cancel or set aside the deed, compel a reconveyance, or otherwise restore the consideration to the grantor.

4. Deeds ⇐19

Where mother executed deed to realty in favor of son in consideration of son's oral promise to maintain mother during remainder of her life and deposited deed in escrow with written instructions that it be delivered to son at mother's death, mother was entitled to have deed canceled and returned to her upon son's failure to perform condition as to maintenance, regardless of whether deposit in escrow constituted a delivery, particularly after son's death, since such covenant of support was personal in character.

5. Evidence ⇐444(4)

In suit to cancel and recover possession of deed to realty executed in favor of grantor's son and deposited in escrow with written instructions that it should be delivered to son at grantor's death and should not be withdrawn by grantor, evidence that conveyance was made in consideration of son's promise to maintain grantor during remainder of her lifetime was not inadmissible as tending to vary and modify the terms of the written instruction, but was evidence as to a separate agreement that if son failed to perform he would have no title in the property. Civ.Code, § 1056.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Harry W. Falk, Judge.

Suit by Sarah Elma Teel against the Bank of Eureka and others, to quiet title to realty and to recover possession of a deed. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Kenneth D. Sevier, of Eureka, for appellants.

E. S. Mitchell, of Eureka, for respondent.

TUTTLE, Justice.

Respondent, an elderly lady (85 years of age), on or about February 6, 1936, executed a deed to certain real property to her son, Otto Teel. The deed was delivered to appellant, "The Bank of Eureka", placed in an envelope with another deed to another son with the following instructions typed upon the envelope containing both deeds: "To be delivered upon my death and in no event to be withdrawn by me." Said instructions were subscribed by respondent in her own handwriting, the only consideration for the deed involved being an oral promise by the grantee to maintain and support his mother during her life.

Said Otto Teel died June 20, 1937, and appellant W. L. Wallace, was appointed administrator of his estate on August 6, 1937.

Respondent commenced this action to quiet title to the real property described in said deed, and to recover possession of said deed from appellant bank. Findings were entered in favor of respondent upon all issues, and judgment was entered accordingly. The appeal is from said judgment.

The evidence is without conflict, and the substance of it is given above.

It is the contention of appellants that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the findings. They state that the only conclusion to be drawn therefrom is, when the deed was delivered to the bank, respondent thereupon divested herself of any and all right, title and interest in the real property. Respondent contends that the deed was executed and the instructions signed on condition that the grantee would maintain and support respondent during her lifetime; that the grantee failed to fulfill the condition in any particular, and that there is sufficient evidence to support the findings which are in accord with her contention. The pertinent portions of the findings read as follows:

"4. That on or about the month of March, 1935, plaintiff executed a certain deed to said real property in favor of one Otto Teel, now deceased, which said deed and instrument of conveyance was delivered to the bank of Eureka, a corporation, specified in Finding One, with instructions to deliver the same to said Otto Teel on plaintiff's death.

"5. That the condition upon which it was agreed that said deed should be executed and placed in escrow with instructions to deliver upon the death of said plaintiff was that the said Otto Teel would support and maintain plaintiff during her natural life, and the said Otto Teel did agree that if she would execute and place said deed in escrow and maintain plaintiff during the remainder of her natural life and would fulfill said condition in its entirety, and did agree that if he did maintain plaintiff during the remainder of her natural life, then said deed should be delivered to him, and if he failed so to do, he would have no right, title or interest in or to said property, and that said deed should be returned to plaintiff.

"6. That said Otto Teel, during his lifetime and after the execution of said deed and the delivery thereof to said Bank of Eureka with the instructions as aforesaid, on such condition that he would maintain and support plaintiff during her natural lifetime, wholly failed and refused to fulfill or perform such conditions and or to maintain or support said plaintiff in accordance with his agreement so to do."

[1] The evidence is sufficient to sustain the findings. Plaintiff gave the following version of the transaction:

"Q. Now, what did your son say he would do if you would make out the deed to this property? A. He said he would absolutely support me in every particular and pay all my expenses, and when I came to leave this world he would put me away beautifully. * * *

"Q. Now, did you know when you went down there that you couldn't get this deed back, or did you think you could get it back any time you wanted? A. Well, I absolutely would because if he died first the deed certainly ought to revert back to me.

"Q. And that's what you thought when you took it down there? A. Yes, that's what I intended when it was taken out. When it was made it was to go back to me because he died before I did."

[2, 3] We believe that the judgment should be upheld. It is the rule, followed in most jurisdictions, that covenants to support and maintain the grantor are not assignable and die with the grantee. The cases proceed upon the premise that such covenants of the grantee are personal in character; are not subject to performance by any other person, and that cancellation of the deed may be had at the instance of the grantor. In 18 C.J., page 380, paragraph 439, it is said: "If the grantees, in conveyances conditioned for maintenance or support, so neglect or refuse to fulfill the condition that there is a breach thereof, equity has jurisdiction to rescind the contract, cancel or set aside the deed, compel a reconveyance, or otherwise restore the consideration to the grantor."

In Bishop v. Aldrich, 48 Wis. 619, 4 N.W. 775, 777, it is said: "The covenants of Mrs. Carlton to support and maintain the plaintiffs were not assignable, and died with her. Her death, a few months after the conveyance, put an end to the obligation to maintain the plaintiffs; and, if the conveyance stands, her heirs would take the land conveyed to her, subject to the life lease, without any obligation on their part to perform her covenants. This would be most inequitable. The use of the property may or may not be sufficient to maintain the plaintiffs; but whether it is or not, the principle is the same. The consideration for the conveyance has failed, and, under the circumstances peculiar to cases of this class, the conveyance ought to fail with it."

In the case of Payette v. Ferrier, 20 Wash. 479, 55 P. 629, an action was brought to cancel a deed where there was a similar agreement, and the grantee failed to perform. The court stated the rule to be as follows: "The jurisdiction of a court of equity to cancel a conveyance made by a parent to a child, when the child fails to furnish the support provided by the agreement constituting the consideration for the conveyance, is well established. Bogie v. Bogie, 41 Wis. 209; Thomas v. Thomas, 24 Or. 251, 33 P. 565; Patterson v. Patterson [81 Iowa 626], 47 N.W. 768; Bresnahan v. Bresnahan, 46 Wis. 385, 1 N.W. 39; Jenkins v. Jenkins, 3 T.B.Mon. [Ky.] 327; Scott's Heirs v. Scott [3 B.Mon.] 2; Leach v. Leach [4 Ind. 628], 4 Port. 628 [58 Am.Dec. 642]; Bishop v. Aldrich, 48 Wis. 619, 4 N.W. 775; Reid v. Burns, 13 Ohio St. 49. * * * We think there is also another reason why the plaintiff is entitled to be revested with title. The covenants of the grantees to support and maintain the plaintiff were personal, and died with them. The happening of that event put an end to the obligation. Bishop v. Aldrich, supra."

In Thomas v. Thomas, supra [24 Or. 251, 33 P. 566] it is said, speaking of an agreement of like import: "The consideration for the conveyance, was a personal obligation, to be performed by him [the son] alone, and could not be assigned, without the consent of the father, so as to substitute some other person in his place. * * The sale of the land by the son puts it out of his power to comply with the condition upon which he was to receive the title, and utterly defeats the object sought by plaintiff in making the conveyance, and therefore works a forfeiture of the estate. Any other rule would destroy the very purpose of the grant, and render the grantor dependent for his support and maintenance upon the pleasure and convenience of successive assignees, whether agreeable to him or not. Nothing can be more effectual, in securing the faithful performance of a contract of this kind, than the right of the parent to revest the entire estate in himself upon a breach by the son, in putting himself in a position where he is unable to comply with his contract. The rule which holds the child to a strict performance of his part of the contract, and gives the parent the right to recall the gift if he fails, is founded upon obvious principles of justice and right, and is the only rule, it seems to us, which will preserve the rights of a parent who enters into a contract of the character now under consideration."

[4] We are of the opinion that the foregoing authorities fully sustain the position of respondent, and that she is entitled to have the deed annulled and returned to her.

Most of the discussion in the briefs of both parties is directed toward the question of the delivery of the deed, plaintiff insisting that there was no valid delivery, and defendants maintaining that the delivery was effective for all purposes. It appears that the trial court found that the deed was delivered, but it also found that a contemporaneous oral agreement was made between the mother and son, wherein the son agreed, in consideration of the grant, to maintain and support his mother during her lifetime, and that the son had died before performing any part of his obligation. The agreement and subsequent death of the grantee, brings the case squarely within the rule stated above. It is therefore unnecessary for us to discuss the validity of the delivery. If it was invalid, plaintiff must prevail. If it was valid, plaintiff may invoke the rule laid down in the authorities cited.

[5] It is contended by appellants that the trial court erred in permitting plaintiff to testify concerning the oral agreement mentioned, upon the ground that such agreement varies and modifies the terms of the written instructions. Civ.Code, sec. 1056. We do not believe that the facts bring the case within the purview of that rule. It was not an attempt to modify the instructions. It was a separate contract which provided, impliedly, if not expressly, that if the grantee should die prior to full or partial performance, the property should revert to the grantor. In fact, the trial court finds that the grantee agreed that if he failed to perform, he would have no title to the property. (See italicized portion of the findings above.)

We believe that the judgment of the trial court was not only legally correct, but that it was also in conformity with sound equity practice.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PULLEN, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 6

In re WEBSTER'S ESTATE.

CRANE et al. v. YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASS'N OF SAN DIEGO et al.

Civ. 2907.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 13, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 12, 1941.

See 111 P.2d 355.

1. Wills ⇐166(1)

In will contests, evidence sustained jury's finding that portion of will bequeathing residuary estate was the result of undue influence exerted on aged testatrix by residuary devisees and legatees. Civ.Code, § 2235.

2. Appeal and error ⇐151(2)

A party, who has no interest in property in dispute in will contest, cannot be "aggrieved" by any disposition the court may make of the property, even where the court gives it to the wrong party, and an appeal by the one having no interest in the property will be dismissed.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Aggrieved".

3. Wills ⇐161

Generally, if the whole will is the result of the presence of undue influence, probate of the whole will must be refused.

4. Wills ⇐161

If only a part of a will is affected by undue influence, that part may be rejected as void, but the remainder, which is the outcome of the free action of the testator, ought to be sustained, if it is not inconsistent with and can be separated from the part which is invalid, and should be admitted to probate. Probate Code, §§ 22, 72.

5. Wills ⇐161

The fact that jury in will contests found that residuary clause of one of the wills was obtained by undue influence exercised by the residuary legatees and devisees would not authorize the court in declaring as a matter of law that the revocation clause in such will and the clause appointing one of the devisees as executor were obtained by undue influence. Code Civ.Proc. § 624; Probate Code, §§ 371, 373.

6. Wills ⇐181

A revocation clause in a will is as much a part of the will as any other portion thereof.

7. Wills ⇐181

Trial court was without authority to change revoking clause of will to court's liking because of court's belief that revoking clause was put in codicil by testatrix without a great deal of thought.

8. Wills ⇐386

When the District Court of Appeal considers the findings of a jury on issues submitted to them in a will contest, the findings stand the same as the findings of fact made by a court in a civil action.

9. Wills ⇐324(3)

In will contests, evidence required submission to jury of issue whether revocatory clause of one of the wills and clause appointing executor were made under undue influence, notwithstanding that other portions of the will were found to have been made under undue influence. Probate Code, §§ 371, 373.

10. Wills ⇐358

Order denying motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict in will contests was not an "appealable order", under the Probate Code, and attempted appeal therefrom would be dismissed. Probate Code, § 1240.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Appealable Order".

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. N. Turrentine, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Ella M. Webster, deceased. James L. Crane offered for probate a will dated March 28, 1934, and a codicil dated January 2, 1935. Evan H. Curtiss presented for probate a will dated February 29, 1932, and simultaneously the Young Women's Christian Association of San Diego filed opposition to the probate of the will dated March 28, 1934, and the codicil dated January 2, 1935. James L. Crane and others filed their opposition to the probate of the will of February 29, 1932. The contests of the respective wills were tried jointly before a jury. From a judgment in favor of the Young Women's Christian Association and others, and from an order denying judgment notwithstanding the verdict, James L. Crane and another appeal.

Judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part, with directions, and attempted appeal from order reversed.

Arthur F. H. Wright, of San Diego, for appellants.

Gray, Cary, Ames & Driscoll and John M. Cranston, all of San Diego, for respondents.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Appellants James L. Crane and Annette M. Crane, husband and wife, became acquainted with Ella M. Webster, deceased, a short time before or during the year 1933. At that time Ella M. Webster was a widow, crippled, and approximately 81 years of age. The meeting of the parties was occasioned by the rental of a flat owned by the deceased to the appellants herein, which flat was situated across a vacant lot from the home in which Ella M. Webster was then living. Friendship developed between the parties and appellant Annette M. Crane spent considerable time visiting and nursing Ella M. Webster because of her ill health and age.

In November, 1933, Mr. Crane determined that Mrs. Webster was "incompetent and required a guardian for her person and estate". In January, 1934, he filed his verified petition for appointment of himself as her guardian, through his attorney, A, reciting that "she is not now capable of taking care of herself or her property or effects, but that by reason of old age and the infirmities of such age is unable unassisted to properly manage or care for herself or her property and by reason thereof is likely to be deceived or imposed on by artful and imposing persons". He secured from her and attached to the petition a written statement signed by her which recites: "* * * by reason of my advanced years and weak physical condition, I am unable to properly care for my person and estate and request and petition the court that James L. Crane, an intimate friend and neighbor of mine, * * * be appointed as the guardian of my person and estate".

In February, 1934, Crane was appointed her legal guardian and took over the management of her property consisting of real and personal property of the approximate value of $45,000. On February 29, 1932, Ella M. Webster made her will devising certain real property and one-half of her bonds and securities to the Young Women's Christian Association of San Diego, and certain other real property, and one-half of her bonds and securities to the San Diego Children's Home, with the proviso that if either of the bequests should fail by virtue of the provisions of section 41 of the Probate Code the same should go to Mrs. H. P. Davison and Miss Mary Belle Williams in equal shares. R. F. Ruth, Jr. and Evan H. Curtiss were nominated as joint executors.

This will was prepared by Mrs. Webster's own attorney, B. The record discloses that Ruth, a bond salesman who had advised with Mrs. Webster as to investments, and who was one of the executors nominated in the will, about October, 1933, procured another attorney, C, to draw a will for Mrs. Webster, in which he was named executor and was the beneficiary. Mr. Crane had knowledge of this fact. The record indicates that Ruth subsequently misappropriated some of Mrs. Webster's bonds or stock and an action was threatened against his company. A compromise was effected. Just prior to Mr. Crane's appointment as guardian, Mrs. Crane consulted attorney B in reference to making a new will for Mrs. Webster, claiming that she felt "terribly tormented about this will that he had drawn...and it wasn't the way she wanted it, and of course that was affecting her physical condition". Immediately thereafter attorney B was present at the Webster home with a Dr. Carter, her regular physician, at which time a proposed will was read. The doctor was asked if he would attest the will. After propounding a few questions as to whether she knew what disposition was being made of her property he refused to sign as a witness because she was not "sufficiently clear on the subject". Nothing further was done at that time.

From February 8, 1934, to January 18, 1939, Mrs. Crane was employed by Mr.

Crane as nurse for Mrs. Webster at $15 per week, and subsequently he increased her salary. Mr. Crane also received compensation for acting as guardian during the same period. Shortly after Mr. Crane's appointment as guardian he again consulted attorney A about making a new will for Mrs. Webster. Attorney A informed him "that he did not feel that he could prepare a will for Mrs. Webster, because he had knowledge of the fact that she had been declared incompetent and did not feel that it would be ethical for him to do it". Through another party Mr. Crane was referred to attorney D. Attorney D visited Mrs. Webster and obtained a statement of her desires. Subsequently Dr. Carter was again called to witness the will prepared. After an examination of Mrs. Webster, Mr. Crane being present, he again refused for the same reason. He found her to be "suffering from senile dementia".

Early in March, 1934, Dr. Andrews, a psychiatrist, who had had a previous interview with Mrs. Webster, was called to her home. Attorney D and Mrs. Crane "and perhaps Mr. Crane" were present. After some interview by the doctor, he decided that Mrs. Webster was competent to execute a will although he had no memory that she stated that she wanted the Cranes included in the will. Thereupon attorney D and his wife witnessed the will. The Cranes, although not present at the signing of the will, "were right around the house". This will, dated March 28, 1934, provided: (1) That all former wills made by her were revoked; (2) that the Society for Crippled Children for San Diego county be given certain real property; (3) that the San Diego Children's Home Association be given certain other property; (4) a certain portion was given to the Rest Haven Preventorium; (5) to Mrs. Davison $2000; (6) the residue to go to James L. Crane; and (7) James L. Crane was nominated executor without bond.

On January 2, 1935, Dr. Andrews and attorney D were again approached by appellants to examine and interview Mrs. Webster and make a codicil to her will, changing the residuary legatee thereunder to both Mr. and Mrs. Crane. This was done and the codicil was signed and witnessed. Included therein was the following clause: "It has been rumored that another will or codicil subsequent to the one under date of March 28, 1934, has been signed by me. If true, I hereby revoke any such will or will and codicil. * * *" Shortly after the execution of the will dated March 28, 1934, Mrs. Webster was removed from her home to a home owned by appellants and rent therefor was charged against Mrs. Webster's estate for this accommodation.

The evidence shows that friends of Mrs. Webster were unjustly precluded from seeing her on many occasions and that when some of them did gain admission Mrs. Crane remained in the room with them; that on one occasion Mrs. Crane was called to the phone and Mrs. Webster told the visitor that "I want to get rid of these people and I wish you would help me". Another witness testified that while visiting Mrs. Webster she (Mrs. Webster) said "I am told I signed a paper, but I don't know what was in it. I want to get rid of these people, and how can I do it"? Although conflicting evidence was offered, the voluminous record in this regard clearly indicates that appellants were quite apprehensive that Mrs. Webster's friends might learn of her true condition and conclude that she was under the domination of the appellants. On January 18, 1939, Mrs. Webster died. James L. Crane offered for probate the will bearing date March 28, 1934, and the codicil dated January 2, 1935. On February 17, 1939, Evan H. Curtiss presented for probate the will dated February 29, 1932, and simultaneously the Young Women's Christian Association of San Diego filed opposition to the probate of the will dated March 28, 1934, and the codicil dated January 2, 1935, upon the following grounds: (1) Unsound mind of decedent; (2) improper execution; and (3) undue influence of appellants.

Appellants filed their answer denying the allegations and filed their opposition to the probate of the will of February 29, 1932, upon the ground that said will had been expressly revoked by the will of March 28, 1934, and the codicil of January 2, 1935. To this opposition Evan H. Curtiss filed his answer setting forth in substance the allegations of the opposition to the probate of the will of March 28, 1934, and codicil of January 2, 1935. The contest of the respective wills was tried jointly before a jury, appearances having been made by appellants as proponents of the will dated March 28, 1934, and codicil of January 2, 1935, Young Women's Christian Association of San Diego, as contestants, Rest Haven Preventorium, and Society for Crippled Children for San Diego County, beneficiaries under the will dated March 28, 1934.

The court directed a verdict in favor of appellants and proponents on the first ground of contest, holding that the evidence was insufficient to show that the decedent was not of sound and disposing mind at the time of the execution of the March 28, 1934, will and January 2, 1935, codicil.

The second ground of contest to the opposition to the probate of the will of March 28, 1934, and codicil of January 2, 1935, namely, that the said will and codicil were not executed in the manner or form required by law, was dismissed by contestants. The court thereupon submitted special interrogatories on the sole question of undue influence in the execution of the will dated March 28, 1934, and codicil of January 2, 1935, as follows: (1) Was the will of Ella M. Webster dated March 28, 1934, in whole, made under undue influence? The jury answered in the negative. (2) Was the codicil to the will dated January 2, 1935, in whole, made under undue influence? The answer was in the affirmative. (3) Was the devise to the Society for Crippled Children for San Diego County made under undue influence? The answer was in the negative. (4) Was the devise to San Diego Children's Home Association made under undue influence? The answer was in the negative. (5) Was the devise to Rest Haven Preventorium made under undue influence? The answer was in the negative. (6) Was the devise to Mrs. Hannah P. Davison made under undue influence? The answer was in the negative. (7) Was that portion of the will which leaves the residue of the estate to James L. Crane obtained under undue influence? The answer was in the affirmative. (8) Was that portion of the codicil changing the bequest of the residue from James L. Crane to James L. Crane and Annette M. Crane, his wife, obtained under undue influence? The answer was in the affirmative. It should be noted that the trial court failed to submit to the jury the question whether the revoking clause and the clause appointing Crane executor were obtained under undue influence.

Upon the answers returned by the jury the court rendered judgment in favor of the contestant Young Women's Christian Association of San Diego and admitted the will dated February 29, 1932, to probate and admitted the will of March 28, 1934, omitting therefrom the clause designating appellant James L. Crane as residuary legatee, and further omitting the clause designating the appellant James L. Crane as executor without bond, and upon motion for new trial, in the absence of special interrogatories submitted to a jury, made its finding and amended judgment deleting the revocation clause of the will dated March 28, 1934. The court further denied probate of the codicil dated January 2, 1935 in its entirety. From this judgment, the amended judgment and order denying judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the appellants have appealed.

It is appellants' contention that the admission to probate of the will dated March 28, 1934, deleting therefrom that portion which leaves the residue of the estate of Ella M. Webster, deceased, to appellant James L. Crane, and the refusal of the court to admit to probate the codicil dated January 2, 1935, constitutes reversible error; that there is no substantial evidence in the record to support the verdict of the jury, citing Estate of Velladao, 31 Cal.App. 2d 355, 88 P.2d 187; Estate of Burns, 26 Cal.App.2d 741, 80 P.2d 77; Estate of Kilborn, 162 Cal. 4, 120 P. 762; and Estate of Donovan, 114 Cal.App. 228, 299 P. 816.

It is further argued that the findings of the trial court on questions which were not submitted to the jury, namely, that the revocatory clause and the clause appointing the executor in the March 28, 1934 will was unauthorized, particularly in view of the fact of the jury's finding that parts of the will were free from the taint of undue influence; that it is impossible to conceive how the jury arrived at the fact that there was no undue influence on certain portions of the will and then allowed the court on the very same evidence to arrive at the conclusion that there was undue influence exercised in other portions of the same will; that a revocatory clause in a will is as much a part of the will as any other portion thereof; that the provisions of the will are unseverable; that the will should have been admitted in its entirety or rejected in its entirety; that the revocatory clause in the will of March 28, 1934, must stand and therefore the will of February 29, 1932, was thereby revoked in its entirety; and that the decision of the trial court must be reversed.

[1] First considering the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, appellants concede that Crane, during all of the time in question, was sustaining a confidential relationship to the testatrix, but claim that the presumption of undue influence does not apply because there is lacking evidence of activity on the part of appellants in procuring the execution of the will and that they unduly profited thereby, citing Estate of Baird, 176 Cal. 381, 384, 168 P. 561; and Estate of Holloway, 195 Cal. 711, 723, 235 P. 1012. We are convinced that there is little merit to this contention for the evidence conclusively shows not only activity on the part of Mr. Crane but also Mrs. Crane, in procuring the execution of the will and the codicil. It also shows that in addition to receiving adequate compensation for the services performed as guardian and as nurse, they, under the terms of the will, would benefit to the extent of approximately $20,000. Although the evidence is conflicting, we are convinced, from reading the record, that there are sufficient circumstances surrounding the execution of the will and codicil, if believed by the jury, to justify the conclusion reached by it in reference thereto. Estate of Witt, 198 Cal. 407, 245 P. 197; Estate of Johnson, 31 Cal.App.2d 251, 87 P.2d 900; Olson v. Washington, 18 Cal.App.2d 85, 63 P.2d 304; Sec. 2235, Civ.Code; Estate of Nelson, 134 Cal.App. 561, 25 P.2d 871; Estate of Ramey, 62 Cal.App. 413, 217 P. 135; Estate of Gallo, 61 Cal.App. 163, 214 P. 496; Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 82 P. 252; Estate of Snowball, 157 Cal. 301, 107 P. 598.

In Estate of Graves, 202 Cal. 258, 259 P. 935, 936, it is said: "* * * Three well-established facts, among others, which are recognized as being indicative of undue influence, or a subversion of a decedent's volition, stand out clearly in the record: The relations between appellant and the decedent afforded to appellant an opportunity to control the testamentary act; the decedent's condition was such as to permit of a subversion of her freedom of will; the appellant was active in procuring the instrument to be executed. In addition, appellant unduly profited as beneficiary under the will. While none of these circumstances standing alone, has the effect of creating a presumption against the validity of the instrument, their probative force, in combination, is to impose upon the proponent the obligation of presenting evidence of volition, and to make the question as to undue influence one of fact for the jury's determination."

The same "three well-established facts" upon which the court relied in the Graves case also stand out clearly in the record in the instant case. Appellants had an opportunity to control the testamentary act; Mrs. Webster's condition was such "as to permit of a subversion of her freedom of will"; and appellants were active in procuring the instruments to be executed. In addition they unduly profited thereby. In the language of the court all these factors taken together "make the question as to undue influence one of fact for the jury's determination". The jury having determined this question in favor of respondents, that determination should not be set aside. Either the evidence presented by the record or the presumption of undue influence, standing alone, would support the verdict of the jury. However, respondents need not rely upon one factor to the exclusion of the other. Each is strengthened and reinforced by the other, and the two together are without question sufficient to uphold the judgment that the appellants procured the residuary clause of the 1934 will and the entire 1935 codicil thereto by undue influence. The propriety of the court's holding that the evidence was insufficient to show that the deceased was of unsound mind and directing a verdict in accordance therewith is not questioned. We will therefore not give consideration to it. We must, therefore, conclude that the order denying the codicil dated January 2, 1935 to probate was proper. If the trial court was authorized, without the aid of the jury, to make the determination that the revocation clause in the will dated March 28, 1934, and also that the clause appointing Crane executor of the will were made under undue influence, then the order admitting the will of February 29, 1932, to probate and appointing the executors named therein was also proper if the remaining provisions of the will of March 28, 1934 were not inconsistent therewith. Estate of Mallon, 28 Cal.App.2d 106, 81 P.2d 992; Estate of Schnoor, 4 Cal.2d 590, 51 P.2d 424; Estate of Iburg, 196 Cal. 333, 238 P. 74; Estate of Smith, 140 Cal.App. 508, 35 P.2d 335.

[2] If this determination of the trial court was proper, the appellants would no longer have any interest in the distribution made under the will of February 29, 1932, and the remaining clauses of the will of March 28, 1934. In 2 Cal.Jur. p. 212, section 54, it is said: "If a party has no interest in the property in dispute, he cannot be aggrieved by any disposition the court may make of the property, even where the court gives it to the wrong party, and an appeal taken by him will be dismissed." See also Estate of Zollikofer, 167 Cal. 196, 197, 198, 138 P. 995; Estate of Land, 166 Cal. 538, 137 P. 246.

[3, 4] The general rule is that if the whole will is the result of the presence of undue influence, probate of the whole will must be refused. If only a part of it is affected by undue influence, that part may be rejected as void, but the remainder, which is the outcome of the free action of the testator, ought to be sustained if it is not inconsistent and can be separated from the part which is invalid, and should be admitted to probate. Underhill on Wills, Vol. 1, sec. 159, p. 223; Schouler on Wills and Administration, Part 2, sec. 248, p. 124; secs. 22 and 72, Probate Code; Steadman v. Steadman, 14 A. 406, 10 Sadler, Pa., 539; Estate of Carson, 184 Cal. 437, 441, 194 P. 5, 17 A.L.R. 239.

In support of the court's independent finding respondents argue: (1) That it was authorized to so find because "the finding of the jury that the residuary clause was obtained by undue influence is a finding that the appellants were active—at least to some extent—in obtaining the will. This is the only 'fact' which it is necessary to know in order to declare as a matter of law that the revocation clause and the clause appointing Crane executor were obtained by undue influence". (2) That from the facts established by the evidence and the finding of undue influence reached by the jury, as to the residuary clause, there arose an inference of fact and from it there flowed the right of the court to draw the ultimate conclusion of law reached. Sec. 624, Code Civ.Proc.; Estate of Keithley, 134 Cal. 9, 66 P. 5.

[5] We are not in accord with this contention. The verdict of the jury finding that the appellants used undue influence in reference to the residuary clause of the will would not necessarily be any determination that they used undue influence in respect to the provisions of the will revoking the former will and appointing Crane executor where the jury also found that certain provisions of the same will were not made under their undue influence. In fact the evidence rather strongly indicates it was the intention of Mrs. Webster to change the joint executor Ruth, named in the first will, because of his claimed misconduct and claimed misappropriation. There was highly conflicting evidence as to the question of undue influence in the making of the will and all of its provisions. Assuming there was a presumption of undue influence remaining in the case, it merely created a conflict which should have been determined by the jury. Duehren v. Stewart, 39 Cal.App.2d 201, 102 P.2d 784. We feel impelled to hold that the trial court should have submitted to the jury the question of whether the revocation clause and the clause appointing Crane executor was made under undue influence before a proper judgment could have been made admitting the 1932 will or denying portions of the 1934 will to probate. In fact, it was appellants' main contention and ground of contest that the second will revoked the former will.

[6, 7] In view of this conclusion, these questions presented by the pleadings have not been properly determined and seriously affect the validity of the orders admitting the 1932 will to probate and denying admission to probate of a portion of the 1934 will and the order appointing an executor. A revocation clause in a will is as much a part of the will as any other portion thereof and the trial court had no right in law or in fact to change the will to its liking as indicated by its statement: "It is my belief that this revoking clause was put in there without a great deal of thought on the part of Ella M. Webster...."

In Estate of Thompson, 185 Cal. 763, 198 P. 795, 798, the following may be found: "These cases at least make it clear that the revoking clause of a will is a part of the will, and is to be treated as such * * *." See also, Estate of Smith, supra.

[8] Respondents' second contention is equally untenable. The findings of the jury upon the issues submitted to them stand the same as the findings of fact made by the court in a civil action, i.e., when we are brought to the consideration of their sufficiency to support the judgment rendered. In the one case the jury makes the findings, and in the other the court makes them.

In Estate of Benton, 131 Cal. 472, 63 P. 775, 776, the case of Bull v. Bray, 89 Cal.

286, 26 P. 873, 13 L.R.A. 576, is quoted to the effect that: "'Where probative facts only are found, yet, if the ultimate fact flows as a necessary conclusion therefrom, the findings are sufficient; but, in order to warrant the appellate court in inferring an ultimate fact from probative facts, it must inevitably follow from the facts found.' So, in a case where the probate of a will is contested, if the issues presented to the jury involve simply probative facts, then, to justify the court in rejecting the probate of the will, the ultimate fact of fraud, undue influence, or mental incompetency must appear conclusively from the probative facts found. In other words, the trial court may not indulge in inferences of fact in order to support the judgment it makes."

[9] The diversified findings of the jury and the evidence presented preclude a conclusion, as a matter of law, that the revocatory clause and the clause appointing Crane executor were made under undue influence. The omission or failure of the court to submit those issues to the jury was prejudicial error. Estate of Hewitt, 63 Cal.App. 440, 218 P. 778. The trial of such issues "must be tried by a jury, unless a jury is waived". Sec. 371, Probate Code. And the "jury must return a special verdict upon the issues submitted to them by the court; and upon the verdict, * * * the court must render judgment * * *." Sec. 373, Probate Code.

It is with reluctance that we have reached the conclusion that we are required by law to reverse portions of the judgment, because they are so obviously correct in fact. They are strongly supported by the presumptions as well as the testimony of disinterested witnesses. The residuary clause of the 1934 will making Crane the residuary beneficiary is so closely related to the clause revoking the 1932 will and the clause appointing Crane executor of the 1934 will that it does not seem possible that any jury would find the first clause void because of undue influence and the other two clauses valid because made voluntarily and free from undue influence or that a trial judge would let any such inconsistent verdict stand should one be returned. However, we have been unable to discover any lawful ground upon which the judgment can be affirmed as it now stands.

[10] We see no reason for a retrial of the issues heretofore found by the jury. The attempted appeal from the order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, not being an appealable order under section 1240 of the Probate Code, is dismissed. Estate of Patterson, 220 Cal. 370, 31 P.2d 197; Estate of Armstrong, 8 Cal.2d 204, 64 P.2d 1093; In re Walkerly, 94 Cal. 352, 29 P. 719; Guardianship of Morro, 36 Cal.App.2d 623, 98 P.2d 552; Estate of O'Dea, Cal. Sup., 104 P.2d 368; Estate of Wittmeier, 118 Cal. 255, 50 P. 393; Estate of Allen, 175 Cal. 356, 165 P. 1011.

The portion of the judgment of the trial court denying probate of the codicil herein mentioned is affirmed. That portion of the judgment denying admission to probate of that provision of the will of March 28, 1934, which leaves the residue of the estate to James L. Crane is affirmed. That portion of the judgment admitting to probate the remaining clauses of the 1934 will (excepting therefrom the revocation clause and the clause appointing Crane executor) and those portions of the same will which the jury found were not made under undue influence is affirmed. That portion of the judgment admitting to probate the will dated February 29, 1932, appointing the executor, and denying probate of the two mentioned provisions of the 1934 will relating to the revocatory clause and the clause appointing Crane executor, is reversed with directions to the trial court to present to the jury the sole questions: (1) Was the provision of the will dated March 28, 1934, "revoking any and all other wills and codicils heretofore made and/or executed by me" made under undue influence? (2) Was the provision of the will dated March 28, 1934, nominating James L. Crane executor made under undue influence? If these questions are answered in the affirmative the court may then be authorized to admit the first will to probate, appoint the executors named and deny probate to those additional portions of the will of March 28, 1934, found to be made under undue influence. If answered in the negative, the court should then make an appropriate order and judgment in accordance with the combined findings of the jury. Each party to pay its own costs on appeal.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 46

WRIGHT v. WRIGHT.

Civ. 2617.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 14, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐110

Order denying motion for new trial was not appealable. Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

2. Appeal and error ⇐554(2), 627(2)

Where there was nothing on file in District Court of Appeal other than moving papers and certificate of county clerk, from which it appeared that motion for new trial was denied April 27, 1940, notice of its denial was filed April 29, 1940, notice of appeal and notice to prepare transcript were filed on May 8, 1940, and trial court terminated proceedings for preparation of transcript on September 17, 1940, and there were no proceedings pending for settlement of a bill of exceptions or transcript on appeal, motion to dismiss appeal was granted.

From Superior Court, Fresno County; Ernest Klette, Judge.

Action by William B. Wright against Daisy Wright. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals, and from an order denying motion for new trial, plaintiff purports to appeal. On motion to dismiss appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

N. Lindsay South and Charles A. Hill, both of Fresno, for appellant.

Rae B. Carter and Harris, Willey & Harris, all of Fresno, for respondent.

MARKS, Justice.

[1] This is a motion to dismiss the appeal from a judgment, and from an order denying the motion for new trial. Such an order is not appealable. Sec. 963, Code Civ.Proc.

[2] There is nothing on file here other than the moving papers and the certificate of the county clerk, from which it appears that the motion for new trial was denied on April 27, 1940; that notice of its denial was filed on April 29, 1940; that notice of appeal and notice to prepare the transcript were filed on May 8, 1940; that on September 17, 1940, the trial court terminated the proceedings for preparation of transcript; that there are no proceedings pending for the settlement of a bill of exceptions, or transcript on appeal. Under such circumstances the motion must be granted. Bales v. Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co., 3 Cal.App.2d 43, 38 P.2d 799; Carrasco v. Marcus, 18 Cal.App.2d 96, 62 P.2d 1405; Olinger v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 18 Cal.App.2d 104, 62 P.2d 1406.

The appeal is dismissed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 32

MILLER v. LaGRUA et al.

Civ. 12232.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 14, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1008(1)

In action against motorist for injuries sustained when pedestrian was struck by automobile while crossing street intersection where traffic lights changed when pedestrian was near middle of street, whether pedestrian was contributorily negligent was for trier of facts.

2. Appeal and error ⇐996

Where evidence permitted two possible inferences to be deduced therefrom, one of which supported trial court's findings, the findings would not be disturbed upon appeal.

3. Appeal and error ⇐843(2)

In action against motorist for injuries sustained when pedestrian was struck by automobile where court properly found for motorist on issue of contributory negligence, question raised as to ownership of automobile was immaterial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles E. Haas, Judge.

Action by George Miller against Mario LaGrua and another, for personal injuries sustained as the result of an automobile accident. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Fred W. Heath and Daniel A. Knapp, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Richardson & Jordan, by Harold Richardson, of Whittier, for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought by plaintiff to recover damages for personal injuries sustained as the result of an automobile accident. The case was tried before the court sitting without a jury.

The facts, so far as necessary to a determination of the question here presented, are as follows:

The accident occurred on February 1, 1937, about 7:30 in the evening, at the intersection of Slauson avenue and Pacific boulevard in the city of Huntington Park, county of Los Angeles. The intersection in question is at right angles, Pacific boulevard running north and south and Slauson avenue east and west. Slauson avenue is 70 feet wide at that point. Traffic on both streets at the intersection at the time of the accident was controlled by automatic traffic lights, coupled with warning signal bells. At the first ring of the bell the lights controlling the street on which traffic was moving would change from "Go" to "Stop", that is, from green to red, and on the second ring the lights on the other street would change from red to green. The intersection was well lighted. Plaintiff arrived at the intersection in a car driven by his daughter west on Slauson avenue. The car drew up to the curb at the northeast corner of the intersection, at which time the signal on Slauson was red. Plaintiff alighted from the car at this point and proceeded to cross Slauson avenue from north to south in the marked pedestrian zone between the northeast and southeast corners. When plaintiff was one quarter or one third of the way across, the first signal bell rang. When plaintiff was crossing the westbound lane of traffic on Slauson closest to the center line of the street he appears to have moved over to the westerly boundary of the pedestrian zone to avoid a westbound car which arrived at the intersection. The car apparently stopped to allow plaintiff to pass. At that time the second bell rang and the signal on Slauson avenue changed to "Go". Plaintiff, then just about at the middle of the intersection, proceeded on across the street and, about twelve feet south of the center line of Slauson avenue, was struck by a car driven by defendant La Grua traveling east on Slauson. There is some evidence indicating that when at the center of the street plaintiff had looked to his right, the direction from which defendant's car approached, although it is not entirely clear from the record just when plaintiff looked to his right. According to defendant La Grua and the witness who was riding with him in the car at the time of the accident, he was driving at about 15 or 20 miles an hour in second gear when he struck plaintiff. He does not appear to have seen plaintiff until very shortly before or at the time he struck him. La Grua testified, as did his companion, that his car, a 1929 or 1930 Peerless, was traveling east on Slauson avenue, that he stopped for the signal at Pacific boulevard and did not proceed across the intersection until that signal changed to "Go". This testimony was not directly controverted. A witness for defendants testified that just prior to the accident he had been driving west on Slauson, that when he was about twenty feet east of the pedestrian zone, in which plaintiff crossed, he heard the first warning bell. The witness was traveling west in the lane closest to the center line of the street. When he arrived at the pedestrian zone in question he saw plaintiff hurrying in front of the witness's car and he applied his brakes and then turned the window of his car down in order to shout a warning at plaintiff.

The court found that the plaintiff failed to use reasonable care at the time of the accident and that his negligence contributed directly and proximately to the occurrence thereof. Plaintiff (appellant) contends that such findings are unsupported by the evidence.

[1, 2] Without discussing the evidence in greater detail than above set forth it is sufficient to state that an examination of the record reveals the question of plaintiff's negligence in this case to be clearly one of fact for the determination of the trial court. The evidence permits two possible inferences to be deduced therefrom, one of which supports the findings of the court with regard to plaintiff's contributory negligence. In such a case the court's findings will not be disturbed upon appeal.

[3] The court having made a proper finding for the defendants on the issue of contributory negligence, the question here raised as to the ownership of the car is immaterial.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: YORK, P. J.; WHITE, J.

42 Cal.App.2d 788

O'HARE et al. v. PEACOCK DAIRIES, Inc.

Civ. 2550.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 10, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1214

Under order of District Court of Appeal, reversing judgment awarding damages for breach of contract to purchase grade A milk produced by sellers and remanding cause for new trial solely on issue of amount of damages, proof of quality of milk produced by them after breach was admissible on subsequent trials as necessary in fixing amount of damages.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1096(1)

In action for breach of contract to purchase grade A milk produced by plaintiffs, where counsel's stipulation, reports of representatives of approved milk inspection service of state, and proof of contents of other such reports, which had been lost or destroyed, were sufficient to support finding that milk produced by plaintiffs was of such quality on retrial after reversal of judgment for plaintiffs on question of damages only, competency of lay witnesses' testimony to establish condition of plaintiffs' dairy and grade of milk produced therefrom need not be decided on appeal from second judgment for plaintiffs.

3. Stipulations ⇐14(7)

In action for breach of contract to purchase grade A milk produced by plaintiffs, counsel's stipulation, from which defendant did not ask to be relieved, that a witness, if called, would have testified that milk produced by plaintiffs during period when defendant took it was grade A milk, constituted evidence creating conflict and supporting finding of such fact.

4. Evidence ⇐83(1)

In action for breach of contract to purchase grade A milk produced by plaintiffs from tuberculin tested cows, where defendant introduced in evidence plaintiffs' dairy farm score cards, made by representative of approved milk inspection service of state, District Court of Appeal must presume on appeal from judgment for plaintiffs that inspector performed his duty and scored dairy in accordance with law. St.1933, pp. 132, 138, §§ 471(b), 488(b).

5. Sales ⇐72(1)

Under contract for sale and purchase of grade A milk produced by sellers, they were not required to produce grade A raw milk, but only grade A pasteurized milk, in view of statutory provisions. St.1933, pp. 132, 138, §§ 471(b), 488(b).

6. Sales ⇐181(12)

In action against dairy company for breach of contract to purchase grade A milk produced by plaintiffs from tuberculin tested cows, dairy farm score cards, made by representative of approved milk inspection service of state and indicating that plaintiffs' dairy received ratings showing that their cows were inspected, found healthy and tested for tuberculosis, that re-actors were removed, and that milk produced from such cows was at least grade A pasteurized during all of period in which defendant took such milk and succeeding period in which another dairy company took it, constituted evidence supporting finding that milk was of quality required by contract during such periods. St.1933, pp. 132, 138, §§ 471(b), 488(b).

7. Sales ⇐181(12)

In action for breach of contract to purchase grade A milk produced by plaintiffs, testimony of laboratory technician of creamery company, to which plaintiffs delivered milk during certain period after defendant ceased to take it, that witness tested such milk every week and found it grade A so far as bacteria count was concerned, and testimony of such company's production manager that state inspectors' certificates showed milk to be of such grade, held sufficient to support finding that plaintiffs' milk was grade A during such period.

8. Sales ⇐389

In action for breach of contract to purchase grade A milk produced by plaintiffs, trial judge's findings that plaintiffs were able, willing and ready to deliver milk according to terms of agreement, that they duly performed all conditions thereof to be performed by them, and that all denials of defendant's answer to complaint were untrue, held sufficient on question whether plaintiffs' milk was of quality required by contract.

9. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)

In action for breach of contract to purchase grade A milk produced by plaintiffs from tuberculin tested cows, where there was evidence that grade A milk cannot be produced from tuberculin infected cows, that other qualified veterinarians than those who made tuberculin tests of plaintiffs' cows were available to make such tests, and that milk produced by plaintiffs was grade A, testimony of veterinarians making tests that they were made at too great intervals merely created conflict in evidence presenting question for trial judge as to whether plaintiffs were producing grade A milk.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Louis C. Drapeau, Judge.

Action by James M. O'Hare and others against the Peacock Dairies, Inc., for breach of a contract to purchase milk from plaintiffs. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

See, also, 39 Cal.App.2d 506, 103 P.2d 594.

Mitchell, Johnson & Ludwick, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joseph Scott, of Los Angeles, and Claflin, Dorsey & Campbell, of Bakersfield (J. Howard Ziemann, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment for damages resulting from a breach of contract on the part of defendant, wherein it agreed to purchase grade A milk produced by plaintiffs on their farm near Bakersfield, in Kern county. The case has been here before. O'Hare v. Peacock Dairies, Inc., 26 Cal.App.2d 345, 79 P.2d 433; O'Hare v. Peacock Dairies, Inc., 26 Cal.App.2d 753, 79 P.2d 443. The principal facts of the case are there sufficiently detailed so that they need not be repeated here.

After our reversal of the former judgment on the question of damages only, the case was retried on three separate dates, December 16, 1938, May 12, and June 26, 1939. On the first day of trial, counsel for both parties seemed to assume that the only questions to be decided were the quantity and market value of milk produced and delivered by plaintiffs after the breach of contract; that the quality of that milk had been determined and was not an issue at the second trial. The case was reopened for the purpose of taking additional evidence. On this hearing the question of the quality was raised and contested. On a third day, additional evidence was taken and the question of the quality of the milk was again litigated.

At the commencement of the first day of the trial counsel attempted to stipulate certain facts. The question of the quality of the milk did not seem to be regarded as important. The remarks of the trial judge indicated that he considered that question settled and not open for decision. However, counsel for defendant consistently attempted to limit the stipulation to the quantity of milk produced and the price paid therefor, as appeared in certain exhibits introduced and testimony given at the former trial. Because of the indefiniteness of this stipulation and our inability to determine just what was stipulated to, we consider it fair to construe its terms so as to cover only the quantity of milk produced by plaintiffs and the prices paid for it as shown by certain exhibits and the testimony of certain witnesses concerning those exhibits which appear in the records in the first appeal. It is clear that the stipulation covered these facts if it did not go much beyond them. We have limited our examination of the first record to those exhibits and that testimony.

In construing the stipulation we are not aided by being able to determine how the trial judge regarded it and how it was acted upon, because of the manner in which the case was tried. He reserved his rulings on many objections and admitted other evidence subject to motions to strike. The record fails to disclose any rulings on these objections. The minutes show that motions to strike were denied but there is nothing to indicate at what evidence these motions were directed. This is not unusual in cases disclosing a similar procedure and this case is a prime example of the danger involved in following it.

What we have just said concerning the stipulation made at the opening of the trial does not apply to another stipulation to which we will refer.

[1] Plaintiffs argue that the question of the quality of the milk was settled and determined in the first trial; that under our earlier opinions (O'Hare v. Peacock Dairies, Inc., supra) it became the law of the case that the milk produced after the breach of contract was grade "A" milk produced from tuberculin tested cows, as specified in the contract; that only the questions of the quantity of milk produced and its market value in Bakersfield were open for further litigation.

On the other hand, defendant points to our order on the former appeals where this court said [26 Cal.App.2d 345, 79 P.2d 443]: "The judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded for new trial solely on the issue of the amount of damages, with direction to the trial court to retry the issue of the amount of damages only; to amend its findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with the evidence so taken and the views herein expressed, and to render judgment in favor of plaintiffs for the amount of damages so found upon a determination of that issue."

It is argued that this order is the real measure of the issues to be presented and litigated at the second trial; that the contract between the parties required defendant to accept and pay for only milk "produced from tuberculin tested cows under grade A inspection"; that because defendant was not required to accept or pay the contract price for milk of a lesser grade the quality of the milk produced was a necessary element to be established by plaintiffs in determining the amount of their damages; that under this clause of the contract the quantity of milk produced which defendant was required to accept depended on its quality as did its market price; that damages could not be computed without proof of the quality of the milk produced. From this it is argued that, as defendant was not required to accept or pay for any milk less than grade A, plaintiffs could recover no damages for any milk which the evidence failed to show had been "produced from tuberculin tested cows under grade A inspection".

Under the rather broad terms of the orders made by this court on the former appeals we are inclined to accept the arguments of defendant on this question as sound and will regard the question of proof of the quality of the milk produced as necessary in fixing the amount of plaintiffs' damages.

[2] Defendant again argues the question of the competency of the evidence of lay witnesses to establish the condition of a dairy and the grade of milk produced from it. It is again argued that only licensed veterinarians of the state of California or representatives of an approved milk inspection service of the state are competent to testify to the condition of a dairy and dairy herd and the consequent grade to be given the milk produced.

This question was thoroughly considered in our former opinion and under the evidence then before the court we held that the evidence of lay witnesses could be received on that issue. Were it not for the fact that there is now in the record on this appeal evidence which might have a bearing on the question which we did not find in the records on the former appeals, we would regard our former opinion as establishing the law of the case. However, we do not need to decide the question as now presented for the reason that we do not need to go beyond a stipulation of counsel, the reports of representatives of an approved milk inspection service of the state of California, and proof of the contents of other such reports that had been lost or destroyed, to find sufficient evidence to support a finding that the milk produced by plaintiff was of the quality which defendant was required to accept under the terms of its contract. No question is raised as to the quantity of milk produced and its market value in Bakersfield, assuming that it was all grade A milk produced from tuberculin tested cows.

We must consider the evidence as to the quality of the milk produced during three separate periods as the evidence bearing on this question largely comes from separate sources. The first period is from June 22 or 24, to July 27, 1933, when defendant took the milk. We will refer to this as the first period. The next is from July 27, 1933, to January 31, 1934, inclusive, when Our Own Dairies took the milk. We will refer to this as the second period. The third is from February 1, 1934, to December 1, 1935, both inclusive, when the Wasco Creamery & Construction Company took the milk. We will refer to this as the third period and the purchaser as the Wasco Creamery.

Plaintiffs' dairy was officially degraded to a butterfat basis on June 22, 1933. It was officially reinstated to "Grade milk for L. A. Gr. A Cr. purpose" on June 28, 1933. (The abbreviations are translated, Los Angeles Grade A Cream.) Defendant purchased the milk during this period, or at least part of it, as grade B milk under a stipulation that such fact would not preclude plaintiffs from proving that the milk was in fact grade A and from claiming damages for breach of contract over this period.

[3] There is much evidence in the record which would have supported a finding that the milk produced during the first period was not grade A. However, we find in the record the following referring to the first period:

"Mr. Dorsey: * * * Now we are not withdrawing the proposition, we being the innocent parties and in the circumstances of handling milk that we should have the difference between the amount they did pay us and the 70 cents for that period of time that they took that milk, the Court having determined in the case that we were delivering grade A milk; in order to constitute a breach of contract we had to prove that and that is an established fact in the case, so therefore under the decision in this case they got from us the grade A milk during that period of time. * * *

"Mr. Mitchell: I think that is all right, Your Honor, except for the fact that we cannot stipulate the prevailing market price was anything because it is our contention it wasn't anything.

"The Court: That is true, but subject to your general objection of incompetent, irrelevant, etc., that offer of proof is stipulated to?

"Mr. Mitchell: That is to say if a witness on their behalf were called he would testify along that line.

"The Court: That is right."

The foregoing amounts to a stipulation that a witness, if called, would have testified that the milk produced during the first period was grade A milk. Defendant did not ask to be relieved from this stipulation and it remains in the record. It therefore remains as evidence in the case, creating a conflict, and would support a finding that the milk delivered during the first period was grade A milk.

[4-6] Defendant introduced dairy farm score cards of plaintiffs' dairy for a longer period than that covered by the first and second periods. These score cards were made by a representative of an approved milk inspection service of the state of California. Their respective dates and scores are as follows: January 17, 1933, score 81.7; June 1, 1933, score 74.2; June 28, 1933, score 72.6; September 29, 1933, score 75.8; November 28, 1933, score 81.5; January 19, 1934, score 76.8; March 8, 1934, score 84.0. On each of these score cards are blanks for scoring the "apparent good health" of the cows and "tested and reactors removed". Plaintiffs' dairy received a perfect score on every card under both headings.

Subdivision "b" of section 471 of the Agricultural Code provides in part as follows:

"Milk shall be produced from nonreacting tuberculin tested cows as determined by a test applied by an approved veterinarian under the supervision of the department, or shall be pasteurized and shall otherwise conform to the rules and regulations adopted by the department." Chap. 723, Stats. 1933.

Subdivision "b" of section 488 of the same code, prior to its recent amendment, provided as follows: "Grade A pasteurized milk is market milk which conforms to the following minimum requirements: the health of the cows shall be determined by physical examination at least once in six months by an official representative of an approved milk inspection service; it shall be produced on dairies that score not less than seventy per cent on the dairy farm score card adopted by the department and it shall contain not more than one hundred fifty thousand bacteria per milliliter before pasteurization and not more than fifteen thousand bacteria per milliliter at the time of delivery to the consumer." Chap. 695, Stats.1933.

We must presume that the inspector performed his duty and scored the dairy in accordance with law. These score cards indicate rather clearly that during all the first and second periods the dairy received ratings that show that the cows were inspected and found healthy; that tuberculin tests had been made; that any reactor had been removed; that the milk was at least grade A pasteurized, as defined in the statute. Under their contract plaintiffs were only required to produce grade A pasteurized milk. They were not required to produce grade A raw. O'Hare v. Peacock Dairies, supra. It follows that there is evidence in the record to support a finding that during the first and second periods the milk was of the quality required by the contract.

[7] During the third period the milk was delivered to the Wasco Creamery. George S. Robertson was its laboratory technician and Sven Helster was its production manager. Robertson testified that he tested plaintiffs' milk every week and as far as the bacteria count was concerned it was grade A milk. Helster testified that the Wasco Creamery received certificates from state inspectors which showed the plaintiffs' milk to be grade A, that all such certificates dated prior to 1936 had been destroyed but that each one of them showed the milk produced and delivered by plaintiffs was grade A. This evidence is sufficient to support a finding that plaintiffs' milk was grade A during the third period.

[8] Defendant argues that there is no finding that the milk produced by plaintiffs was grade A milk produced from tuberculin tested cows. The plaintiffs reply that the trial judge made sufficient findings on this question. They point out that a copy of the contract was attached to the second amended complaint and incorporated in the amended findings; that it was found that plaintiffs "were able, willing and ready to deliver milk according to the terms of said agreement, and in all respects to carry out the provisions thereof", and also "that plaintiffs have duly performed all the conditions of said agreement on their part to be performed". Defendant replies that these findings are mere conclusions of law and therefore no findings at all.

In a separate defense in the answer it is alleged that plaintiffs' milk did not conform to the quoted portion of the contract requiring it to be grade A. It was also alleged that the milk "failed to meet the requirements of grade A inspection and failed to comply with the condition contained in said contract". It was also alleged in the second amended complaint that after the breach plaintiffs offered to deliver and were ready, able and willing to deliver milk to defendant according to the terms of the written contract and in all respects to carry out the terms thereof. These allegations were denied in the answer. The trial court found that "all of the denials of defendant's answer thereto are untrue". This seemed to refer to all the defenses contained in the answer and may be a sufficient finding on the question of the quality of the milk. We believe the findings taken as a whole are sufficient on the question of the quality of the milk.

There is also evidence that tuberculin tests were given the cows on October 24, 1932, on December 4, 1933, on August 29, 1934, and on November 27, 1935; that one reactor was found as a result of the test on December 4, 1934, and it was immediately removed from the herd; that no other reactors were found.

[9] Defendant urges that as the tests were not made as frequently as required by law, plaintiffs were not producing grade A milk. There is evidence from defendant's expert that grade A milk cannot be produced from tuberculin infected cows. There is no evidence that additional tuberculin tests were not made. There is evidence that there were other qualified veterinarians available to make tuberculin tests other than the two shown in the evidence to have made such tests. There is the stipulation and evidence already pointed out that the milk produced was grade A. The evidence of the veterinarians making the tests that the tests were made at too great intervals, at best merely created another conflict in the evidence which the trial judge resolved against defendant.

Defendant urges that the findings are inconsistent. They argue that it was found that the plaintiffs received and were paid the exact amount of their damages when they sold their milk after the breach. This was due to a typographical error in the findings which has been corrected. See O'Hare v. Peacock Dairies, 39 Cal.App.2d 506, 103 P.2d 594.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, J.

42 Cal.App.2d 801

REGAN v. COUNCIL OF CITY OF SAN MATEO.

Civ. 11218.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 11, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 5, 1941.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐120

Zoning ordinance must be construed as a whole.

2. Automobiles ⇐395

Where zoning ordinance provided for hearing by planning commission, on notice, of application for permit to operate gasoline service station and that planning commission should recommend granting of permit if not detrimental to the general welfare and that final decision would be made at next meeting of council without further notice, and recommendation was made without such finding, recommendation was not entitled to more weight than finding of council that granting of permit would be detrimental to the general welfare even though no hearing was had by council, since none was required by ordinance, whose refusal to grant permit was not arbitrary.

3. Constitutional law ⇐296(2)

Refusal by city council of permit to erect gasoline service station did not take applicant's "property" without "due process of law" although a second hearing was not had by council after prior hearing by city planning commission and applicant's "property" was not taken from him since he was merely denied a favor and if any property rights were affected, they were affected by the ordinance and not by refusal to grant license.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law" and "Property".

4. Constitutional law ⇐296(2)

Where city clerk gave notice as prescribed by ordinance of hearing by city planning commission of application for permit to erect gasoline service station and hearing was had pursuant thereto and the matter passed on at next regular meeting of the council as provided by ordinance, there was sufficient notice of the hearing as regards "due process."

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process".

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by H. W. Regan against the Council of the City of San Mateo to compel the issuance of a permit for a gasoline station. From a judgment for defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Carl W. Anderson, of Burlingame, and Breed, Burpee & Robinson, of Oakland, for appellant.

Ernest A. Wilson, City Atty. (Reuel R. Sutton and Kirkbride & Wilson, all of San Mateo, of counsel), for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

This is an appeal by the plaintiff from the judgment of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of San Mateo, denying a writ of mandate against the defendant. The plaintiff is the owner of lots 1, 2 and 3, in block B of Baywood Blocks, located in the city of San Mateo. Being desirous of erecting a gasoline service station he applied for a permit. Lots 1 and 2 are located in the fourth residential district as defined in ordinance No. 446 which is a zoning ordinance. Lot 3 is within the boundaries of the third residential district as described in said ordinance. By the terms of the ordinance the erection of gasoline stations in the fourth residential district is permissive, but within the boundaries of the third residential district such use is prohibited.

On July 28, 1937, plaintiff applied for a permit. In that permit the applicant advised the defendant that lot 3 would be included solely for landscape purposes. The application was referred to the planning commission of the city of San Mateo for hearing and recommendation. A hearing was had before the commission on the 10th day of September, 1937. Prior to that hearing a notice was given as required by the terms of the ordinance. Later a hearing was had and evidence both oral and documentary was introduced. After the hearing had been had the commission made and filed its recommendation in writing in relation thereto with the city clerk. In said recommendation it advised the granting of the application but it did not pass on the fact whether the granting of the application would or would not be detrimental to the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare of the city of San Mateo. At the regular meeting of the council of the city of San Mateo next succeeding the filing of said recommendation, that is on September 20, 1937, the said council took up the hearing of said application. All of the documentary evidence which had been presented to the planning commission was presented to the council. In addition to the protest which had been presented to the planning commission other protests were presented to the council. The council also heard oral arguments to the effect that a gasoline station would be detrimental to the surrounding territory. Every one seeking an opportunity to be heard was granted the privilege. Neither the plaintiff nor any one acting on his behalf asked to be heard, nor was any evidence presented establishing the difference between the value of the property for a gasoline station and apartment house purposes. After a full hearing the council passed its resolution denying the application upon the ground that the granting of the application would be detrimental to the public health, safety, morals and general welfare. Being dissatisfied with the ruling of the council the plaintiff applied to the superior court for a writ of mandate. He filed a petition that is very full and complete. The defendant appeared and filed an answer that is likewise very full and complete. Therein it interposed numerous denials and pleaded some new matter. A trial was had on the issues made by the plaintiff's complaint and the answer thereto. Evidence was presented that plaintiff's lots could be most profitably used for gasoline station purposes. However, there was substantial evidence that said property could be used for apartment house purposes and for that purpose it had a value of from $4,500 to $10,000. After the trial was completed the trial court made findings in favor of the defendant. There was evidence to sustain each finding. Except by inference, we do not understand the plaintiff to contend otherwise. From the judgment entered on said findings the plaintiff has appealed.

The plaintiff contends it was the duty of the trial court to grant him a writ of mandate if the resolution of the defendant was arbitrary, discriminatory, and unreasonable. Standard Oil Co. v. City of Kearney, 106 Neb. 558, 184 N.W. 109, 18 A.L.R. 95. To that contention the defendant replies that this is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court and that all intendments are to be made in support of that judgment and every presumption is in favor of its validity. Consolidated Const. Co. v. Pac. E. Ry. Co., 184 Cal. 244, 246, 193 P. 238. Continuing it contends that the record affirmatively shows the trial court found said resolution was not arbitrary, unreasonable, or discriminatory. That reply the plaintiff argues is insufficient. He points to passages in the record showing the council did not cause any notice to be given of the hearing to be had before it. That contention brings up for consideration the real issue in the case. That issue involves a proper construction of the provisions of ordinance No. 446, supra.

Section 1 defines many words. Section 2 provides, "Excepting as authorized by the provisions of section 12 hereof, no premises shall be used * * * for any purpose other than the uses herein permitted in the district in which it is located by the provisions of this ordinance." By the terms of section 3 the city is divided into eight districts. Section 6, in defining uses permitted in the third residential district, does not mention gasoline service stations. Section 7, concerning fourth residential districts, authorizes the use for gasoline service stations "permitted with a permit from the city council". Section 12, "Non-conforming uses", provides for "A. Regulation of Use" and "B. Procedure to establish use." The last subdivision is divided into eleven subsections. In subsection 1 an application is provided for. In subsection 2 the form of the application is prescribed. In subsection 3 the exhibits required are enumerated. In subsection 4 it is provided that the city clerk will set the application for hearing. In subsection 5 the form, manner, and time of notice are prescribed. In subsection 6 it is provided that at the time set the hearing will be had. The ordinance continues (subsection 7):

"7. Recommendation. Thereafter the commission shall make and file its recommendations in writing in relation thereto with the city clerk. The commission may recommend the granting or denial of the application, or the granting of only part of the uses sought to be established, * * *. If said commission finds that the granting of such petition will not be detrimental to the public health, safety, morals or general welfare, it shall recommend that a permit be issued, subject to such conditions, if any, as it may deem advisable. * * * In passing on said application the planning commission shall also consider the character of use of the adjacent and surrounding territory, and the scope and trend of the development of uses therein. * * *

"8. Hearing by council. At its next regular meeting after the filing of such recommendations with the city clerk, or at any time to which the matter may be continued, the city council shall proceed to pass upon same, and no other notice need be given.

"9. Order by council. Thereafter the city council shall make and file its resolution and order determining said application, and shall consider and determine same in accordance with the provisions hereof as to the manner of action by the planning commission.

"10. Decision final. The action of the city council in relation thereto shall be final and conclusive upon the applicant, and such decision shall run with the land.

[1, 2] "Section 15. Special permits. A. Regulation of Use. 1. Extent of Use. In all cases where a use is herein conditioned to be exercised upon obtaining a permit therefor from the city council, it shall be unlawful to exercise same without having first obtained such permit therefor." Subsection 3 provides the procedure shall be the same as under section 12. "4. Hearing and Recommendation by planning commission. The planning commission shall hear such application and shall make a recommendation thereon in the manner and form herein provided for establishing nonconforming uses, and in so doing may recommend the granting or denial of said application, or the temporary granting of same, in whole or in part, but it shall not recommend the granting of same as to any property when no notice has been given." Then in section 16 power is conferred on the city council to issue subpoenas, require the attendance of witnesses and the production of records and documents. The plaintiff quotes from Drummey v. State Board of Funeral Directors, 13 Cal.2d 75, on page 85, 87 P.2d 848, 854, where the court says: "In view of these principles, it necessarily follows that the court to which the application for mandate is made to secure the restoration of a professional license must exercise an independent judgment on the facts. This does not mean that the preliminary work performed by the administrative board in sifting the evidence and in making its findings is wasted effort. As was pointed out in the St. Joseph Stock Yards case, supra, [St. Joseph Stock Yards Co. v. United States, 298 U.S. 38, 56 S.Ct. 720, 80 L.Ed. 1033] in weighing the evidence the courts can and should be assisted by the findings of the board. The findings of the board come before the court with a strong presumption of their correctness, and the burden rests on the complaining party to convince the court that the board's decision is contrary to the weight of the evidence." (Italics ours.) The plaintiff then argues that the recommendation of the planning commission should be given the greater weight because it caused notice to be given before holding a hearing; and that the city council did not cause notice to be given before it held a hearing. That argument may not be approved for two distinct but separate reasons. In the first place the recommendation of the commission did not comply with an expressed condition of the ordinance. To be complete a recommendation to grant a permit should have made a finding that the granting thereof would "* * * not be detrimental to the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare * * *" (sec. 12, subsec. 7, supra) but it did not do so. In the second place the plaintiff takes up the ordinance piecemeal. The ordinance should be construed as a whole. As so construed it does not provide for two hearings. It provides that the planning commission shall be a fact-finding body for the council and file its recommendations. It further provides that the council will have before it such recommendations and such other and additional evidence as will enable it to determine the issue before it. Furthermore the ordinance distinctly provides that the council will make the determination and that the council's determination will be final and conclusive. In other words, as we construe the ordinance it provides that the planning commission will be called upon to perform similar functions to those performed by a referee appointed by a court. The ordinance provides for one hearing and one determination. That hearing commences before the planning commission. Before the hearing commences notice of its initiation should be given as prescribed in subsection 5, supra. The hearing continues and does not end until a determination thereof is made as provided in subsection 9, supra. Although the council did not cause a second notice to be given before it took up the hearing, its determination was not arbitrary.

[3, 4] As the ordinance did not provide for a second notice we understand the plaintiff to contend that the act of the council resulted in taking his property without due process. The point may not be sustained for several reasons. He has his property. It has not been taken from him. He has merely been denied a favor. Rubin v. Board of Directors of the City of Pasadena, Cal.Sup., 104 P.2d 1041. Again, if his property rights have been affected, that result was not caused by the determination complained of but it was caused by the enactment of the ordinance. Board of Zoning Appeals v. Waintrup, 99 Ind.App. 576, 193 N.E. 701, 705. Finally, as the provisions hereinabove set forth clearly show, at the commencement of the proceeding the city clerk gave notice as prescribed by the ordinance, later the commission filed its purported recommendation. The hearing thereof was, by the terms of subsection 8 of section 12, set for the next regular meeting of the council. That was a sufficient notice of the hearing. San Diego, etc., Co. v. National City, 174 U.S. 739, 19 S.Ct. 804, 43 L.Ed. 1154.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; SPENCE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 40

PEOPLE v. CARSON.

Cr. 3418.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 14, 1941.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1941.

Hearing Denied March 15, 1941.

1. Criminal law ⇐789(4)

The statute providing that if the statute dealing with the subjects of presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt be read, no further instruction on the subject of the presumption of innocence or "defining" reasonable doubt need be given, does not forbid any other instruction on the "subject" of reasonable doubt. Pen.Code, §§ 1096, 1096a.

2. Homicide ⇐151(1)

Under statute providing that when commission of a homicide is proven, burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, justification, or excuse is on a defendant, unless prosecution's proof tends to show crime is only manslaughter, or that defendant was justified or excused, it is necessary only that defendant produce evidence, the weight of which is sufficient to create in the minds of the jurors a reasonable doubt as to the existence of circumstances justifying the homicide. Pen.Code, § 1105.

3. Criminal law ⇐808½

The reading to jury of statute providing that when commission of a homicide is proven burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, justification, or excuse is on a defendant, unless prosecution's proof tends to show crime is only manslaughter, or that defendant was justified or excused, without explaining to jury the extent of the burden cast on defendant, tends to create in jury's minds the impression that the obligation cast on defendant is much greater than the obligation cast on him as defined by late decisions of the Supreme Court. Pen.Code, § 1105.

4. Criminal law ⇐808½

Instruction in murder prosecution that when commission of a homicide is proven in a murder prosecution, burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, justification, or excuse is on a defendant, unless prosecution's proof tends to show crime is only manslaughter, or that defendant was justified or excused, was erroneous, where it was not aided by an explanatory instruction. Pen. Code, § 1105.

5. Homicide ⇐300(3)

In murder prosecution, court erred in refusing to give instruction that a person in the exercise of his right of self-defense, not only has a right to stand his ground and defend himself when attacked, but he may pursue his adversary until he has secured himself from danger.

6. Criminal law ⇐770(2)

In murder prosecution, defendant was entitled to have jury instructed fully and correctly on all legal principles applicable to the facts shown in evidence, not only in evidence produced on his own behalf, but also in evidence produced by the prosecution.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence L. Kincaid, Judge.

Elgin Carson was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals.

Judgment reversed, and new trial ordered.

Hearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and CURTIS, JJ., dissenting.

Walter L. Gordon, Jr., of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Gilbert F. Nelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WOOD, Justice.

Defendant was charged by information with the crime of murder and was found guilty by a jury of murder in the second degree. He was also charged with a prior conviction of murder and this charge was admitted. He has appealed from the judgment of conviction.

The decedent and the defendant were twin brothers. In the evening of May 11, 1940, they were visiting at the home of their sister, Mrs. Willie Key, and as they came out of the house at "about dusk" they approached decedent's automobile which was parked at the curb and in which the wife of decedent, Mrs. Reva Carson, was sitting. Mrs. Carson testified that as the two brothers came from the house they were carrying on an "ordinary conversation" but she could not understand what they were saying. She testified: "Well, they came out of the house and walked down the steps, and I called to my husband to come on, hurry up and let's go home. So he said all right, and then they walked on to the car. And then my husband started to go around the back end of the car, to go around to the driver's seat, and just as he went around the back of the car Elgin followed him, and instead of my husband getting in the car he started backing up, and I glanced toward the back and I saw Elgin opening his knife. * * * And then he (decedent) backed to the front of the car, and then whirled and ran. * * * He ran away from the defendant, and he followed him, and he caught up with him I think on the front porch, and there was a struggle on the front porch and my husband gave a blood-curdling scream, and about that time the front door opened, and my husband said to his sister, 'Willie, he has cut me to death,' and then he fell in the door."

The two men were similar in appearance and both wore grey suits. Defendant testified that he told decedent that he wanted to ride with him to 42nd street but decedent told him that he could not do so because his wife might want to be taken somewhere. Defendant then told decedent that he wanted to go and started to open the rear door of the car. He further testified: "I started to open the door to get in and he said, 'Don't get in. I told you, don't get in, I can't take you.' And I asked him why. And in the meantime I had attempted to open the door, and he slammed the door and said—I turned around and I saw a knife in his hand, and when he slammed the door he said, 'Don't get in.' I said, 'What is the matter? You have a knife.' And he said, 'Yes, if you attempt to get in I will use it.' And in the meantime I backed up, and he was approaching me—I backed around on the sidewalk, and as we reached the sidewalk, I had in mind that I was afraid to turn my back to him—I didn't know, from the way he spoke—I hit at his wrist to try to knock the knife on the ground and run, and I missed it. So I ran myself, and when I ran I was aiming to go around my sister's house; but in the meantime we walked around together, and I jumped onto the porch, and when I did, by the time I got to the porch, he was right there with me. And between the time that I left from the sidewalk up to the porch I had opened my knife out of my own pocket, and just the instant we hit the porch I felt a strike, and I felt a sting on my neck like that (indicating), and I clinched with him." Defendant further testified that they scuffled for a minute or two during which time he struck decedent and decedent was trying to strike him. Decedent fell and died five days later. Upon his body there was a long deep cut measuring seven inches in length extending across the upper left chest and a second cut fifteen inches long across the abdomen.

After decedent fell defendant went into the kitchen of Mrs. Key's house and cut his wrists with a butcher knife. He gave as a reason for doing this that he thought he was going to die from the wound in his neck and that he wanted to die quickly.

Mrs. Beulah Pruden, who lived next door to Mrs. Key, testified that she ran to Mrs. Key's house when she heard the commotion and saw decedent lying in the doorway. She stooped to render aid and saw two knives one on each side of decedent. One of these knives was brown in color and one was black. The prosecution presented several witnesses who testified that although present they did not observe any cut on defendant's neck.

Defendant contends that the trial court erred in refusing to give to the jury his proposed instruction No. XIV, which is as follows: "You are instructed that in a criminal case the burden of proof is always upon the prosecution, and when a defendant produces evidence of self defense, it is only necessary for him to create by a preponderance of evidence a reasonable doubt as to his guilt to entitle him to an acquittal, and if you have such reasonable doubt as to his guilt in this case, it is your duty to find defendant 'not guilty'." No instruction was given by the court covering the principle involved in the proposed instruction but the court gave the following instruction which is in the language of section 1105 of the Penal Code: "Upon a trial for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation or that justify or excuse it, devolves upon the defendant, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounts to manslaughter or that the defendant was justifiable or excusable".

[1-4] Respondent contends that since the court read to the jury section 1096 of the Penal Code on the subjects of presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt the matter was sufficiently covered and cites section 1096a, which provides that if section 1096 be read no further instruction on the subject of the presumption of innocence or defining reasonable doubt need be given. It is to be noted, however, that section 1096a provides that no further instruction defining reasonable doubt need be given. It is not provided therein that no other instruction on the subject of reasonable doubt need be given in any particular case. The Supreme Court has at various times given different interpretations to section 1105 of the Penal Code. In People v. Hong Ah Duck, 61 Cal. 387, the instruction under review was the following: "When the killing is proved, it devolves upon the defendant to show any circumstances in mitigation to excuse or justify by a preponderance of evidence on his part. That is, the killing being proved, the defendant must make out his case in mitigation to excuse or justify by some proof stronger in some appreciable degree than the proof of the prosecution. The burden of proof changes. * * * It must be in some degree, no matter how small, stronger than the proof of the prosecution on the other side." The court held that the instruction was proper, citing several earlier California decisions. But in several later decisions the Supreme Court has withdrawn its approval of the doctrine of the Hong Ah Duck case. People v. Bushton, 80 Cal. 160, 165, 22 P. 127, 549; People v. Post, 208 Cal. 433, 437, 281 P. 618; People v. Elliott, 80 Cal. 296, 22 P. 207; People v. Roe, 189 Cal. 548, 550, 565, 209 P. 560. It is now thoroughly established that under section 1105 it is necessary only that defendant produce evidence the weight of which is sufficient to create in the minds of the jurors a reasonable doubt as to the existence of the alleged circumstances which justified the homicide. The reading of section 1105 to the jurors without explaining to them the extent of the burden cast upon defendant would tend to create in their minds the impression that the obligation cast upon defendant was much greater than the obligation cast upon him as defined by the late decisions of the Supreme Court. Since an erroneous view of section 1105 was taken by the justices in the Hong Ah Duck and other cases it cannot be successfully argued that the jurors, without the aid of an explanatory instruction, could differentiate between the view expressed in the early California cases and the view expressed in the later cases and accurately determine the extent of the obligation cast upon defendant. Our views are in accord with the decision of the Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas, where, in Cogdell v. State, 43 Tex.Cr.R. 178, 63 S.W. 645, 647, it is said that "the court, in giving substantive defensive charges, should couple them with the reasonable doubt, to wit, if the jury believe, etc., or if they have a reasonable doubt with reference to the defensive matter, to give defendant the benefit of such reasonable doubt, and acquit him". The instruction under review is not in language which is to be commended but its fault lies not in the charge that it is too favorable to the accused but rather in the charge that it is not favorable enough. The words "by a preponderance of evidence" could well have been stricken from the instruction and as so stricken the instruction could well have been given.

[5, 6] The court erred in refusing the request of defendant for the following instruction: "The Court instructs the jury that a person in the exercise of his right of self-defense not only has a right to stand his ground and defend himself when attacked, but he may pursue his adversary until he has secured himself from danger." People v. Kinowaki, 39 Cal.App.2d 376, 103 P.2d 203, 204; People v. Orosco, 73 Cal.App. 580, 239 P. 82. Although many instructions were given on the subject of self-defense we find no instruction which concerns the right of one attacked to pursue his adversary until he has secured himself from danger. Defendant was entitled to have the jury instructed fully and correctly on all legal principles applicable to the facts shown in evidence, not only in evidence produced on his own behalf but also in evidence produced by the prosecution.

The judgment is reversed and a new trial is ordered.

We concur: MOORE, P. J.; McCOMB, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 35

PEOPLE v. LATHAM.

Cr. 3403.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 14, 1941.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1941.

Hearing Denied March 13, 1941.

1. Criminal law ⇐1159(2)

If circumstances reasonably justify verdict of guilty, reviewing court's opinion that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with innocence of defendant will not warrant interference with jury's determination.

2. Criminal law ⇐1144(13)

The reviewing court must assume existence of every fact pointing to guilt which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and determine whether there were sufficient facts to justify jury in drawing inference of guilt.

3. Larceny ⇐65

Evidence that defendant was driving automobile containing stolen property shortly after theft, that when stopped by officers he immediately fled and abandoned automobile, and that he later denied having driven automobile at any time, sustained conviction of grand theft.

4. Criminal law ⇐543(1)

A letter by investigator in district attorney's office seeking to locate traveling salesman who testified at preliminary examination, and letter from salesman postmarked from another state, and suggesting that salesman's testimony at first hearing be used, were admissible for limited purpose of showing due diligence to secure presence of salesman, as ground for admitting transcript of salesman's former testimony.

5. Criminal law ⇐543(1), 1153(6)

Determining whether district attorney used due diligence to find witness, as affecting admissibility of transcript of such witness' former testimony, is within sound discretion of trial judge, whose decision should not be reversed in absence of abuse of discretion, and what constitutes "due diligence" must depend on circumstances.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Diligence."

6. Criminal law ⇐543(2)

Where efforts by investigator for district attorney to locate traveling salesman who testified at preliminary examination resulted in letter from salesman in another state, dated three days before date set for trial, and suggesting that salesman's former testimony be used, and counsel for defendant had cross-examined such salesman at preliminary examination, admitting transcript of salesman's former testimony was not an abuse of discretion.

7. Larceny ⇐46

In prosecution for grand theft of property including check-writing machines from salesman, magistrate properly sustained objection to cross-examination of salesman at preliminary examination, designed to show how much salesman would have had to pay to replace stolen machines if they had been lost, since fair market value was controlling.

8. Larceny ⇐46

The value of stolen articles for purpose of establishing a felony charge is fair market value and not value to any particular individual.

9. Larceny ⇐45

In prosecution for grand theft, permitting officer to testify that stolen machines found in defendant's automobile, which were not available as exhibits, had particular values stamped upon them, was admissible for purpose of identifying the stolen articles, and not for purpose of fixing their value.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence L. Kincaid, Judge.

Hobart C. Latham was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals from judgment of conviction and order denying motion for new trial.

Affirmed.

Robert E. O'Neill, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Eugene M. Elson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WOOD, Justice.

Defendant was accused by information of the crime of grand theft and was convicted at a jury trial. He has appealed from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is now contended that the evidence is insufficient to justify the conviction. Andrew S. Thomson, a salesman for the American Check Writer Company, parked his automobile in front of his residence in the city of Los Angeles on February 28, 1940, at about 4:45 p. m. He left in the car, which he was using in his business, four checkwriters, a robe, two bathing suits, a scrapbook and a wheel and tire. When he returned to the car the next morning at 11 o'clock he found that all of these articles had been removed. Mr. Thomson valued one of the checkwriters at $107.50, another at $92.50 and the other two at $20 each. The other items taken were valued at various amounts bringing the sum total of the value of the stolen articles to well over $200. Two of the checkwriters were owned by Mr. Thomson and the other two had been consigned to him to be sold. He recovered all of his property from the police department the next day at about noon.

Officer Chase testified that at about midnight on February 28, 1940, he was working in a radio car with officer Olsen. As they drove south on Western avenue they noticed a Plymouth sedan which had just passed them having a bent license plate. They followed the sedan some distance and finally drove up to it and told the driver to pull over, that they wanted to talk to him. At this time the witness turned a flashlight on the faces of the occupants of the car. Defendant was driving the car and his companion was Joe Dillard, in whose name the car was registered. When the flash was turned on defendant's face he drove away and the officers immediately pursued him. At times during the pursuit, which continued for four or five miles, the officers' car traveled faster than sixty-five miles per hour. The car driven by defendant finally swung around a corner and into the driveway of a gasoline station, where defendant and Dillard jumped out and ran in different directions. The officers first took the ignition key from the Plymouth car and then searched the neighborhood for defendant and Dillard but did not find them. Upon returning to the Plymouth car they found that it contained a number of articles including those which had been taken from Thomson's automobile. On one of the checkwriters there was stamped the price of $107.50 and upon another there was stamped the price of $92.50. The articles belonging to Thomson were taken by the officers to the police station and later returned to Thomson.

Officer Carnahan testified that on February 29 he went to a tire shop on 12th street and there found defendant, who stated that he was operating under a secondhand license. The officer went outside the shop and talked to Joe Dillard, who was working on a tire. The officer then walked around the lot and returned to the shop to speak to defendant but defendant had gone.

Officer Eaton testified that on March 9, 1940, he and another officer went to an apartment house on West 7th street to arrest defendant. They covered the rear of the apartment house and two other officers went to the front of the house. Defendant started to walk through the back yard toward a driveway leading to an alley but he saw officer Carnahan coming toward him and said, "Well I guess this is it".

Defendant was sworn as a witness and stated that he was not in the Plymouth car which contained the stolen property.

[1-3] If the circumstances reasonably justify the verdict of the jury, the opinion of the reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with the innocence of defendant will not warrant interference with the determination of the jury. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778. This court must assume the existence of every fact pointing to guilt which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence and determine whether there were sufficient facts to justify the jury in drawing the inference of guilt. People v. Hennessey, 201 Cal. 568, 258 P. 49. It appears from the evidence that defendant was driving a car containing stolen property shortly after the theft, that when stopped by the officers he immediately fled and abandoned the car, later denying that he had at any time driven the car. The evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict.

[4] At the trial a transcript of the testimony of the witness Thomson given at the preliminary examination was read to the jury and it is now claimed by defendant that the district attorney did not show sufficient diligence to justify reading the transcript. The witness Doughty, an investigator in the office of the district attorney, testified that he had attempted to serve a subpoena on Thomson at the office of American Check Writer Company in Los Angeles, the place of Thomson's employment. The investigator was informed by Thomson's employer that he did not know Thomson's whereabouts for the reason that Thomson was traveling on business. At the employer's suggestion Doughty wrote a letter to the manager of the American Check Writer Company on May 15, 1940, asking him to mail a letter to Thomson and to ask Thomson to write and give information as to his whereabouts and whether he would be in Los Angeles on June 4, 1940, the date set for the trial. Thereafter Mr. Doughty received a letter from Mr. Thomson postmarked Roswell, New Mexico, dated June 1, 1940, in which Thomson stated that his office had contacted him regarding his absence from Los Angeles and further stating, "you may use my testimony given at first hearing". These letters were properly received in evidence for the limited purpose of aiding in the determination of the question whether the district attorney had used due diligence in attempting to secure the presence of the witness.

[5, 6] The determination of the question whether the district attorney had used due diligence to find a witness for the purpose of serving a subpoena is within the sound discretion of the trial judge, whose decision on the point should not be reversed in the absence of an abuse of discretion. People v. Land, 137 Cal.App. 196, 30 P.2d 433. What constitutes "due diligence" must depend upon the circumstances of the particular case. The trial judge was doubtless satisfied that at the time of the trial the witness Thomson was outside of the state of California. It appears from the record that defendant was represented at the preliminary examination by counsel who cross-examined the witness Thomson. We find no abuse of discretion.

[7, 8] Defendant asserts that his cross-examination of the witness Thomson was unduly restricted by the magistrate who conducted the preliminary examination and particularly complains that after Thomson had given the value of the four checkwriting machines he was not permitted to cross-examine for the purpose of showing that the value was less than the sum which had been set by Thomson. Two of the machines, according to Thomson's testimony, had been consigned to him and defendant sought to establish what Thomson would have had to pay to the company to replace the consigned machines in case they had been lost. An objection to this line of questioning was sustained and defendant offered to prove "that the fair value of those machines, in so far as he was concerned, was a price at which his company consigned them to him. * * *" The magistrate ruled correctly in sustaining the objection. The value to be placed upon stolen articles for the purpose of establishing a felony charge is the fair market value of the property and not the value of the property to any particular individual.

[9] There is no merit in defendant's contention that the trial court erred in permitting officer Chase to testify that one of the checkwriting machines which he found in the Plymouth car had the value of $107.50 stamped upon it and that the other machine had the value of $92.50 stamped upon it. One of these machines had been sold before the trial and the other had been returned to the company which owned it. The machines were not available to be offered in court as exhibits. The testimony of officer Chase was given for the purpose of identifying the stolen articles and not for the purpose of fixing their value. The testimony was admissible for the purpose for which it was received.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: MOORE, P. J.; McCOMB, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 1

In re FURTSCH'S ESTATE.

FURTSCH v. FURTSCH.

Civ. 12957.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 13, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 5, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐907(3)

On appeal on judgment roll alone, findings are conclusively presumed to be supported by evidence.

2. Appeal and error ⇐907(3)

On appeal on judgment roll alone, findings are to receive, if possible, such construction as will uphold rather than defeat judgment thereon.

3. Appeal and error ⇐907(3)

On appeal on judgment roll alone, findings are to be liberally construed and, if possible, any ambiguity or inconsistency will be resolved in favor of sustaining judgment.

4. Appeal and error ⇐907(3)

On appeal on judgment roll alone, judgment will be reversed only on some fatal error appearing on face of judgment roll.

5. Appeal and error ⇐907(3)

On appeal on judgment roll alone, every presumption and intendment is resolved in favor of regularity of proceedings in trial court.

6. Trial ⇐404(1)

A finding capable of two reasonable constructions must be interpreted according to one that sustains judgment.

7. Appeal and error ⇐907(3)

Although wife's petition, to have set apart as homestead certain realty mentioned in inventory of deceased husband's estate, recited that realty had been acquired by the parties at time of their marriage, and court found that shortly before marriage parties agreed that the realty was desirable for community purposes and that they would contribute their separate funds toward purchase thereof, provision of trial court's order, reciting that the realty "having been acquired by them at the time of their marriage" was community property, was, on appeal on judgment roll alone, required to be construed so as to sustain the order, which set apart the realty as homestead, and would not be construed to mean that the realty had been acquired by the parties before their marriage.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition for all other definitions of "Having Been Acquired by Them at the Time of Their Marriage".

8. Appeal and error ⇐907(3)

On appeal on judgment roll alone, from order setting apart for benefit of wife and as homestead, certain realty mentioned in inventory of deceased husband's estate, District Court of Appeal was required to assume that sufficient evidence was adduced to satisfy trial court that agreement, found to have been made by the parties before their marriage, that the realty was desirable for community purposes, ripened into a completed transaction that made the realty community property.

9. Husband and wife ⇐266

Husbands and wives have legal right to contract with each other concerning their personal interests in property, and by agreement between them the status of any property owned by them may be changed from separate to community, and vice versa.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie E. Still, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of George Furtsch, deceased, wherein Mary W. Furtsch filed a petition to have set aside as a homestead certain realty mentioned in the inventory of the estate of deceased. From an order setting apart the realty as homestead, George J. Furtsch appeals.

Affirmed.

Daniel A. Knapp, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

David Berniker, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DESMOND, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from an order in probate by which the court set apart, for the benefit of the widow of George Furtsch, and as a homestead, certain real property mentioned in the inventory of decedent's estate.

Appellant claims that Mrs. Furtsch's petition did not contain facts sufficient within section 660 of the Probate Code to constitute a legally sufficient application for a declared homestead. He also claims inconsistencies in the findings of fact, and further, that the conclusions of law and resultant order are not sustained by the findings.

[1-6] The appeal comes before us upon the judgment roll alone. The rules governing such a situation were set forth quite recently in Chow v. City of Santa Barbara, 217 Cal. 673, 680, 22 P.2d 5, 7, where the following appears: "On such an appeal the power of the reviewing court is necessarily restricted. In such case 'the findings are conclusively presumed to be supported by the evidence; furthermore, it is also elementary that they are to receive, if possible, such a construction as will uphold rather than defeat the judgment thereon; they are to be liberally construed and, if possible, any ambiguity or inconsistency will be resolved in favor of sustaining the judgment.' * * * The judgment may be reversed only upon some fatal error appearing on the face of the judgment roll. * * * On an appeal on the judgment roll alone every presumption and intendment is resolved in favor of the regularity of the proceedings in the trial court. * * * A finding capable of two reasonable constructions must be interpreted according to the one that sustains the judgment, and a finding must be given such a construction, if a reasonable one, as will support the judgment." Authorities for the foregoing rules appear in the cited case.

With these limitations upon our powers of review, and considering the grounds of appeal set forth, we have examined the petition, the findings, the conclusions of law, and the order based thereon, with the result that in our opinion the order should stand affirmed.

The petition, with its annexed copy of a declared homestead, we find presented sufficient facts for the consideration of the trial court.

It appears from the findings in this case that the petitioner, Mary W. Furtsch, and the decedent, George Furtsch, were married in Los Angeles County on July 15, 1919; that they lived together continuously thereafter, as husband and wife, until the death of George Furtsch on June 13, 1938; that a declaration of homestead upon lot 71 of the Wiesendanger tract was recorded October 2, 1934, in the records of Los Angeles county, during the marriage of the parties and while they were residing upon the property. It was further found "that said real property was first viewed by the petitioner and the decedent shortly before June 27, 1919, and the parties at that time agreed that the said real property was desirable for community purposes, and that they would each contribute their separate funds toward the purchase of the property. That the grant deed to the property bears the date June 27, 1919. That said deed was recorded August 6, 1919. That the recorded instrument was mailed to the deceased from the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county on August 13, 1919. That the said real property was occupied as a homestead by the decedent and his family, the petitioner herein, at the time of his death."

As a conclusion of law the court found that the property "is community property of George Furtsch, deceased, and Mary W. Furtsch, the petitioner herein", and further, "That the Declaration of Homestead recorded in Book 12944, page 328, Official Records of Los Angeles County, is a valid Declaration of Homestead and covers all of the property. That an order to set apart the said real property as a homestead to Mary W. Furtsch, widow of decedent and petitioner herein, should be granted."

The order setting apart the homestead recited "that said real property was, and is, the community property of said George Furtsch, deceased, and Mary W. Furtsch, his widow, having been acquired by them at the time of their marriage; * * *. It is Therefore Ordered that said real property * * * be, and the same is hereby set apart to the exclusive use and benefit of the widow of deceased, to-wit: Mary W. Furtsch."

In a rather exhaustive discussion of phrases used in the different documents appearing in this record, appellant indicates that various inconsistencies exist in the findings and conclusions that are incapable of reconciliation by means of an order. Appellant does not specifically state that a fatal error appears on the face of the judgment roll, but apparently that is his contention. He argues that the language of the instruments quoted precluded a determination by the trial court that the real estate in question was community property, calling attention to the statement in paragraph III of the findings that shortly before June 27, 1919, the parties, being then unmarried, agreed that the real property was desirable for community purposes and that they would each contribute their separate funds toward the purchase of the property. He then notes that the order by which the homestead was set apart refers to the community property as "having been acquired by them at the time of their marriage," and contends that, since the petition itself recited that the real property "had been acquired by them at the time of their marriage", the language used in the order, "having been acquired by them at the time of their marriage," means in effect that the property had been acquired by the parties before marriage.

[7] In the light of the rules which we have noted, this seems a strained construction. The record shows that the marriage took place on July 15, 1919, which was eighteen days after the date of the deed, but which was also twenty-two days before it was recorded. Of course, the parties could not have been owners of community property before marriage, and there is no finding that they were, but there was a finding that they agreed at that time, namely, before marriage, that the property in question "was desirable for community purposes." The trial court having oral and documentary evidence before it was in position to determine whether the circumstances surrounding the purchase and holding of the real estate warranted the conclusion that it was community property.

[8, 9] It will be conceded that the phrase, "at the time of their marriage," is not as specific as "at the date of their marriage" would have been. Still, looking back twenty years, the period during which the parties had held the property, one could say, using a general term and without regard to an exact date, that it was in fact acquired "at the time of their marriage." This we conceive to be such liberal construction of findings as the rules enjoin upon us. We have never seen a copy of the deed, do not know its form or contents, nor do we know why it was withheld from record for more than a month, but we are bound to assume, under the rules governing our review, that sufficient evidence was adduced to satisfy the court that the agreement between Mr. and Mrs. Furtsch that the real estate was desirable for community purposes ripened into a completed transaction that made it community property. Husbands and wives had a definite legal right in 1919, as they have today, to contract with each other concerning their personal interests in property, and as is stated in Vieux v. Vieux, 80 Cal.App. 222, at page 226, 251 P. 640, at page 642, "The authorities are in accord that by agreement between husband and wife the status of any property owned by them may be changed from separate to community, and vice versa."

The order is affirmed.

We concur: YORK, P. J.; DORAN, J.

HAMMELL v. BRITTON et al.*

Civ. 11560.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 13, 1941.

Hearing Granted April 11, 1941.

1. Judgment ⇐460(4)

An amended complaint, which alleged that wife commenced an action in Colorado in 1928 to set aside Colorado divorce decree granted husband in 1891, which action was brought after husband's death and after husband had conveyed California property to plaintiff by deed of gift, that plaintiff was not made a party to the Colorado action, that thereafter wife introduced Colorado decree of 1928 setting aside divorce decree in California action to quiet title to land deeded by husband to plaintiff, and that subsequently plaintiff obtained a Colorado decree adjudging that decree of 1928 was obtained through fraud, contained sufficient allegations of extrinsic fraud of wife to authorize setting aside judgment in California quiet title action.

2. Divorce ⇐326

Where husband obtained a divorce decree in Colorado in 1891, and wife in 1928, which was after husband's death, obtained a decree setting aside divorce decree of 1891, and thereafter Colorado court in 1934 entered a decree adjudging that decree of 1928 was obtained through fraud and was of no effect, determination of the Colorado court as to marital status of parties was entitled to full faith and credit in California courts.

* Subsequent opinion 119 P.2d 333.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter J. Desmond, Judge.

Action by D. C. Hammell against John H. Britton and others to set aside a judgment in a former action to quiet title to certain real property in state. From a judgment for defendants, after sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint without leave to amend, the plaintiff appeals.

Reversed with directions to overrule the demurrer.

Thos. H. Hearn, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Leland J. Allen, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendants, which judgment was entered after the trial court had sustained a demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint without leave to amend.

This action was brought to set aside a judgment in a former action numbered 202490 in the files of the superior court in the county of Los Angeles. Said action, hereinafter called the former California action, was originally brought in 1926 by Sophie Britton against her former husband, John Henry Britton, and against the plaintiff herein, D. C. Hammell, to quiet title to certain real property in this state. During the pendency of said former California action, said John Henry Britton died in 1927 and said Sophie Britton died in 1932 and their representatives were duly substituted. The cause was first tried in 1928 and it was again tried in 1933 and each of said trials was followed by an appeal. See Britton v. Bryson, 216 Cal. 362, 14 P.2d 502; Britton v. Hammell, 4 Cal.2d 690, 52 P.2d 221. The facts which form the background of this litigation are fully set forth in the opinions on said appeals and need only be briefly summarized.

Sophie Britton and John Henry Britton were married in 1873 and were residing in Colorado when said John Henry Britton obtained a decree of divorce in that state in 1891. He remarried thereafter and it was not until 1926 that further litigation started between the parties by the filing of said former California action. Said Sophie Britton sought thereby to quiet title to certain real property which said John Henry Britton had conveyed in 1926 to D. C. Hammell, the plaintiff herein, by deed of gift. After the filing of that action, and after the death of John Henry Britton in 1927, said Sophie Britton commenced an action in Colorado in 1928 to set aside the Colorado divorce decree of 1891. The defendants in that action were the administrator of the estate of said John Henry Britton and the heirs of said John Henry Britton. Plaintiff herein was not a party to said Colorado action to set aside the divorce decree. In that action Sophie Britton obtained a decree in 1928 setting aside the Colorado divorce decree of 1891 and she introduced said decree on the first trial of the former California action in 1928. Said former California action was based upon the theory that she and said John Henry Britton were at all times husband and wife; that the real property was community property; and that the conveyance thereof by way of gift to D. C. Hammell in 1926 was invalid as she had not consented thereto. Judgment went against her on the first trial of the former California action but said judgment was reversed on appeal. Britton v. Bryson, 216 Cal. 362, 14 P.2d 502. After her death in 1932, the former California action was again tried in 1933 and a judgment was entered in favor of her administrator, which judgment was affirmed on appeal. Britton v. Hammell, 4 Cal.2d 690, 52 P.2d 221. It is this last mentioned judgment which plaintiff, D. C. Hammell, now seeks to set aside.

In addition to the facts above set forth, plaintiff D. C. Hammell alleged in his amended complaint that he had no knowledge or notice of said 1928 decree setting aside the divorce decree or of the pendency of the action in which said decree was entered until said decree was introduced at the first trial of the former California action; that thereafter he commenced an action in Colorado against the administrator of the estate of Sophie Britton and the administrator of the estate of John Henry Britton and certain other defendants to set aside the Colorado decree of 1928 upon the ground that said decree had been obtained by the fraud and collusion of said Sophie Britton and the other parties to the action in which said decree had been obtained; that on July 6, 1934, a decree was entered in plaintiff's Colorado action whereby it was adjudged that the Colorado decree of 1928 setting aside the divorce decree was obtained through the fraud and collusion of the said Sophie Britton and other parties and that said Colorado decree of 1928 was of no force and effect and that the Colorado divorce decree of 1891 in favor of John Henry Britton was a valid and binding decree from and after the day of its entry; that an appeal was taken from said Colorado decree in plaintiff's favor and that said decree was thereafter affirmed. Plaintiff therefore prayed that the judgment in the former California action, which was based upon the Colorado decree of 1928, be set aside.

Plaintiff contends that his amended complaint stated a cause of action and that the trial court erred in sustaining the demurrer thereto and in entering judgment in favor of defendants. In our opinion, this contention must be sustained. To hold otherwise would mean that the decree in the former California action quieting the title of Sophie Britton to the real property standing in the name of plaintiff, D. C. Hammell, would be permitted to stand despite the fact that it was based upon the 1928 decree of the Colorado court setting aside the Colorado divorce decree of 1891, which decree of 1928 has in turn been set aside in the later Colorado action in which it was adjudged that the 1928 decree of the Colorado court was obtained by fraud and collusion of said Sophie Britton and others and that said Sophie Britton was not the wife of said John Henry Britton at any time after the entry of the Colorado divorce decree of 1891. This would be a strange and unusual result at which to arrive in this prolonged litigation.

[1] Defendants take the position that the allegations of the amended complaint show only intrinsic fraud rather than extrinsic fraud on the part of said Sophie Britton. We do not believe this position to be tenable. While our attention has not been directed to any case directly in point, the authorities have frequently discussed the nature of the fraud which constitutes extrinsic fraud justifying the setting aside of a judgment in a former action. Perhaps the cases most frequently cited are Flood v. Templeton, 152 Cal. 148, 92 P. 78, 13 L.R.A.,N.S., 579; Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 25 P. 970, 27 P. 537, 13 L.R.A. 336, 25 Am.St. Rep. 159, and United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U.S. 61, 25 L.Ed. 93. See, also, 15 Cal.Juris. 14, § 123; 23 Cal.Law Rev. 79; 9 Cal.Law Rev. 156 and cases cited. Some of the acts which constitute extrinsic fraud are set forth in Pico v. Cohn, supra, but "any attempted recital of the means or manner in which extrinsic fraud may be perpetrated is necessarily incomplete and not intended as a statement of all the devices which may be employed". 15 Cal. Juris. 16; see, also, Milekovich v. Quinn, 40 Cal.App. 537, 547, 181 P. 256. Under the general principles set forth in said authorities, we are of the view that the allegations of the amended complaint were sufficient to show extrinsic fraud on the part of said Sophie Britton.

[2] The facts here were quite different from the facts in the ordinary case wherein it is sought to set aside a judgment in a former action. Related litigation was being conducted in the courts of two jurisdictions. The litigation in Colorado involved the marital status of said Sophie Britton and said John Henry Britton and the litigation in California involved the rights of said parties and plaintiff D. C. Hammell in the real property situated in California. The determination of the Colorado courts, however, relating to the marital status of said Sophie Britton and John Henry Britton was entitled to full faith and credit in the California courts (Britton v. Bryson, 216 Cal. 362, 14 P.2d 502), and under the circumstances, such determination would be the decisive factor in the California litigation. With these considerations in mind, we may consider the conduct of said Sophie Britton as shown by the allegations in the amended complaint. After filing the California action and after the death of said John Henry Britton during its pendency but prior to the trial thereof, said Sophie Britton, without notice to and without the knowledge of said plaintiff D. C. Hammell, commenced a fraudulent and collusive action in Colorado to set aside the Colorado divorce decree of 1891 and to have it determined that she and John Henry Britton were husband and wife at all times including the time when the property was acquired and the time when the deed of gift was delivered to plaintiff D. C. Hammell by said John Henry Britton in 1926. She succeeded in obtaining such a decree through such fraud and collusion and she introduced said decree in the former California action as the basis for her judgment therein. Plaintiff learned of such decree for the first time when it was so introduced upon the trial of the former California action and, under the circumstances, he had no real opportunity to defend against it. It therefore appears from the allegations of the amended complaint that the fraud of said Sophie Britton in obtaining the Colorado decree of 1928 permeated the entire litigation and that such fraud prevented any real contest or adversary trial in either the Colorado trial of 1928 or the trial of the former California action. In so far as said former California action is concerned, the alleged fraud was in our opinion extrinsic fraud which would warrant the setting aside of the judgment therein.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 26

CRUDO v. GUIDA.

Civ. 11390.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 14, 1941.

1. Partnership ⇐120

In action between former partners for money had and received, based on theory that final settlement had been had, under which plaintiff was entitled to half of broker's commission owing to the partnership, and that commission had been paid to defendant but defendant had failed to turn over plaintiff's share to plaintiff, complaint in form of common count need not allege that there had been an accounting or settlement of the partnership affairs.

2. Partnership ⇐120

Where complaint alleges facts showing formation of a partnership and it appears that subject-matter of the action involves a partnership transaction, accounting and settlement of partnership affairs must be alleged.

3. Partnership ⇐120

In action between former partners for money had and received, based on theory that final settlement had been had, defendant claiming that debt sued upon was part of an unsettled partnership transaction may raise the issue by way of special defense or cross-complaint, or both.

4. Appeal and error ⇐882(3)

Where absence of accounting as set forth in cross-complaint was not denied by answer thereto, but both sides and the court treated the issue as an open one, defendant could not urge for the first time on appeal that absence of accounting was admitted by the pleadings.

5. Partnership ⇐121

Evidence held to authorize recovery from former partner of share in commission owing to the partnership, and paid to former partner, in action for money had and received, on theory that final settlement of partnership was made under which plaintiff was entitled to share in such commission.

6. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)

The finding of trial court on conflicting evidence is binding on appeal.

7. Appeal and error ⇐1051(3)

Hearsay testimony pertaining only to a matter admitted by defendant was not prejudicial to defendant.

8. Appeal and error ⇐1058(2)

Sustaining objection to a question propounded to defendant, concerning his "understanding" of scope of agreement, was not harmful to defendant where defendant had already testified quite fully with reference thereto.

9. Costs ⇐19

Where cause brought in justice's court was properly certified to superior court for trial upon filing of cross-complaint and answer thereto, superior court did not err in allowing plaintiff, who prevailed, all court costs incurred by him in prosecution of the action, including costs in justice's court.

Appeal from Superior Court, of San Mateo County; A. R. Cotton, Judge.

Action by Joseph Crudo against Vincent Guida, for money had and received, wherein defendant filed cross-complaint for accounting between partners. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Ephraim Adams, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frank V. Kington, of Redwood City, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment for plaintiff based on an indebtedness growing out of the dissolution of a partnership. The principal questions involved relate to matters of pleading and proof.

The action was filed in the justice's court, the complaint being in the form of a common count, alleging that defendant became indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $200 for money had and received from one Harry Friend, for plaintiff's use and benefit. Answering, defendant denied the allegations of the complaint, and by way of special defense and cross-complaint alleged that plaintiff and defendant were partners in the real estate business in Redwood City; that there had been a dissolution of the partnership, but no accounting or settlement between the partners; that the claim sued upon by plaintiff arose out of partnership business, and that in fact plaintiff was indebted to defendant in a sum exceeding that claimed by plaintiff; wherefore defendant prayed "that an accounting be had between the parties settling their respective rights and obligations; [and] that until such accounting is had this action be dismissed. * * *" Plaintiff's answer to the cross-complaint consisted merely of a denial that he was indebted to defendant in any sum. Upon the filing of said answer the cause was certified to and subsequently tried in the superior court. Judgment was entered in plaintiff's favor for the sum for which he sued, and denying the relief prayed for in the cross-complaint. The basic findings were: That the partnership was dissolved by the parties on June 22, 1938; that "as a part of the transaction dissolving said partnership, said defendant and cross-complainant sold his rights in said business together with the furniture and good will thereof, excepting therefrom one desk which became the sole property of said defendant; and said parties then and there divided and distributed between them the remaining assets of said business excepting the claim or right to real estate broker's commission of Four Hundred ($400.00) owing and to be paid by the Friend Realty Company, Incorporated, to said partnership; that upon said dissolution and division of assets, it was agreed between said parties that when paid by said Friend Realty Company, Incorporated, said sum of Four Hundred ($400.00) Dollars should be divided between said parties hereto; that all the affairs of said partnership have been and were on said June 22, 1938, fully accounted for and settled, except as hereinabove found respecting said sum of Four Hundred ($400.00) dollars."

[1-3] Defendant's first contention is that the complaint failed to state a cause of action in that it contained no allegation that there had been an accounting or settlement of the partnership affairs. There is no merit in the contention. Where, as in the case of Dukes v. Kellogg, 127 Cal. 563, 60 P. 44, cited by defendant, the complaint alleges facts showing the formation of a partnership and it appears that the subject-matter of the action involves a partnership transaction, it is then essential to allege also that there has been an accounting and settlement of the partnership affairs. But obviously that rule has no application to a case such as this, where the action is based on the theory that a final settlement has been had and the complaint is in the form of a common count for money had and received. If under such circumstances a defendant claims that the debt sued upon is part of unsettled partnership transactions he may, as was done here, raise the issue by way of special defense or cross-complaint, or both.

[4] The second point made by defendant, as stated by him, is "that the absence of an accounting as set forth in the cross-complaint was admitted by the pleadings in that the same was not denied by the answer thereto". Doubtless that is true, but defendant fails to point out wherein he was prejudiced by the failure so to deny. Quite to the contrary, the record shows that when the cause came on for trial before the superior court the issue of whether or not there had been an accounting was treated by both sides and the court as an open one; evidence was introduced by the respective parties on that issue, and findings were made thereon. Under such circumstances defendant is not in a position to complain for the first time on appeal.

[5] Defendant's next contention is that the evidence does not support the findings. In this connection it may be stated that neither party explained in detail the circumstances attending the dissolution and the alleged accounting and settlement, so that the evidence in this regard is somewhat vague. Moreover, it appears contrary to the implication conveyed by a portion of the findings, that the disputed $400 commission was actually paid to defendant prior to and not after the dissolution, and that plaintiff was aware of such fact at the time of the sale of defendant's interest in the business to plaintiff. Considering the evidence as a whole, however, and in the light most favorable to the trial court's decision, it is our opinion that it is legally sufficient to sustain the controlling finding that on June 22, 1938, an accounting and settlement was had between the partners of all the partnership affairs except as to the commission on the sale of the Friend property. Among the facts and circumstances supporting this view are the following: Defendant, having become dissatisfied with the manner in which the business was being operated, told plaintiff he was "going to quit"; and on June 22, 1938, the parties met for the purpose of dissolving the partnership. After some discussion, they computed the amount of money each had drawn, and divided the assets, including some land and outstanding notes; thereupon plaintiff paid defendant $100, in acknowledgment of which defendant executed and delivered the following so-called bill of sale: "June 22, 1938. I, the undersigned, Vincent Guida of the city of San Mateo, County of San Mateo, State of California, do hereby sell, deliver, and transfer to Joseph Crudo of San Carlos, San Mateo County, State of California, all my interest in that certain real estate office known as 751 El Camino Real, Redwood City, California together with all the fixtures (except one desk), maps and good will for the consideration of one hundred dollars ($100.00). Vincent Guida." However, the evidence affirmatively shows that at the time of the signing of said instrument, the matter of the commission on the sale of the Friend property was brought up and discussed, and at that time defendant admitted to plaintiff that he had received the commission, but stated that he did not then "have the money, that he would pay it later"; and that subsequent to the dissolution and settlement defendant requested plaintiff to accept a lot in payment of his half of the Friend commission, which plaintiff refused to do. And plaintiff testified that other than the matter of said commission "all * * * transactions were closed up by reason of this bill of sale. * * *"

Testifying in his own behalf defendant admitted having received said commission; and he did not deny having asked plaintiff to accept a lot in payment of plaintiff's half; but he argues that it is inconceivable that plaintiff would pay him $100, knowing at the time that he then owed plaintiff $200 on the Friend commission. While there would seem to be much force in this argument, the record discloses that testimony was given to that effect; and since the trial court, as the exclusive judge of the weight of the testimony and the credibility of the witnesses, evidently accepted the testimony as true, its conclusion is controlling.

[6] In further support of his claim that there was no accounting or settlement, defendant testified that there was an outstanding judgment for $200 in favor of the partners, about which nothing had been said at the time of the dissolution. But this testimony obviously conflicted with that given by plaintiff to the effect that other than the matter of said commission all partnership transactions were closed by virtue of the execution and delivery of the bill of sale; and the trial court in substance so found; therefore, in view of such conflict, the finding on that issue is binding on appeal.

[7-9] As his fourth point, defendant assigns as error several rulings made by the trial court on the admissibility of testimony, all but one of which relate to matters of hearsay. However, it appears that the hearsay testimony pertained only to the question of whether defendant actually received said commission, and since he admitted having received it, it cannot be said that the hearsay testimony operated to his prejudice. The remaining assignment involves a ruling sustaining plaintiff's objection to a question propounded to defendant as to his "understanding" of the scope of the partnership agreement. The record shows, however, that the ruling was not harmful because defendant had already testified quite fully with reference thereto. Nor is there any merit in defendant's final contention that the trial court erred in allowing plaintiff the costs incurred by him in the justice's court. Upon the filing of the cross complaint and the answer thereto the cause was properly certified to the superior court for trial; therefore in giving judgment for plaintiff the court did not exceed its authority in allowing plaintiff all court costs incurred by him in the prosecution of the action.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PETERS, P. J.; WARD, J.

POWERS FARMS, Inc., v. CONSOLIDATED IRR. DIST.

Civ. 2568.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Jan. 30, 1941.

Hearing Granted March 31, 1941.

1. Eminent domain ⇐266

An irrigation district may be sued under constitutional provision against taking or damaging property without just compensation, whether right to sue is predicated on absence or presence of negligence. Const. art. 1, § 14.

2. Eminent domain ⇐277

The filing of claim within period fixed under irrigation district liability law was a prerequisite to the maintenance of action against irrigation district for damages from seepage, though such action was grounded on constitutional provision against taking or damaging of private property for public use rather than on statute. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3886*l*, § 2; Const. art. 1, § 14.

3. Action ⇐34

Where statute or Constitution creates a right of action but is silent as to the remedy, party entitled to the right may resort to any common-law action which will give him adequate redress.

4. Constitutional law ⇐29

Even though a constitutional provision is self-executing, Legislature may enact legislation to facilitate its operation and provide convenient remedies for protection of the right established, for determination thereof and for regulation of claims thereto.

5. Constitutional law ⇐26

Legislation to facilitate operation of constitutional provision and provide remedies for protection and enforcement of the right established must be in furtherance of the purposes of the constitutional provision, and if reasonable, is enforceable.

6. Eminent domain ⇐277

Damage to crops and lands caused by seepage from irrigation canal was the result of defective condition of property owned or operated and under control of the irrigation district, so as to require filing claim within statutory period as prerequisite to maintenance of action for such damages. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3886*l*, § 2; Const. art. 1, § 14.

7. Municipal corporations ⇐723½, 741(3)

The requirement that claim must be filed with clerk of legislative body before a person may maintain an action for damages against political subdivision of the state is valid and may not be waived by officials of the legislative body. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3886*l*, § 2.

8. Statutes ⇐211

The section heading of a statute as it appears in compilation is not to be held part of the statute or as controlling in its interpretation when it is not part of the statute as adopted by the Legislature, but merely heading preferred by the editor. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3886*l*, § 2.

9. Statutes ⇐109

The main object of constitutional provision requiring subject of act to be expressed in title is to prevent Legislature as well as public from being deceived and injured by false, misleading and deceitful titles whereby legislation relating to one subject might be obtained under title of another. Const. art. 4, § 24.

10. Statutes ⇐105(1)

The constitutional provision with reference to subjects and titles of legislative acts should be liberally construed to effectuate its object. Const. art. 4, § 24.

11. Statutes ⇐105(1)

The constitutional provision governing subjects and titles of statutes should be so applied as to permit Legislature to include in an act all matters germane to main purpose of the enactment, and title is only required to contain a reasonably intelligent reference to the subject to which the legislation is addressed. Const. art. 4, § 24.

12. Statutes ⇐123(6)

The title of "An act relating to the liability of irrigation districts, their officers and employees" was sufficiently comprehensive to embrace all matters stated in the act, including requirement that claim against irrigation district be filed within specified time, and act was not invalid as having heterogeneous and misleading title. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3886*l*; Const. art. 4, § 24.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; B. C. Hawkins, Judge.

Action by Powers Farms, Inc., against the Consolidated Irrigation District, for damages to realty from seepage. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Hearing granted; PETERS, Justice pro tem., took no part in the consideration or decision of this matter.

Harris, Willey & Harris, Ronald Harris, and Everett G. Harris, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Christopher M. Bradley and Lucius Powers, Jr., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

The respondent Powers Farms, Inc., a California corporation, as the owner of 160 acres of improved land, planted principally to mature orchard and vineyard, brought this action for damages against the defendant and appellant Consolidated Irrigation District, a public corporation, relying upon the constitutional guarantee that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been made. Constitution of California, Art. 1, Sec. 14. After trial without a jury a judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $14,000. From this judgment defendant has perfected this appeal.

The complaint, filed Nov. 30, 1938, alleges generally that during the years 1937 and 1938, appellant district permitted large and excessive quantities of water to seep or escape from the Fowler Switch Canal, owned and operated by the district in and onto the lands of the respondent, whereby such excessive seepage waters caused respondent's orchards, vineyards, growing crops and lands to be severely damaged and destroyed.

On Feb. 27, 1940, the court found generally that the Fowler Switch Canal, running in a general southwesterly direction, passes in its course approximately one-fourth of a mile northerly of respondent's lands, and at an elevation approximately 14 feet higher than the northerly boundary of respondent's lands; that the channel of the Fowler Switch Canal extends in and through an aquifer, consisting of porous material, and the lands south of the Fowler Switch Canal, including the lands of the respondent, slopes southerly and southwesterly from the canal; that water freely escapes from the canal during all times when water is carried in the canal and, more particularly, when water flows at high stages and for extended periods of time in the canal; that as a proximate result of such flow of water under these circumstances there was, in 1937 and 1938, a great and destructive seepage from the canal into and through the soil contiguous to the canal and into and through the lands of the respondent, and that the appellant at all times well knew that in the years 1937 and 1938 the flow of water in that canal was causing great and destructive rises of surface water on the lands of respondent; that early in the year 1937, the respondent advised and warned appellant in writing that large quantities of seepage waters were escaping from its canal and causing damage to respondent's lands and crops; that the lands of respondent, beginning about April 1, 1937, began to be damaged and continued to be damaged by reason of the water flowing in the canal and escaping therefrom and through the aquifer underlying the canal and underlying respondent's lands during the years 1937 and 1938, which caused the lands of respondent to become water-logged and flooded and permanently damaged and rendered impossible of cultivation, so that to a large extent the trees and vines on the lands were severely damaged and a greater part killed and destroyed; that this caused the respondent to suffer damage in the years 1937 and 1938 in the sum of $14,000 in addition to and exclusive of any damage to the land and improvements thereon occurring in prior years and particularly, occurring in the year 1932; that the damage suffered by respondent and proximately caused by the appellant was much greater in 1937 and 1938 than theretofore, and the ground was more completely saturated and new and greater areas were affected; that subsequent to the year 1932 there occurred substantial changes in the Fowler Switch Canal adjacent to the lands of respondent, which increased the seepage therefrom; that among other changes was the construction of a check drop in the canal immediately north of the respondent's property in the winter of 1932 and 1933, which increased the hydraulic pressure of the water in the canal above the check drop; also that such change resulted in increased seepage in the sides of the canal for a considerable distance; that there was a gradual increased flow of water in the canal in the years 1937 and 1938; that the water from the Fowler Switch Canal was the proximate cause of the damage caused by the respondent in the years 1937 and 1938; that it is not true that the cause of action of respondent is barred by the provisions of section 343 or section 338, subdivisions 1 and 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that no verified claim for damages was made nor required to be made by the respondent as provided by the General Laws of California, Act 3886*l*, sec. 2, Deering's Gen.Laws 1937, vol. 1, p. 1932, Stats.1935, p. 2250; that said statute has no application in this case; that appellant, by its use and operation of the canal, has not acquired any prescriptive right as against the respondent and has not acquired, nor is appellant entitled to enjoy, any easement against the rights of the respondent; that said canal has not been maintained as originally constructed but has been materially altered and changed by natural causes and by the appellant.

The evidence clearly establishes that after respondent sustained the damage in 1932, appellant immediately thereafter made many changes in the Fowler Switch Canal and the aquifer underlying the adjacent land which greatly increased the seepage. As was pointed out by the trial court, among the probable causes of the additional seepage may be listed the following: (1) Increased hydrostatic pressure above the drop; (2) further erosion of the original hardpan bottom of the canal; (3) possible opening of channels in the aquifer itself suggested by testimony of water pouring into test wells in streams; (4) possible widening of cracks and fissures in the roofing of the aquifer or caving in thereof making it easier for the confined water to reach the surface; (5) a probable raising of the water table in the aquifer itself; and (6) the greatly increased flow of water in the Fowler Switch Canal in 1937 and 1938, as compared to the flow of water subsequent to 1932. The evidence also indicates that the canal was an earthen ditch approximately 60 feet wide and 10 feet deep with a carrying capacity of about 1,200 second feet of water at high flow stages. There was evidence that the bed of the canal below the check drop and north of respondent's property was disturbed by a drag line. One witness called by appellant, who was characterized by it as an authority on ground water and geology and who was engaged by it to investigate the ground water and seepage conditions on respondent's ranch and to make recommendations in respect thereto, discovered, quoting him, "a serious seepage condition." This witness testified that he advised the appellant to line the Fowler Switch Canal to cure the serious seepage condition and that the appellant took his advice and thereafter lined the canal, and that this work was done subsequent to the year 1938. He also testified that in his professional opinion when the lining of the canal was completed that it would cure the serious seepage condition and would prevent any further seepage from damaging respondent's land. From an examination of the record it becomes apparent that the injury to respondent's land for which recovery of damages was sought must have been as a result of a defective condition of the property owned by the irrigation district and was an injury which resulted from the performance of certain work on the canal which caused an extraordinary seepage of water from the canal onto respondent's land.

Appellant first challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings that the changes made in the canal materially increased the seepage condition on respondent's land and that the seepage from the canal north of respondent's land caused the damage of which complaint is made; secondly, that the action was barred by the statute of limitations; and thirdly, that the court had no jurisdiction to hear the action, because no verified claim for damages was filed with the district under Act 3886*l*, section 2, Deering's General Laws 1937, vol. 1, p. 1932, Stats.1935, p. 2250, which reads in part: "Whenever it is claimed that any person or property has been injured or damaged as a result of any dangerous or defective condition of any property owned or operated and under the control of any irrigation district or its officers or employees and/or the negligence or carelessness of any officer or employee of an irrigation district, a verified claim for damages shall be presented in writing * * * within ninety days after such accident or injury has occurred. * * * The foregoing shall be a condition precedent to the filing or maintaining of any action for said injury or damages."

If the third contention is tenable, i. e. that a verified claim should have been presented, then it becomes unnecessary to discuss the remaining points. It will be noted, as pointed out by appellant, that this provision requiring the claim to be filed is quite similar to the provision requiring the filing of a written claim for damages against a county or municipal corporation based on a claim for damages resulting from a dangerous or defective condition of any public street, property, etc., as set forth in section 1, Act 5149, Deering's General Laws 1937, vol. 2, p. 2204, Stats.1931, p. 2475 (hereinafter referred to as Act 5149), and the provision requiring the filing of a written claim for damages based on the negligence of a public officer as set forth in section 1, Act 5150, Deering's General Laws 1937, vol. 2, p. 2205, Stats.1931, p. 2476, as amended (hereinafter referred to as Act 5150).

Appellant specifically relies upon Young v. County of Ventura, 39 Cal.App.2d 732, 104 P.2d 102 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court), which was an action for damages caused by flood waters which were diverted by a county's erection and maintenance of a storm ditch. It was there held that under the act relating to the liability of cities, counties and school districts for damages resulting from a dangerous or defective condition of public streets, works or property, a verified claim must be presented within 90 days after the accident occurred and that compliance with the ninety-day provision was mandatory. It was also held that the right to sue a county is conferred by statute and the procedure set forth in the statute giving claimants a right to sue must be followed and that where the plaintiff's cause of action rests on the provisions of such statutory act relating to the liability of counties for such injuries a verified claim must be filed within ninety days after the injury.

Respondent points out that the right to sue the appellant herein, Consolidated Irrigation District, is not predicated upon any statutory right but is a right directly given by virtue of the constitutional provision above referred to; that there is no statutory right given to respondent to sue the district as is conferred by the provisions of Act 5619, section 2, Deering's General Laws 1937, Stats.1923, p. 675, as against the counties or municipalities; that it is only where a cause of action has arisen under the irrigation district liability law, supra, that a verified claim for damages must be presented and filed within ninety days after "such accident or injury has occurred."

[1] The right to sue an irrigation district under the constitutional provision has been often declared whether such right is predicated on the absence or presence of negligence. Hume v. Fresno Irrigation District, 21 Cal.App.2d 348, 354, 69 P.2d 483; Tormey v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irr. Dist., 53 Cal.App. 559, 567, 203 P. 814; Boehmer v. Big Rock Irr. Dist., 117 Cal. 19, 48 P. 908.

[2] The only question here presented resolves itself into this: If the acts alleged resulted in the "taking or damaging of private property for public use" in violation of the constitutional provision, would we be compelled to hold that the requirement of the filing of a claim within the period fixed by the legislature under the irrigation district liability law, supra, was a prerequisite to the maintenance of this action by respondents?

In Young v. County of Ventura, supra [39 Cal.App.2d 732, 104 P.2d 105], the plaintiffs, as they did here, argued that a claim was not a prerequisite to the filing of an action where it was claimed that the property taken or damaged was so taken or damaged in violation of section 14 of Article 1 of the Constitution of California. In disposing of this argument the court said: "Even if it be assumed that defendant's action resulted in the 'taking or damaging of private property for public use' in violation of the constitutional provision, we would still be compelled to hold that the requirement of the filing of the claim within the period fixed by the legislature would be prerequisite to the maintenance of an action by plaintiffs. The constitution declares the right but does not provide the procedure by which the right may be enforced, and the legislature acted within its province in establishing the procedure necessary for the enforcement of the right. 'When a state Constitution such as ours provides neither the mode for the taking or for the payment of private property, the mode of procedure may be provided by either statutory or charter provisions.' Crescent Wharf, etc., Co. v. City of Los Angeles, supra (207 Cal. 430, 278 P. 1028, 1030). By failing to comply with the procedure established by the legislature plaintiffs are deemed to have waived their right to enforce payment." (Citing cases.)

[3-6] It is a well-settled rule of law in this state that where a statute or the constitution creates a right of action but is silent as to the remedy, the party entitled to the right may resort to any common-law action which will give him adequate redress (Rose v. State of California, Cal. Sup., 105 P.2d 302), and even though a constitutional provision is self-executing, the legislature may, and in many instances must, enact legislation to facilitate its operation and provide convenient remedies for the protection of the right established, and for the determination thereof and the regulation of claims thereto. Such legislation must be in furtherance of the purposes of the constitutional provisions, and if reasonable, it is enforceable. Chesney v. Bryam, 15 Cal.2d 460, 101 P.2d 1106. The purpose of the law requiring the early filing of a claim is fully discussed in Young v. County of Ventura, supra, 39 Cal.App.2d page 737, 104 P.2d 102, and such requirement was held to be a reasonable provision. It would be impossible, under the evidence and the findings of the court in the instant action, to hold that the damage complained of was not the result of a defective condition of property owned or operated and under the control of the irrigation district. Young v. County of Ventura, supra; Kahrs v. County of Los Angeles, 28 Cal.App.2d 46, 82 P.2d 29; Crescent Wharf, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles, 207 Cal. 430, 278 P. 1028; Bancroft v. City of San Diego, 120 Cal. 432, 52 P. 712; Norton v. City of Pomona, 5 Cal.2d 54, 53 P.2d 952; Cooper v. County of Butte, 17 Cal.App.2d 43, 61 P.2d 516; Thompson v. County of Los Angeles, 140 Cal.App. 73, 35 P.2d 185. Therefore, if it was a damage to respondent's property as a result of a defective condition of property owned or operated and under the control of the irrigation district or its officers or employees, section 2 of the irrigation district liability law, supra, is applicable.

In view of the cited cases and their application to the law and facts here presented, we are unable to justify the finding that section 2 of said act requiring the filing of a claim within ninety days "after such * * * injury occurred" was not a necessary prerequisite to the filing or maintaining of any action for said injury or damages.

[7] The requirement that a claim must be filed with the clerk of a legislative body before a person may maintain an action for damages against a political subdivision of the state of California has been upheld by a number of decisions of California reviewing courts. Western Salt Co. v. City of San Diego, 181 Cal. 696, 186 P. 345; Myers v. Hopland U. E. School Dist., 6 Cal.App.2d 590, 44 P.2d 654; Thompson v. County of Los Angeles, supra. This statutory requirement may not be waived by the officials of the legislative body. Chapman v. City of Fullerton, 90 Cal.App. 463, 265 P. 1035.

Respondent contends in support of trial court's adjudication that the filing of a claim was not necessary, that although the act is entitled "An act relating to the liability of irrigation districts, their officers and employees," section 2 thereof applied only to "an action for a tort" committed by an employee or officer whom it is sought to hold liable for the accident and that under section 4 thereof there is an express limitation on the applicability of the particular act and that that is the whole scope of the statute, and that it is only intended to apply to procedural provisions of the statute upon the subject matter with which it deals, citing Jackson v. City of Santa Monica, 13 Cal.App.2d 376, 57 P.2d 226, and Raynor v. City of Arcata, 11 Cal.2d 113, 77 P.2d 1054. We have examined the cited cases. The Jackson case was an action based on the negligence of an employee and against the city alone for damages sustained by a passenger while riding in a bus. It was there held that no claim was required to be filed by the plaintiff because act No. 5150, supra, relates only to claims for negligence of officers, and that act No. 5149, supra, relates to filing claims of liability arising out of injuries to persons or property resulting from the dangerous or defective conditions of streets, public property and buildings. The damage being the result of an automobile accident where the city vehicle was not driven by an officer, but an employee, it was held that, under the law as it then existed, no claim was required to be filed under either section. This case does not support respondent's contention.

The Raynor case was an action against the city for damages resulting from a collision between plaintiff's automobile and an automobile being driven by a fire chief in response to a fire call. The right of action against the city for negligence of the driver of its automobile was given by section 1714½ of the Civil Code, now secs. 400 and 401 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, pp. 152, 153. The plaintiff was not required to file a claim under the facts related because the law at that time did not require such action. Act 5149, supra, treated with claims for damages resulting from the defective or dangerous condition of public streets, etc. It was therefore held not applicable. Act 5150, supra, treated of the claims based on the negligence of public officers. It was there held that act 5150 did not relate to the liability of the city or other governmental agency.

The reasoning applied in the two cited cases upon which respondent relies cannot be held applicable to the construction of the irrigation liability act here discussed. We therefore must conclude that the property of respondent was damaged as a result of a defective condition of property owned or operated and under the control of the Consolidated Irrigation District, and that before any action for damages could be maintained against the district a claim for such damages should have been presented in writing as required by section 2, Act 3886*l*, Deering's General Laws 1937, p. 1932.

[8, 9] Respondent further contends that if the act is applicable to the facts in the instant case it is unconstitutional because the title omitted to relate that certain procedural requirements are contained in the body of the act, citing Jackman v. Patterson, 1 Cal.Dec. 540, 108 P.2d 682; Jackson v. City of Santa Monica, supra; Brunson v. City of Santa Monica, 27 Cal.App. 89, 148 P. 950. The original act (Stats.1935, chap. 833, p. 2250) is entitled "An act relating to the liability of irrigation districts, their officers and employees." The heading of section 1 of the act, "Liability of directors," as it appears in Deering's General Laws, is not to be held part of the statute or as controlling in its interpretation when it is not part of the statute as adopted by the legislature, but merely the headings preferred by the editor thereof. It is no part of the act as enacted and does not control its interpretation. Kahrs v. County of Los Angeles, supra.

The Constitution, Art. IV, sec. 24, provides that "Every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title." The main object of the constitutional provision is to prevent the legislature as well as the public from being deceived and injured by false, misleading and deceitful titles whereby legislation relating to one subject might be obtained under the title of another. Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226, 24 P. 383.

[10-12] It is well settled that the constitutional provision with reference to the subjects and titles of legislative acts shall be liberally construed with the view to effectuating its object. Reclamation District v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 672, 154 P. 845; In re Maginnis, 162 Cal. 200, 121 P. 723. Accordingly, the provision should be so applied as to permit the legislature to include in an act all matters which are germane to the main purpose of the enactment, and so far as the title is concerned, all that is required is that it shall contain a reasonably intelligent reference to the subject to which the legislation in the act is addressed. Buelke v. Levenstadt, 190 Cal. 684, 214 P. 42; In re Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 221 P. 628. It is apparent from the title of the act involved that the act or some of its provisions relates "to the liability of irrigation districts" as well as to the liability of officers and employees thereof.

Under the rules above mentioned it cannot be held that there is a substantial variance between the title and the subject expressed in the body of the act or that the title is of a heterogeneous character and would mislead the public or the members of the legislature as to the subjects embraced in the act. Park v. Pacific Fire Extinguisher Co., 37 Cal.App. 112, 173 P. 615. We therefore conclude that the title is sufficiently comprehensive to embrace all matters stated in the act. Regardless of the merit or lack of merit of the other contentions, for the reasons expressed, the judgment must be reversed.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

42 Cal.App.2d 773

PARIGIAN et al. v. CITIZENS NAT. TRUST & SAVINGS BANK OF LOS ANGELES et al. (LYON, Intervener).

Civ. 12266.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 7, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1071(2)

An alleged erroneous holding by trial court that contracts for subleases were self-executing and that default occurred automatically was not material in action by sublessees to recover amounts paid under the contracts, where sublessors took no action relative to the alleged default and did not ask to terminate the contracts, but offered at trial to reinstate the contracts if sublessees would make delinquent payments due thereon.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇐184(2)

Where contracts for subleases, conforming to sublessor's contract with owner, recited that sublessees should make specified payments "solely as a bonus for and in consideration of" execution and delivery of lease which should not constitute any part of the rentals, and might be retained as liquidated damages for sublessees' breach of contract, and that under certain conditions sublessor should be relieved of liability upon repayment of the bonus or consideration, sums thus paid by sublessees constituted "bonus" or "consideration" for execution of subleases, and their payment amounted to direct "payment" rather than deposit of "security", and hence sublessees could not recover such sums when sublessees' conduct terminated the agreement without wrongful act of sublessor.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Bonus", "Consideration", "Payment", and "Security".

3. Landlord and tenant ⇐184(2)

Where money was paid as bonus or consideration for execution of subleases, and hence belonged to sublessor and could be retained by sublessor upon sublessees' breach of contract, provision in contracts for subleases that such moneys should be forfeited as liquidated damages upon breach was immaterial, and hence its invalidity under statute did not enable sublessees to recover such money after sublessees defaulted. Civ.Code, § 1670.

4. Landlord and tenant ⇐80(4)

Where sublessor had not abandoned contracts for subleases or defaulted therein, sublessees could not elect to consider the contracts at an end and recover what they had paid thereunder.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇐80(4)

Under contracts for subleases providing for payment of specified sums as bonus or consideration for execution of subleases, payment of final installment amounts due under the contracts, at time and in manner agreed upon, was a "condition precedent" to sublessees' right to demand subleases.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Condition Precedent".

6. Trusts ⇐348

Where owner of building contracted to permit another to make subleases, and sublessor, with knowledge of sublessees, assigned contracts for subleases to bank as trustee to insure performance of the contract with owner, bank was not bound by any negotiations or agreements between sublessees and sublessor for rescission or waiver of sublessees' forfeiture.

7. Evidence ⇐441(4)

In action by sublessees to recover amounts paid under contracts for subleases, evidence of conversations and promises allegedly made to sublessees by sublessor at time of and before execution of the contracts was inadmissible.

8. Evidence ⇐397(1), 441(1)

In absence of fraud, mistake, misrepresentation, or accident, negotiations and agreements prior to making of contract are deemed merged in the contract, and evidence thereof is inadmissible.

9. Evidence ⇐441(4), 445(3), 455

Where contracts for subleases were complete on their face and there was no charge of fraud, mistake, or accident, parol evidence was not admissible to explain terms of the contracts and alleged understanding concerning meaning and effect of such terms, either before or after execution of the contracts.

10. Landlord and tenant ⇐80(4)

In action by sublessees to recover amounts paid under contracts for subleases, wherein sublessor and administrator of owner's estate at all times agreed to go through with the contracts and deliver the subleases if sublessees would pay amounts due on their contracts, exclusion of evidence that sublessor told sublessees that he himself had not been able to obtain master lease was not error.

11. Appeal and error ⇐782

An attempted appeal from order granting motion for nonsuit was dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

Action by Dick Parigian and others against the Citizens National Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles and another, to recover amounts paid under contracts for subleases, wherein Beach D. Lyon, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Homer Laughlin, deceased, filed complaint in intervention. From a judgment entered upon an order granting a nonsuit, and from the order granting a nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal.

Appeal from order granting nonsuit dismissed, and judgment affirmed.

Y. B. Arsen, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Russ Avery and Harmel L. Pratt, both of Los Angeles, for respondents, Citizens Nat. Trust & Savings Bank and Beach D. Lyon, administrator of estate of Homer Laughlin, deceased.

William B. Gilroy, of Los Angeles, for respondent C. A. Goss.

WHITE, Justice.

This appeal is prosecuted from a judgment entered upon an order granting a nonsuit at the conclusion of plaintiff's case. There is also an attempted appeal from the order granting such nonsuit. The pertinent facts necessary for an understanding of the issues in this case are that Homer Laughlin was the owner of a certain building in downtown Los Angeles, the ground floor and basement of which was in the main occupied by the Grand Central Public Market. On March 11, 1929, a contract was executed between Mr. Laughlin and defendant C. A. Goss, under the provisions of which the latter was empowered to enter into contracts for subleases of stalls in the aforesaid market, the terms of which subleases, however, were not to commence until November 1, 1939, more than ten years after the execution of the Laughlin-Goss contract. Pursuant to the terms of the main contract, each prospective sublessee was required to pay what was characterized as a "bonus" or "consideration" for such sublease, which amounts were specified in a schedule attached to the Laughlin-Goss contract, in which was also contained the respective interests of Laughlin and Goss in such payments.

The contracts with which we are here concerned, being three in number, were executed in May and June, 1930, between plaintiffs herein and defendant Goss, the latter of whom was acting under the rights and authority conferred upon him by and through his contract with Mr. Laughlin, owner of the real property in question. These contracts were each denominated "agreement and obligation for lease", and attached to each contract was a sublease for the particular stall named therein, which said sublease was to take effect upon November 1, 1939. At the outset the contracts recited that "as a bonus and in sole consideration of the execution and delivery in escrow, as hereinafter stipulated, by C. A. Goss, hereinafter called the Lessor, of that certain lease whereby the Lessor has leased unto the maker hereof, that certain stall or floor space designated as follows * * * (there is then set forth a description of the demised floor space) * * * we or either of us promise to pay to the Lessor, at the Citizens National Trust & Savings Bank * * * the sum of * * *" (Then follows a schedule of payments to be made until the total sum agreed upon was paid.) Then we find in the agreement the following pertinent paragraphs:

"Said lease so executed shall be deposited with this agreement in the aforesaid Bank and said Bank shall deliver the same to the maker hereof upon full payment of all amounts of principal and interest to become due hereunder.

"In the event of the failure of the maker hereof to make the payments of principal and interest strictly in the time and manner hereinbefore stipulated or to comply with any of the provisions hereof, this agreement shall forthwith terminate and all money paid hereunder prior thereto shall be retained by the Lessor as liquidated damage for the breach hereof and the lease executed and delivered to said Bank hereunder shall be returned to the Lessor by said Bank for cancellation. Time is expressly made the essence hereof.

"In case the Lessor shall be unable to deliver possession of the leased premises at the time fixed in said lease because of fire, inevitable accident or other casualty he shall have a reasonable time in which to rebuild or repair the premises, during which time all rental under said lease shall be abated, or he may, at his option, be relieved from any and all liability hereunder upon repayment to the maker, without interest, of the amount of the bonus and consideration paid hereunder; in case the Lessor shall fail to deliver possession of the premises for any reason not hereinbefore stated, without fault of the maker hereof, he shall be relieved from any and all liability hereunder upon repayment to the maker, without interest, of the amount of bonus and consideration paid hereunder.

"No sale, assignment, hypothecation, pledge or other transfer of the interest of the maker hereunder, by operation of law or otherwise, shall be made without the written consent of the Lessor, in each case first had and obtained, and any such sale, assignment, hypothecation, pledge or other transfer shall be null and void, and shall ipso facto act as a forfeiture of all rights granted by the Lessor hereunder. Neither this agreement and obligation, nor any interest in the premises hereunder, shall be deemed an asset in any Bankruptcy or Receivership proceedings, and all rights of the maker hereof shall forthwith terminate upon the institution of any such proceedings.

"* * *

"It is distinctly understood and agreed that all amounts paid by the maker under the terms hereof are and shall be solely as a bonus for and in consideration of the execution and delivery of the said lease and do not and shall not be or constitute any part or portion of the rentals to be paid by Lessee under the terms and conditions of said lease. * * *"

Each "agreement and obligation for lease", with its accompanying sublease, was assigned in writing to the defendant bank, and all payments designated in the agreement as "bonus" or "consideration" payments were made to the bank. The bank in turn was required to dispose of these funds in accordance with the provisions of the contract between defendant Goss and Homer Laughlin above referred to, that is, the bank was to pay these funds over to Mr. Laughlin until he had received a certain sum from all the prospective tenants in the market, whereupon the balance of the bonus or consideration payments was to be divided between Mr. Laughlin and Mr. Goss. If Mr. Goss was able to procure contracts and subleases for a certain specified proportion of the market by a certain time, his interest in the market and in the contracts and leases he obtained was to continue in accordance with the terms of his contract with Mr. Laughlin; otherwise, his interest was to cease and terminate. In either event, the parties who entered into the various contracts for subleases would be protected; and if they paid the full amount of the required bonus or consideration, their subleases would thereupon be delivered to them by the defendant bank.

Under their contracts the plaintiffs were obligated to pay, between the date of execution thereof in May and June, 1930, and the delivery to them of the subleases, the sum of approximately $18,000, upon which they actually paid $2,400, the last payment having been made on February 26, 1932. After plaintiffs ceased making instalment payments on their contracts, no action was taken by defendants, and the matters remained in statu quo until the instant action was commenced.

The complaint, which was filed in February, 1936, contained four counts. In the first thereof it was alleged that within four years last past defendants became indebted to the plaintiffs for money had and received by the former as trustees for the use and benefit of plaintiffs; that the terms of said trust enjoined upon defendants the duty and obligation of repaying to plaintiffs on demand the sum of $3,070, but that notwithstanding such demand defendants refused to repay any part of said sum. By the second count plaintiffs sought a recovery as for money had and received. The third count alleged an indebtedness of $3,070 "on an open and current book account"; while the fourth and final count claimed the amount of money previously mentioned upon the basis of an account stated. Defendant bank by its answer denied the material allegations contained in each count of the complaint. Epitomizing the defendant bank's affirmative defenses, it was by it alleged that plaintiffs' cause of action was one for the recovery of payments made as a bonus or in consideration of the execution and delivery in escrow of the subleases of stalls in the market; further, that plaintiffs having made payment to defendants totaling $2,400 and the bank having fully performed all the conditions precedent required of it, while plaintiffs had breached the covenants of the contract, the latter were in default. In other words, that while the plaintiffs had paid part of the consideration called for by their agreements, they had failed to pay the balance amounting to approximately $16,000. It was also set forth in the answer of the bank, and undenied, that the contracts to enter into the subleases provided as follows: "It is understood that this agreement and obligation will be assigned by Lessor to the Citizens National Trust & Savings Bank, as trustee, and that all payments made by the maker under the terms hereof shall be made to said Bank in the City of Los Angeles, State of California, at the Broadway Branch."

Also at the bottom of said contracts there appeared a printed form of assignment, as follows: "For value received, I hereby assign all my right, title and interest in the within and foregoing obligation and agreement to the Citizens National Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles, California, as Trustee, to be held by such trustee under the terms and conditions of a certain contract between Homer Laughlin and Lessor of date March 11, 1929."

It was also alleged that the subleases executed by plaintiffs contained similar provisions, to-wit, that the subleases should be assigned to the defendant bank as trustee, to be held by it under the terms and provisions of the contract between Mr. Laughlin and Mr. Goss. Defendant bank further alleged that all payments made by the plaintiffs were accepted by defendant bank in its capacity as trustee and were disbursed by it according to the terms of the contract between Laughlin and Goss dated March 11, 1929, with full knowledge thereof on the part of the plaintiffs; and that none of said moneys so paid by plaintiffs was in the possession of defendant bank. The bank further pleaded that the cause of action set forth in the complaint was barred by virtue of section 337, subdivisions 1 and 2, section 338, subdivision 4, section 339, subdivision 1, and section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

By his answer defendant Goss denied the allegations of plaintiffs' complaint, and by way of further answering the same denied that either he or his codefendant bank as trustee or otherwise were indebted to plaintiffs in any sum whatsoever, and alleged that the only agreements between himself and plaintiffs were the "agreements and obligations for leases" copies of which were attached to defendant Goss' answer. Finally, he pleaded that plaintiffs failed to separately state their separate and distinct causes of action, by reason of which the court was without jurisdiction of any of the alleged causes of action.

The complaint in intervention filed by Beach D. Lyon as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Homer Laughlin, deceased, is the same as the answer of defendant bank.

[1, 2] The first ground of appeal urged by appellants is that the court erred in holding that the contracts were self-executing and that default occurred automatically. We perceive no such ruling in the record, but if we assume the existence of such a ruling it does not appear to us to be material, because respondents took no action relative to the appellants' default, nor did the former ask to terminate the contracts. In fact there is contained in the record an offer made by respondents at the trial to reinstate the contracts if appellants would pay the delinquent payments due thereon. Therefore the question presented is whether the covenants of the agreements with which we are here concerned contemplated the payment of the moneys as a mere deposit by way of security to insure the faithful performance of appellants' covenants under the subleases, or whether such sums were paid by appellants as a bonus or an independent consideration to induce the lessor to make the subleases. A mere reading of the terms of the agreement irrefutably establishes the fact that the money was paid as a bonus or consideration for the execution of the subleases. In plain and unequivocal language the agreements so provide, and further direct that the subleases, after execution, be placed with respondent bank to be delivered by the latter to appellants only "upon full payment of all amounts of principal and interest to become due hereunder". The money having been paid as a separate consideration and to induce the lessor to enter into the subleases, it amounted to a direct payment of money and was not a deposit of security. Therefore, when termination of the agreement was brought about by the conduct of the sublessees, and without any wrongful act of the lessor, the advance payments made by the sublessees cannot be recovered by them. Wetzler v. Patterson, 73 Cal.App. 527, 238 P. 1077; Curtis v. Arnold, 43 Cal.App. 97, 184 P. 510.

[3-5] Appellants assert that the terms of the contracts providing that in case of default the money paid was to be retained as liquidated damages, are void under section 1670 of the Civil Code, and that therefore in case of default the sum so paid cannot be retained. But we think it clear that when examined in connection with the explicit provisions of the contracts hereinbefore set forth, coupled with the fact that the subleases were not to be delivered until the contracts were fully performed, it must be held that the money was paid as a bonus or consideration for the execution of the subleases, and consequently, when the lessees defaulted in their payments the moneys already paid in belonged to the lessor. Furthermore, after the lessees' breach of their contract to pay under the aforesaid agreements, the lessor had the right, resting upon the contract, to remain inactive and yet retain the moneys theretofore paid by the lessees. Consequently, it is of no moment whether or not the contracts declare that such moneys should upon breach be forfeited as liquidated damages. Where, as here, the lessor had not abandoned the contracts or defaulted therein, the lessees could not elect to consider the contracts at an end and recover what they had paid. In the case at bar the payment of the final instalment amounts under the contracts, at the time and in the manner agreed upon, was a condition precedent to the right of the lessees to demand the subleases. The parties hereto have made their agreements in clear and definite terms. Appellants contracted with respondent Goss as lessor that they would pay into respondent bank certain sums of money at certain times, and the agreement of the lessor is equally explicit that after full and due performance of such covenants on the part of appellant lessees, the subleases attached to the contracts would be delivered to appellants. Nowhere do we find in the contracts anything to indicate that the money paid was intended as security for the performance of the sublessees, but on the contrary, in plain and understandable language as well as by the object sought to be achieved by the contracts, viz., delivery to appellants of the subleases, the conclusion is inescapable that the moneys paid were intended and regarded as a bonus or consideration for the subleases. The case of Bacciocco v. Curtis, 12 Cal.2d 109, 82 P.2d 385, relied upon by appellants, in reality at pages 114 and 387 respectively thereof lends support to respondents' contentions.

[6] Appellants' claim that the court erred in rejecting evidence to prove a mutual rescission between appellants as lessees and respondent Goss as lessor, cannot be upheld. The record reveals no evidence or proffered evidence of a rescission of the contracts between appellants and respondent Goss. The only evidence we find in the record of any settlement between the last-mentioned parties had to do with another transaction between them, wholly apart from the contracts forming the basis of the instant litigation. Moreover, appellants knew and understood from the provisions of their agreements that the contracts had been assigned to respondent bank, and certainly the latter was not bound by any rescission negotiations or agreements between appellants and the bank's assignor, respondent Goss. Neither was the respondent bank interested or involved in or bound by any negotiations between appellants and respondent Goss upon which appellants attempted to offer evidence in support of their claimed waiver of forfeiture. Moreover, as heretofore pointed out, respondents never sought cancellation or forfeiture under the contracts, but stood squarely upon the same, and based their right to retain the moneys paid thereunder upon its terms, covenants and conditions, indicating and offering at all times, even up to and during the progress of the trial, to go through with the contracts if appellants would bring the delinquent instalment payments up to date.

[7, 8] The court did not err in refusing to permit appellants to introduce evidence of conversations and promises allegedly made to them by respondent Goss at the time of and prior to the execution of the contract. It requires no citation of authority for the statement that in the absence of fraud, mistake, misrepresentation or accident, the negotiations and agreements prior to making the contract are deemed merged in the contract, and evidence of such prior negotiations is not admissible.

[9] The trial court was also correct in denying to appellants the right to explain by parol evidence the terms of the contracts and an alleged understanding between the parties concerning the meaning of such terms and the effect of the same, either before or after the execution thereof. What this court said in County National Bank & Trust Co. v. Investment Corp., Cal.App., 109 P.2d 368, 371, is controlling here: "Both the agreement of the broker and the lease and option contract appear upon their face to be a complete statement of the undertakings of the respective parties thereto, without any ambiguity or uncertainty as to their several legal obligations. In the absence of any charge of fraud, mistake or accident, the language of each contract being clear, explicit, certain, and not involving an absurdity, the trial court was justified in interpreting it and ascertaining the intention of the parties from the language

thereof. Civ.Code, §§ 1638, 1639, 1640. The instant case does not present circumstances which justify the application of any exception to the parol evidence rule."

[10] Appellants' contention that they should have been permitted to introduce evidence that subsequent to the execution of the contracts respondent Goss told appellants that he himself had not been able to obtain the master lease upon which his subleases to them were predicated, finds a complete answer in the fact, heretofore set forth, that respondents, including Goss and the administrator of the estate of the owner of the premises, at all times before and during the trial agreed to go through with the contracts and deliver the subleases to appellants if they would pay the amounts due on their contracts.

[11] The attempted appeal from the order granting the motion for a nonsuit is dismissed.

For the reasons herein stated the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: YORK, P. J.; DORAN, J.

42 Cal.App.2d 783

WREAD v. COFFEY–MURRAY, Inc., et al.

Civ. 11555.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 10, 1941.

1. Licenses ⇐39

Where commissioner of corporations delivered permit authorizing corporation to issue ten shares of stock to each of three persons for $10 per share, such sums to stand against debts of the applicant, and ten shares were issued to party who paid nothing for his stock, issuance of stock at variance with the terms of the permit was void. St.1931, pp. 941, 949, 950, §§ 3, 16–18; Civ.Code, § 1598.

2. Licenses ⇐39

Where commissioner of corporations delivered permit authorizing corporation to issue stock to be paid for in cash or by the payment of corporate debts in the full sum of $10 per share, and stock was issued to a party who paid nothing for it, and who notified other stockholders that he elected to declare void the certificate evidencing the issuance of the stock to him, for the reason that the stock was not issued in conformity with the authorization granted by the commissioner, and the officers and stockholders of the corporation acted on his letter, party could not thereafter take a contrary position. Code Civ.Proc. § 1962, subd. 3; Civ. Code § 1598.

3. Judgment ⇐595

Where corporation, its president and secretary brought action for accounting against treasurer and vice-president, who withdrew from corporation on ground that issuance of stock to him was void, and treasurer filed an answer and cross-complaint but did not claim an accounting, judgment was "res judicata" in a subsequent action for accounting brought by the treasurer against the corporation and its officers, since the parties were not entitled to split action of accounting into several actions.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

4. Contracts ⇐105

A purported agreement in direct violation of the terms of the express prohibitions contained in a statute is void. Civ.Code, §§ 1598, 1599.

5. Licenses ⇐39

The main purpose of the statute providing that every security not issued in substantial conformity with the authorization of the commissioner of corporations shall be voidable at election of the holder, was to prevent the issuance and sale of spurious documents purporting to be securities, and word "voidable" which was inadvertently used for "void" was not intended as a repeal or modification of the common law rule or statutory provisions, that a purported agreement in direct violation of terms of the express prohibitions contained in a statute is void. St. 1931, pp. 937, 949, § 16; Civ.Code, §§ 1598, 1599.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Voidable".

6. Licenses ⇐39

Where, by terms of permit issued by commissioner of corporations, a corporation was entitled to issue stock against the indebtedness of the corporation and to issue to each stockholder not to exceed 50 shares of its stock at par for cash, and trial court found that subsequent to issuance of permit secretary of the corporation paid in certain sum, finding was not required that stock issued in a sum exceeding the amount paid in was invalid, in absence of showing that stock was not issued in accordance with permit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Swain, Judge.

Action for an accounting by W. E. Wread against Coffey-Murray, Inc., and others. From a judgment for the defendants after granting of a motion for nonsuit, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Arthur F. Larrabee and David H. Cannon, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Faries & McDowell and Robert S. Burns, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

From an order granting the motion of the defendants for a nonsuit in an action for an accounting the plaintiff has appealed. The pleadings were copious. On the trial counsel stipulated in open court minutely regarding the issues. The judgment roll in a former action between the same parties was freely used by each of them. After the case had been so presented the defendants made a motion for a nonsuit, their motion was granted, judgment thereon was entered, and from that judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

On October 17, 1932, and prior thereto, W. E. Wread had been engaged in installing overhead doors. The record does not disclose that he had a factory, shop, or any equipment. At all times he referred to his overhead doors as an "invention" but as will hereinafter appear he held no patentable rights. On October 17, 1932, Wread, J. T. Coffey and F. B. Murray entered into a written contract. In substance that contract recited that W. E. Wread was the inventor and designer of a useful invention, the overhead door; that he had applied for and would apply for letters patent; that the parties to said contract intended to organize a corporation to manufacture and sell overhead doors; that the parties would form a corporation having a capital stock of $24,000 divided into 2,400 shares of the par value each of $10; that the corporation should have three directors; and that the corporation would take over said invention; that upon its organization an application would be made to the commissioner of corporations for a permit to sell stock; that upon receipt of the permit Wread would assign to the corporation his invention and improvements thereof; that Coffey and Murray, as soon as the permit issued, would advance to the corporation the sum of $500 as working capital, and that they would promote the said business; that the capital stock authorized by the permit would be issued to said persons in equal amounts, and that Wread should receive a salary of not less than $200 per month.

[1] At about the same time a corporation, the defendant, was formed under the name of "Easy Overhead Door Corporation". On November 18, 1932 the commissioner of corporations delivered a permit authorizing the corporation to issue to Coffey, Wread, and Murray, ten shares of stock each for $10 per share, such sums to stand against debts of the applicant theretofore paid by said persons. On or prior to December 5, 1932, Murray paid to the corporation, or for its use, $350, Coffey paid $445, but the record does not show that Wread paid in anything. On December 5, 1932, the corporation issued twenty shares to each of said persons. Each of said persons was elected a director. Coffey was elected president, Murray was elected secretary, and Wread was elected treasurer and vice-president. On or about November 10, 1932, Easy Overhead Door Corporation engaged in the business theretofore conducted by Wread, and since has continued to install overhead doors. He participated until May 17, 1933, when he left the organization and ceased to take part in its operations. He has never assigned to said corporation his right, title and interest in and to said invention and in and to any letters patent issued under said or any subsequent applications. In another action, hereinafter more particularly referred to, the trial court made a finding that the device was not patentable. Hence Wread paid nothing for his stock. But, as we have stated, the permit provided that it should have been paid for in cash or by the payment of corporate debts in the full sum of ten dollars per share. An issue of stock at variance with said terms of said permit was prohibited and made a felony by the express provisions of the statute. §§ 3, 16, 17 and 18, Stats.1931, p. 937. Such issue was void. Civ.Code, § 1598. On September 21, 1933, Wread resigned as director, treasurer, and vice-president, and established a separate place of business. On January 31, 1934, he wrote defendants: "You and each of you will please take notice that I have elected to declare void that certain stock and the certificate evidencing the same, issued to me in Easy Overhead Door Corporation, a corporation, for the reason that the stock was not issued in conformity with, or in substantial conformity with any authorization granted to the corporation by the commissioner of corporations of the state of California, and I hereby offer to do each and everything required of me to be done to void the said stock and the certificate evidencing the same. Please govern yourselves accordingly."

[2] He does not claim he is a "stockholder" but he asserts that since December 5, 1932, he has been the owner of a one-third interest in Easy Overhead Door Corporation and as owner of such interest he asks an accounting. When he wrote the letter dated January 31, 1934, he knew all of the facts and he knew that the officers and stockholders of Easy Overhead Door Corporation knew all of the facts. Nevertheless he caused them to act, and they did act, on his letter. He may not now take a contrary position. Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, sub. 3.

[3] Prior to January 31, 1934, an action was commenced by Easy Overhead Door Corporation, F. B. Murray and J. T. Coffey against W. E. Wread. On the date last mentioned a third amended complaint was filed. It contained four counts. The first and second counts sought to have the contract dated October 17, 1932, reformed. The third count asked that the defendant render an account. The fourth count asked for declaratory relief. The defendant in that action, Wread, filed an answer and cross-complaint. In neither pleading did he make any claim for an accounting. The judgment in that action is res judicata in this action. Sutphin v. Speik, 15 Cal.2d 195, 99 P.2d 652, 655, 101 P.2d 497. In other words the parties were not entitled to have an accounting of the obligations of one of the parties taken in the first action and an accounting of the obligations of the other parties taken in the second action—they could not split an action of accounting into pieces.

[4, 5] In presenting his case the plaintiff bases much of his argument on the fact that in his letter dated January 31, 1934, he had used the word void and that the statute, Stats.1931, pp. 937, 949, § 16, uses the word voidable and therefore his letter should not be accepted as an admission that the issue of stock to him, without any payment being made therefor, was void. We think he errs in construing said section. Before said section was enacted it was settled law that a purported agreement in direct violation of the terms of the express prohibitions contained in a statute was void. Civ.Code, §§ 1598, 1599; 13 C.J. 412 "Contracts", § 342; 17 C.J.S., Contracts, §§ 192, 193. The main purpose in the enactment of the statute, Stats.1931, p. 937, was to prevent the issuance and sale of spurious documents purporting to be securities. It is obvious that the legislature did not intend by enactment of that statute to make the rule less drastic, but if anything to make the statutory rule more drastic. Therefore when it wrote section 16 using the word voidable we think it is clear the word was inadvertently used for void. No doubt on certain occasions persons may unintentionally violate the terms of a permit theretofore issued by the commissioner of corporations. Such violation may arise by reason of the permit being unduly narrow. Recognizing that fact, the legislature provided in section 16 that under certain circumstances the commissioner might issue a new permit in effect validating the prior invalid issues. Such we believe to be the meaning of section 16, Statutes 1931, page 937. However we are clearly of the opinion that said section, read in connection with all of the other provisions of the statute, was not intended as a repeal of the common law rule nor a modification or repeal of the provisions of sections 1598 and 1599 of the Civil Code.

[6] In the first action the trial court made a finding that, subsequent to the date of the issue of the permit, Coffey and Murray paid in $195. The plaintiff argues that therefore stock issued in a sum exceeding $195 was invalid. It is sufficient to state that the trial court made no finding to that effect. According to the clear terms of the permit the corporation was entitled to issue stock against the indebtedness of the corporation whether the payment thereof was made by the stockholders prior or subsequent to the issue of the permit. Furthermore it was entitled to issue to each stockholder not to exceed fifty shares of its stock at par for cash. There is no finding that the moneys paid in by Murray and Coffey were not paid in accordance with said permit.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; SPENCE, J.

RANCHO SANTA ANITA, Inc. v. CITY OF ARCADIA.

Civ. 11548.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 13, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 15, 1941.

Hearing Granted April 11, 1941.

1. Statutes ⇐51

Generally, the "adoption of a statute by reference" is construed as an adoption of the law as it existed when adopting statute was passed and therefore is not affected by any subsequent modification or repeal of statute adopted, but where reference in an adopting statute is to the law generally which governs the particular subject, and not to any specific statute or part thereof, the reference includes the law as it stands when it is sought to be applied, with all changes made from time to time so far at least as changes are consistent with purpose of adopting statute.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Adoption of a Statute by Reference".

2. Statutes ⇐51

Generally, irrespective of whether adopted statute is referred to generally or specially in an adopting statute, intention of legislature as disclosed in adopting statute is basis for determining whether "adoption of a statute by reference" is to be construed as an adoption of the adopted statute as it existed when adopting statute was passed or as an adoption of adopted statute as it exists when it is sought to be applied.

3. Municipal corporations ⇐956(1)

In view of statement found in ordinance, it was contemplated that, in matters of revenue and taxation, city should be governed by general rules found in Political Code as experience and economic conditions required changes and modifications from time to time. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5233, § 871; Pol. Code, §§ 3607 et seq., 3714, subd. 5.

4. Municipal corporations ⇐977

In taxpayer's action against sixth class city to recover taxes paid, a complaint alleging that city did not comply with provisions of Political Code concerning levy and assessment of taxes stated a good cause of action where city had adopted an ordinance which contemplated that in matters of revenue and taxation city should be governed by general rules found in Political Code as experience and economic conditions required changes and modifications from time to time. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5233, § 871; Pol.Code, §§ 3607 et seq., 3714, subd. 5.

5. Pleading ⇐8(2)

Where pleading of an ordinance was in conformance with statute, an allegation that no other ordinance was in conflict with ordinance pleaded was not a "conclusion of law" but was a pleading of fact as well. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 5233, § 871; Pol.Code, §§ 3607 et seq., 3714, subd. 5; Code Civ.Proc. § 459.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conclusion of Law".

6. Pleading ⇐193(6)

In taxpayer's action against city to recover taxes paid, a complaint which allegedly pleaded 32 asserted irregularities of city council in computing and levying taxes was not demurrable on ground that complaint contained several causes of action which were not separately pleaded where irregularities related to asserted noncompliance by city with statute, and applicability of statute was main issue of litigation. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5233, § 871; Pol.Code, §§ 3607 et seq., 3714, subd. 5.

7. Pleading ⇐12, 225(2)

Sustaining a special demurrer to complaint without leave to amend was an abuse of discretion where demurrer was based upon ground that complaint was ambiguous and uncertain because of plaintiff's failure to plead certain details, and details, if any, omitted from complaint were within defendant's special knowledge.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Robert W. Kenny, Judge.

Action by Rancho Santa Anita, Incorporated, etc., against the City of Arcadia, to recover taxes levied by defendant for municipal purposes. From a judgment for defendant after a general and special demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Stater & Dawson, Williamson, Hoge, Sargent & Judson, and Williamson, Hoge & Judson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James C. Bone, of Arcadia, and Burke, Hickson, Burke & Marshall, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff sued to recover taxes levied by the defendant for municipal purposes for the fiscal year 1937-8. The cause was tried on the second amended complaint to which the defendant had interposed a general and special demurrer. This was sustained without leave to amend, and the order recites that the plaintiff did not request such leave. The plaintiff's appeal from the judgment resulting from this order is based upon a bill of exceptions, and the main issue is whether the complaint states a cause of action.

It is the contention of appellant, as outlined in its pleading, that the taxes were illegally levied because the city failed to comply with the provisions of the Political Code requiring the adoption of a budget antecedent to the levy; that the taxes levied were aimed to produce a revenue far in excess of its needs for municipal purposes, and that the rates were fixed without regard to available cash and known incoming revenues; that a portion of the taxes was levied ostensibly to meet interest and principal on outstanding municipal bonds, but actually provided a revenue far in excess of the needs for those purposes and designed for purposes other than those contemplated by the law under which the bonds were issued.

The argument in support of the first contention presents a question of statutory construction. The defendant is a municipal corporation of the sixth class having no independent charter, and hence one governed by the general laws. Section 871 of the Municipal Corporations Act (Deering, Gen.Laws, Act No. 5233) provides that the city council "shall have the power, and it shall be its duty, to provide by ordinance a system for the assessment, levy and collection of all city taxes not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter." Acting under this authority the city of Arcadia, in 1913, adopted ordinance No. 33 in which section 68 reads as follows: "All provisions of Title IX of the Political Code of the State of California in regard to revenue and taxation which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Ordinance shall apply to and govern all matters of revenue and taxation which are not herein specifically provided for, substituting where necessary the proper city officer for any county officer therein referred to." In this connection the complaint alleges that there are no provisions of said ordinance inconsistent with the provisions of Title IX of the Political Code, that the city has continuously operated under the provisions of that title, and has not adopted any other ordinance or system contrary thereto. The respondent concedes these facts, but the parties differ on this question—whether the reference to Title IX of the Political Code is an adoption of the provisions of that title as they read in 1913, or whether it includes the amendments made in the intervening time. If the ordinance be interpreted as adopting the title with all its amendments it must be conceded that the complaint states a good cause of action.

Particular attention is directed to section 3714 of the code, which is a part of Title IX. The last amendment to that section prior to the adoption of the ordinance was in 1895. At that time it consisted of ten lines in the printed code. Since the adoption of the ordinance it has been amended five times until it has now reached six and one-half pages of printed matter covering a complete system for the preparation and adoption of an annual budget showing the probable revenues and required expenditures of each office and department. Subdivision five provides that the annual tax rate shall be fixed in such amount as will "raise the amount of the estimated expenditures as finally determined"; and that all taxes shall be levied in specific sums, and "shall not exceed the amount specified in the budget." It is appellant's contention that the taxing body disregarded all these provisions of the amended section. Respondent concedes this but argues that it is bound by the provisions of the section as they read when the ordinance was adopted, and that none of the subsequent amendments are controlling.

[1] A clear statement of the general rule of the effect of the adoption of a statute by reference is found in 59 Corpus Juris, p. 1060, reading: "As a rule the adoption of a statute by reference is construed as an adoption of the law as it existed at the time the adopting statute was passed, and therefore is not affected by any subsequent modification or repeal of the statute adopted. * * * A well-established exception to, or qualification of, the general rule exists, however, where the reference in an adopting statute is to the law generally which governs the particular subject, and not to any specific statute or part thereof; in such case the reference will be held to include the law as it stands at the time it is sought to be applied, with all the changes made from time to time, so far at least as the changes are consistent with the purpose of the adopting statute." (Italics ours.) To the same effect see 25 R.C.L., p. 908; 23 Cal.Jur., p. 685; Sutherland, Statutory Construction, 2d Ed., p. 789.

[2] The exception to the general rule was recognized in the early case of Kirk v. Rhoads, 46 Cal. 398, 402, which involved a provision of an act to incorporate the city of Sacramento reading: "All the provisions of law and force regulating elections * * * shall apply to the election of city officers." It was held that each city election was to be governed by the general election laws as they existed at the time of the election, and not merely by those existing at the time the incorporating act was passed. In Ramish v. Hartwell, 126 Cal. 443, 446, 58 P. 920, the court had under consideration provisions of a street improvement act which declared that sales of lots upon delinquent assessments should be conducted "in all respects the same as are provided by law for the collection of delinquent State and county taxes." St. 1893, p. 33, § 5. The court held that the amendments to the general tax laws requiring sales to the state were so inconsistent with the street improvement act that they would entirely defeat its purposes. For that reason it was held that the adopting act included the tax statute as it read at the time of adoption, and not as amended. In Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 177 Cal. 249, 254, 170 P. 426, the rule and the exception stated are both recognized and approved. There the adopting statute referred specifically to section 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it was held not to have contemplated amendments to that section. Bolton v. Terra Bella Irr. Dist., 106 Cal. App. 313, 321, 289 P. 678, 682, involved section 3785b of the Political Code which authorized a tax deed whenever a sale had been made "in pursuance of section 3771 of this code." The court reviewed numerous authorities on adoptive legislation and followed the rule of Ramish v. Hartwell, supra, in holding that, though a specific statute had been referred to, the entire purpose of the adopting statute would be defeated if the specific statute were to be held to have been adopted in haec verba. Many of these decisions rest on the question of legislative intent and that seems to be the purport of the decisions generally, that whether the adopted statute is referred to generally or specifically, the intention of the legislature as disclosed in the adopting statute is the basis upon which the decision must be made.

[3, 4] With this in mind we may turn to section 68 of the ordinance. It reads: "All provisions of Title IX of the Political Code of the State of California in regard to revenue and taxation which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this ordinance shall apply to and govern all matters of revenue and taxation which are not herein specifically provided for, substituting where necessary the proper city officer for any county officer therein referred to." It makes all provisions of the title applicable which are not inconsistent. It includes the entire title, which in turn includes everything in the Political Code relating to revenue and taxation. The title begins with section 3607 and ends with section 3900a. It was first enacted in 1872 and has been amended at every regular session of the legislature since that date. The amendments to section 3714 requiring a budget are not inconsistent with any of the provisions of the ordinance. Hence the case does not call for any fine distinctions of judicial interpretation. There is no basis upon which a court could rule that the city council did not know of these periodical amendments to the code and that, knowing them not, it intended to take the whole title just as it read in 1913. For these reasons the conclusion follows that the ordinance contemplated that, in matters of revenue and taxation, the city was to be governed by the general rules found in the Political Code as experience and economic conditions required changes and modifications from time to time. The complaint alleges that none of the provisions of section 3714 of the Political Code was complied with, and for that reason alone it states a good cause of action. Otis v. Los Angeles County, 9 Cal.2d 366, 70 P.2d 633.

The respondent refuses to defend the special demurrer because appellant has not assumed the burden of attacking it. We have examined all the grounds urged, and we find no merit in them.

[5, 6] The pleading of the municipal ordinance was in conformance with the terms of section 459 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The allegation that no other ordinance was in conflict with the one pleaded was not strictly a conclusion of law, but was a pleading of a fact as well. It was urged in this demurrer that the complaint contained several causes of action which had not been separately stated in that it pleaded thirty-two asserted irregularities and illegalities of the city council in computing, fixing and levying the taxes for eight named general and special funds. Generally speaking these irregularities all related to this asserted noncompliance with the provisions of section 3714 of the Political Code. The respondent freely confesses that "If that section, as it existed in 1937, when the disputed levies were made, is applicable to defendant, * * * it has 'most flagrantly violated its mandate,' because neither in the year in question or in any other year since this section was amended to include budget provisions has it ever made any pretense of following such budget provisions." This being so, we are unable to perceive how the issue could be presented to the trial court any better by segregation of the complaint into separate causes of action for every one of the acts of noncompliance with the section. The applicability of this section is the meat of the litigation and that issue can be determined without useless and repetitious pleading.

[7] The asserted grounds of ambiguity and uncertainty relating to the failure to plead the statute under which certain funds were created by the city, the unpaid principal and annual interest required on bonds and sinking funds issued and maintained by the city, and the balances existing in the various general and specific funds, all relate to matters which are primarily within the knowledge of the city and require no more specific pleading. Other grounds urged in the special demurrer relate to the form and manner of pleading the thirty-two asserted irregularities and admitted failures of the city council to comply with the terms of the code section. If any detail in the pleading of these irregularities is omitted, it is within the special knowledge of the respondent, and the charge of ambiguity and uncertainty is not well founded. For these reasons if the judgment appealed from is based upon the ruling upon the special demurrer it was a plain abuse of discretion upon the part of the trial court to sustain the demurrer without leave to amend. McCune v. Harris, 9 Cal.App.2d 719, 721, 50 P.2d 837; 21 Cal.Juris. 120.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; SPENCE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 846

PINEGAR v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF CLOVIS (WAKEFIELD, Intervener).

Civ. 2612.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 14, 1941.

Appeal and error ⇐554(2), 627(2)

Where only papers before Court of Appeal were those filed on motion to dismiss appeal and an order was entered in trial court terminating proceedings for preparation of a transcript which order recited that no undertaking was filed and no personal arrangements were made for compensation of stenographic reporter and that no extension of time had been granted and no bill of exceptions had ever been presented or filed, appeal was dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Ernest Klette, Judge.

Action by Georgia K. Pinegar against the First National Bank of Clovis, wherein C. K. Wakefield, etc., intervened. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Appeal dismissed.

No appearance for appellant.

Conley, Conley & Conley, of Fresno, for respondent Bank.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is a motion to dismiss this appeal from the judgment. Nothing has been filed in this court except the papers on this motion.

From the certificate of the county clerk it appears that the judgment was entered on June 28, 1940; that notice of appeal and notice to prepare transcript were filed on August 28, 1940, and that on October 26, 1940, an order was entered in the trial court terminating proceedings for the preparation of a transcript, which order recites that no undertaking was filed and no personal arrangements were made for the compensation of the stenographic reporter; that no extension of time had been granted; and that no bill of exceptions had ever been presented or filed.

The showing being sufficient (Foster v. Carey, 33 Cal.App.2d 543, 92 P.2d 444), the motion must be granted. The appeal is dismissed.

We concur: MARKS, J.; GRIFFIN, J.

HAIGLER et al. v. DONNELLY et al.*

Civ. 12802.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 10, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 6, 1941.

Hearing Granted April 11, 1941.

1. Brokers ⇐71

Where contract of listing provided that broker should receive as commission amount for which she could sell apartment house furnishings in excess of a specified net price to owners, but owners entered into contract to sell to buyer procured by broker for less than specified net price, the sale upon different terms constituted a "waiver" of conditions for payment of commission provided for in contract of listing and rendered sellers liable to broker for reasonable value of services rendered in procuring buyer.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waiver".

2. Damages ⇐89(2)

In action against broker to recover portion of purchase price of apartment house furnishings withheld by broker as her commission, where there was evidence that amount withheld approximated reasonable compensation on basis of rates prevalent in the city to which broker was entitled on theory of implied contract because conditions for payment of commission provided for in contract of listing had been waived by sellers, sellers were not entitled to recover punitive damages, since the statutory provision therefor is by its terms expressly made applicable to breach of an obligation not arising from contract. Civ.Code, § 3294.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clement D. Nye, Judge.

Action by C. F. Haigler and others against Dottie Delphy Donnelly, and others, for money received by the named defendant, a real estate broker, for the use and benefit of plaintiffs. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal.

Judgment reversed.

W. W. Comstock and Harry A. Finkenstein, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

Henry S. Cohen and Bernard B. Cohen, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiffs commenced this action upon a common count for money received by defendant Donnelly, a real estate broker, for the use and benefit of plaintiffs. A judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiffs in the sum of $3,908.35, of which $500 was awarded by the court as punitive damages. The appeal is from the judgment.

Plaintiffs listed their apartment house with defendant in March, 1939, for the purpose of negotiating a lease for a term of years at a rental of $250 per month and also listed the furniture and furnishings of the apartment house for sale for $3,000 cash. These amounts were to be net to the plaintiffs. The listing card was not produced at the trial and its contents were established by plaintiff C. L. Haigler, who testified that defendant "should get his commission from the other party that he sold to". On April 7, 1939, plaintiffs signed a listing card in which defendant was authorized to sell the apartment house together with the furniture and furnishings for the sum of $27,500 and in which plaintiffs agreed to pay a commission of 5 per cent "if they find a buyer for said property at the price or terms above indicated, or any lower price I may later accept". Thereafter defendant procured Mrs. Silva as lessee of the apartment house and on May 11, 1939, plaintiffs entered into a written contract with Mrs. Silva by which Mrs. Silva purchased the furniture and furnishings for the sum of $2,500 and leased the apartment house for the term of ten years at a rental of $250 per month. She paid to defendant the sum of $2,500 in cash for the furniture and furnishings and also the sum of $1,000 to apply on the rent. Later plaintiffs authorized defendant to repay to Mrs. Silva the sum of $91.65 in making a pro-ration of the rent. In the contract between plaintiffs and Mrs. Silva it is provided: "It is hereby agreed that so much of said down payment or any other money collected by Donnelly & Co. as is necessary shall be retained by Donnelly & Co., to pay the seller's commission and the balance if any, after said payment, shall be paid by said Donnelly & Co., to said party of the first part or held by agent subject to first parties order". Defendant deducted from the sum which she had received from Mrs. Silva the sum of $1,150, which she claimed to be due her as commission, and tendered to plaintiffs a check for $2,258.35. This tender was refused as being insufficient in amount, plaintiffs claiming that they should receive the entire sum of $3,500, less the small sum which had been repaid to Mrs. Silva. At a later date plaintiffs cashed the check under the stipulation of the parties that it could be done without prejudice to the rights of either of them.

* Subsequent opinion 117 P.2d 331.

The judgment in favor of plaintiffs, which was entered on May 9, 1940, for the sum of $3,908.38, required that defendant pay interest on the sum of $1,150 from May 26, 1939, to the date of the entry of the judgment. There is a marginal note on the judgment record showing that satisfaction of the judgment to the extent of $2,258.35 was filed on June 20, 1940.

[1] The contract which plaintiffs made with Mrs. Silva contains in effect the terms upon which defendant had been authorized to sell the furniture and lease the property except that the purchase price of the furniture was changed from $3,000 to $2,500. Plaintiffs were not compelled to enter into this agreement, not having authorized defendant to sell the furniture at the price of $2,500, but since they agreed finally to accept the lower price they became liable to pay to defendant the reasonable value of the services which she had rendered in procuring the purchaser. They had the right to stand upon their original proposition to sell the furniture for $3,000 net to them with the understanding that defendant would receive as commission any sum for which the furniture could be sold over and above that price. Their acceptance of the new terms constituted a waiver of the conditions which had been agreed upon for the payment of the commission. Since the amount to be paid under the conditions under which the sale was actually made had not been agreed upon, the rule to be applied is that defendant is entitled to reasonable compensation. Hall v. Douglas Aircraft Co., 23 Cal.App.2d 498, 73 P. 2d 668; Moore v. Borgfeldt, 96 Cal.App. 306, 273 P. 1114; Wetzell v. Wagoner, 41 Mo.App. 509. The record discloses that defendant presented evidence to establish the reasonable value of her services but the trial court erroneously failed to make a finding thereon.

[2] The trial court erred in ordering defendant to pay the sum of $500 as punitive damages. It is provided in section 3294 of the Civil Code that "in an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract" the plaintiff may recover punitive damages in addition to actual damages where the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud or malice. The relations between plaintiffs and defendant were contractual. Under the first listing plaintiffs agreed to pay a commission over and above a definite amount which was set as the purchase price of the property, and under the second listing they agreed to pay a specified commission upon a specified selling price. When no sale was effected under either of these listings and a sale was actually effected under terms different from the terms set forth in the listings plaintiffs became liable under an implied contract to pay for the services rendered. Plaintiffs recognized their obligation to pay the commission by signing the contract with Mrs. Silva containing a provision that defendant could retain from the purchase price a sufficient sum to pay her commission. Defendant at all times claimed the right to retain the sum which was not tendered to plaintiffs and presented evidence to the effect that the sum retained by her approximated the rates prevalent in the city. There was an implied contract on her part to deliver to plaintiffs any sum received by her over and above the reasonable value of her services. The record contains no evidence to justify an award of punitive damages.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: MOORE, P. J.; McCOMB, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 20

MOTOR TRADING CO. et al. v. INGELS et al.

Civ. 11308.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 14, 1941.

1. Automobiles ⇐29

The purpose of statute requiring dealers to register used motor vehicles brought from foreign state for sale or resale in California and to execute title bond was to protect purchasers of used or secondhand vehicles brought from other states against risk of failure of title due to fact that vehicle has been stolen or is subject to mortgage or contract in another state. St.1937, pp. 1978, 1979, §§ 1, 2.

2. Commerce ⇐31

When goods come to rest and become intermingled with general property in destination state, they become subject to laws of that state. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 1, § 8.

3. Commerce ⇐48, 54

When matters affect interstate commerce only incidentally, the state may act in behalf of interests of the state, but may not under guise of local regulation discriminate against property having its origin in another state. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 1, § 8.

4. Commerce ⇐54, 77

The statute requiring dealers to register used motor vehicles brought from foreign state for sale or resale in California, to execute title bond, to pay a $5 fee with filing of each bond, and to deliver to purchaser within 24 hours certificates of ownership and registration is unconstitutional as burdening "interstate commerce" since statute discriminates against dealers in interstate commerce by arbitrary classification and imposition of onerous conditions based solely upon origin of vehicle in another state. St. 1937, pp. 1978, 1979, §§ 1, 2; U.S.C.A.Const. art. 1, § 8.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Interstate Commerce".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence L. Kincaid, Judge.

Suit by the Motor Trading Company and others against Ray Ingels and others to enjoin defendants from enforcing an act relating to used motor vehicles. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellants.

Tripp, Penney & Callaway and George Penney, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WARD, Justice.

Appeal by officials of the Department of Motor Vehicles from a decree enjoining them from enforcing the provisions of Chap. 705, p. 1978, Stats.1937 of the State of California against six different plaintiffs who joined in bringing the suit, setting up separately the same cause of action. Three of the plaintiffs are California corporations; one, a co-partnership with its principal place of business in this state, and two are individuals, residing in this state. The sole occupation of all plaintiffs is the business of buying, selling and trading used motor vehicles.

The statute requires that "Every dealer in used, or secondhand, motor vehicles who is a nonresident of this State or who does not have a permanent place of business in this State, and every other dealer who brings any used, or secondhand motor vehicles into this State for the purpose of sale or resale except as a trade-in on a new motor vehicle or another used motor vehicle, shall within ten days from the date of entry of said motor vehicle into the limits of this State, register such motor vehicle with the Department of Motor Vehicles * * * and shall before said * * * vehicle is sold, or offered for sale, execute a bond with a surety company * * * as surety thereon, payable to the Department of Motor Vehicles for the use and benefit of the purchaser and his vendees, and conditioned to pay all loss that may be occasioned by reason of the failure of the title of such vendor or by reason of any fraudulent misrepresentations or breaches of warranty as to freedom from liens of the motor vehicle being so sold." A fee of $5 is payable on the approval and filing of each bond. The statute further provides: "Every person, firm or corporation upon the completed sale and delivery of any used, or secondhand, motor vehicle shall within 24 hours thereof deliver to the vendee, and indorsed according to law, a certificate of ownership, and a certificate of registration, issued for said vehicle by the Department of Motor Vehicles of this State." Violation of the above provisions of the act constitutes a misdemeanor, and in addition no action may be maintained to recover the vehicle or any part of its selling price. Stats.1937, p. 1979.

Respondents contend "That Chapter 705, Statutes of 1937, of the State of California is violative of (1) the 'equal protection' and 'due process' clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, (2) Article 1, Section 21 of the Constitution of the State of California, and (3) the 'commerce' clause of Article 1, Section 8, of the Constitution of the United States."

Whatever niceties of distinction in classification there may be between certain groups of dealers, between dealers and nondealers, and between used or secondhand motor vehicles for sale and for trade-in purposes, there is still a clear and certain distinction as a basis of classification between local and out of the state used or secondhand cars for sale or resale. We do not find it necessary, so far as resident dealers or those having a place of business in this state are concerned, to go beyond the "Commerce Clause" to decide this appeal.

[1] The evident purpose of the statute is to protect purchasers of used or secondhand cars brought from other states against the risk of failure of title due to the fact that the car has been stolen or is subject to mortgage or contract in another state.

Appellants first contend that the legislature was attempting to deal with a class which caused the evil. However, the trial court found: "The number of instances of failure of title in the motor vehicles brought into this State by dealers thereof for the purpose of resale are extremely few and there is no evidence that the instances of such failure of title in the vehicles brought in by dealers are as great or greater than in the cases of motor vehicles either brought into the State by individuals for the purpose of resale or by automobile dealers for the purpose of trade-in on new or used motor vehicles. On the contrary, there is evidence of a considerable number of cases of failure of title in new automobiles sold in this State whether brought into this State from outside thereof or not and also in the case of the sale of used automobiles brought into this State by individuals. A large number of used automobiles are brought into this State for the purpose of resale by individuals other than dealers. The peculiar danger sought to be alleviated by the instant legislation is not peculiar to the business of bringing in used automobiles by dealers for the purpose of resale but extends to the business of selling new automobiles of intrastate origin and to the sale of used automobiles of both intrastate and extrastate origin by individuals." The correctness of this finding is not attacked.

The trial court also found the fee was arbitrary, excessive and bore no reasonable relation to the expressed purpose of reimbursing the Department of Motor Vehicles for expenditures necessary in the administration of the act; that the provisions requiring the dealer to deliver to the vendee within twenty-four hours of sale and delivery of any used vehicle brought into the state for the purpose of sale or resale, a certificate of ownership endorsed according to law, also a certificate of registration issued by the Department, was an unreasonable requirement in that it prescribed so short a period for performance that it was impossible for plaintiffs to comply therewith, and that its enforcement would greatly damage plaintiffs' lawful business; that the bond requirement discriminates against plaintiff dealers who bring used cars into the state for the purpose of resale in favor of dealers who bring them in for purposes of trade-in, and of individuals who bring them in for resale; finally, that "Such requirements constitute protective barriers against the interstate traffic in which the plaintiffs are engaged."

[2, 3] In support of appellants' contention that the state statute is not in contravention of the commerce clause, reliance is placed upon State ex rel. Leathers v. Coleman, 123 Fla. 23, 166 So. 226. We agree with the holding in that case, based as it is on the often-declared principle that when goods come to rest and become intermingled with general property in the destination state they become subject to the laws of that state. It is likewise true that when matters affect interstate commerce only incidentally, the state may act in behalf of the interests of the state, but may not under the guise of local regulation discriminate against property having its origin in another state. In Best & Co., Inc., v. Maxwell, 61 S.Ct. 334, 335, 85 L.Ed. 275, the court stated: "The commerce clause forbids discrimination, whether forthright or ingenious." While it is true, however, that there is language in the Florida case (State ex rel. Leathers v. Coleman, supra) supporting appellants' position, there is a factual and basic difference in the cases. In the instant case, the requirement of the bond was found to be burdensome and the fee excessive; in the Florida case the imposition of the bond, the fee, etc., was not found to be unreasonable or burdensome.

The Florida case, decided in 1936, was not followed in 1937 in Park McLain, Inc., v. Hoey, D.C., 19 F.Supp. 990, wherein the Florida case was considered in connection with a similar North Carolina statute. In the Park McLain case, the court (19 F. Supp. page 993) said: "As both the bond and the fee required by the statute here under consideration constitute a clear discrimination against used automobiles of foreign origin, the provisions requiring them must be held invalid under the commerce clause of the Constitution. * * * If it is thought that the sale of such cars furnishes peculiar opportunities for fraud, the answer is that if regulation of interstate commerce in used cars is deemed desirable, it must be remembered that it is Congress, and not the State Legislatures, to whom the people have delegated the power of regulating such commerce." In Welton v. State of Missouri, 91 U.S. 275, 281, 23 L.Ed. 347, the court said: "The power which insures uniformity of commercial regulation must cover the property which is transported as an article of commerce from hostile or interfering legislation, until it has mingled with and become a part of the general property of the country, and subjected like it to similar protection, and to no greater burdens."

In the Park McLain case (19 F.Supp. page 993), the court quoted from Howe Machine Co. v. Gage, 100 U.S. 676, 678, 25 L.Ed. 754, as follows: "'A law which requires a license to be taken out by pedlers who sell articles not produced in the State, and requires no such license with respect to those who sell in the same way articles which are produced in the State, is in conflict with the power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. This power applies to articles taken from one State into another, until they become mingled with and a part of the property of the latter, and thereafter protects such articles from any burden imposed by reason of their foreign origin.'"

Bender v. Connor, D.C.Conn., 28 F.Supp. 903, 907, was dismissed for want of jurisdiction. The court stated that the proceeding should have been started in the state court "where it belongs". The case involved a similar statute providing for fees to be paid on registration of used cars brought into the state of Connecticut for the purpose of sale or resale, those brought in for "trade-in" purposes being excepted. The court, citing the Park McLain case, referred to the situation as presenting "a substantial, even grave, constitutional issue".

In Ingels v. Morf, 300 U.S. 290, 57 S.Ct. 439, 81 L.Ed. 653, the caravaning act of California requiring a fee of $15 was held unconstitutional in that it was an excessive charge and imposed an unconstitutional burden upon interstate commerce. In Clark v. Paul Gray, Inc., 306 U.S. 583, 59 S.Ct. 744, 83 L.Ed. 1001, the court upheld a second California Caravan Act, but upon lack of proof that the fees were excessive. In the present case, respondents' claim of excessiveness of the fee is not challenged by appellants, their contention being that when the power to tax exists, the extent of the burden is a matter for the discretion of the lawmakers.

[4] In its practical operation, the provisions of the statute in question discriminate against dealers in interstate commerce by arbitrary classification and the imposition of onerous conditions based solely upon the origin of vehicles in another state. They are therefore in contravention of the "Commerce Clause". Const. of the United States, Art. I, sec. 8; Foster-Fountain Packing Co. v. Haydel, 278 U.S. 1, 49 S.Ct. 1, 73 L.Ed. 147; Buck v. Kuykendall, 267 U.S. 307, 45 S.Ct. 324, 69 L.Ed. 623, 38 A.L.R. 286; Baldwin v. G. A. F. Seelig, 294 U.S. 511, 55 S.Ct. 497, 79 L.Ed. 1032, 101 A.L.R. 55; Asher v. Ingels, D.C., 13 F.Supp. 654; Park McLain, Inc., v. Hoey, supra; Welton v. State of Missouri, supra; Morf v. Ingels, D.C., 14 F.Supp. 922, affirmed in 300 U.S. 290, 57 S.Ct. 439, 81 L.Ed. 653; Sproles v. Binford, 286 U.S. 374, 52 S.Ct. 581, 76 L.Ed. 1167; Traveler's Ins. Co. v. Connecticut, 185 U.S. 364, 22 S. Ct. 673, 46 L.Ed. 949; Fox, etc., v. Standard Oil Co., 294 U.S. 87, 55 S.Ct. 333, 79 L.Ed. 780; Bender v. Connor, supra; Howe Machine Co. v. Gage, supra.

In Best & Co., Inc., v. Maxwell, supra, the court said: "The freedom of commerce which allows the merchants of each state a regional or national market for their goods is not to be fettered by legislation, the actual effect of which is to discriminate in favor of intrastate businesses, whatever may be the ostensible reach of the language."

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PETERS, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 47

HILL et al. v. DONNELLY.

Civ. 11309.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 15, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 17, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 16, 1941.

1. Deeds ⇐56(2), 66

Whether there has been a "delivery" of a deed in a legal sense is dependent upon whether grantor intended that the deed should be presently operative, and the intention of the grantor is a "question of fact" dependent upon the circumstances surrounding the transaction.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Delivery" and "Question of Fact".

2. Deeds ⇐194(2, 5)

Acknowledgment and recordation of deed create a presumption of "delivery", while continued possession of the deed by the grantor raises a presumption of nondelivery.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1071(1)

Where trial court found that there was no valid delivery of deed, and likewise found that there was a valid delivery subject to a trust, and in so far as the trust was concerned it was doubtful whether evidence would support the finding, the findings were in irreconcilable conflict and judgment was required to be reversed.

4. Trusts ⇐43(2)

If there was valid delivery of deed placing title to land in decedent and her brother in joint tenancy, statements subsequently made by the brother to third persons, not agents or representatives of the decedent, to the effect that the brother would hold the property subject to a trust, would not create a "trust" enforceable against the brother.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Trust".

5. Appeal and error ⇐1071(1)

Where there are contradictory and irreconcilable findings on a material issue, and the determination of one of them is essential to the correctness of the judgment, the judgment cannot stand.

6. Appeal and error ⇐931(1)

Findings must be liberally construed to support the judgment if possible.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thurmond Clarke, Judge.

Action by Marie Hill and others against Fred B. Donnelly, to have a deed declared to be void. From an adverse judgment, the defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Henry L. Walleck, of Van Nuys, and Scott McReynolds, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Roscoe R. Hess, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment determining that a deed naming him as a joint grantee of certain real property is "void for failure of legal delivery thereof", and that he holds the real property in trust for the benefit of the estate of Emma E. Donnelly, deceased, or for the residuary legatees named in her will. The two plaintiffs are executrices of the will of Emma E. Donnelly, and bring this action in their representative capacities. The defendant is executor of the will of deceased, and is sued both as executor and in his individual capacity. The questions presented to the trial court, and now presented on this appeal, center around the validity and legal effect of a deed naming the deceased and defendant as joint tenants of the real property in question. According to the complaint, and a supplement to the complaint filed after the trial, it is the theory of the plaintiffs that this deed was never validly delivered, or, if validly delivered, it was subject to a trust in favor of the estate of Emma E. Donnelly, or of the four residuary legatees named in her will. Defendant claims ownership of the property by virtue of the joint tenancy deed free of any claim of the plaintiffs or of the residuary legatees. The trial court found in favor of plaintiffs on both theories alleged in the complaint, and the supplement thereto.

The plaintiffs are a sister and a niece of the deceased. The defendant is a brother of the deceased. These three, together with another brother, Ben Donnelly, are named as residuary legatees in the will of deceased. During her lifetime, the deceased, unmarried, owned the property and resided on it. On June 8, 1933, she executed a deed to the property to Elizabeth Kessler, her friend and companion, who, as part of the same transaction, executed a deed conveying the property to deceased and her brother, the defendant herein, as joint tenants. Both deeds are grant deeds containing no reservations or limitations. The deed to Kessler was recorded June 16, 1933, and the joint tenancy deed was recorded the next day. Both deeds were recorded at the request of the deceased, and both were returned to her. Upon her death on September 12, 1936, the joint tenancy deed was found in a safety deposit box to which the deceased and plaintiff Alta D. Maltby had keys.

The evidence as to whether there was an operative delivery of the deed to the defendant was highly conflicting, and would support a finding either way on that issue. Defendant testified that he did not know of the deed until nearly two years after it was executed, but he admitted that the deceased had talked the matter over with him prior to the execution of the deed. The evidence of plaintiffs also shows that the deeds were executed as part of a plan on the part of the deceased to save the costs of probate; that she remained in physical possession and control of the property and of the deeds until her death; that it was the belief of the testator that she could thus deed the property to her brother the defendant, retain complete control over it during her lifetime, and, upon her death, that he would be obligated to divide it according to the provisions of her will; that after the defendant learned of the deed he made various promises to the plaintiffs and others that he would hold the property in trust to be divided according to the provisions of the will. The testimony offered in behalf of the defendant is reasonably susceptible of the interpretation that the deceased intended to deed the property to defendant without limitation, and intended that the deed should become operative at the time of its execution.

[1, 2] Whether a deed has in fact been delivered, in a legal sense, is dependent upon whether the grantor intended that the deed should be presently operative. This intent is a question of fact dependent upon all the circumstances surrounding the transaction. See cases collected and commented on in 9 Cal.Jur., p. 153, sec. 52. Acknowledgment and recordation create a presumption of delivery, while continued possession of the deed by the grantor raises a presumption of nondelivery. See cases collected and commented on in 9 Cal.Jur., p. 184, sec. 73, et seq. The trial court was thus presented with conflicting evidence and conflicting presumptions on the vital question of delivery. The theory upon which the trial court resolved this conflict is not clear. It found (finding V) that when the deeds were executed the deceased "desired and intended to retain control of said real property during her lifetime and to save expenses incident to the transfer of her property at time of her death, and that she further desired and intended that her brother, the defendant Fred B. Donnelly, at her death, should divide the same, or the proceeds of the sale thereof, or convey the same, to and for the benefit of the persons entitled to her property as provided in her will that she might leave at the time of her death. That it was not at said or any other time the desire or intent of said deceased to make a gift of said real property to said defendant as his own." Whether that finding is based on the theory of a valid delivery subject to a trust, or an invalid delivery, does not clearly appear.

In finding VI the court found: "That in furtherance of said intent, said deceased conceived the plan of executing a deed thereof to a third party, and causing to be executed by said third party, a joint tenancy deed thereof to herself and the said Fred B. Donnelly, without the delivery of such joint tenancy deed to the said Fred B. Donnelly."

Finding VII is to the effect that the deeds were prepared at the request of deceased by a real estate broker and notary public, while finding VIII sets forth the execution and recordation of the deeds. Finding IX is to the effect that after recordation the deeds were returned to the deceased and were found in her safety deposit box at the time of her death. Finding X sets forth that the defendant furnished no consideration for the deed in question. Finding XI reads as follows: "That neither of said deeds was ever in fact delivered to, or in the possession of, the defendant Fred B. Donnelly, or any agent of said defendant, prior to the death of said deceased. That about two years after the execution of said joint tenancy deed, the said deceased informed defendant that she had placed said property in the names of herself and the said defendant, but that said defendant Fred B. Donnelly did not know at that time that there was a conveyance in the form of a joint tenancy deed and did not know of the existence of a joint tenancy deed until about May 1936, at which time said deceased obtained information from Marie Hill, a sister of deceased, to the effect that said joint tenancy deed was recorded as aforesaid. That at the time of the first knowledge of the said defendant of the existence of said joint tenancy deed, conveying said real property to the said deceased and to the said defendant in joint tenancy, the said defendant indicated no acceptance of said joint tenancy deed or any intention with respect to the same except to convey said real property in the manner directed by the Will of said deceased. That on no occasion did the said deceased ever inform the said defendant that she had any intention of giving said real property to said defendant as his own, or that she had accepted delivery of said joint tenancy deed as an agent of said defendant for his individual benefit. That said deceased accepted delivery of said joint tenancy deed only with the intention that any interest conveyed by it to the defendant should be held by the said defendant for the benefit of her estate at time of her death and the persons entitled thereto under the terms of her Will."

It is further found that it was the intention of deceased "and the defendant so promised the deceased" to divide the property among the persons entitled thereto under the will of deceased; that at no time prior to the death of deceased did defendant accept a conveyance to himself; that deceased remained in possession of the property until her death; that in May, 1936, it was the intent of defendant to divide the property as set forth in the will.

The same confusion disclosed by the findings is carried into the judgment. In paragraph 1 of the judgment it is ordered, adjudged and decreed that "any claim of the defendant, Fred B. Donnelly, in his individual capacity" to the property arising by reason of the deed "is held by said defendant Fred B. Donnelly for the benefit of the estate of said deceased, Emma E. Donnelly, and the persons entitled thereto under her Will". Paragraph 2 of the judgment reads as follows: "That said joint tenancy deed is void for failure of legal delivery thereof to the said defendant Fred B. Donnelly and for failure of the acceptance thereof by the said Fred B. Donnelly." By paragraph 3 defendant is ordered in his individual capacity to execute a deed to the property to himself as executor and to the plaintiffs as executrices of the will of the deceased.

[3, 4] We are thus faced with a situation where the trial court found, on conflicting evidence, that there was no delivery of the deed. If that is all the court had found, that would be the end of the case, inasmuch as that finding is supported by the evidence. But then the court found, in effect, that defendant held the property in trust for those mentioned in the will of the deceased. This finding is based on the theory of a valid delivery subject to a trust. The two findings are in irreconcilable conflict. It is impossible to ascertain what the trial court decided. If there was a valid delivery, as implied by the findings relating to the trust, then we would be faced with the question as to whether such delivery was subject to the trust. There is no evidence that the deeds were executed in reliance on the promise of the defendant to hold the property in trust for those named in the will, nor, in fact, is there any direct evidence that he promised the deceased, after the deeds were executed, that he would hold the property subject to the trust. Statements made to third persons not the agents or representatives of the deceased certainly could not create the trust. Thus, had the court simply found that there was a delivery, and that there was a trust, we would be compelled to hold that there is no evidence to support the trust. The result would be that there would be an absolute delivery.

[5, 6] The result of this analysis leads to the conclusion that the judgment must be reversed. The trial court has found, and adjudged, that there was no valid delivery. It has likewise found there was a valid delivery subject to a trust. In so far as the trust is concerned, it is very doubtful if the evidence will support the finding. Where there are contradictory and irreconcilable findings on a material issue, and the determination of them one way or the other is essential to the correctness of the judgment, the judgment cannot stand. The rule is thus stated in Hollywood Cleaning & P. Co. v. Hollywood L. Service, 217 Cal. 131, 137, 17 P.2d 712, 714: "Although it is true that findings must be liberally construed to support the judgment if possible, it is equally true that, where there are contradictory, irreconcilable findings about matters material to a proper disposition of the case, the appellate court can do nothing but reverse the case. Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal. 454, 18 P. 872, 21 P. 11; Estep v. Armstrong, 91 Cal. 659, 27 P. 1091; Los Angeles, etc., Land Co. v. Marr, 187 Cal. 126, 200 P. 1051; Clavey v. Loney, 80 Cal. App. 20, 251 P. 232; Meyer v. White, 54 Cal.App. 293, 201 P. 801." See, also, Mohun v. Timm, 20 Cal.App.2d 136, 66 P.2d 701; Vuich v. Smith, 140 Cal.App. 453, 35 P.2d 365; Darrah v. Lang, 119 Cal.App. 552, 6 P.2d 989; Boyle v. Boyle, 97 Cal. App. 703, 276 P. 118; Huling v. Seccombe, 88 Cal.App. 238, 263 P. 362; Reak v. Borsi, 55 Cal.App. 169, 202 P. 951; Johnstone v. Gloster, 49 Cal.App. 750, 194 P. 504.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment should be, and hereby is reversed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; WARD, J

42 Cal.App.2d 796

In re CAZAURANG'S ESTATE.
HOFFMAN et al. v. THOMAS.

Civ. 2607.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 10, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 11, 1941.

1. Wills ⇐196

Where holographic will was revoked by later witnessed will, and testator subsequently made an addition to the holographic will, testator thereby intended to adopt the original holographic will as subsequently modified, and such will was his last will and testament to the exclusion of the witnessed will. Probate Code, § 25.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1054(1)

Any error in reception of evidence was harmless where record disclosed that such evidence was not considered by the trial court and that it could not have affected the result.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Edward J. Kelly, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Jean Cazaurang, deceased, wherein different wills were offered for probate. From judgment admitting to probate the will in favor of Marie Lees Thomas, Win E. Hoffman, etc., and others appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Hearing denied; CURTIS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

A. M. Thompson, H. J. Bischoff and Luce, Forward, Lee & Kunzel, all of San Diego, for appellants.

Marion P. Betty and Porter C. Blackburn, both of Los Angeles, and Dempster McKee, of San Diego, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

On June 11, 1927, Jean Cazaurang executed a will leaving nine-tenths of his estate to his second cousin, Marie Lees, now Marie Lees Thomas. On January 2, 1929, immediately to the right of and below his signature on that will he wrote that date and provisions leaving $1 to the son of his niece and $1 to his wife, and beneath that he again signed his name. Between his signature to the original will and the new date he made a rough bracket. It was stipulated that both this original will and this addition thereto were entirely in the handwriting of the deceased. Both portions were written in French, and the English translation of the entire document is as follows:

"Los Angeles,
"11th of June, 1927.

"If my soul and my body are separated before Marie Lees, my parent and employee, I wish that she would have ninety parts of my property in America and France, and the tenth remaining divided between the children of my two sisters, Marie and Catherine; and Annie Marie Vignau, one-quarter of said tenth, and the other three-fourths in equal parts between the children of sister Catherine.

"J. Cazaurang) January 2,
) 1929

"To Jean Casadoumecq, son of my niece, I leave $1.00 and to my wife $1.00.

"Jean Cazaurang."

In the meantime, on April 25, 1928, the deceased executed a witnessed will in which he left his undivided one-half interest in a large ranch, which constituted the bulk of his estate, to his wife, Marie Cazaurang, pointing out that the other half of this ranch already belonged to her. In that will he revoked all former wills by him made.

Both wills were offered for probate and the admission to probate of the first of these wills, with the addition thereto dated January 2, 1929, was contested by the estate of the decedent's widow and by Jean B. Ganchou. Among other things, the court found that the instrument dated June 11, 1927, with the addition dated January 2, 1929, constituted the last will of said decedent; that the purported will dated April 25, 1928, was revoked by the other will; that the holographic writing dated June 11, 1927, was revived, republished and re-executed as the will of the deceased by the holographic writing dated January 2, 1929; and that the two writings together constituted one will and the last will of said deceased. An order and judgment was accordingly entered admitting to probate the first of these wills, with the addition thereto, as the last will of the deceased, and this appeal followed.

The appellants contend that since the will dated June 11, 1927, had been revoked by the witnessed will of April 25, 1928, it could not have been republished or revived by the addition made on January 2, 1929, since that addition did not expressly refer to or adopt the language of the will of June 11, 1927. It is argued that the addition made on January 2, 1929, is a codicil but since it does not refer to the will of June 11, 1927, it necessarily must be taken as a codicil to the will executed on April 25, 1928.

Section 25 of the Probate Code provides that the execution of a codicil referring to a previous will has the effect of republishing the will, as modified by the codicil. In Re Estate of Plumel, 151 Cal. 77, 90 P. 192, 193, 121 Am.St.Rep. 100, an attempted holographic will, which was invalid because not properly executed, was held to have been incorporated into and made a part of a valid will by a codicil properly executed which was on the reverse side of the same paper. While the writing on the reverse side of the paper was labeled "codicil" that writing did not otherwise refer to the invalid will on the other side of the paper. In that case, the court said:

"But we think that in the present case there was a sufficient reference in the codicil to identify the will upon the obverse of the same sheet of paper as the instrument referred to. The later paper is designated by the testator as a 'codicil' a term which in itself implies that it is an addition to or modification of some existing testamentary paper. 'A codicil is some addition to or qualification of a last will and testament. A codicil is part of a will to which it is attached or referred, and both must be taken and construed together as one instrument.' Proctor v. Clarke, 3 Redf.Sur. (N.Y.) 445, 448. By its very definition, the word 'codicil' imports a reference to some prior paper as a will. And the fact that the codicil is written upon a sheet of paper containing a writing which purports to be testamentary in character is sufficient to justify the inference that such writing is the will referred to by the codicil.

"In Jarman on Wills, *153, it is said: 'It seems to have been considered, in the ecclesiastical courts at least, that the fact of the codicil being written on the same piece of paper as the prior will (though it does not in terms refer to such will) sufficiently indicates an intention to treat that as the subsisting will.' In Hobart v. Hobart, 154 Ill. 610, 39 N.E. 581, 45 Am. St.Rep. 151, the court said: 'Where the codicil is written on the same paper as the will, or clearly and unmistakably refers to the will, so as to preclude all doubt of its identity, proof of the codicil establishes the will without further proof, except such portions thereof as are revoked or altered by the codicil.'"

In Re Estate of Finkler, 3 Cal.2d 584, 46 P.2d 149, it was held that interlineations in a holographic will were to be given effect though not accompanied by a redating, re-execution and republishing of the instrument.

[1] While the addition with which we are here concerned is not, strictly speaking, an interlineation, with respect to the prior will to which it was attached, no reason appears why it should not be given an equal effect. Moreover, while the word "codicil" was not used in connection therewith the addition was not only written on the same sheet of paper as the prior will and on the same side, but it immediately follows the prior will with a rough bracket between the new date and the signature on the prior will. The addition is dated and signed and attached to the prior will not only physically, but by means of a rough bracket.

In addition to the instrument itself, Marie Lees Thomas testified that this original will of June 11, 1927, was handed to her by the deceased in June, 1927; that he took it back from her some time in December, 1928; that he again handed it to her on January 4, 1929, at which time the portion following the bracket had been added; and that she then retained it after the testator's death.

Whether we call this a codicil or a republication and re-execution, the deceased meant something by the words he added to this instrument on January 2, 1929. The added words disclose a testamentary intent and he meant to make some change in the disposition of his estate. He could hardly have intended it merely as a change in his 1928 will because he made no reference to that instrument by attachment or otherwise, and the provision leaving his wife $1 was inconsistent with the 1928 will in which he left the bulk of his estate to her. It is a justifiable inference and we think the most reasonable inference both from the instrument itself and the surrounding circumstances, that the testator, in making the addition on January 2, 1929, and in redating and resubscribing the same, intended thereby to adopt the provisions of the instrument to which it was attached, as modified by the addition, and to republish and re-execute the entire instrument as his last will. The manner in which the addition was made was a sufficient reference to, and adoption of, the language of the original will of June 11, 1927. The evidence sufficiently supports the inference and conclusion drawn by the trial court.

[2] The appellants further contend that certain evidence offered by the respondent was improperly received. Not only does the record disclose that this evidence was not considered by the trial court, but it clearly appears that it could not have affected the result.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: MARKS, J.; GRIFFIN, J.

43 Cal.App.2d Supp. 854

PEOPLE v. LOPEZ et al.
SAME v. FAGAN.
Cr. A 1757, A 1760.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

Feb. 8, 1941.

1. Criminal law ⇐1001

In absence of a denial of probation, the suspension of a sentence or a part thereof is recognized as the "granting of probation" although not accompanied by any other evidence that that was court's purpose. Pen. Code, § 1203.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Granting of Probation".

2. Criminal law ⇐1134(10)

If trial court desired to avoid referring matter to probation officer and thereafter having to consider his report before granting probation, there was an error of procedure in disregarding mandatory provisions of statute which error occurred before judgment and hence was reviewable on appeal from the judgment. Pen.Code, §§ 1203, 1469.

3. Criminal law ⇐1001

While probation may be summarily denied, it is error summarily to grant it. Pen. Code, § 1203.

4. Criminal law ⇐1001

Where attorney for defendants who pleaded guilty to charge of petty theft stated that defendants desired to apply for probation prior to imposing of sentences, court's denial of applications for probation constituted a "denial of probation", and hence court had no authority to suspend part of sentences, and, tested on habeas corpus, suspension would be held a nullity and sentences would be regarded as straight jail sentences. Pen.Code, § 1203.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Denial of Probation".

5. Criminal law ⇐1134(10)

Where trial court because of denial of applications for probation was unauthorized to suspend a part of the sentences but it appeared that court did not intend to require defendants to serve 180 days in jail, defendants were entitled to relief on appeal from the effects of trial court's misapprehension as to its power. Pen.Code, §§ 1203, 1469.

6. Criminal law ⇐1144(17)

The reviewing court could not take account of severity of sentences on two counts charging that defendant drove without a license, since it would not be presumed that trial court was taking advantage of such counts to inflict punishment in addition to that authorized by law for offense of driving while intoxicated. Vehicle Code, §§ 250, 502, St.1935, pp. 128, 174; § 332, St.1939, p. 2320.

7. Criminal law ⇐984

Two punishments may not be imposed for one offense charged twice.

8. Criminal law ⇐984

A count charging that defendant drove a motor vehicle on a public highway without having a valid operator's or chauffeur's license, and count charging that defendant drove motor vehicle on the public highway after his operator's and chauffeur's license and his driving privilege had been suppressed or revoked, charged but one offense, and hence two punishments could not be imposed for such offense. Vehicle Code, § 250, St.1935, p. 128; § 332, St.1939, p. 2320.

9. Criminal law ⇐1209

Where one act violates two separate statutory provisions, ingredients of offense under each provision being essentially the same, two punishments cannot be imposed.

10. Criminal law ⇐984

Where first count charged driving a vehicle upon a public highway while under influence of intoxicating liquor, and second count charged defendant with being in a state of drunkenness upon a street contrary to municipal code, judgment on second count was not erroneous on ground that second count was included within first count where acts covered by first count did not necessarily include the act charged in second count. Vehicle Code, § 502, St.1935, p. 174.

11. Criminal law ⇐1001

Alleged "orders of probation" which consisted merely in suspension of only two days of each 180 days sentence, which were made in attempt to deprive county board of parole commissioners of authority vested to grant parole, and which were made without reference to and report from probation officer, were required to be set aside. Pen.Code, § 1203.

12. Criminal law ⇐1023(3)

An appeal from order made before judgment denying defendants' requests for permission to file applications for probation was unauthorized and hence was dismissible. Pen.Code, § 1466, subd. 2(a–c).

13. Criminal law ⇐1023(10)

An appeal to Superior Court from a "judgment" in criminal prosecution in a municipal court is regarded as an appeal from a "final judgment of conviction". Pen. Code, § 1466, subd. 2(a).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Final Judgment of Conviction" and "Judgment".

14. Criminal law ⇐1023(11)

Where an appeal is from the judgment and sentence, appeal from sentence may be dismissed without any prejudice to the appellant if appellate court considers the appeal from judgment as unaffected by dismissal of appeal from sentence and as presenting an appeal on its merits. Pen.Code, § 1466, subd. 2(a–c).

15. Criminal law ⇐1023(11)

In determining whether appeal from sentence should be dismissed, reviewing court would consider fact that, if appeal were dismissed, erroneous judgment would be left standing and defendant might have to serve an imprisonment of an additional 180 days not because of authority of law but because trial court erred and irregular notice of appeal left the reviewing court helpless to right the wrong. Pen.Code, § 1466, subd. 2(a–c).

16. Criminal law ⇐1134(1)

The Appellate Department of the Superior Court will not permit a prejudicial error to survive if there is a legitimate way open to correct it.

17. Criminal law ⇐1023(11)

An appeal lies from a "sentence" in a criminal case because it lies from the "final judgment of conviction", "sentence" being synonymous with "judgment" and "final judgment of conviction", and being the judgment of the court before which trial in criminal case is had formally declaring to accused legal consequences of the guilt. Pen. Code, §§ 1191, 1203.1 to 1203.3, 1445, 1461a; § 1466, subd. 2(a–c).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Sentence".

18. Criminal law ⇐1081

Notices on appeal to the Superior Court should not be construed more strictly in criminal cases than they are in civil cases where rule is that notices of appeal are liberally construed to preserve right of review unless it appears that respondent has been misled by misdescription. Pen.Code, § 1466, subd. 2(a–c).

19. Criminal law ⇐1023(11)

An appeal from a "sentence" is not dismissible even if a distinction may legitimately be made between "judgment" and "sentence" in view of policy to hear appeals upon the merits and to avoid forfeiture of substantial rights upon technicalities. Pen. Code, §§ 1191, 1203.1 to 1203.3, 1445, 1461a; § 1466, subd. 2(a–c).

20. Criminal law ⇐1081

A notice of appeal was not insufficient because it was from "the order and sentence", whereas there were four counts as to each of which there was an order and a sentence, where the four judgments were introduced in statement on appeal with the words "The Court thereupon immediately pronounced sentence, as follows". Pen.Code, § 1466, subd. 2(a–c).

21. Criminal law ⇐1081

A notice of appeal was not insufficient because it was from "the order and sentence" whereas there were four counts as to each of which there was an order and sentence, where appellant could treat separate sentences which were to run consecutively as constituting in substance a single judgment. Pen.Code, § 1466, subd. 2(a–c).

Appeals from Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles; Joseph L. Call, Judge.

Manuel Lopez and others, in one case, were convicted of petty theft in the municipal court, and they appeal from such conviction and from an order; and Bernard J. Fagan, in another, was convicted of offenses relating to driving on the public highway while under influence of intoxicating liquor, and he appeals from an order and sentence made by the municipal court.

Appeal from order in first case dismissed and judgment and sentence reversed, and in second case sentence on one count reversed with directions and order reversed with directions.

Ben L. Blue, of Los Angeles, for appellants in first case.

Frederick M. Hall, City Public Defender, Kenneth E. Lynch, Deputy Public Defender, and Baldo M. Kristovich, Deputy Public Defender, all of Los Angeles, amici curiae in first case.

Joseph Henry Wolf, of Los Angeles, for appellant in second case.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., W. Joseph McFarland, Asst. City Atty., and John L. Bland, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for respondent in both cases.

Frederick M. Hall, City Public Defender, and Baldo M. Kristovich, Deputy Public Defender, both of Los Angeles, amici curiae in second case.

BISHOP, Judge.

For convenience we shall refer to the first of the above cases, with its three defendants, as the Lopez case, and the second one, with its sole defendant, as the Fagan case. There was no trial in either case; all of the defendants pleaded guilty, judgment following immediately without the taking of any evidence and without any reference to or report from a probation officer.

Proceedings in Lopez Case.

In the Lopez case the three defendants were charged with petty theft of personal property of the approximate value of $15. Represented by counsel, they entered a plea of guilty, and then the following dialogue took place between the trial judge and Mr. Lynch, the attorney for the defendants:

Mr. Lynch: "These defendants desire at this time to apply for probation prior to the imposing of sentence by the court." (At this time each of the defendants stated "Yes" and nodded his head affirmatively.)

Mr. Lynch: "If your Honor please, I am informed that this is the first offense for these three young men, and I therefore move the court that they be permitted to file application for probation."

The Court: "Permission to file application for probation denied."

Mr. Lynch: "Does your Honor mean that these defendants will not be permitted to file for probation?"

The Court: "That is the order of the court."

The defendants then waived the statutory time for sentence and the trial court announced: "The sentence will be as follows: As to each defendant I hereby sentence the defendants and each of them to 180 days in the City Jail; 90 days of said sentence is ordered suspended; 90 days to be served."

Proceedings in Fagan Case.

The defendant Fagan was charged in four counts with the following offenses: first, with driving a vehicle upon a public highway while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, in violation of section 502, Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 174; second, with being and appearing in a state of drunkenness and intoxication in and upon a street, sidewalk, highway and railroad depot and in a place open to public view, contrary to section 41.27 of the Los Angeles Municipal Code; third, with driving a motor vehicle on a public highway without then and there holding a valid operator's or chauffeur's license, an act made a misdemeanor in section 250 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 128; and fourth, with driving a motor vehicle on a public highway after his operator's and chauffeur's license and his driving privileges had been suspended or revoked, contrary to section 332, Vehicle Code, St.1939, p. 2320. All these acts were done, according to the allegations of the complaint, on or about the 26th day of October, 1940, and the three offenses that involved driving a vehicle were committed on Hollywood Boulevard.

Appearing for arraignment on these charges without counsel, the defendant pleaded guilty to each count and waived postponement of sentence. "The Court thereupon," we read in the settled statement on appeal, "immediately pronounced sentence as follows: Count One: One hundred and eighty days, suspended two years; probation granted, defendant to serve one hundred and seventy-eight days; Count Two: One hundred and eighty days, suspended two years; probation granted, defendant to serve one hundred and seventy-eight days; Count Three: One Hundred and eighty days, suspended two years; probation granted, defendant to serve one hundred and seventy-eight days; Count Four: One Hundred and eighty days, suspended two years; probation granted, defendant to serve one hundred and seventy-eight days. The sentences on each count to run consecutively."

Discussion of Lopez Case.

[1-3] In the absence of a denial of probation, the suspension of a sentence or a part thereof has been recognized as in fact the granting of probation, although not accompanied by any other evidence that that was the Court's purpose. In re Herron, 1933, 217 Cal. 400, 19 P.2d 4. The proceedings just preceding the imposition of the sentence in this case, viewed in the light of the immediate subsequent action taken by the trial court, may possibly be explained as not a denial of probation, but as expressive of a desire on the part of the trial court to avoid referring the matter to the probation officer and thereafter having to consider his report, before granting probation. If this explanation is the correct one, then we have an error of procedure, which occurred before judgment and so is reviewable on an appeal from the judgment. Section 1469, Penal Code. The error of procedure consists in disregarding the mandatory provisions of section 1203, Penal Code, which, after providing that probation may be summarily denied, continues: "* * * if probation is not denied, the court must immediately refer the matter to the probation officer to investigate and to report to the court at a specified time, upon the circumstances surrounding the crime and concerning the defendant and his prior record * * *. At such time or times fixed by the court, the court must hear and determine such application and in connection therewith must consider any report of the probation officer, and must make a statement that it has considered such report * * *." We are of the opinion, in view of these clear provisions, that while probation may be summarily denied, it is erroneous summarily to grant it.

Usually a defendant granted probation, even irregularly, does not feel aggrieved and does not complain. But the defendants here do feel aggrieved and are complaining. They represented to the trial court, after he had taken the action complained of, that, if the matter were referred to the probation officer as required by law, it would be made to appear that all three of the defendants were seniors in one of the City's high schools; that one was manager of the school's football team, one of the others was president of the school's student body and quarter-back on the team; and that none of the three had ever before been involved in any legal difficulties. This showing is mentioned not because we deem such a showing necessary in order to bring the requirement of the code—that the matter be referred to the probation officer—into effect, but to illustrate in this case the theory of the code section, that an enlightened judge is the better able to grant probation wisely than one who acts summarily.

[4, 5] We are of the opinion, however, that the replies of the trial judge, to the defendants' statement that they desired to apply for probation and their formal motion to be permitted to file their applications, are most reasonably understood as a denial of probation. But if probation was not being granted, then the trial court had no authority to suspend a part of the sentence (Ex parte Howard, 1925, 72 Cal. App. 374, 237 P. 406 and cases cited), and tested on habeas corpus the suspension would be held a nullity and the sentences would be regarded as straight jail sentences of 180 days each. In re Collins, 1908, 8 Cal.App. 367, 97 P. 188; In re Clark, 1925, 70 Cal.App. 643, 234 P. 109; In re Eyre, 1934, 1 Cal.App.2d 451, 36 P.2d 842. The trial court did not intend, however, we must assume from its complete action, to require the defendants to serve one hundred eighty days in jail. They should, therefore, and in our opinion may have relief on appeal from the effects of the trial court's misapprehension as to its power. See People v. Mendosa, 1918, 178 Cal. 509, 173 P. 998. The result of our judgment will be to grant relief to the defendants without prejudice to the rights of the People.

Discussion of the Fagan Case.

[6-9] As already noted, defendant Fagan was sentenced to serve one hundred and eighty days on each of the four charges made against him, the sentences to run consecutively. Of the seeming severity of the sentences on the two counts charging that the defendant drove without a license, we can not take account—it is not to be presumed that the trial court was taking advantage of these counts to inflict punishment, in addition to that authorized by law, for the offense of drunk driving—but we must take account of the fact that the third and fourth counts actually charge but one offense, although approached from different view points. As two punishments may not be imposed for one offense, charged twice, the judgment on Count IV should be reversed. People v. Ryan, 1925, 74 Cal.App. 125, 131, 239 P. 419; People v. Horowitz, 1933, 131 Cal.App.Supp. 791, 795, 19 P.2d 874; and see People v. Twedt, 1934, 1 Cal.2d 392, 398, 35 P.2d 324. The same rule is applied where one act violates two separate statutory provisions, the ingredients of the offense under each provision being essentially the same, as they are here. State v. Masnik, 1939, 123 N.J.L. 335, 8 A.2d 701, 705; Weaver v. State, 1906, 74 Ohio St. 53, 77 N.E. 273, 275.

[10] It is also argued that the offense stated in the second count (being drunk in a public place) consisted only in appearing drunk on a public street at the time of driving while under the influence of liquor, in which event there should be no judgment on Count II because it is, in fact, included within Count I, as is held in such cases as People v. Buchanan, 1929, 106 Cal.App.Supp. 765, 288 P. 50; People v. Twedt, 1934, 1 Cal.2d 392, 35 P.2d 324; and People v. Kynette, 1940, 15 Cal.2d 731, 104 P.2d 794 (but see People v. Burkhart, 1936, 5 Cal.2d 641, 55 P.2d 846). The trial court, in considering the matter of probation on its merits, or the County Board of Parole Commissioners, if the problem is ever presented to it, should give due weight to the fact, if it be a fact, that the public appearance incident to Count I was the only public appearance while drunk that falls within Count II. Not having the facts before us, we cannot so determine; the acts covered by Count I may, but do not necessarily, include the act charged in Count II.

[11] Turning to the orders made after the imposition of the sentences, we find that the trial court has clothed them in the guise of probationary orders; the sentences are suspended for two years and "probation granted." What has actually been ordered, of course, is the suspension of only two days of each one hundred and eighty days sentence, and if we recognize this as the "act of grace and clemency" which the granting of probation is supposed to be (People v. Hainline, 1933, 219 Cal. 532, 534, 28 P.2d 16) and not as an attempt to deprive the County Board of Parole Commissioners of the authority vested in it to grant parole, then we alone of all those charged with responsibilities in the matter, are blind to the true state of things. These "orders of probation," moreover, were made without a reference to and report from the probation officer, and for this reason, too, should be set aside.

The Wording of Notices of Appeal.

The work of appellate courts is taken up to too great an extent with questions of procedure which would never arise if counsel would take the slightest pains to ascertain and follow the plain directions of the codes. The notices of appeal in both these cases serve to illustrate our observation, although the notice of appeal in the Lopez case is not so glaring an example.

I. Appeals in Lopez Case.

[12, 13] In the Lopez case the three defendants gave notice that they and each of them appealed "from the order made denying the defendants; (sic) and each of them, requests for permission to file an application for probation, and from the judgment and sentence made and entered in the above-entitled case on the 28th day of September, 1940." Section 1466, Penal Code, determines what appeals may be taken from municipal courts in criminal cases. It authorizes appeals by the defendant "(a) From a final judgment of conviction. (b) From any order made after judgment affecting his substantial rights. (c) From an order denying a motion for a new trial." As the order the defendants have appealed from was made before judgment, the appeal from it was unauthorized and must be dismissed. People v. Jones, 1927, 87 Cal.App. 482, 495, 262 P. 361. Instead of following the language of the code, by taking their appeal from the "final judgment of conviction," the defendants appealed from the "judgment and sentence." In at least twenty-four cases (beginning with People v. Dunlap, 1936, 12 Cal.App.2d 333, 55 P.2d 522, and continuing down to People v. Dutton, Cal.App., 1940, 107 P. 2d 937), appeals from "judgments" have been regarded as appeals from the final judgments of conviction, but appeals from "sentences" have been dismissed. These decisions were all written by the two divisions of the District Court of Appeal of this (the second) Appellate District (two of the cases being taken over by the Supreme Court, which made no change in the ruling). Deferentially, but for reasons about to be given, we are not dismissing the appeal from the sentence.

II. Appeals in Fagan Case.

[14-16] Where an appeal is from the judgment and sentence, the appeal from the sentence may be dismissed without any prejudice to the appellant if, as has always been the case, the appellate court considers the appeal from the judgment as unaffected by the dismissal of the appeal from the sentence and as presenting an appeal on its merits. But a different situation is presented where, as in the Fagan case, the appeal is "from the order and sentence of this Court heretofore made and entered on the 28th day of October, 1940." If the appeal from the sentence is dismissed, as the People argue that it should be, and as the procession of cases referred to would warrant (to which procession should be added People v. Sepulveda, Cal.App., 1940, 106 P.2d 18, where there was an appeal from the "sentence" but not from the judgment), then the erroneous judgment will be left standing, and the defendant may have to serve an imprisonment of an additional one hundred eighty days, not because the law authorizes it, but because the trial court erred and the irregular notice of appeal leaves us helpless to right the wrong. We are not willing ourselves to act without legal authority in order to correct a similar act, but neither are we willing to let a prejudicial error survive if there is a legitimate way open to us to correct it.

III. An Appeal Lies from a "Sentence".

Although our decisions in such cases as these are not ordinarily reviewable by any of the higher courts of the state, nevertheless, because we recognize the desirability of uniformity of decision and realize that that is to be obtained by our following the paths marked by our courts of greater wisdom, our practice is not to deviate from the course they have indicated, even though we would have preferred another. We are presuaded that we should make a detour in the present instance, however, because, we respectfully submit, the trail marked by the decisions referred to was neither surveyed nor adopted with deliberation, is not justified by either authority or logic, but is contrary to both, and may, as in the instant case, lead to a door closed to all effort to correct a harmful error. We are further persuaded to depart from precedent in this case because the problem is one of our jurisdiction on appeal, and so it lies within the power of the courts whose decisions we are declining to follow to set our judgments aside, if, after weighing the matter, they are of the opinion that we are wrong.

So far as we have been able to find, the first case in which an appeal from a "sentence" was dismissed, was, as already stated, People v. Dunlap, 1936, 12 Cal.App.2d 333, 336, 55 P.2d 522, 523, 524. It appears from the opinion that the defendant had appealed from an order denying him a new trial, from the judgment, the verdict and sentence. The question of the appeal from the sentence is disposed of as follows: "Since no appeal lies from either 'the verdict' or 'the sentence,' the attempted appeal therefrom is dismissed." No authority was cited and no consideration whatever was given to the possible scope of the word "sentence." This first decision has been succeeded, as already noted, by twenty-four cases, in each of which an appeal from a "sentence" was dismissed, but in not one of them was there a case cited, other than one or more of the twenty-five, and in not one of them was there any consideration given to the possible meaning of "sentence." Without discussion, the word "judgment" was assumed to mean "final judgment of conviction"; without comment, the word "sentence" was assumed to mean something from which an appeal was unauthorized just because that particular word did not appear in the code provisions concerning appeals.

[17] Because of the respect we entertain for the learned justices to whose decisions we have just been referring, we make bold to state our confidence that, when they do consider what a "sentence" is, they will conclude that an appeal from it will lie. An appeal lies from a "sentence" in a criminal case, because it lies from the final judgment of conviction; the two terms are synonymous. "A sentence is the judgment of the court before which the trial in criminal case is had, formally declaring to the accused the legal consequences of the guilt. * * * Briefly, it is the judgment against the accused." 16 C.J. 1265, 1266, 24 C.J.S., Criminal Law § 1556. The law dictionaries define "sentence" as follows: "A judgment of conviction in a criminal case; it is the appropriate word to denote the action of the court before which the trial is had, declaring the consequences to the convict of the fact thus ascertained." Ballentine (1930) Law Dictionary. "The judgment formally pronounced by the court or judge upon a defendant after his conviction in a criminal prosecution, awarding the punishment to be inflicted. The word is properly confined to this meaning." Black's Law Dictionary, 3rd Ed. "In the common law, sentence is exclusively used to denote the judgment in criminal cases. 4 Bl.Comm. 376." Burrill's Law Dictionary (1951). "A judgment, or judicial declaration made by a judge in a cause. The term judgment is more usually applied to civil, and sentence to criminal, proceedings." 3 Bouvier's Law Dictionary, Rawle's 3rd Revision, 3042. Webster's New International Dictionary joins the chorus with this definition of "sentence": "2. A decision or judgment pronounced by a court. * * * 9. Law. In its broadest sense, a judicial determination, judgment, or decree; * * * b. In criminal and ecclesiastical courts, a judgment passed by a court or judge on a person on trial as a criminal or offender; as commonly used, the order by which the court imposes punishment or penalty upon a person found guilty, or the punishment or penalty so imposed." For a multitude of decisions to the same conclusion see "Sentence" in 38 Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, 597. See also Ex parte Shrader, 1867, 33 Cal. 279, 283.

There is nothing in the codes or decisions of California (other than the twenty-five cases which have caused us to stop, look and listen) that require or suggest that the word is used with a different meaning in this state. Section 1191, Penal Code, places limits upon the time to be fixed for "pronouncing judgment," but provides that in case the court entertains a doubt as to the defendant's sanity, "the time for pronouncing sentence" may be extended. Section 1203.1, Penal Code, provides: "The court, judge or justice thereof, in the order granting probation, may suspend the imposing, or the execution of the sentence * * ." In section 1203.2, Penal Code, we find: " * * the court may, if the sentence has been suspended, pronounce judgment * * * but if the judgment has been pronounced and the execution thereof has been suspended, the court may revoke such suspension." Again in section 1203.3, Penal Code, we note the expression: "* * * if the court has not seen fit to revoke the order of probation and impose sentence or pronounce judgment * * *." Section 1445, Penal Code, made applicable to the municipal court by section 1461a of the same code, provides: "When the defendant pleads guilty, or is convicted, * * * the court must render judgment thereon of fine or imprisonment, or both, as the case may be."

Many more illustrations from the code sections could be given; we add a few found in the opinions of our appellate courts. In People v. Stokes, 1907, 5 Cal. App. 205, 214, 89 P. 997, the court argued: "Pronouncing judgment, which is the formal declaration of sentence, is not the trial, nor any part thereof." In Ex parte Robbins, 1915, 27 Cal.App. 677, page 679, 151 P. 14, the court, speaking of a defendant convicted in a justice's court, stated: "He now insists that the judgment of sentence is null and void." Later (27 Cal.App. page 682, 151 P. page 15) the court referred to the "rendition of judgment of sentence." From the opinion in People v. Ryan, 1925, 74 Cal.App. 125, page 132, 239 P. 419, page 422, a case involving at least thirty-one counts, we quote: "The court below pronounced a separate sentence on each count, under which the defendant was convicted, and provided that the sentences run consecutively. Appellant has treated these separate sentences as constituting, which they do, in substance, a single judgment, and has appealed 'from the final judgment of conviction' in the action." From In re Phillips, Cal.Sup., 1941, 109 P.2d 344, 346, we quote: "In the former situation, however, where the court suspends the imposition of the sentence, that is, the rendition of a judgment of conviction, there is no judgment from which the defendant can prosecute an appeal * * *."

In the following cases the opinions refer one or more times to the final judgment of conviction as the "judgment and sentence": In re Bateman, 1928, 94 Cal.App. 639, 640, 271 P. 757, 758; People v. Hartman, 1913, 23 Cal.App. 72, 76, 137 P. 611; People v. Tedesco, 1934, 1 Cal.2d 211, 213, 34 P.2d 467 ("judgment of conviction and sentence"); People v. Bermijo, 1935, 2 Cal. 2d 270, 272, 40 P.2d 823; People v. Wallach, 1935, 8 Cal.App.2d 129, 133, 47 P.2d 1071; People v. Smith, 1939, 36 Cal.App.2d 361, 362, 97 P.2d 867; People v. Kynette, 1940, 15 Cal.2d 731, 737, 762, 104 P.2d 794, (In the opinion in this case "judgment" and "sentence" are frequently used interchangeably.)

It would seem to be demonstrated beyond question that "judgment" and "sentence" are regarded as synonymous terms, in the vocabulary of the criminal law, both elsewhere and in the legal literature of this state. Therefore, the trial court did not misdescribe the judgment rendered when in the statement on appeal in the Fagan case it declared: "The Court thereupon immediately pronounced sentence, as follows." Nor did the defendant fail to appeal from the final judgment of conviction because he referred to it as the "sentence."

[18, 19] But if a distinction may legitimately be made between "judgment" and "sentence," it does not follow that an appeal from a sentence should be dismissed. In People v. Bryant, 1929, 207 Cal. 450, page 452, 278 P. 1025, our supreme court stated, "It is the policy of this court, of course, to hear appeals upon the merits and to avoid, if possible, all forfeiture of substantial rights upon technicalities," and in People v. Appellate Department, 1936, 8 Cal.2d 56, 60, 63 P.2d 812, the supreme court recognized, as we do, that the same policy governs this court. Notices on appeal should not be construed more strictly in criminal cases than they are in civil cases, where the rule is that "notices of appeal are liberally construed to preserve the right of review unless it appears that the respondent has been misled by the misdescription." Kellett v. Marvel, 1936, 6 Cal.2d 464, 471, 58 P.2d 649, 653; and see cases cited in 2 Cal.Jur. 316–319, including Kimple v. Conway, 1886, 69 Cal. 71, 10 P. 189, 190, where an appeal from an order "overruling and denying plaintiff's motion to set aside said judgment * * * and for granting a rehearing therein" was recognized as an appeal from an order denying plaintiff a new trial. Any meaning that "sentence" can with any reason be said to bear in either notice of appeal before us, is so nearly akin to that which must be ascribed to "final judgment of conviction" that the appeal from the "judgment and sentence" in the Lopez case and the "sentence" in the Fagan case should be given effect as applying to their respective final judgments of conviction. To give to "sentence" a meaning (or lack of meaning) that requires the dismissal of the appeal, is not an observance of the policy pronounced by the supreme court, supra, "to hear appeals upon the merits."

[20, 21] The People further question the sufficiency of the notice of appeal in the Fagan case because it is from "the order and sentence," whereas there were four counts, as to each of which there was an order and a sentence. As we have already noted, these four judgments are introduced in the statement on appeal with the words: "The Court thereupon immediately pronounced sentence, as follows." The point is further disposed of by People v. Ryan, supra, 74 Cal.App. 125, page 132, 239 P. 419, page 422, where, as the court observed: "The court below pronounced a separate sentence on each count, under which the defendant was convicted, and provided that the sentences run consecutively. Appellant has treated these separate sentences as constituting, which they do, in substance, a single judgment, and has appealed 'from the final judgment of conviction.'" The appellate court proceeded to strike from the judgment the sentences based on certain counts, affirming the others.

We therefore, in the Lopez case, dismiss the appeal from the order denying the defendants' motion; we reverse the judgment and sentence with directions to the trial court to rearraign the defendants for judgment, not overlooking the possibility of probation. Ex parte Maguth, 1930, 103 Cal.App. 572, 284 P. 940. In the Fagan case, we affirm the judgment as to Counts One, Two and Three; we reverse the judgment as to the fourth count, with directions to the trial court to dismiss the fourth count; we reverse the orders purporting to grant probation, with directions to take any further steps respecting probation in accordance with the law.

We concur: SHAW, P. J; FOX, J.

17 Cal.2d 411

S. A. GERRARD CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION et al.

L. A. 17668.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 19, 1941.

1. Workmen's compensation ⇐308

An "independent contractor" not entitled to a compensation award is one who renders service in the course of an independent employment or occupation following his employer's desires only in the results of the work and not in the means whereby it is to be accomplished.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Independent Contractor".

2. Workmen's compensation ⇐235

The "master and servant relationship" or "employer and employee relationship" exists for purposes of awarding compensation whenever the employer retains the right to direct how the work shall be done as well as the result to be accomplished, the right to control rather than the amount of control exercised being the determinative factor, and the rule requires that the right to exercise complete or authoritative control rather than mere suggestion concerning details must be shown.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Employer and Employee Relationship" and "Master and Servant Relationship".

3. Workmen's compensation ⇐1939

Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence regarding the status of a person claiming compensation, the finding of the Industrial Accident Commission will not be disturbed.

4. Workmen's compensation ⇐1461

Evidence that lessee under its contracts with lessor had no right to do anything with melon crop from planting to sale without lessor's consent and that lessor's right to control lessee's operations extended to all persons who worked for lessee in raising and picking crop showed that lessee was in effect an "employee", though in form he was an "independent contractor", and supported finding that picker who was injured was lessor's "employee" entitled to compensation.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Employee".

Proceeding on a writ of certiorari by the S. A. Gerrard Company and another to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California in favor of Macerio Valdez.

Award affirmed.

For prior opinion see 105 P.2d 159.

Donald Gallagher, of San Francisco, and Marguerite Arnold, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Everett A. Corten and Dan Murphy, Jr., Asst. Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

EDMONDS, Justice.

The proceedings in which the Industrial Accident Commission made an award of compensation in favor of Macerio Valdez are before this court upon the return to a writ of certiorari issued by the District Court of Appeal. The only question for decision is whether Valdez, at the time he was injured, was an employee of the petitioner S. A. Gerrard Company. The award against the petitioner and State Compensation Insurance Fund, its insurance carrier, is based upon findings that it was the special employer of Valdez.

At the time of the accident, the respondent W. Hanaoka had leased land from the Gerrard company and was growing melons upon it. He employed Valdez as a picker. The agreement between the Gerrard company and Hanaoka for the use of this land was stated in three written contracts. One of these was a lease which provided that the land was to be used for the purpose of growing crops of cantaloupes, honeydews or honeyballs as the Gerrard company might direct, and that the provisions of a contemporaneously executed "distributing agreement" and of a "crop mortgage", were a part of it.

By the distributing agreement, W. Hanaoka appointed the Gerrard company as his exclusive agent to perform all engine work necessary to prepare the fields for planting; to haul the melons to its packing shed; to sort, pack and load the melons on cars and trucks; and to market and distribute them. Hanaoka agreed to prepare the premises for planting; to plant the same with the kind and variety of melons as directed by the Gerrard company; to care for the melons until their maturity; to pick and gather them into field centers; and to load them on the Gerrard company's trucks. Another provision was that all picking should be done under the supervision of and in accordance with the directions of the Gerrard company. Hanaoka agreed, also, to hire from the Gerrard company any mules he needed and to purchase all feed from it. He also agreed to furnish all labor, materials, and equipment; to care for equipment of the Gerrard company; to purchase all seed necessary for the growing of the crops from it; and to pay a proportionate part of its advertising costs.

The Gerrard company agreed to sell the seed without warranty or guarantee; to furnish field crates for picking purposes; to advance the grower actual harvesting cost during the harvest season; to make loans to the grower, as in its opinion, were necessary to defray the operating expenses; and to use its best efforts to sell the melons. The agreement further stipulated that if, in the opinion of the Gerrard company, marketing conditions indicated a probable loss in the handling of the melons, it was not obligated to accept, pack, load or make any advances while such conditions existed. Another provision of the contract was that if a proration plan was in effect the company was not obligated to accept melons in excess of the allowed quantity, and it should have the sole right to determine whether the melons were subject to prorate control. It was also given the right to vote and represent the melons, or the acreage thereof, and to act to the same extent as if it were the sole owner of the crop.

The mortgage made the crops security for the payment of land rental amounting to $3,200 and all sums loaned under the terms of the distributing agreement. It provided that in the event of any litigation affecting the crop the Gerrard company might enter the premises and take all necessary measures to protect the crop; also, it might at any time enter to view the crop or take measures to protect it; and might sell and dispose of it at such time and for such sum as it may deem proper.

The decisive question in the case is the relationship between the Gerrard company and W. Hanaoka. If he was an employee of the Gerrard company, then Valdez was also. On the contrary, if W. Hanaoka was an independent contractor then Valdez, as his employee has no rights against the Gerrard company or its insurance carrier.

[1-3] An independent contractor is "one who renders service in the course of an independent employment or occupation, following his employer's desires only in the results of the work and not in the means whereby it is to be accomplished". Moody v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 204 Cal. 668, 670, 269 P. 542, 60 A.L.R. 299; Restatement, Agency, § 2. On the other hand, the relationship of master and servant or employer and employee exists whenever the employer retains the right to direct how the work shall be done as well as the result to be accomplished. Press Pub. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 190 Cal. 114, 210 P. 820; Winther v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 16 Cal.App.2d 131, 60 P.2d 342; Restatement, Agency, § 2. But this rule requires that the right to exercise complete or authoritative control, rather than mere suggestion as to detail, must be shown. Moody v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra; Winther v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra. Also, the right to control, rather than the amount of control which was exercised, is the determinative factor. Hillen v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 199 Cal. 577, 250 P. 570; Moody v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra; Restatement, Agency, § 2. And if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence regarding the status of the person claiming compensation, the finding of the Industrial Accident Commission will not be disturbed. Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 807, 159 P. 721; Carlson v. Industrial Accident Commission, 213 Cal. 287, 2 P. 2d 151.

[4] Under Hanaoka's contracts with the Gerrard company, he had no right to do anything with the melon crop, from planting to sale, without its consent. In form he was an independent contractor; in effect he was an employee of the Gerrard company and its right to control his operations extended to all of the persons who worked for him in raising and picking the crop. This evidence clearly supports the finding that Valdez was an employee of the Gerrard company under the principles applied in Carlson v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra.

The petitioners place great reliance upon Winther v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, but it is not in point upon the facts now before the court. In that case, Winther, who owned a ranch, made an agreement with one Rueda to pick an olive crop and transport it to the packing house for $16 per ton. Rueda employed a man to assist him. The latter was injured and sought compensation from Winther. Because there was no evidence showing that Winther was interested in the slightest degree in the means by which the work should be done or in the details of its accomplishment, Rueda was held to be an independent contractor. The evidence concerning the right of the Gerrard company to control all of W. Hanaoka's operations compels the contrary holding in the present controversy.

The award is affirmed.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J.; SHENK, J.; TRAYNOR, J.; CURTIS, J.; CARTER, J.

17 Cal.2d 415

AULT v. COUNCIL OF CITY OF SAN RAFAEL et al.

S. F. 16544.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 19, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 20, 1941.

1. Mandamus ⇐7

The granting of a writ of mandate is discretionary.

2. Mandamus ⇐1, 10

A writ of mandate will be granted only where necessary to protect a substantial right and only when it is shown that some substantial damage will be suffered by the petitioner if the writ is denied. Const. art. 11, § 8.

3. Mandamus ⇐168(2)

In mandamus proceeding by a registered elector of city to compel publication of proposed amendment to charter of city, and to call a special election thereon, the Supreme Court could not assume, as contended by registered elector, that if proposed amendment was placed on ballot at general election, as intended by respondents, it might be lost sight of and registered elector therefore damaged.

4. Mandamus ⇐74(2)

Where city council ordered that proposed amendment to city charter be placed on ballot for general election, and the earliest possible special election date was 12 days before date of general election if writ of mandate sought by registered elector of city to compel compliance with time limit set out in constitution were to be granted, and registered elector did not show how he, as a taxpayer, would be injured by the short delay, petition for writ of mandate would be denied. Const. art. 11, § 8.

CARTER, J., dissenting.

Mandamus proceeding by John M. Ault, as a registered elector of the City of San Rafael, against the Council of the City of San Rafael and others to compel respondents to publish a proposed amendment to the charter of the City of San Rafael, and to call a special election thereon not less than forty nor more than sixty days thereafter.

Petition denied.

Rehearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

Lionel Browne, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Martinelli & Gardiner, of San Rafael, for respondents.

CURTIS, Justice.

Petitioner, as a registered elector of the city of San Rafael, filed his application for a writ of mandamus to compel respondents to publish a proposed amendment to the charter of said city, and to call a special election thereon not less than forty nor more than sixty days thereafter. An alternative writ of mandate has been heretofore issued; a return filed by respondents; and the cause argued orally by counsel for the respective parties.

It is alleged that a petition requesting the city council to submit to the electors of the city a proposed amendment to the city charter was circulated and signed by more than 15 per cent of the registered electors; that the petition was filed with the city clerk on December 4, 1940, along with a request to publish the same within fifteen days thereafter and to hold a special election thereon not less than forty nor more than sixty days after such publication. It is further alleged that no publication was made within fifteen days from the date of filing nor was a special election thereafter called within a period of seventy-five days following the December 4th filing.

Petitioner contends that such failure to publish and call a special election within the seventy-five day period is in direct violation of Art. XI, sec. 8, of the State Constitution. The provisions therein, it is argued, make it obligatory, on the part of the city council, to so act within the period above designated. Petitioner, therefore, now asks this court to order the council to publish immediately and call a special election not less than forty nor more than sixty days thereafter.

Respondent city council, by its return, admits the filing of the petition and its refusal to publish and call a special election within the seventy-five-day period, but alleges that a resolution was adopted at its meeting on February 3, 1941, wherein it ordered that publication of the petition for the proposed amendment be made on February 20, 1941, and that an election be held thereon on April 14, 1941; the latter date being the date fixed for the holding of a general municipal election of the city. It should be here noted that although petitioner in his original petition alleged that respondents had refused to publish said proposed amendment and had refused to submit the same to the registered voters of said city at the next general election, counsel for petitioner, during the oral argument, admitted that it was the intention of respondents to submit this proposed amendment at the next general election to be held in said city, as ordered by the city council in said resolution of February 3, 1941.

Respondents deny that they have violated Art. XI, sec. 8, of the State Constitution, and maintain that under its provisions it was discretionary with the council to submit said proposed amendment either at a special election to be called after publication of the proposed amendment or at the general election to be held on April 14, 1941.

[1,2] The granting of a writ of mandate is discretionary and it will be granted only where necessary to protect a substantial right and only when it is shown that some substantial damage will be suffered by the petitioner if said writ is denied. Rogers v. Board of Directors, 218 Cal. 221, 22 P.2d 509; Fawkes v. City of Burbank, 188 Cal. 399, 205 P. 675; Clough v. Baber, 38 Cal.App.2d 50, 100 P.2d 519; DeBrincat v. Mogan, 1 Cal.App.2d 7, 36 P.2d 245. It therefore follows that a petitioner upon application must show that as a result of a failure to grant such writ, he will suffer some substantial damage.

[3,4] In the instant case petitioner is asking this court to issue its writ of mandate directing the city council to publish immediately said proposed amendment, and within not less than forty nor more than sixty days thereafter to call a special election on the proposed amendment even though a general election is to be held on April 14th. If the writ were issued immediately, a special election could not possibly be held earlier than April 2nd, because of the necessity of publication and the forty-day limit thereafter required by Art. XI, sec. 8, before election. However, as noted above, the respondent city council has ordered the proposed amendment to be placed on the ballot at the general election on April 14th or only twelve days after the earliest possible special election date. Petitioner does not contend that the amendment would be invalid if it be approved at the general election. During the oral argument counsel for petitioner made some statement to the effect that the proposed amendment, if placed on the ballot at the general election, might be lost sight of and the petitioner therefore damaged. We do not believe this was seriously urged, but even if it were, this court could not make such assumption. Furthermore, counsel for respondents pointed out that this proposed amendment would be the only one on the ballot at the general election. Petitioner has completely failed to show how he, as a taxpayer, would be injured in any way by the short delay between the earliest date of a special election and the general election of April 14th.

No injury being shown, this petition should be denied, and it is so ordered.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J.; SHENK, J.; EDMONDS, J.; TRAYNOR, J.

CARTER, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent.

In my opinion petitioner is clearly entitled to the issuance of a writ of mandate as prayed for in his petition.

Article XI, section 8, as amended in 1936, provides in part:

"The charter of any city or city and county may be amended by proposals therefor submitted by the legislative body thereof on its own motion or on petition signed by fifteen per cent of the registered electors, or both. Such proposals shall be submitted to the electors at either a special election called for that purpose or at any general or special election. Petitions for the submission of any amendment shall be filed with the legislative body of the city or city and county not less than sixty days prior to the general election next preceding a regular session of the Legislature. The signatures on such petitions shall be verified by the authority having charge of the registration records of such city or city and county, and the expenses of such verification shall be provided by the legislative body thereof. If such petitions have a sufficient number of signatures the legislative body of the city or city and county shall so submit the amendment or amendments so proposed to the electors. Amendments proposed by the legislative body and amendments proposed by petition of the electors may be submitted at the same election. The amendments so submitted shall be advertised in the same manner as herein provided for the advertisement of a proposed charter, and the election thereon, held at a date to be fixed by the legislative body of such city or city and county, not less than forty, and not more than sixty, days after the completion of the advertising in the official paper."

It is to be noted that the advertisement of the amendments to the charter shall be done in the same manner as advertisements of a proposed charter. In regard to advertising the charter the section provides: "The legislative body of said city or city and county shall, within fifteen days after such filing, cause such charter to be published once in the official newspaper * *."

On two occasions the appellate courts of this state have had occasion to consider whether or not the calling of the election on a charter amendment was mandatory under Article XI, Section 8. In Lubliner v. Alpers, 145 Cal. 291, 78 P. 722, the court determined that mandamus would not lie to compel the legislative body to call the election. The court does not discuss the reasons upon which its holding was based but at that time, 1904, the provision was quite different. It read: "The charter, so ratified, may be amended at intervals of not less than two years by proposals therefor, submitted by the legislative authority of the city to the qualified electors thereof at a general or special election, held at least forty days after the publication of such proposals for twenty days in a daily newspaper of general circulation in such city, and ratified by a majority of the electors voting thereon, and approved by the legislature as herein provided for the approval of the charter. Whenever fifteen per cent. of the qualified voters of the city shall petition the legislative authority thereof to submit any proposed amendment or amendments to said charter to the qualified voters thereof for approval, the legislative authority thereof must submit the same."

Obviously, the court was correct in holding that the section as it stood in 1904 was not mandatory, for several reasons. The portion thereof dealing with the time the election should be held had to do with proposed amendments initiated by the legislative body of the city rather than the electors. The provision authorizing fifteen per cent of the electors to initiate the proposed amendment contained no provisions as to the time when such election should be held; the only mandatory requirement was that the amendments be submitted to the electors at some time. But even assuming that the provisions as to the time of the election applied to amendments originating with the electors, yet there is no particular time when the election must be had. The requirement is that it be at least forty days after the publication, thus setting a minimum but no maximum, as is done in the section as it now reads. The other authority which considered whether the section was mandatory is Moore v. City of Los Angeles, 58 Cal.App. 555, 209 P. 64, 65. There a writ of mandate was sought to compel the Los Angeles City Council to advertise a proposed amendment within fifteen days from the time the petition by fifteen per cent of the electors was filed. The court held that the requirement that the advertisement of the amendment be made in the same "manner" as the advertisement of a charter, meant that the same method must be followed but that the term "manner" did not include the time the advertisement must be made, that is, within the fifteen days following the filing of the petition for the amendment. The court gives three grounds for so holding, two of which are predicated on the factor that the section as it then read contained the statement: "Such proposals [referring to amendments] shall be submitted to the electors only during the six months next preceding a regular session of the Legislature or thereafter and before the final adjournment of that session and at either a special election called for that purpose or at any general or special election."

By the amendment to the section in 1930 and as appears in the subsequent amendments of 1932 and 1936, the italicized portions of the section were omit- ted. Therefore the court's reasoning as to those two grounds in the Moore case must fall and are no longer the law. The third ground relied on by the court in the Moore case is that it would not be practicable to apply the fifteen day period to charter amendments for the reason that in many instances that period would not be sufficient time in which to verify the signatures on the petition, whereas in the case of a freeholder's charter proposal, the verification of signatures has all been consummated before the fifteen days commences to run. That reasoning I cannot approve. If it were pursued to its logical conclusion the court would indulge in legislation, for the reason that it would render nugatory any period of time fixed for the doing of a certain thing in the constitutional provision adopted by the people. It is to be presumed that the people in enacting the constitutional provision here involved gave consideration to the time physically required to perform the preliminary acts, and concluded that the time specified was sufficient. Furthermore, a more reasonable view would be that if it were impossible to perform the preliminary acts in the stated time the court could determine that the time was extended sufficiently to enable the completion of the verification of the signatures, but no longer. The amount of additional time required would be a question of fact.

Returning again to the constitutional provision as it now reads, I believe that it is patent from the language employed and particularly the above italicized portions thereof, that it is the mandatory duty of the legislative body to call the election not less than forty and not more than sixty days after the advertisement. And to give real force and consequence to that duty, it is equally clear that the advertisement must be made within fifteen days after the petition for the proposed amendment is filed, or at most within the time in fact required for the verification of the signatures on the petition. Otherwise, the purpose to be accomplished by the constitutional provision will be frustrated. The legislative body could postpone the election indefinitely by failing to advertise, and by so doing indirectly and improperly escape their express duty to call the election within the prescribed time. This means, of course, that the phrase "in the same manner" must under the circumstances and for the foregoing reasons be held to embrace not only the method of advertising but also the time when the advertisement must be made. These conclusions are not without support. Sound public policy demands that when electors have the right to amend their charter and they comply with the conditions necessary therefore, they are entitled to have the matter determined by a vote of the electorate in the time specified in the authorizing act. This is a high and treasured privilege which is fundamental in a democracy, and a dilatory or belligerent legislative body should not be permitted to thwart it This is especially true when we consider that such body's functions in the matter are purely ministerial and not legislative. This public policy is recognized in Wallace v. Payne, 197 Cal. 539, 545, 241 P. 879, 881, where it is said:

"Such an interpretation would also be in accord with the statutory policy, that, when cities and cities and counties have once adopted charters, and when they discover that such charters are defective in any particular or are inadequate for the present needs or growth of the municipality, and should be amended, such amendment, in order to be remedial, should be facilitated rather than unreasonably delayed in its adoption."

While it is true that the respondents on February 3, 1941, adopted a resolution evidencing an intent to advertise for the election on February 20, 1941, to be held at the general municipal election on April 14, 1941, that action was taken long after the time prescribed by the Constitution. The petition was filed on December 4, 1940, therefore the advertisement should have been made not later than December 19, 1940, and although respondents deny that they refused to advertise and call the election, they have done nothing except assert that they intended to call one, and it was not until after petitioner had filed his petition for the writ here involved that it passed, on February 3, 1941, its resolution of intention to advertise the proposed amendment on February 20, 1941. Respondents' conduct and pleadings are therefore tantamount to an admission that they never intended to comply with the Constitution, but rather intended to hold the election at the time of the general municipal election in April. This is equivalent to a failure to make any appearance in the proceeding or to admitting petitioner's allegations. Under such circumstances mandamus should issue, as it is not a situation where the respondent has not refused to perform the mandatory act or has already performed it. The fact remains that it has not advertised the amendment or called the election, its mere expression of intention to do so is not enough; indeed that amounts in reality to a confession that the writ should issue. It is immaterial that the time within which respondent should have advertised under the Constitution has expired. That does not prevent the issuance of the writ. Wahl v. Waters, 11 Cal. 2d 81, 77 P.2d 1072; Conn v. City Council, 17 Cal.App. 705, 121 P. 714, 719.

The majority opinion does not decide anything. It ignores and fails to pass upon the only legal proposition presented by the petition, namely, whether under the provisions of Article XI, Section 8 of the Constitution, the City Council was required to advertise the proposed amendment within fifteen days and submit the same to the electors at a special election within sixty days thereafter.

I am positively and unalterably opposed to any such side-stepping policy. The duty of the City Council in the premises is either mandatory or discretionary, and both parties to this litigation and the general public are entitled to know what the opinion of this court is on this proposition.

17 Cal.2d 409

LONG v. LONG.

S. F. 15969.

Supreme Court, Department 2, California.

Feb. 19, 1941.

Divorce ⇐234

Where interlocutory divorce decree directed payment of monthly alimony for six months without reserving right to modify period for making payments, the alimony was duly paid and final decree was subsequently entered, court was without power to modify interlocutory decree so as to require additional monthly alimony payments. Civ.Code, § 139.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; Wm. F. James, Judge.

Suit by Louis A. Long against Margaret C. Long, wherein the defendant was awarded an interlocutory decree of divorce. From an order granting the plaintiff's motion to set aside an order modifying the interlocutory decree of divorce, the defendant appeals.

Order affirmed.

David M. Burnett and John M. Burnett, both of San Jose, for appellant.

Henry E. Monroe and Henriette W. Steinegger, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

On January 7, 1930, the Superior Court of Santa Clara County awarded appellant Margaret C. Long an interlocutory decree of divorce against respondent Louis A. Long directing him to pay appellant $50 a month alimony for the six months from February 5, 1930, to and including July 5, 1930. This alimony was duly paid. The final decree of divorce, entered on March 30, 1931, neither awarded alimony to appellant nor reserved to the court jurisdiction thereafter to make an allowance for appellant's support. On November 10, 1931, on application of appellant supported by an affidavit averring that because of injury she was no longer able to support herself, the court after a hearing made an order modifying the interlocutory decree of divorce by requiring respondent to pay $50 a month alimony thenceforth until further order of the court. On December 20, 1935, the court entered an order granting respondent's motion to set aside the order of November 10, 1931, upon the ground that the attempt to modify the interlocutory decree of January 7, 1930 was without jurisdiction and void. The present appeal is taken from this order.

Section 139 of the Civil Code provides: "Where a divorce is granted for an offense of the husband, the court may compel him to provide for the maintenance of the children of the marriage, and to make such suitable allowance to the wife for her support, during her life or for a shorter period as the court may deem just, having regard to the circumstances of the parties respectively; and the court may from time to time modify its order in these respects." Appellant, relying on Smith v. Superior Court, 89 Cal.App. 177, 264 P. 573, and Bechtel v. Bechtel, 124 Cal.App. 617, 12 P.2d 970, contends that the above section confers on the court an express power to modify an alimony decree even though the alimony was awarded for a limited time, which has expired, and the decree did not contain a reservation of jurisdiction.

This contention is answered adversely and the authorities relied on are distinguished in Tolle v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 10 Cal.2d 95, 73 P.2d 607, which holds that if the court provides for alimony payments for a definite term without reserving the right to change or modify the term, the court has no power to make further allowance for the wife's support after such alimony has been paid and the final decree has been entered.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; HOUSER, J.

17 Cal.2d 490

WATKINS et al. v. NUTTING et al.

L. A. 17672.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 24, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 24, 1941.

1. Automobiles ⇐160(4)

A driver of a vehicle striking a pedestrian crossing highway is not guilty of negligence if driver did those things which a reasonably prudent person would have done under similar circumstances.

2. Automobiles ⇐150, 160(3)

A driver of vehicle must always maintain a vigilant watch for other persons and vehicles using the highway.

3. Automobiles ⇐245(6, 47)

In action for death of pedestrian struck by automobile, under evidence that motorist was driving at speed of 50 miles per hour through rain, that motorist did not see pedestrian until he was within 34 feet of pedestrian, and that immediately before pedestrian was struck motorist did not turn his automobile either to right or to left, whether motorist was negligent was for the jury.

4. Automobiles ⇐160(4)

The right of motorist to claim right of way over a pedestrian crossing highway other than at an intersection or in marked crosswalk is not an absolute one, and pedestrian is not absolutely prohibited from so crossing. Vehicle Code, § 562, St.1935, p. 93.

5. Automobiles ⇐245(72)

Where pedestrian crossing highway other than at intersection or in marked crosswalk was struck by automobile and there was evidence that the pedestrian looked but either did not see the approaching automobile or saw it and misjudged either its speed or distance, question whether pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence was a "question of fact" for the jury. Vehicle Code, § 562, St.1935, p. 93.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

6. Automobiles ⇐246(31)

In action for death of pedestrian struck by automobile while crossing highway, other than at an intersection or in marked crosswalk, instruction regarding duty of one driving an automobile so far as pedestrians are concerned was proper. Vehicle Code, § 562, St.1935, p. 93.

7. Trial ⇐295(4)

In action for death of pedestrian struck by automobile while crossing highway, other than at an intersection or in marked crosswalk, where the instructions when read in their entirety stated the law of case fairly and clearly, the failure to include in each one of them a statement of the rule concerning contributory negligence was not error. Vehicle Code, § 562, St.1935, p. 93.

8. Action ⇐38(6)

The statutory cause of action for wrongful death is one to be exercised by all the heirs, yet it is a joint one, a single one, and an indivisible one. Code Civ.Proc. § 377.

9. Death ⇐105

In wrongful death action, the court or jury may compute damages, if any, by considering the pecuniary damage suffered by all the heirs and return a verdict for one sum. Code Civ.Proc. § 377.

10. Death ⇐41

A wrongful death action must be brought in the name of the person to whom the right is given, and an action by some, but not all, of the heirs, is not authorized by the wrongful death statute. Code Civ.Proc. § 377.

11. Death ⇐101

Where plaintiffs in wrongful death action recover judgment, it is duty of court, in a separate proceeding, to apportion the amount to be awarded to each heir. Code Civ.Proc. § 377.

12. Parties ⇐35

In wrongful death action, complaint alleging that two named children of the decedent were of age of majority and did not join the plaintiffs and were therefore named as defendants did not strictly comply with statute, but the alleged wrongdoers could not object because as to them it was sufficient that the heirs were made parties to the action, in some capacity, so that their rights might be determined in it. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 377, 382.

13. Judgment ⇐97

In wrongful death action, the fact that children of former marriage of decedent were joined as defendants did not alter the essential relations between the parties, since, although named as defendants, they were in reality "plaintiffs" in the case, so that order of court directing clerk to enter their default was ineffective for any purpose. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 377, 382.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Plaintiff".

14. Death ⇐58(1, 2)

In wrongful death action where children of former marriage of decedent were joined as defendants, the plaintiffs were not obliged to produce evidence concerning the amount of damage sustained by such children but the nature of the action was a call upon plaintiffs to inform the jury regarding the existence and relationship of all heirs entitled to bring action. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 377, 382.

15. Torts ⇐13

A plaintiff in an action for wrongful death who does not join as a party an heir who is known to him is liable for damages resulting to the heir from his failure to do so. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 377, 382.

16. Death ⇐101, 106

In wrongful death action where children of former marriage of decedent were joined as defendants, but all evidence introduced on issue of damages related to plaintiffs with no mention of such children who were not mentioned in the instructions, the children who were not mentioned to the jury were not entitled to share in the damages awarded but their remedy was to move for a new trial on the issue of damages. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 377, 382.

17. New trial ⇐135

In wrongful death action where children of former marriage of decedent were joined as defendants but they were not entitled to share in damages awarded because no evidence was introduced regarding their damages and they were not mentioned in instructions, request of such children that motion of other defendants for new trial be granted was not a notice of motion for new trial upon any ground available to the children and did not entitle the children to new trial on issue of damages. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 377, 382.

18. New trial ⇐136

A notice of intention to move for a new trial upon one or more of the grounds specified in the Code of Civil Procedure is essential to the court's jurisdiction.

19. New trial ⇐135

Notice of motion for new trial filed by defendants against whom judgment was rendered gave court jurisdiction to determine motion later made by them but not to grant relief to other parties upon different grounds.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Ernest Klette, Judge.

Action by Irene Guinevere Watkins and others against Franklin P. Nutting and others, for the death of Henry Watkins. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Franklin P. Nutting and the American Vineyard & Investment Company appeal, and defendant Mildred Westra Ingalls and Mahlon Wilson Watkins, children of the deceased, appeal from an order made after judgment seeking to avoid the effect of an order to enter their default.

Judgment and order affirmed.

For prior opinion of District Court of Appeal, see 104 P.2d 413.

Ray W. Hays, of Fresno, for appellants.

Ralph Robinson and Clyde E. Cate, both of Fresno, for appellants Mildred Westra Ingalls and Mahlon Wilson Watkins.

Rae B. Carter and John D. Chinello, both of Fresno, for respondents.

EDMONDS, Justice.

In addition to the appeal by Franklin P. Nutting and the American Vineyard & Investment Company from a judgment against them for damages caused by the death of Henry Watkins, Mildred Westra Ingalls and Mahlon Wilson Watkins, children of the deceased who were named as defendants in the action, have appealed from an order made after judgment. The appellants against whom the judgment is directed contend: (1) That there is no evidence of any negligence on the part of Nutting; and (2) that the evidence shows Watkins was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The other appellants are seeking to avoid the effect of an order to enter their default.

Considering the appeal from the judgment, it appears from the evidence that the accident occurred at about four o'clock on a March afternoon on a three-lane highway a short distance south of Fresno. Watkins was a truck driver and had stopped at a cafe to make a delivery. While walking back to his truck, he was struck by an automobile being driven by Nutting, who was operating it in the course of his duties as president and manager of American Vineyard & Investment Company.

The facts stand practically undisputed. It was raining at the time of the accident. The roadway was wet and the visibility only fair. As Watkins started to cross the highway, the automobile driven by Nutting and several other cars were traveling south on the highway, approaching from his left. Another automobile was coming from the opposite direction.

In describing the relative position of these cars just before the accident occurred, the driver of one in the group going south testified that a truck was in the right traffic lane about 50 yards ahead of him, Nutting in the center traffic lane about 75 or 100 yards ahead of him, and a Chevrolet in the right lane about 35 yards ahead of the truck. He admitted that these distances were mere estimates and the testimony of other witnesses proved them to be inaccurate. No other witness mentioned seeing the truck and there is no other evidence concerning it.

A passenger in the Chevrolet testified that Watkins left the cafe and proceeded at a rapid walk towards the highway; "that he walked up near our car, and as we drove by he just walked behind it and started across the highway; * * * I just put the window down and looked out * * * and Mr. Watkins started across the highway and he looked north one time and he seen this car, must have seen it, and just hesitated for a second, and then started in a fast walk; * * * and just as he reached the east lane or about the white line this car struck him". Other testimony of this witness was: "As he went just behind the car I was in of course I couldn't see him, but as he entered the highway he was looking most of the time to the south, but he looked to the north only one time that I saw—that I know—he really looked—and that is when he hesitated just a second and then started".

Nutting testified that as he approached the scene of the accident he was driving at a speed of between 40 and 45 miles an hour; that he was driving in the right traffic lane until he turned into the center lane for the purpose of passing the Chevrolet. "I was about a couple of car lengths behind the Chevrolet at the time Watkins dodged out from directly behind the Chevrolet and across the highway." According to Nutting's testimony, he first saw Watkins when Watkins was near the westerly line of the center traffic lane and about two car lengths, 34 feet, distant from him; then he sounded his horn, applied his brakes, and swerved to his left; that Watkins proceeded easterly and when on or near the easterly boundary of the center traffic lane Watkins either stopped, or stopped and stepped back; that he turned his car to his right but that the left end of his front bumper hit Watkins; that he stopped his car within about 20 feet; that at the time of this impact his automobile was traveling about 15 miles per hour; that the accident happened in about one-half of a second after he first saw Watkins.

Appellants argue that these facts do not disclose any negligence on the part of Nutting. They urge that he was driving at a lawful rate of speed at the place on the highway which the law assigned to him when passing another vehicle. They also urge that as soon as he became aware of Watkins' presence on the highway he did everything humanly possible to avoid the collision.

[1-3] The driver of a vehicle is not guilty of negligence under the circumstances here shown if he did those things which a reasonably prudent person would have done under similar circumstances. But the law requires that a driver shall always maintain a vigilant watch for other persons and vehicles using the highway.

Under the facts disclosed the jury might have concluded that Nutting failed to perform this duty. According to one witness he was driving his automobile at a speed of 50 miles per hour through the rain. He did not see Watkins until he was within about 34 feet of him. There is evidence that immediately before Watkins was struck he did not turn his car either to the right or to the left. From these facts the jury could draw the inference that Nutting was negligent.

[4] The contention that Watkins was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law is based upon section 562 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 93, which requires pedestrians to "yield the right of way to all vehicles upon the roadway". But by another provision of the same section, the requirement laid upon one crossing a highway "shall not relieve the driver of a vehicle from the duty to exercise due care for the safety of any pedestrian upon a roadway". The right of the automobile driver to claim the right of way over a pedestrian crossing a highway other than at an intersection, or in a marked crosswalk, is not, therefore, an absolute one, nor is the pedestrian absolutely prohibited from so crossing. "The duty of a pedestrian to 'yield' the right of way while crossing a street other than at a regular crosswalk, as imposed by section 562 of the Vehicle Code, * * * may call for a higher degree of care upon the part of such pedestrian than would be applied to one crossing at a regular crosswalk, but the question as to whether or not such care was exercised in a given case is one for the jury, unless he is so careless that it can be said he is negligent as a matter of law." Brannock v. Bromley, 30 Cal. App.2d 516, 524, 86 P.2d 1062, 1067.

[5] Where, as in the present case, there is evidence that the injured person looked, but either did not see the approaching automobile, or saw it and misjudged either its speed or distance, the question whether, under the particular circumstances then existing, he was guilty of contributory negligence is one of fact. Genola v. Barnett, 14 Cal.2d 217, 93 P.2d 109; White v. Davis, 103 Cal.App. 531, 284 P. 1086.

[6] The appellants urge that the giving of certain instructions constitutes reversible error. The first of these states the duty of one driving an automobile, so far as pedestrians are concerned, and embodies the requirements laid down in Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027. An instruction in substantially the same form as the one now challenged has been upheld in numerous cases. Casalegno v. Leonard, Cal.App., 105 P.2d 125; Eastman v. Rabbeth, 128 Cal.App. 534, 17 P.2d 1009.

[7] Two other instructions are questioned by the appellants upon the ground that they have no proper application to the facts and that they eliminate the defense of contributory negligence from consideration by the jury. An examination of them shows that they are correct statements of the law applicable to the facts presented in this case, particularly when the instructions are considered as a whole. By 10 of the 43 instructions the jury was informed in regard to the defense of contributory negligence. In one of them the rule was stated at length and the court informed the jury that if Watkins "was in the slightest degree negligent, which negligence contributed directly and proximately to his injury", there can be no recovery. When the instructions are read in their entirety they state the law of the case fairly and clearly, and the failure to include in each one of them a statement of the rule concerning contributory negligence is not error. Douglas v. Southern Pacific Co., 203 Cal. 390, 264 P. 237.

The appeal of Mildred Westra Ingalls and Mahlon Watkins presents some interesting and novel questions. During the trial of the case, the widow of the deceased identified these appellants as Watkins' children by a former marriage and testified, that at the time the complaint was filed, the former had reached her majority and was married, and the latter was only 20 years of age. Thereupon, counsel for the respondents stated that these children had been named in the complaint as defendants "by virtue of the fact that they did not choose to join as plaintiffs in the action". He added: "No appearance has been filed by them or either of them in this action, and we ask that their default be entered at this time for non-appearance." Upon this motion the trial judge ruled: "The default of the two defendants * * will be entered by the clerk." No record of such entry appears in the transcript nor was the court's order followed by a judgment.

One month after the judgment in favor of the respondents was entered, these appellants filed a petition to reopen the case for the purpose of taking testimony to establish their pecuniary loss by reason of the death of their father and to secure an allotment to them of a percentage of the judgment, or "that the court grant the motion of the defendants Franklin P. Nutting and American Vineyard & Investment Co., a corporation, for a new trial and upon the retrial of said cause that the petitioners herein be allowed to join as plaintiffs and prove their pecuniary loss". By affidavits accompanying this petition, these appellants asserted that they had been served with summons but were informed by Mrs. Watkins' attorney that they had no cause of action and they, therefore, sought no further legal advice at that time. Later, they said, they consulted an attorney and were advised that they had been damaged despite the fact that each of them was self-supporting. Upon a new trial, the affidavits continued, they would offer proof of their damage and loss by reason of the death of their father.

The respondents moved to strike this petition and the affidavits from the record. Prior to the hearing upon them, the appellants filed a notice of motion for an order amending the judgment by adding the names of Mildred Westra Ingalls and Mahlon Wilson Watkins, as plaintiffs, for the purpose of permitting them to share in the recovery. The notice of motion recited that it would be based, in part, upon an affidavit of one of their attorneys. According to the affidavit, the appellants were not asked to join in the action and were advised by Mrs. Watkins and her attorneys, without any desire on their part to deceive but by reason of mistake as to the law, that they had suffered no damages by the death of their father for which they were entitled to recover. By reason of this mistake and erroneous advice and the confidence of the appellants in Mrs. Watkins and her attorneys, it was said, the appellants did not seek other legal advice and did not appear and plead in the action.

The respondents moved to strike this notice of motion and the supporting affidavit from the files. Upon a hearing both motions were granted and the appeal now being considered was taken from that order.

The appellants contend that the default of persons named as defendants under the provisions of section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not bar them from appearing after judgment upon a motion to amend the judgment to include them as plaintiffs in order to share in the judgment obtained. They maintain that children are entitled to share in the damages awarded for the death of their father notwithstanding their failure to appear in the action. They also assert that it is the duty of the plaintiff to offer proof of damage in behalf of all the heirs, and that the court must apportion the damages awarded under the judgment among the children of the deceased notwithstanding the failure of the children to offer proof of damage sustained to them. The respondents take the position that a defendant, against whom a default has been entered, has no standing in court until the default has been set aside, and that a default by an heir at law, joined as a defendant under section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure in a wrongful death action, operates as a waiver of such heir of any claim for damages.

[8-11] The statutory cause of action for wrongful death, Sec. 377, Code Civ. Proc., is one to be exercised by all the heirs, yet it is a joint one, a single one and an indivisible one. Gilmore v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 211 Cal. 192, 295 P. 41; Salmon v. Rathjens, 152 Cal. 290, 92 P. 733. In such actions, the court or jury must compute the damages, if any, by considering the pecuniary damage suffered by all the heirs and return a verdict for one sum. This suit must be brought in the name of the persons to whom the right is given, and an action by some, but not all, of the heirs is not the action authorized under the statute. Robinson v. Western States Gas, etc., Co., 184 Cal. 401, 194 P. 39; Rose v. San Diego Electric Ry. Co., 133 Cal.App. 646, 24 P.2d 838; Salmon v. Rathjens, supra; Roach v. Drew, 72 Cal. App. 45, 236 P. 568. If the plaintiffs recover judgment, it is then the duty of the court, in a separate proceeding, to apportion the amount to be awarded each heir. Gilmore v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., supra; Rose v. San Diego Electric Ry. Co., supra.

[12] The complaint in the present action alleges only that Mildred Ingalls and Mahlon Watkins, children of the decedent, are of the age of majority and "do not join these plaintiffs in this action, and are therefore named as defendants herein". These allegations do not comply strictly with section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure which requires that "those who are united in interest must be joined as plaintiffs or defendants; but if the consent of any one who should have been joined as plaintiff cannot be obtained, he may be made a defendant, the reason thereof being stated in the complaint". However, the other appellants were in no position to object, because, as to them, it was sufficient that the heirs were made parties to the action, in some capacity, so that their rights might be determined in it. Martin v. Howe, 190 Cal. 187, 211 P. 453.

[13] The fact that the children of the former marriage were joined as defendants does not alter the essential relations between the parties; although named as defendants they are, in reality, plaintiffs in the case. Gilmore v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., supra; Donohoe v. Wooster, 163 Cal. 114, 124 P. 730. No judgment could properly be taken against them because no relief was demanded from them, and the order of the court directing the clerk to enter their default was ineffective for any purpose.

[14, 15] This does not mean that the respondents were obliged to produce evidence concerning the amount of damage sustained by these children, but the nature of the action was a call upon them to inform the jury as to the existence and relationship of all heirs entitled to bring suit. Gilmore v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., supra. The law's requirement in this regard is so strong that the plaintiff in an action for wrongful death who does not join as a party an heir who is known to him, is liable for the damages resulting to the heir from his failure to do so. Roach v. Drew, supra.

[16, 17] In the present case, not only did all of the evidence introduced upon the issue of damages relate to the respondents with no mention of Mildred Ingalls and Mahlon Watkins, but they were not mentioned in the instructions to the jury. In effect, this was a concealment from the jury that Watkins left other heirs entitled to sue for his death and it prevented a determination of the appellants' rights. But as the amount of damages awarded by the jury represented the damages suffered by the respondents, the children who were not mentioned to the jury are not entitled to share in it. Under the circumstances here shown, their remedy was to move for a new trial upon the issue of damages. Rose v. San Diego Electric Ry. Co., supra. This they did not do, and their request that the motion of the appellants Nutting and American Vineyard & Investment Company be granted was not a notice of motion for a new trial upon any ground available to them.

[18, 19] A notice of intention to move for a new trial upon one or more of the grounds specified in the Code of Civil Procedure is essential to the court's jurisdiction. Smith v. Ibos, 22 Cal.App.2d 551, 71 P.2d 847; Peters v. Anderson, 113 Cal. App. 158, 298 P. 76. The notice filed by the appellants against whom judgment was rendered gave the court jurisdiction to determine the motion later made by them but not to grant relief to other parties upon different grounds, and, for the reasons which have been stated, it was properly denied.

The judgment and order appealed from are, and each of them is, affirmed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; TRAYNOR, J.; CARTER, J.

17 Cal.2d 445

ROHE v. STATE BAR.

L. A. 17548.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 20, 1941.

1. Attorney and client ⇐58

Evidence that attorney while settling claim for client against third party on contingent fee basis procured a settlement of attorney's personal obligations without making proper disclosure to client warranted suspension from practice for three months. Code Civ.Proc. § 287, subds. 2, 5; St.1939, p. 357, §§ 6103, 6106.

2. Attorney and client ⇐46

The reason for a client's civil action against attorney and motive behind initiation of disciplinary proceedings before state bar's local administrative committee were not controlling in determining whether attorney should be suspended from practice where facts disclosed independently lead to conclusion that attorney was subject to disciplinary action.

Proceeding by Clifford A. Rohe against the State Bar of California to review a recommendation of the Board of Governors of the State Bar that petitioner be disbarred from the practice of law.

Petitioner ordered suspended from the practice of law for three months.

Isaac Pacht, Byron C. Hanna, Clore Warne, and Pacht, Pelton, Warne & Black, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Claude Minard, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

In January, 1939, Clifford A. Rohe, an attorney at law of this state, was notified to appear before Local Administrative Committee No. 7 of the State Bar for Los Angeles county and show cause why he should not be disciplined for professional misconduct arising out of his activities in connection with a claim of his client, Miss Carlotta Monti, against W. C. Fields. The attorney filed an answer to the charges and after hearings the local committee made findings and recommended suspension from practice for a period of three months. After argument before it, the Board of Governors adopted the findings of the local committee and recommended to this court that the attorney be disbarred. The attorney is before this court as petitioner in a proceeding to review the board's recommendation.

The petitioner was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1888, was admitted to the practice of law in Illinois in 1909, and in California in 1912. He is married and is the father of six children. He has practiced law in Los Angeles county since his admission to the bar of this state. The record shows that on September 29, 1936, he received a public reprimand from the Board of Governors of the State Bar. The proceeding in this instance grows out of the following facts:

On October 9, 1937, Miss Carlotta Monti employed the petitioner to press a claim for damages against W. C. Fields for a beating to which he was alleged to have subjected her on the front steps of his residence at Bel Air the preceding night upon their late return from a dinner party. It was agreed between Miss Monti and the petitioner that compensation for legal services in the matter should be contingent upon recovery, and should be an amount equal to 25 per cent of any recovery from Mr. Fields. Negotiations produced an offer of $5,000 from Mr. Fields. This was communicated to Miss Monti, who refused acceptance. Mr. Fields declined to raise his named figure. Subsequently the petitioner informed Miss Monti that Mr. Field's attorney, Mr. Loyd Wright, had three clients to whom the petitioner owed money on notes and otherwise, aggregating $1,300; that these obligations were old and that he believed they could be settled at a considerable discount. He suggested that negotiations through Mr. Field's attorney be resumed on the basis of including sufficient in his offer to Miss Monti to discharge these obligations of the petitioner. Miss Monti consented, and the petitioner communicated the suggestion to Mr. Wright. The petitioner thereupon received a letter from Mr. Wright, asking for a release executed by Miss Monti and a letter of authorization appropriate to the terms of the petitioner's suggestion. Thereupon the petitioner signed a letter dated December 9, 1937, to Mr. Wright, containing the following:

"In compliance with the request contained in your letter of the 9th instant, Miss Monti has executed and acknowledged the form of release, and I am enclosing the same which you may use when you deliver $5,000.00 to me for Miss Monti, and the Chipron, Donovan Notes marked 'paid' and a receipt from John Rauen.

"This letter will be your authority to use any amount you may have to pay in the adjustment of those three items in excess of the $5,000.00 to be paid Miss Monti. * * *

"I shall certainly appreciate it if you will have this concluded during this week as it will be of very material advantage."

Miss Monti signed a letter to Mr. Wright, bearing the same date, stating:

"I have read your letter to Mr. Rohe of the 9th instant, and have also read, signed and acknowledged the form of release which you sent him with that letter, all in connection with the adjustment of my claim against Mr. W. C. Fields.

"You are authorized to use whatever is necessary in excess of the $5000.00 which will be paid me to settle Mr. Rohe's obligation on the $500.00 note to Frank Chipron, $500.00 note to Dick Donovan and $300.00 obligation to John Rauen, making the $5,000.00 check directly to me.

"You are also authorized to fill in the blank space on the top line of the release the total amount Mr. Fields must pay in settlement of those obligations of Mr. Rohe, plus the $5,000.00 which you pay me; such total amount being the consideration for the release."

These letters and the signed release were forwarded to Mr. Wright. On December 17, 1937, Mr. Wright sent a check for $5,000 to the petitioner with the following letter of transmittal:

"I am enclosing herewith check for $5,000.00, made payable to Carlotta Monti, in full payment and liquidation of all claims against Mr. Fields.

"I cannot enclose the notes and the receipt from Mr. Rauen to you personally, because I am just leaving for a stockholders' meeting, but this will acknowledge that I have accepted $6,300.00 in complete satisfaction of those items set forth in your letter, and that I will in the next day or two forward you the receipt from Mr. Rauen and the two cancelled notes involved."

In response to the petitioner's call, Miss Monti arrived at his office with her sister, received the check for $5,000 and delivered to the petitioner her check for $1,250. The petitioner's testimony was that he exhibited to Miss Monti Mr. Wright's letter of transmittal. That testimony was contradicted by Miss Monti, who claimed that the petitioner told her he had to settle "without the notes".

About December 20, 1937, the petitioner received from Mr. Wright the cancelled notes and the receipt evidencing payment of the petitioner's obligations, with a letter of transmittal which concluded: "We appreciate your cooperation with us concerning the settlement of these matters."

Shortly thereafter Miss Monti and Mr. Fields were reconciled and Miss Monti testified that she then learned for the first time that the settlement figure had been $6,300. She claimed that she telephoned to the petitioner, made some accusations, and that he denied any knowledge that more than $5,000 was received, but stated that he would make inquiry. He thereupon wrote the following letter to Mr. Wright, bearing date December 24, 1937: "I shall appreciate it if you will let me have a copy of the release which Carlotta signed in the Fields matter, and also advise me what was paid to Donovan, Chipron and Rauen, so that I may have a complete file in the matter. * * * "

The petitioner testified that Miss Monti claimed that more than $6,300 had been received by Mr. Wright, and that the latter had retained the excess. His explanation for couching his letter of December 24th in the language quoted, however, was that he did not want to intimate to Mr. Wright that "I thought he got more than he had told us, that was the reason I mentioned the amount of the notes. I asked for the information so that I would have a complete file."

In response to his request he received the following, dated January 5, 1938, signed by Mr. Wright's brother:

"Last week Loyd asked me to write to you concerning your request as to the amounts which were paid to Donovan, Rauen and Chipron. He was under the impression that you had knowledge of the amounts paid, anyway I forgot to write you at that time.

"We paid Dick Donovan $500, Chipron $500, less $50 attorney's fees, and John Rauen $300.00. These payments were made in full settlement of all of their respective claims against you, and the same were made in accordance with your agreement arising out of the settlement of the alleged claims of your client, Miss Monti vs. W. C. Fields."

Miss Monti heard nothing further from the petitioner and in October, 1938, brought the matter to the attention of the State Bar. In the meantime she had filed a civil action against the petitioner to recover seventy-five per cent of the $1,300, which action does not appear to have been prosecuted to judgment.

It was the petitioner's contention during the hearings before the local administrative committee and the Board of Governors, and it is his contention here, that Miss Monti and he had come to an understanding that he should have, in addition to the 25 per cent contingency fee, the benefit of anything in excess of $5,000 which would be necessary to settle the three obligations aggregating $1,300. The committee found that the petitioner did not advise Miss Monti, at the time she received from him the $5,000 check, that his obligations had been settled for their face value though he was in receipt of information from Mr. Wright to that effect; that when he wrote the letter of December 24th to Mr. Wright he knew that the full amount of $1,300 had been paid in settlement of his obligations. The committee concluded that the petitioner had violated rule 9 of the Rules of Professional Conduct of the State Bar (prohibiting commingling of client's and personal funds and requiring prompt report of receipt of client's property); that he had violated his oath and duties as an attorney within the meaning of subdivision 2 of section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Sec. 6103, State Bar Act, St.1939, p. 357, and had committed wrongful acts within the meaning of subdivision 5 of section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Sec. 6106, State Bar Act.

In its findings the committee called attention to the fact that the petitioner had stated before it that he was willing to pay Miss Monti 75 per cent of the $1,300, but that he would not do so under compulsion either of the civil action brought by her or of the State Bar proceeding.

In its recommendations the committee expressed its belief that Miss Monti had been willing that the petitioner should include the three obligations in the negotiations for a settlement of her claim against Mr. Fields, and that he should have the benefit thereof without accounting to her, if they could be settled for a small amount; but that the dispute arose over the fact that the petitioner did not fully or fairly advise her of all steps taken in connection with the settlement of his obligations and that had Miss Monti known that as a result of those negotiations he had received more than double the original fee agreed upon, she would not have authorized the liquidation of his obligations in the manner disclosed.

[1, 2] These findings and conclusions, as qualified by the committee's analysis in its recommendations, are supported by the record. This is so even though we consider favorably to the petitioner the collateral matters referred to by him and relied upon as showing a motive to cast discredit upon him by the initiation of proceedings before the State Bar. It is a fact that the events herein were not called to the attention of the State Bar for nearly a year after their occurrence. But it is also a fact that in the meantime Miss Monti had brought a civil action against the petitioner. Whatever may have been the instigating factor, or whatever may have been the personal motive, in the initiation of the State Bar proceeding, are not matters of controlling concern in a case where the facts disclosed independently lead to the conclusion that the attorney is subject to some disciplinary action. There is no showing that any personal motives of individuals have generated any pressure or prejudice or have in any way prevented the petitioner from having full, fair and unbiased hearings. However, we are in agreement with the petitioner that under all the circumstances disbarment is too harsh discipline, and that the ends to be subserved by the proceeding herein will be satisfied by a suspension as recommended by the local committee.

It is ordered that the petitioner, Clifford A. Rohe, be suspended from the practice of the law in this state for a period of three months, beginning thirty days from and after the filing of this order.

17 Cal.2d 451

PEOPLE v. YOUNG.

Cr. 4324.

Supreme Court of California.
Feb. 20, 1941.

1. Criminal law ⇐531(3)

In murder trial, police officer's testimony that defendant, in witness' presence, read and freely and voluntarily signed statement transcribed by shorthand reporter was sufficient to justify reading of relevant portions thereof to jury as confession, regardless of admissibility of another officer's testimony merely identifying statements in written document as those made to him by defendant.

2. Criminal law ⇐444

In murder trial, defendant's admission in signed confession that he wrote his mother a letter outlining his plan to kill deceased, testimony that defendant admitted writing such letter immediately after fatal shooting, and handwriting expert's testimony identifying signature thereto with that on another letter written by defendant, justified trial court's finding that signature was sufficiently proven to permit introduction of letter in evidence. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1940, 1944.

3. Criminal law ⇐1171(1)

In murder trial, district attorney's reference to defendant as a "killer" in closing address to jury held not prejudicial "misconduct" justifying reversal of conviction for first-degree murder, in view of facts in evidence.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Misconduct".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pierson M. Hall, Judge.

William Young was convicted of first degree murder, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Ben Van Tress and Beecher Stowe, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Eugene M. Elson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Defendant was found guilty of first-degree murder without recommendation of leniency in the superior court of Los Angeles county which pronounced the death sentence and denied a motion for a new trial. The cause comes before this court on an automatic appeal.

The evidence establishes the following facts: Defendant, twenty-six years old and unmarried, was in love with Ruth Lugo, a twenty-nine-year-old Mexican woman who had been twice married and had four children. Her refusal to marry him and her plea that they stop seeing each other led the defendant to brooding which culminated in his determination to kill her and himself. To that end he stole a gun, purchased cartridges and wrote a letter outlining his plan to be given to his mother. On June 10, 1940, he called on Ruth Lugo and tried to persuade her to marry him. Failing to do so, he came over to her chair, sat in her lap, and fired two shots through her chest, causing her death. Members of the family, residing in the same house and in nearby houses, heard the shots and rushed into the room where they found the defendant with a gun in his hand near the body of Ruth Lugo. The shot which he fired at himself just missed being fatal. While he was attempting to shoot himself a second time, the members of the family intervened, finally overpowered him and then delivered him into the custody of the police.

[1] During the course of the trial Police Officer Lopez took the stand and testified that shortly after the killing he had interviewed the defendant, that the questions and answers were taken down by a shorthand reporter under his direction, that these shorthand notes were transcribed by the reporter, that he had read them shortly after they were transcribed and verified them as correct. He was then asked to give the questions and answers, but defendant objected on the grounds that the shorthand reporter was not present to verify the transcribed statement and that no proper foundation had been laid. Lopez did not give the questions and answers but testified that the questions and answers contained in the written statement produced in court and shown to him were correct according to his present recollection. Officer Fremont then testified that defendant subsequently had read the statement and freely and voluntarily signed it in his presence. The statement contained a full confession of the crime by the defendant, and the parts considered relevant and not prejudicial were read to the jury as evidence. Regardless of Officer Lopez's testimony which merely identified the statements contained in the written document as those made to him by defendant, Officer Fremont's testimony was sufficient to justify the reading of the relevant portions thereof to the jury as a confession of the crime.

[2] The defendant further objected to the introduction in evidence of the letter written by him to his mother on the ground that there was insufficient proof that the signature on the letter was defendant's. Defendant's admission in his signed confession that he had written the letter, the testimony by a witness that defendant immediately after the shooting admitted writing the letter, and the testimony by a handwriting expert identifying the signature with that on another letter written by the defendant, justify the finding of the trial court that the signature had been sufficiently proven to permit the introduction of the letter. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1940, 1944.

[3] The district attorney's reference to the defendant as a "killer" in his closing address to the jury did not constitute prejudicial misconduct justifying a reversal in the light of the facts of the case.

In view of the ample evidence to support the verdict, the absence of any errors in the record, and the soundness of the instructions given by the trial judge to the jury, the judgment and order of the trial court are affirmed.

17 Cal.2d 405

PEOPLE v. REED.

Cr. 4323.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 18, 1941.

1. Homicide ⇐253(1)

Evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction for murder in the first degree.

2. Criminal law ⇐729

In murder prosecution where district attorney was permitted to cross-examine defendant regarding whether he had been convicted of stealing government property and sentenced under that conviction, but at conclusion of testimony district attorney stated that he asked question in good faith expecting to be able to prove conviction by documentary evidence, which was not available, and the matter was expunged from the record by the court in compliance with the district attorney's request, there was no prejudicial "misconduct" requiring a reversal.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Misconduct".

Appeal from the Superior Court, San Bernandino County; Chas. L. Allison, Judge.

John Reed was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Charles D. Warner, of China, and Albert Trujillo, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerome B. Kavanaugh, Dist. Atty., of San Bernardino, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

John Reed and John Thurman were convicted of murder in the first degree. The jury recommended life imprisonment for Thurman; Reed was sentenced to die. They appeal from the judgment and the order denying their motions for a new trial.

The evidence establishes the following facts: George Stephenson, the deceased, lived alone in a cabin on the edge of the Colorado river near the little settlement of Crossroads, located in the southeast corner of San Bernardino county. He was sixty-nine years of age and received old age pension checks monthly in the amount of $40. From these payments he saved about $300 or $350 which he carried on his person in a billfold. When making purchases at the stores in Crossroads, it was not unusual for him to exhibit his savings and to exchange small bills for ones of larger denomination.

Down the dirt road about 150 feet from Stephenson's cabin was another cabin occupied by Henry Williams, an elderly negro. On the evening of Friday, March 15, 1940, Stephenson visited Williams for about a quarter of an hour. Shortly after Stephenson left to return to his own cabin, Williams heard him call in an unusually loud voice, "What does all this mean? What is this all about?" Then all was quiet. Williams became uneasy and after a few minutes seized an ice pick and started for the Stephenson cabin. As he was proceeding along the dirt road which skirted the dense arrow weeds separating the two cabins, he saw two men come running from the direction of Stephenson's cabin. One man came within eight or ten feet of him. This man he later identified as Reed. The other man appeared tall and thin, but was not otherwise clearly visible. Williams then proceeded to the cabin, but finding no one there, hastened to a nearby gas station and persuaded the proprietor to drive back with him. The latter found Stephenson a few yards beyond the cabin, lying just at the brink of the river bed, bound and gagged, with his head badly beaten. He died a few hours later at the hospital. Upon search of his body and premises neither his billfold nor his money could be found.

For several months before the commission of the crime John Reed had lived in the vicinity of Crossroads and patronized the same stores in Crossroads as the deceased. One week before the commission of the crime he secured a ride from Phoenix, where he had been working, to Parker, a town in Arizona not far from Crossroads, with a friend named Cox. At this time Reed had little or no money. He stayed in a cabin with Cox and another man named West, paying nothing for accommodations. Three days before the commission of the crime, he met John Thurman, whom he had known for several years in Parker, and who was now out of work and without funds. The day before the crime Reed and Thurman visited Crossroads in the company of a man named Young. At that time Reed had a gun in his possession. On the day of the homicide he went to Crossroads with a man named Jack Hollis. At that time he wore a leather jacket and had a bundle under his arm. Thurman was seen in Crossroads the same afternoon. About five o'clock in the afternoon, shortly before the homicide was committed, Thurman was seen by two men who were acquainted with him walking in the direction of the deceased's cabin in the company of a man carrying a bundle under his arm.

That night Reed exhibited a roll of bills to West, saying he had gotten them from an Indian to purchase liquor, and offered to pay West $25 for a ride to Phoenix or Wickenburg. West at first refused, having learned from Cox that Reed and Thurman were under suspicion with regard to the homicide, but several days later West drove Reed to Phoenix and received $25. While in Phoenix, Reed, accompanied by a Mrs. Scott with whom he was acquainted, purchased a suit of clothes and a used car. He was then picked up by two police officers. A wallet containing $113 was found in his car. His suitcase containing a leather jacket and other articles of clothing was found The clothing was turned over to a chemist who found blood stains on the sleeve of the jacket and a shirt. Upon being questioned about the money Reed gave contradictory stories—that he got it from Mrs. Scott; that he earned it selling whiskey; that he earned it selling stolen goods; that he got it from an Indian to purchase liquor.

Thurman left Parker several days after the homicide and went to Wickenburg by train, and from there to Phoenix by train. Then he bought a ticket to Herford, Texas, but returned it and went to Fresno, California, by bus and thereafter by bus to Van Nuys where he was arrested. He had spent about $47 on his trip and had $6 at the time of his arrest.

At the preliminary examination Henry Williams testified as to the circumstances surrounding the homicide and identified Reed as one of the men whom he had seen running from the deceased's cabin. Shortly thereafter Williams disappeared. His clothes were found on the bank of the Colorado river near Crossroads, and his body was recovered from the river in an identifiable condition. At the trial the testimony given by him at the preliminary hearing was read into the record.

[1] The foregoing facts constitute evidence which, even though circumstantial, is substantial enough to have established the guilt of the two defendants in the minds of the jury.

[2] Defendants contend that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct at the trial in questioning Reed as to whether or not he had been previously convicted of a felony. On cross-examination Reed was asked whether or not he had been convicted of stealing government property and sentenced under that conviction. The court permitted the question over objection by counsel for the defendants, and Reed answered "no". At the conclusion of the testimony in the case the district attorney stated that when he had asked the question regarding a prior conviction, he had asked it in good faith, expecting to be able to prove the conviction by documentary evidence, but that such evidence was not available, and he therefore requested that the matter be expunged from the record and the jury instructed to disregard the question. The court complied with the request. In view of this subsequent statement by the district attorney, the expunging of the matter from the record by the court in compliance with the district attorney's request, and the absence of any evidence of bad faith on the part of the district attorney, there is no prejudicial misconduct requiring a reversal. People v. Braun, 14 Cal.2d 1, 92 P.2d 402.

The judgment and order of the trial court are affirmed.

17 Cal.2d 873

THE PEOPLE, Respondent, v. John THURMAN, Appellant.

Cr. 4325.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 18, 1941.

Albert D. Trujillo, of San Bernardino, and Charles D. Warner, of China, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., and B. Kavanaugh, Dist. Atty., of San Bernardino, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The case of People v. Reed, Cal.Sup., 110 P.2d 394, this day decided, completely disposes of all issues involved herein. On the authority thereof the judgment and order of the trial court are affirmed.

17 Cal.2d 484

ORLOFF v. METROPOLITAN TRUST CO. et al.

L. A. 17607.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 24, 1941.

1. Contracts ⇐187(1)

A contract made for benefit of a third person may only be enforced by him before parties thereto rescind it. Civ.Code, § 1559.

2. Contracts ⇐332(2)

In action for breach of escrow agreement providing that escrow holder should pay, in specified order, claims of a brewing company's creditors out of sums deposited by purchaser of company's stock and that after payment of creditors, balance, if any, deposited by purchaser should be divided between plaintiff's assignor and others, a complaint failing to allege that if purchaser had complied with escrow instructions amount deposited would have been sufficient to pay creditors and alleging a rescission of agreement by parties to it before plaintiff attempted to enforce agreement did not state a cause of action. Civ.Code, § 1559.

3. Conspiracy ⇐18

To state a cause of action for "conspiracy", facts must be alleged showing formation and operation of a conspiracy and damage resulting from an act done in furtherance of the plan, and since the cause of action is for damage suffered and not mere conspiracy complaint must state facts which show that a civil wrong was done resulting in damage.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conspiracy".

4. Conspiracy ⇐6

Damage is the gist of a civil action for "conspiracy", and a deprivation of some right must support the action, and if what plaintiff has been deprived of was not a right but an advantage merely hoped for plaintiff cannot maintain action.

5. Conspiracy ⇐18

A count in complaint charging civil conspiracy in that prior to termination of an escrow agreement defendants entered into a conspiracy to defraud plaintiff of money due plaintiff under an assignment did not state a cause of action for "conspiracy" where allegations affirmatively showed that assignment gave plaintiff no rights as against any one, but defendant brewing company and complaint did not show that plaintiff could not recover full amount of assignor's claim from company, since complaint lacked requirement of an allegation of damage.

6. Escrows ⇐9

An escrow holder does not become a "trustee" of the property deposited with him until conditions of escrow have been fulfilled.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Trustee".

7. Escrows ⇐1

Where escrow agreement providing for payment of a brewing company's creditors was executed in connection with a purchase of company's stock, and agreement was terminated by parties before compliance with its provisions, escrow holding never became a "trustee", and hence plaintiff could not maintain an action against escrow holder on theory that it received and held money in trust for plaintiff as assignee of company's creditor.

8. Pleading ⇐193(5)

Where allegations of facts which were to be considered in connection with common count of money had and received did not support a cause of action against codefendants, sustaining demurrers to common count as to codefendants was proper.

9. Limitation of actions ⇐124

A common count of money had and received was barred as to codefendants by two-year statute of limitations where cause of action upon common count was first pleaded by plaintiff on June 8, 1939, when plaintiff filed an amended complaint, and codefendants, who were included in amended complaint, had not been named in original complaint as parties to action, and plaintiff's allegations showed that money which codefendants had received was paid to them on March 25, 1937. Code Civ.Proc. § 339.

10. Action ⇐6

Where count in complaint for declaratory relief alleged that a controversy existed between plaintiff and defendants as to their respective rights, and acts of which plaintiff complained were concluded before action was commenced, and plaintiff merely sought to have court review the acts and declare that plaintiff was entitled to a money judgment, count did not state a cause of action for declaratory relief and hence superior court's refusal to exercise its power to entertain complaint as to such count was not an abuse of discretion. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060, 1061.

11. Action ⇐6

A judgment refusing to entertain a complaint for declaratory relief is not reviewable on appeal except for an abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Joseph W. Vickers, Judge.

Action by Morris Orloff against the Metropolitan Trust Company of California, a corporation, and others, for alleged breach of an escrow agreement and for other relief. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals opposed by defendants Metropolitan Trust Company, P. T. Libby, Sam Weiss and Edward Flam.

Affirmed.

Prior opinion, 102 P.2d 562.

Orloff & Katz, of Los Angeles (Wm. Katz and Abraham Gorenfeld, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Wm. H. B. Haymond, Philip Grey Smith, and Burr & Smith, all of Los Angeles, for respondents Metropolitan Trust Co. and P. T. Libby.

Sydney Tannen, of Los Angeles, for respondent Sam Weiss.

Edward Flam, of Los Angeles, in pro. per.

EDMONDS, Justice.

An order sustaining general demurrers to a third amended complaint was followed by the judgment of dismissal from which this appeal is prosecuted against Metropolitan Trust Company, P. T. Libby, Sam Weiss and Edward Flam.

The complaint as amended purports to set forth five causes of action. The first count alleges facts which, the appellant declares, state a cause of action as to respondents Metropolitan Trust Company and Libby, its escrow officer, for breach of an escrow agreement between the trust company, as escrow holder, with the defendants Grossfeld, Margulis, Garrison and Rio Brewing Company, Inc. The remaining counts attempt, respectively, to state causes of action for civil conspiracy, for money received in trust for appellant, for money had and received, and for declaratory relief.

The first cause of action alleges: In 1935, Garrison agreed with Grossfeld, Margulis and the brewing company to purchase all of the capital stock of the latter for approximately $40,000, to be paid through an escrow with the trust company. Under the escrow instructions of Garrison to carry out this purpose, he agreed to deposit $5,000 when certain stock certificates and other papers, specifically described, were delivered to him. He also agreed to deposit $2,500 every three months thereafter. From these sums the escrow holder was directed to pay, in a specified order, the claims of creditors of the brewing company.

These creditors were classified in six groups. The claims of the first five groups were stated as amounting, in the aggregate, in excess of $18,000. The instructions provided that after the amounts due these creditors were paid, the balance, if any, deposited by Garrison was to be divided pro rata to Margulis, Grossfeld and Leo Schinagel, the appellant's assignor. The amounts of the claims of these three were stated as $3,041, $4,985 and $2,500, respectively.

The escrow holder was given notice of the Schinagel assignment after Garrison paid $5,000 to it, and before he deposited further sums aggregating $5,375. These amounts were paid to creditors of the brewing company in accordance with the escrow instructions.

Following these payments, Garrison gave the defendant Grace an option to purchase all of the outstanding stock of the brewing company. The option agreement provided that the consideration should be deposited in escrow with Metropolitan Trust Company and required the escrow holder to pay $3,000 to certain persons, which the appellant alleges constituted all of the unpaid creditors named in the escrow instructions of Garrison except the appellant's assignor. The instructions of Grace also provided for the payment of stated amounts to Grossfeld, Margulis, and Weiss

The appellant charges that these instructions were complied with, but the payments to Weiss, Grossfeld, Margulis and Flam included $2,500 which they received "as nominees and dummies" for Schinagel. Concurrently with the closing of this escrow, Garrison, Margulis and Grossfeld notified the trust company, in writing, to terminate the former escrow.

[1, 2] Although the agreement made by Garrison which was expressed by the first escrow is one which the law recognizes as having been made for the benefit of a third person, the amount which the appellant's assignor was entitled to receive under it was not a certain sum. By its terms, Schinagel's interest was contingent, and the appellant does not allege that if Garrison had fully complied with his escrow instructions, the amount deposited by him would have been sufficient to pay the creditors whose claims were specified as being prior to that of Schinagel. Moreover, a contract made for the benefit of a third person may only be enforced by him before the parties thereto rescind it. Sec. 1559, Civ.Code. The appellant's complaint pleads a rescission of the agreement by the parties to it long before any attempt was made by him to enforce its provisions, and, at least for that reason, does not state a cause of action.

The second count of the complaint, appellant contends, states a cause of action for civil conspiracy against all of the respondents. In addition to the facts alleged in his first cause of action, he alleges that prior to the termination of the first escrow, the respondents entered into a conspiracy to defraud him of the sum due to him under the assignment of Schinagel; that in furtherance of that conspiracy Schinagel, the respondents and the other defendants agreed to pay Schinagel the amount of the claim which he had theretofore assigned to the appellant by paying, or causing it to be paid, to Weiss, Flam, Grossfeld and Margulis "as nominees and dummies as and for" him; that this conspiracy was carried out by omitting the name of Schinagel from the escrow instructions providing for the transfer of the money paid by Grace for the brewing company's stock; and that pursuant to these escrow instructions Weiss was paid $1,305 and Grossfeld, Margulis and Flam $1,195, totaling $2,500, in satisfaction of the Schinagel claim. In effect, the appellant charges that Schinagel, the respondents and others conspired to defeat the assignment of his claim for $2,500 by procuring the payment of that amount to him.

[3, 4] These allegations are not sufficient. To state a cause of action for conspiracy, facts must be alleged showing the formation and operation of a conspiracy and damage resulting from an act or acts done in furtherance of the plan. As the cause of action is for the damage suffered, and not the mere conspiracy, the complaint must state facts which show that a civil wrong was done, resulting in damage. Mox, Incorporated, v. Woods, 202 Cal. 675, 262 P. 302; Darrow v. Robert A. Klein & Co., Inc., 111 Cal.App. 310, 295 P. 566; Rapaport v. Forer, 20 Cal.App.2d 271, 66 P.2d 1242; 3 Cal.Jur.Supp., p. 746. The damage is the gist of the action. "As it is the wrong accomplished—in other words, the deprivation of some right—that must support the action, it follows that if what the plaintiff has been deprived of was not a right at all, but an advantage merely hoped for, he cannot maintain his suit." Cooley on Torts, 4th Ed., vol. 1, p. 236.

[5] The allegations of the complaint affirmatively show that the assignment made by Schinagel to appellant gave the latter no rights as against anyone but the brewing company. He would have benefited if that claim had been paid by Grace, but his failure to receive payment from that source did not discharge the brewing company's obligation. For all that appears in the complaint, the appellant could have recovered from the brewing company the full amount of the Schinagel claim notwithstanding the contract carried out by Grace. The pleading therefore lacks the requirement of an allegation of damage.

[6, 7] By the third cause of action, the appellant attempts to state a cause of action against the trust company and Libby for money which he alleges they received from Garrison in the first escrow and held in trust for him as the assignee of one of the creditors of the brewing company. However, an escrow holder does not become a trustee of the property deposited with him until the conditions of the escrow have been fulfilled. Newport Bay Dredging Co. v. Helm, 120 Cal.App. 127, 7 P.2d 1039; Law v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 91 Cal.App. 621, 267 P. 565. In the present case, the first escrow was terminated by the parties, as they had a right to do, before compliance with its provisions, hence the escrow holder never became a trustee.

[8] The appellant states as his next cause of action the common count of money had and received. But this count following allegations setting out in detail the facts upon which appellant relies, must be considered in connection with those facts. As the statements of those facts do not support a cause of action against the trust company or Libby the demurrers were properly sustained as to them. Hays v. Temple, 23 Cal.App.2d 690, 73 P.2d 1248.

[9] In support of the ruling of the trial court sustaining their demurrer to this cause of action, the respondents Weiss and Flam contend that it is barred by the statute of limitations. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 339. This point is well taken and must be upheld. These respondents were not named in the original complaint as parties to the action but were included as defendants in the amended complaint filed June 8, 1939. The cause of action upon the common count was first pleaded by the appellant at that time. By other allegations of the appellant, it affirmatively appears that the money which Weiss and Flam received through the Grace escrow was paid to them on March 25, 1937.

[10, 11] The final count of the complaint is, in form, one for declaratory relief. The appellant alleges that a controversy exists between him and the defendants as to their respective rights and obligations under the agreements which have been particularly pleaded. But all of the acts of which he complains were concluded before his suit was commenced and the relief he seeks is for the court to review them and declare that he is entitled to a judgment for $2,500. These allegations do not measure up to the requirements of an action for declaratory relief, and the superior court properly refused to exercise its power to entertain the complaint upon that count. Code Civ.Proc., secs. 1060, 1061. Moreover, a judgment refusing to entertain a complaint for declaratory relief is not reviewable upon appeal except for an abuse of discretion, which is not here shown. Cutting v. Bryan, 206 Cal. 254, 274 P. 326.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TRAYNOR, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; CARTER, J.

17 Cal.2d 500

In re ANDREWS' GUARDIANSHIP.

ANDREWS v. ANDREWS et al.

L. A. 17244.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 25, 1941.

1. Insane persons ⇐27

Record established compliance with alleged requirement that copy of petition for appointment of guardian be served on alleged incompetent under statute providing for service of citation on an alleged incompetent in the same manner as provided by law for service of summons. Probate Code, § 1461.

2. Insane persons ⇐27

Whether alleged incompetent was physically unable to attend hearing on application for appointment of guardian for her, as stated in physician's affidavit, which on its face was sufficient to excuse the absence of alleged incompetent from the hearing, was for the trial court in ruling on motion to set aside order appointing guardian for the alleged incompetent who sought to impeach the affidavit. Probate Code, § 1461.

3. Insane persons ⇐27

Reviewing court was without jurisdiction to consider merits of an appeal from an order appointing a guardian for an alleged incompetent, which was not taken within the time prescribed by law, and the appeal was dismissed. Probate Code, § 1233; Code Civ.Proc. § 939.

4. Insane persons ⇐8

Where petition for appointment of guardian for alleged incompetent was filed and service of notice required by statute was made and physician's affidavit that alleged incompetent was unable to attend hearing because of physical disability, which was presented to the court, was sufficient on its face and was not successfully impeached, the superior court, had jurisdiction to appoint guardian even though the alleged incompetent was not present at the hearing. Probate Code, § 1461.

5. Insane persons ⇐27

The fact that physician's affidavit stating that in his opinion alleged incompetent was unable to attend hearing on petition for appointment of guardian for alleged incompetent was taken over telephone was not prejudicial to alleged incompetent on whom service of notice of hearing was properly made, especially where at hearing on motion to vacate guardianship order the physician confirmed the statements made by him in his affidavit. Probate Code, § 1461.

6. Insane persons ⇐13

An attorney for person filing petition for appointment of guardian for an alleged incompetent, not being a party to action, was competent to serve the citation on the alleged incompetent. Code Civ.Proc. § 410; Probate Code, § 1461.

7. Insane persons ⇐25

The alleged power of the superior court to set aside an order appointing a guardian from which no appeal had been taken and which for all purposes was final could be exercised only when in the discretion of the superior court the ends of justice would be thereby served. Probate Code, § 1461.

8. Judgment ⇐386(1)

The granting of an application to set aside a judgment which is not void on its face must depend on the facts of each particular case, except that the application must be made within the time limited by statute. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

9. Insane persons ⇐25

The superior court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside original order appointing a guardian for an alleged incompetent from which no appeal had been taken, where the alleged incompetent acquiesced in the order for four months and permitted the guardian to administer her estate. Probate Code, § 1461.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Lloyd E. Griffin and Vaughn N. Thompson, Judges.

Proceeding in the matter of the guardianship of the estate of Juliette B. Andrews, an incompetent, on the petition of John F. Andrews and opposed by Juliette B. Andrews. From an order adjudging Juliette B. Andrews incompetent and appointing the First National Trust and Savings Bank of San Diego as guardian of her estate, and an order denying Juliette B. Andrews' petition to vacate previously entered order appointing a guardian, Juliette B. Andrews appeals.

Appeal from order appointing a guardian dismissed. Order denying the petition to vacate the previous order affirmed.

For prior opinion, see 103 P.2d 439.

Hugh B. Rotchford and Hubert Starr, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wright, Monroe, Harden & Thomas and Clarence Harden, all of San Diego, Keith M. Ferguson, of La Jolla, and Luce, Forward & Swing and Edgar A. Luce, all of San Diego, for respondents.

SHENK, Justice.

The petition of appellant for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division One, was granted in order that further consideration might be given to the contentions of the appellant that in the matter of the appointment of a guardian of her estate the provisions of section 1461 of the Probate Code were not sufficiently complied with, and that therefore the trial court was without jurisdiction to make the order appointing the guardian.

[1] The section of the Probate Code referred to provides for the service of the citation upon the alleged incompetent "in the same manner as provided by law for service of summons". The return of the service on file at the time the application was heard showed that the citation had been served on the appellant "by showing the said within original to" appellant "and delivering a true copy thereof to her". On the motion to set aside the order appointing the guardian, Mr. Ferguson, the person who served the citation, testified that he served the citation on appellant by delivering to her a true copy of the citation and a true copy of the petition for the appointment of a guardian. The court found that the citation had been served as shown by the affidavit of service and as testified by Mr. Ferguson. If we assume that service of a copy of the petition is required by the code section, it must be concluded that the record shows that there was compliance with such requirement.

[2] It is also provided in the code section that the alleged incompetent, "if able to attend, must be produced at the hearing, and if not able to attend by reason of physical disability, such inability must be evidenced by the affidavit and certificate of a duly licensed physician or surgeon". The affidavit of Doctor Diefenbach, presented to the court at the hearing on the application, was sufficient on its face to excuse the absence of the appellant from the hearing. On the motion to set aside the order appointing the guardian, the appellant sought to impeach this affidavit. Testimony at some length was presented on which the court was called upon to resolve the conflicts in the evidence. A consideration of that evidence leads fairly to the conclusion that it presented a question of fact for the trial court to determine.

The appellant's contentions on the foregoing and other points are further discussed and correctly disposed of in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, 103 P.2d 439, 440 prepared by Mr. Justice White, of which the following, with additional comment, is adopted as the opinion of this court:

"This is an appeal from two orders of the superior court of San Diego county, the first of which was made on April 22, 1938, adjudging the appellant incompetent and appointing respondent bank as guardian of her estate, while the last-named order was one made April 13, 1939, denying appellant's petition to vacate the previously entered order appointing a guardian for her estate.

"The pertinent facts are that on or about April 7, 1938, proceedings were had upon a complaint which sought commitment of appellant to a state institution as an alcoholic. After a hearing at the psycopathic ward on April 14, she was sent home and the hearing continued one year, a psychopathic parole officer being designated 'to look after her to some extent'. Mrs. Andrews was represented at this hearing by attorney Keith Ferguson. Two days thereafter, on April 16, Mr. Ferguson filed on behalf of John B. Andrews, husband of appellant, a petition alleging that the latter was incompetent and praying for the appointment of a guardian of her estate. A citation was issued, and in the afternoon of that day Mr. Ferguson personally served the same upon Mrs. Andrews. Mr. Ferguson told Mrs. Andrews at that time that if her physician believed that the state of her health was such that she should not appear they could substitute the affidavit of her physician to that effect, and that it seemed to him a proper case for the affidavit to be used. Mrs. Andrews asked if she should contact her doctor, but Mr. Ferguson said he knew her physician, Dr. Diefenbach, and would speak to him; that he presumed he would be willing to make such an affidavit. On April 22, the day set for the hearing, Mr. Ferguson prepared an affidavit and sent it to Dr. Diefenbach, who signed it after a telephone conversation with Mr. Ferguson. It was then returned to the office of Mr. Ferguson, who affixed his signature and notarial seal thereto and presented it at the hearing. The affidavit contained the statement 'that Juliette B. Andrews * * * is under his' (affiant's) 'professional care; that she is confined to her home in the personal charge of nurses at all times; that in the opinion of affiant, she is not able to attend a court hearing on Friday, April 22, 1938, by reason of her physical condition'. The doctor testified at the hearing on the petition to vacate the order appointing the guardian that he had last seen Mrs. Andrews on March 15, but that his affidavit was based on 'knowing the patient since 1936; seeing her through several illnesses; letters which I had from Doctor Kerr of the University of California * * * and also a neurologist whom I don't recall'; also reports from Dr. Yuskis as to her alcoholism and inability to eat; and extreme nervousness and inability to sleep at night. The doctor further testified: 'I knew she was up around the house, at least this is my report of the nurse. I knew that she had been out for rides. I urged that. I knew she was * * very nervous and very restless. * * * Q. You have not given us the ultimate conclusion that you reached as to whether she was in condition to be produced in court or not? A. Physically she could have been taken to court. * * * Q. What did you apprehend, as a professional man, would probably happen? * * * A. An extreme nervous tension, one of these cataleptic or epileptic seizures, whichever they were, and strain on a woman who had gone through considerable, with a serious illness shortly in the background. * * * I thought she should not be produced. Q. Why not? A. On the ground just stated, and from the fact that this was presumably settled and it was agreeable to her to go through with this procedure.' On cross-examination he testified: 'Q. * * * You were under the impression, at least under the belief at the time you made this affidavit, that Mrs. Andrews had consented to the appointment of a guardian of her property, and that this proceeding was agreeable to her? A. That is what I was told and believed.' The doctor further testified that he never saw Mr. Ferguson in person; that he thought the incompetency hearing was merely 'a formal routine matter'. * * *"

[3-9] Although the trial court stated that the appellant could have attended the hearing, such statement must be taken in connection with the finding and conclusion of the court that the showing as to her physical condition was sufficient to excuse her absence.

"It is stated in respondent's brief and not denied, that since the adverse ruling upon her application to revoke the order appointing the guardian, appellant on her own petition has been restored to competency.

"The appeal from the order appointing the guardian must be dismissed, for the reason that the same was not taken within the time prescribed by law. Probate Code, § 1233; Code Civ.Proc., § 939. This court is therefore without jurisdiction to consider the appeal on the merits. Williams v. Long, 130 Cal. 58, 62 P. 264, 80 Am.St.Rep. 68; Lawson v. Guild, 215 Cal. 378, 10 P.2d 459.

"Appellant's claim that the order denying her petition to set aside the decree appointing the guardian must be reversed because the court was without jurisdiction, cannot be upheld. It is true, as urged by appellant, that section 1461 of the Probate Code provides that the alleged incompetent 'must be produced at the hearing', but that such attendance may be excused upon the filing of an affidavit by a physician that by reason of physical disability such person is unable to attend. * * *" The affidavit presented to the court at the hearing was on its face sufficient and was not successfully impeached at the hearing on the motion to set aside the order appointing the guardian.

"It becomes unnecessary to pass upon the legality of the physician's affidavit taken through the telephone, for it is evident no prejudice resulted to appellant therefrom. Indeed, at the hearing upon the motion to vacate the guardianship order the doctor confirmed the statements made by him in his affidavit and gave his reasons for believing that the alleged incompetent should not have attended the hearing, testifying as to the consequences which in his opinion might ensue to her physical and mental well-being were she to attend. Banning v. Banning, 80 Cal. 271, 22 P. 210, 13 Am. St.Rep. 156; Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Getchell, 13 Cal.App. 458, 110 P. 331.

"We find no merit in appellant's contention that due and legal service of the citation was not made upon her for the reason that under the old common-law rule, undisturbed by statute, an attorney may not serve a process the issuance of which was procured by him. Upon conflicting but substantial evidence, the court found that in the guardianship proceeding attorney Ferguson was acting as counsel for appellant's husband. Not being a party to the action, the attorney was competent to serve the citation. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 410; Anderson v. Goff, 72 Cal. 65, 66, 13 P. 73, 1 Am. St.Rep. 34; Sheehan v. All Persons, 80 Cal.App. 393, 252 P. 337.

"Lastly, appellant urges that the order refusing to set aside the original order appointing a guardian should be reversed because the petition for such relief was timely and merited for appellant an opportunity to have a hearing upon the merits and in her presence. Conceding, but not deciding, that the court had a right in the second proceeding to set aside an order from which no appeal was taken and which for all purposes was final, such power nevertheless could be exercised only when, in the discretion of the court, the ends of justice would be thereby served. In the instant case the court resolved its discretion against appellant, and we cannot say that the court's action amounted to an abuse of discretion. The granting of such relief as to a judgment or order not void upon its face must depend somewhat upon the circumstances of each particular case, except, of course, that application for relief must be made within the time limited by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Where, as in the case before us, the applicant for relief acquiesced in the original order of guardianship for four months and permitted respondent bank as guardian to administer her estate, we would not be justified in concluding that the trial court's decision was not a fair and just exercise of its discretion."

For the reasons herein stated, the appeal from the order of April 22, 1938, appointing respondent bank as guardian is dismissed, and the order of April 13, 1939, denying the petition to vacate the aforesaid order of April 22, 1938, is affirmed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; CARTER, J.; TRAYNOR, J.; EDMONDS, J.

17 Cal.2d 453

PEOPLE v. CRAIG.

Cr. 4327.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 20, 1941.

1. Rape ⚖51(4), 52(3)

Evidence supported conviction of rape, based on an act of intercourse committed without consent and against will of a 16-year-old girl. Pen.Code, § 261, subds. 1, 3.

2. Criminal law ⚖1202(3)

In rape prosecution, evidence sustained trial court's finding that charge of a prior conviction of a felony was true.

3. Rape ⚖1

The statute defining rape, which contains six subdivisions enumerating circumstances under which an act of intercourse may be deemed an act of rape, creates but one offense. Pen.Code, §§ 261, 263.

4. Criminal law ⚖29

A defendant may be convicted of two separate offenses arising out of the same transaction when each offense is stated in a separate count and when the two offenses differ in their necessary elements and one is not included within the other.

5. Criminal law ⚖984

Where two counts of information charging offense of rape were based on a single act of intercourse committed without the consent and against the will of a 16-year-old girl, the only difference between the two counts being that the first count charged forcible rape and the second count charged statutory rape, two judgments finding defendant guilty of two offenses were unauthorized. Pen.Code, § 261, subds. 1, 3; § 954.

6. Criminal law ⚖1184

An appellate court possesses power to modify a judgment on appeal therefrom. Pen.Code, § 1260.

7. Criminal law ⚖1184

Where trial court improperly pronounced two judgments against defendant, who was convicted under an information charging forcible rape in one count and statutory rape in another, sentences to run concurrently, Supreme Court would modify the judgments to extent of consolidating them into a single judgment, so as to preclude dual judgments of trial court from working any possible disadvantage to defendant in later fixing of his definite term by State Board of Prison Terms and Paroles. Pen.Code, § 261, subds. 1, 3; §§ 954, 1260.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank M. Smith, Judge.

Arkell H. Craig was found guilty on two counts of rape, and he appeals.

Judgments modified and, as modified, affirmed.

For prior opinion, see 104 P.2d 864.

Franklin B. MacCarthy and Henry F. Poyet, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Gilbert F. Nelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Defendant was prosecuted and found guilty upon two counts of rape based on a single act of intercourse committed without the consent and against the will of a sixteen-year-old girl. Count 1 of the information charged that the rape was accomplished by force and violence, contrary to the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 261 of the Penal Code. Count 2, after alleging that it was "a different statement of the same offense", charged statutory rape upon a child under the age of consent, contrary to the provisions of subdivision 1 of the section. Each count also charged a prior conviction of felony and service of a term of imprisonment therefor. A jury trial was waived, and the court, at the conclusion of the evidence, found defendant guilty on both counts. A separate judgment was pronounced and entered on each count sentencing the defendant thereon to the state prison at Folsom "for the term prescribed by law", the sentences to run concurrently. Defendant has appealed.

[1, 2] An examination of the record discloses sufficient evidence to support the conviction of defendant and the finding with respect to the prior felony charge. The only question meriting serious consideration is as to the propriety of entering separate judgments and sentences for both forcible and statutory rape, charged under separate counts, when but a single act of sexual intercourse has been committed.

[3] Section 261 of the Penal Code defines rape as "an act of sexual intercourse, accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, under either of the following circumstances", viz.: (1) Where she is under 18 years of age; (2) where she does not possess the mental capacity to legally consent thereto; (3) where her resistance is overcome by force; (4) where resistance is precluded by certain designated means; (5) where she is unconscious of the nature of the act and this is known to the accused; and (6) where she submits under artifice, fraud, etc.

Under this section, but one punishable offense of rape results from a single act of intercourse, although that act may be accomplished under more than one of the conditions or circumstances specified in the foregoing subdivisions. These subdivisions merely define the circumstances under which an act of intercourse may be deemed an act of rape; they are not to be construed as creating several offenses of rape based upon that single act. This conclusion finds support in section 263 of the Penal Code which provides that: "The essential guilt of rape consists in the outrage to the person and feelings of the female." The victim was not doubly outraged, once because she was forcibly attacked and once because she was under 18 years of age. There was but a single outrage and offense. People v. Snyder, 75 Cal. 323, 17 P. 208; People v. Vann, 129 Cal. 118, 121, 61 P. 776; People v. Jailles, 146 Cal. 301, 304, 79 P. 965; People v. Maruyama, 19 Cal. App. 290, 293, 125 P. 924.

The Vann case, supra [129 Cal. 118, 61 P. 777], states: "We think the true construction of section 261 to be that thereby the legislature meant merely to put beyond doubt the rule that on an information for rape the things mentioned in the subdivisions could be proven, and would establish the crime. It is not intended to alter or establish a rule of pleading, or to create six different kinds of crime."

In the Jailles case, supra [146 Cal. 301, 79 P. 966], the accused, as here, was charged in separate counts with both forcible and statutory rape based on a single act of intercourse. This court declared that: "It must be conceded that it would be preferable for the pleader endeavoring to set forth one offense in different forms under different counts to expressly state in the information that the matters and things so set forth are descriptive of one and the same offense. Such a statement would obviate all question as to the intention of the pleader. We think, however, that, despite the absence of such a statement in the information before us, it is manifest that it was sought to charge but one offense, viz., one rape committed on Maria Tampo on May 10, 1903. The nature of the allegations in the two counts shows this very clearly. The only difference between the allegations of the two counts is that force, violence, and resistance are alleged in one, without allegation as to age, while in the other is the allegation as to age, without any allegation as to force, violence, and resistance. The allegations of each show the offense of rape, committed on the same person on the same day, and indicate that the district attorney was simply endeavoring to set forth the same transaction in different ways, so as to bring the case within either subdivision 1 or subdivision 3 of section 261, Pen. Code, as the evidence on the trial might show it to have been. All these allegations might undoubtedly have been joined in one count, for there is nothing inconsistent in them."

Section 954 of the Penal Code still provides, as it did then, for a statement of the "same offense" in separate counts. Here, as already stated, the information expressly alleged that the second count represented "a different statement of the same offense", indicating the pleader's belief to be that one offense was being stated in different ways. However, even in the absence of such an averment in the Jailles case, the information there was held to charge but one offense in varying forms and in separate counts. It is true that at the time of the decision in the Jailles case section 954 did not authorize, as it does now, the charging in one indictment or information of two or more "different offenses" of the same class or connected together in their commission. Still, it cannot be successfully contended that the absence of such authority in the statute prompted the decision that charges of forcible and statutory rape based on a single act of intercourse constitute but one offense. If the court in the Jailles case had been of the opinion that these charges represented different offenses, it would have so held and declared the joinder of such "different" offenses improper in the absence of statutory authority. Instead, it held that but one offense was involved.

[4, 5] The authorities have set down certain rules or tests whereby it may generally be determined whether one or more offenses result from a single act or transaction. Frequently, the test it stated to be "the identity of the offenses as distinguished from the identity of the transactions from which they arise. A defendant may be convicted of two separate offenses arising out of the same transaction when each offense is stated in a separate count and when the two offenses differ in their necessary elements and one is not included within the other." People v. Venable, 25 Cal.App.2d 73, 74, 76 P.2d 523. Where, as here, the charge and proof disclose a single act of intercourse resulting from force employed upon a minor, but one punishable rape is consummated, for the proof, though dual in character, necessarily crystallizes into one "included" or identical offense.

Under the above test for determining whether one or more offenses result from the same act or transaction, it has been held, by way of illustration, that where one shot is fired and two persons are killed, two punishable homicides result. People v. Majors, 65 Cal. 138, 3 P. 597, 52 Am.Rep. 295. Likewise, it has been held that where one act or transaction violates the provisions of two statutes, whether of the same or different jurisdictions, it is punishable under both. People v. Painetti, 210 Cal. 476, 292 P. 965 [violation of Still Act and Wright Act]; People v. Burkhart, 5 Cal. 2d 641, 55 P.2d 846 [violation of county ordinance for being drunk in public place and driving motor vehicle while drunk]; People v. Coltrin, 5 Cal.2d 649, 55 P.2d 1161 [abortion and murder]; People v. Warriner, 37 Cal.App. 107, 173 P. 489 [lewd and lascivious acts and rape committed same day on same child]; People v. McCollum, 116 Cal.App. 55, 2 P.2d 432 [incest and rape].

All of these illustrations are distinguishable from the situation here confronting the court. In the cited instances, the one act or transaction either injured or affected two or more victims or ran counter to two or more separate and distinct statutes defining different crimes with variable elements. In many instances the violation of these separate statutes was complete at different stages of the commission of the single act or transaction. In other words, a punishable abortion results when the woman has aborted as a result of the accused's act, but the homicide for which he may likewise be tried and convicted does not result until the victim later dies. The two offenses arising out of the same transaction are consummated at different times, and the statute condemning each is based upon an independent public policy. This is equally true of the illustration with respect to the offenses of lewd conduct and rape perpetrated on the same child. But none of the foregoing distinguishable characteristics is here present. There is only one victim. There has been a violation of but one statute—section 261 of the Penal Code. And, while the proof necessarily varies with respect to the several subdivisions of that section under which the charge may be brought, the sole punishable offense under any and all of them is the unlawful intercourse with the victim. We conclude that only one punishable offense of rape results from a single act of intercourse, though it may be chargeable in separate counts when accomplished under the varying circumstances specified in the subdivisions of section 261 of the Penal Code.

Section 264 of the Penal Code prescribes a punishment of "not more than fifty years" in the state prison for rape committed in violation of any of the subdivisions of section 261. In the case of statutory rape (subd. 1, sec. 261), it also provides for an alternative county jail punishment. The trial court, however, by its "judgments" has sentenced defendant on both counts of the information to the state prison.

[6, 7] The "judgments" entered by the trial court should be modified to the extent of consolidating them into a single judgment. A new trial or reversal with directions is not necessary for this purpose. An appellate court possesses the power to modify a judgment on appeal therefrom. Sec. 1260, Penal Code; People v. Kynette, Cal.Sup., 104 P.2d 794. Such modification will serve to preclude the dual judgments of the trial court from hereafter working any possible disadvantage or detriment to the defendant in the later fixing of his definite term by the State Board of Prison Terms and Paroles.

For the foregoing reasons, the "judgments" herein are consolidated and modified to read:

"Whereas the said Arkell H. Craig has been found guilty of the crime of Rape, a felony, as defined and proscribed in subdivisions 1 and 3 of section 261 of the Penal Code, and as charged in counts 1 and 2 of the amended information, being separate statements of the same offense, and the allegation of prior conviction having been found true as therein alleged, to-wit: Lar ceny of Auto, a felony, convicted in the Circuit Court of the State of Illinois, Cook County, upon which judgment was rendered on or about March 14, 1925, and that defendant served a term of imprisonment therefor in a penal institution,

"It is Therefore Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed that the said Arkell H. Craig be punished by imprisonment in the State Prison of the State of California at Folsom for the term prescribed by law."

As modified, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; EDMONDS, J.; TRAYNOR, J.; CARTER, J.

17 Cal.2d 479

PEOPLE v. JOHANSEN.

Cr. 4334.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 21, 1941.

1. Criminal law ⇐1068½

Where defendant was convicted of two murders in the first degree, and his punishment was fixed at death, appeals from such judgments were automatic under statute. Pen.Code, § 1239.

2. Homicide ⇐237

In murder prosecutions, wherein defendant interposed pleas of not guilty by reason of insanity, evidence justified trial court's finding that defendant was sane when he committed the crimes.

3. Homicide ⇐250

Evidence sustained convictions for two murders.

4. Homicide ⇐354

Where evidence sustained convictions for two murders, and trial court's finding that defendant was sane at the time of commission of the murders, the trial court's action in imposing the death penalty would be sustained on appeal. Pen.Code, § 1239.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Alfred J. Fritz, Judge.

William Johansen was convicted of two murders, and he appeals.

Judgments affirmed.

Gerald J. Kenny, Public Defender, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., David K. Lener, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Matthew Brady, Dist. Atty., and John J. McMahon, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

CURTIS, Justice.

The defendant, William Johansen, was charged in two separate informations with the murder of two human beings in the City and County of San Francisco. In one information he was charged with the murder of Lena Coffin on the 6th day of April, 1935, and in the other the charge was that he had murdered Irene Chandler, known also as Irene McCarthy, on the 24th day of June, 1940. The two informations were filed on July 18, 1940. Defendant interposed to each information pleas of not guilty, and not guilty by reason of insanity. He subsequently withdrew his pleas of not guilty and waived a jury, and went to trial on October 14, 1940, before the court on his pleas of not guilty by reason of insanity. The two cases were consolidated for trial. Prior to the date of trial the court had appointed two alienists, Dr. Tilton E. Tillman and Dr. Margaret H. Smyth, the former a member of the Lunacy Commission and the latter being at the time of her appointment medical director and superintendent of the Stockton State Hospital.

[1] At the close of the evidence the court found the defendant sane and fixed his punishment at death, and thereafter pronounced judgments in each case in accordance with the penalty so fixed. The appeals from these judgments under section 1239 of the Penal Code are automatic. While defendant was represented by the Public Defender in the trial court, there has been no appearance on his behalf in this court and no brief has been filed by him personally or otherwise. The Attorney General has filed a statement setting forth a summary of the evidence in the case and such matters as he deems pertinent.

The only witnesses at the trial were the two alienists and the defendant. The latter identified three statements made by him to prosecuting officers after his arrest and prior to his trial, which, upon proof of their authenticity, were introduced in evidence without objection upon his part.

The qualifications of each of the alienists were admitted by counsel for the defendant. Dr. Tillman was first called as a witness and identified the written report which he had made to the court as to defendant's mental state. His report bore the date of October 10, 1940, and was as follows: "This is to certify that I have examined William Johansen on two different occasions at the County Jail and have had a long interview with his present wife who is a resident of Long Beach, California, and that I have been in consultation with Dr. Margaret Smyth of the Stockton State Hospital, and I find that William Johansen is sane and competent."

He further testified that he had read the confession of defendant, meaning the three statements just referred to, and had questioned the defendant respecting each of the crimes of which he was accused, and gave as his opinion that the defendant was sane when he committed "both murders".

Dr. Smyth, the other alienist appointed by the court to examine the defendant was then sworn as a witness and testified that she was medical director and superintendent of the Stockton State Hospital and had been there ten years; that at the request of the court she had examined the defendant and had made a written report to the court as to his mental condition. This report was addressed to the court and was by the court read into the record of the case. It was as follows:

"Enclosed please find result of examination together with my opinion of the mental condition of William Johansen.

"I found him to be quiet and composed, his conversation coherent and rational. He gave the story of his life from childhood and stated that he had suffered a great deal due to continued references to his having been an illegitimate child.

"He gave no evidence of hallucinations or delusions. His memory was good. He had been educated to the eighth grade in school. He said he had been able to make a fairly good living for himself and family.

"He declared there had never been anything abnormal in his sexual life in spite of all that has been said in the newspapers about him; that his present trouble is due to the effects of drink, and he now wishes to withdraw both pleas—guilty, and not guilty by reason of insanity—in order to avoid further distress to his wife. He feels that he has the best wife in the world and has decided this is the only thing for him to do.

"It is my opinion that this man is not insane and that he knew the difference between right and wrong at the time of the commission of the acts charged against him."

At the close of the reading of this report Dr. Smyth, in answer to a question propounded to her by the court, stated that the defendant was legally sane at the time he committed the offenses with which he was charged, "these two murders". On cross-examination, Dr. Smyth reaffirmed her opinion respecting the sanity of the defendant at the time the offenses were committed.

The defendant then took the witness stand in his own behalf and gave testimony respecting the two murders charged in said informations. When upon cross-examination he was shown the three statements hereinbefore alluded to, he admitted making the same, that he signed each of them, and that they correctly reflected the questions asked him and his answers to said questions. These statements, which may be referred to as his confession, were thereafter admitted in evidence.

His testimony given at the trial and these three statements give a detailed history of the defendant from his birth to the time of his arrest immediately following the death of Irene Chandler. It is not necessary to set forth this evidence at any great length. We deem it sufficient to state that it shows that defendant was born in Denmark and brought to this country at an early age. He attended school at Beverly, Massachusetts, and finished the eighth grade. He enlisted in the army at an early age, but deserted after a short service. He then went to New York, where he married his first wife. After they had two children born to them, dissension arose between him and his wife. He visited her one night about midnight. They engaged in an encounter, and he choked her to death, and afterwards mutilated her body by opening her abdomen to determine whether she was pregnant as she had claimed that she was in that condition. He then shipped as a seaman, and some eighteen months thereafter arrived in San Francisco early in the year 1935. On April 5, 1935, one evening on Market street he met Lena Coffin. They went to a nearby hotel and secured a room. They sat around the room about an hour, when he grabbed her by the throat and strangled her to death. He then mutilated her body by cutting out her breast. He left the hotel and soon shipped out of San Francisco on a boat leaving for Portland. He spent considerable time on the Gulf of Mexico and in Texas, but returned to San Francisco, and on June 24, 1940, he met Irene Chandler, known also as Irene McCarthy, in a beer hall on Fifth street. They had a number of drinks together and both were fairly well intoxicated. He bought a bottle of whiskey, and they went to a nearby hotel and engaged a room. The woman immediately undressed and went to bed. He did the same and found that she had "passed out". He tried to arouse her but she would not wake up. He grabbed her by the throat and choked her to death. He then mutilated her body, washed himself and left the hotel. That same day he took a bus for Los Angeles.

We, of course, are not concerned with the murder committed by defendant in New York. The only excuse he gave for this crime was that his wife threw a flower pot at him. In explanation of the murder of Lena Coffin he stated, "I don't know, something came over me and I grabbed a hold of her by the throat." Referring to the killing of Irene Chandler, he said, "I guess a mania must have seized me again and I grabbed her by the throat and choked her while she was lying in bed * * * put pressure on her windpipe." He had sexual intercourse with neither of his victims, although he stated that he went to the hotel in each instance for that purpose. He made no rational explanation as to the reason he mutilated their bodies.

After he had testified and his confession had been read into the record, both Dr. Tillman and Dr. Smyth were recalled to the witness stand, and each stated that the evidence to which they had just listened confirmed them in their opinion that the defendant was sane at the time he committed the two murders of which he was accused.

The cases were then submitted to the court for its decision, which was as follows: "The Court finds the defendant sane at the time of the commission of the two murders alleged in the informations." At a later date the court pronounced judgment in each case by sentencing the defendant to death.

[2] There can be no question but that the evidence before the court fully justifies the finding of the court that the defendant was sane at the time he committed the crimes of which he was charged in the informations.

[3, 4] The evidence against the defendant in each of these two cases establishes beyond any doubt that defendant is guilty of murder in the first degree, as charged in each information herein. The action of the trial court in imposing upon defendant the extreme penalty under the law should therefore be sustained. Each of the judgments against defendant is affirmed.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J.; HOUSER, J.; TRAYNOR, J.; EDMONDS, J.; SHENK, J.; CARTER, J

17 Cal.2d 459

PEOPLE v. IVES et al.

Cr. 4315.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 21, 1941.

1. Criminal law ⇐1134(1)

Where convictions were of murder in the first degree without recommendation, all appeals would be considered "automatic" and the entire record searched on behalf of each defendant for error resulting in a possible miscarriage of justice. Pen.Code, § 1239(b).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Automatic Appeal".

2. Criminal law ⇐622(2)

In prosecution of four persons for murder in the first degree, refusal of two defendants of a separate trial was not error where theory of prosecution was that such defendants were aiders and abettors even though not present at time of murder, and theory of prosecution was later substantiated by the evidence.

3. Criminal law ⇐563

The corpus delicti may be proved by circumstantial evidence and the reasonable inferences drawn therefrom.

4. Criminal law ⇐563

To warrant a conviction, the corpus delicti must be proved to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt but it is not necessary that it should be so proved before corroborative evidence is introduced.

5. Homicide ⇐228(1)

In prosecution for homicide, if a prima facie case is presented that deceased met his death by means of an unlawful act of another, the evidence is sufficient to prove the corpus delicti.

6. Criminal law ⇐304(2)

It is a well-known fact that while occasionally persons take chloral hydrate to induce sleep, it is generally administered by a physician.

7. Criminal law ⇐323

When chloral hydrate is given other than by a physician, an inference may be reasonably drawn that the purpose is to take advantage of the person to whom it is administered, and in such instances chloral hydrate is commonly referred to as "knockout drops".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Knockout Drops".

8. Homicide ⇐228(1)

To prove a "prima facie case of corpus delicti" in a homicide prosecution, all that was required was to show a reasonable probability that a criminal act of another had been the cause of death.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Prima Facie Case of Corpus Delicti".

9. Homicide ⇐268

In prosecution for murder in the first degree, evidence of the corpus delicti was sufficient to submit to jury.

10. Criminal law ⇐412(1), 1169(3)

In prosecution for murder in the first degree where the corpus delicti had been proved sufficiently, irrespective of testimony of defendants, statements made by them were admissible, and in any event the reception of such statements was harmless where defendants subsequently testified concerning the same matters.

11. Homicide ⇐268

In prosecution for murder in the first degree, there was sufficient legal evidence upon which to deny motion of defendants for directed verdict.

12. Criminal law ⇐511(2)

The statements and admissions of a defendant charged with murder in the first degree were sufficient to show the commission of the offense or the circumstances of its perpetration within the rule that the testimony of an accomplice cannot be considered on question of defendant's guilt or innocence unless the latter is connected with commission of the offense by other independent evidence showing the commission of the offense or the circumstances of its perpetration. Pen.Code, § 1111.

13. Homicide ⇐253(1)

Verdict of murder in the first degree without recommendation was sustained by the evidence without considering testimony objected to.

14. Witnesses ⇐41

The circumstances of a killing may show a general malignant disregard for the lives of others evidencing a heart insensible to social obligation and an insufficient mentality to distinguish between right and wrong, yet the possessor of such heart and mind may be competent to testify. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1879, 1880.

15. Witnesses ⇐41

Unsoundness of mind does not per se establish the incompetency of a witness. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1879, 1880.

16. Criminal law ⇐1158(4)

In prosecution for murder where defendants made motion for new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence which was that one jointly charged with defendants was found insane at time of killing and that such defendant had given testimony detrimental to his co-defendants, it was for trial court to determine whether such defendant was able to perceive and could make known his perceptions to others, so as to be competent as a witness. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1879, 1880.

17. Witnesses ⇐41

One may be insane upon a certain subject but sane as to other matters and one may be unable to distinguish legally between right and wrong and still be able to narrate facts chronologically, correctly, intelligently and truly, as regards competency of such person as a witness. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1879, 1880.

18. Criminal law ⇐1169(1)

Where there was abundant evidence to sustain verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree without considering the testimony objected to on ground of insanity of witness, the defendants could not be said to have been prejudiced by reception of such testimony. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1879, 1880.

19. Criminal law ⇐641(1)

Persons accused of murder in first degree were entitled to competent legal representation. Pen.Code, § 987; Const. art. 1, § 13.

20. Criminal law ⇐641(3)

The mere fact that attorney appointed by court to defend one charged with murder in first degree had been practicing for only a year did not show that the attorney was not competent. Pen.Code, § 987; Const. art. 1, § 13.

21. Criminal law ⇐641(3)

Record showed that defendant was competently represented by attorney appointed by court to represent defendant. Pen.Code, § 987; Const. art. 1, § 13.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Raymond T. Coughlin, Judge.

Gordon Hawkins, Mike Simeone and Eithel Leta Juanita Spinelli were convicted of murder in the first degree without recommendation, and they appeal.

Judgments affirmed.

Gordon Fleury, of Sacramento, for appellant Albert Ives.

Robert H. Schwab, of Sacramento, for appellant Gordon Hawkins.

Paul Angelillo and Arthur E. White, both of Los Angeles, and Peter Mannino, of Sacramento, for appellant Mike Simeone.

Ralph Thomas Lui, of Sacramento, for appellant Eithel Leta Juanita Spinelli.

Earl Warren, Atty.-Gen., and J. Q. Brown, Deputy Atty.-Gen., for respondent.

WARD, Justice pro tem.

[1] Appeals by Gordon Hawkins, Mike Simeone and Eithel Leta Juanita Spinelli from judgments of conviction of the murder of Robert Sherrard, had upon an indictment wherein they were charged jointly with one Albert Ives, and from orders denying their separate motions for new trial. The defendants Ives, Hawkins and Spinelli, in addition to their pleas of not guilty, entered pleas of not guilty by reason of insanity. These pleas were withdrawn by defendants Hawkins and Spinelli. Ives was declared to be insane at the time of the commission of the offense and was committed to an asylum. Briefs and a short oral argument on the appeal have been presented on behalf of Simeone; a brief was filed on behalf of Mrs. Spinelli, and the appeal by Hawkins has been submitted upon the record. The convictions were of murder in the first degree without recommendation. In view of the Hawkins appeal, all appeals will be considered as automatic, Penal Code, § 1239, subd. b, and the entire record searched on behalf of each defendant for error resulting in a possible miscarriage of justice. People v. Perry, 14 Cal.2d 387, 94 P.2d 559, 124 A.L.R. 1123; People v. Williams, 14 Cal.2d 532, 95 P.2d 456. Consideration will also be given to matters set forth in the briefs, and to those that may suggest themselves from reading the clerk's and reporter's transcripts.

[2] A motion for a separate trial was presented on behalf of Mrs. Spinelli and Simeone. The motion was made and argued by the attorney for Simeone and predicated upon the theory that the evidence against these two defendants would be "different and distinct", both in kind and degree, from the evidence against the other defendants; that Mrs. Spinelli and Simeone were not present when the crime was committed; that a denial of the motion would mean "that the interests of these two defendants will be materially prejudiced, and since the crime is the crime of the first degree, a great deal of consideration and a great deal of thought should be given before any interests of these two clients is put into jeopardy". The district attorney stated his theory that the defendants were aiders and abettors, and this theory was later substantiated by the evidence. The court was correct in denying the motion.

Before narrating any of the ghastly and sordid evidence describing the crime, we deem it advisable to give consideration to the sufficiency of the proof of the corpus delicti. The body of the deceased, Robert Sherrard, was recovered as the result of dragging a portion of the Sacramento river in the vicinity of Freeport bridge. Clad only in bathing trunks, it was found approximately 447 feet south of the bridge, and about 150 feet out from the Yolo county shore of the river. About 404 feet north of the bridge and about 6 feet away from the highway also on the Yolo county side, the clothing of the deceased was found. Between this spot and the place where the body was recovered, the bank of the river is thickly covered with trees and underbrush. No mark was found on the body except a scratch on the head.

The autopsy surgeon testified that the deceased came "to his death by asphyxiation, by drowning"; that both lungs were "badly" congested and just oozed with dark venous colored blood; that the right side of his heart was dilated, and both sides were venous in character, showing lack of oxygen or some obstruction in breathing; that Sherrard was either partially or more probably totally unconscious when his body entered the water. This conclusion was based upon the condition of the lungs and heart, also a chemical analysis of the stomach, which showed traces of chloral hydrate, a substance used "as a hypnotic" to produce sleep. The chemist testified that he did not know how much chloral hydrate was actually in the stomach.

[3-5] The corpus delicti may be proven by circumstantial evidence, and the reasonable inferences drawn therefrom. To warrant a conviction it must be proven to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, but it is not necessary that it should be so proven before other evidence is introduced which corroborates it or strengthens reasonable inferences drawn therefrom. If a prima facie case is presented that the deceased met his death by means of an unlawful act of another, the evidence is sufficient. People v. King, 213 Cal. 89, 1 P.2d 15; People v. Selby, 198 Cal. 426, 245 P. 426; People v. Vertrees, 169 Cal. 404, 146 P. 890; People v. Wilkins, 158 Cal. 530, 111 P. 612; People v. Bonilla, 114 Cal.App. 219, 299 P. 784; People v. Wagner, 21 Cal.App.2d 92, 68 P.2d 277.

[6, 7] We proceed then to examine the evidence in order to determine its sufficiency in this respect. Did Sherrard enter the water while conscious, and was his unconscious condition produced thereafter? This question is sufficiently answered by the autopsy surgeon. What caused this unconscious condition if not the chloral hydrate? Is it reasonable to conclude that had the deceased desired to commit suicide, he could, in even a partially dazed condition as the result of having voluntarily swallowed the chloral hydrate, have climbed down an embankment, removed his clothing, donned bathing trunks and walked through the thick brush to the river without receiving even a scratch on the lower part of his body? It is a well-known fact that while occasionally persons take this drug to induce sleep, it is generally administered by a physician. Is it reasonable to infer that a physician would have administered it at any time other than when Sherrard was so situated that he could immediately sleep? When chloral hydrate is given, other than by a physician, an inference may be reasonably drawn that the purpose is to take advantage of the person to whom it is administered. In such instances it is commonly referred to as "knockout drops". Assuming that Sherrard could have swallowed chloral hydrate voluntarily and then entered the water, it is more reasonable to conclude that the drug was administered by another for an unlawful purpose.

[8, 9] To prove a prima facie case of corpus delicti, all that was required was to show a reasonable probability that a criminal act of another had been the direct cause of the death of Sherrard. However, in this case, each defendant appeared as a witness in his own behalf and admitted certain participation in the offense. With both these elements present here, evidence of the corpus delicti was amply sufficient to submit to the jury. People v. Hill, 2 Cal. App.2d 141, 37 P.2d 849; People v. Kelly, 70 Cal.App. 519, 234 P. 110; People v. Kinsley, 118 Cal.App. 593, 5 P.2d 938.

[10] The corpus delicti having been proven sufficiently, irrespective of the testimony of the defendants, certain statements made by each were admissible in evidence over objection by them. A search of the record does not disclose any ground upon which an objection could have been properly sustained. If any possible error appeared in the reception in evidence of the statements, such error was rendered harmless by each defendant voluntarily appearing on the witness stand and testifying relative to the same matters. People v. McLachlan, 13 Cal.2d 45, 87 P.2d 825.

Hereinafter certain testimony of each appellant and of Ives will be referred to or quoted, but for the present, pieced together, the tale appears as follows: Mrs. Spinelli formerly lived in an eastern city with her "common law husband" Mike Simeone, who had given her a gun. She left Simeone and came to San Francisco the latter part of January of 1940. Shortly thereafter she was "on relief". In March of the same year Simeone arrived in San Francisco and lived at the address of Mrs. Spinelli, where Ives, Sherrard and Hawkins were in the habit of visiting. Mrs. Spinelli, nick-named by her associates "the Duchess", took part with Ives in the making of "blackjacks", although she testified she did so only as a result of a threat of Ives to injure her daughter by placing her in a resort in the Chinese quarter of the city. In the course of the association of the four defendants with Sherrard, a robbery in which the proprietor of a barbecue stand was shot and killed, was perpetrated in San Francisco; the gun used at the time was later proven to be the one given Mrs. Spinelli by Simeone. The defendants, learning that Sherrard was "talking too much" about the affair, left San Francisco and went to Sacramento, where, at a picnic along the Sacramento river, and while Sherrard was in swimming, the four defendants discussed various ways and means of killing him. It was Mrs. Spinelli's idea to make his death as painless as possible, and it was Simeone's to camouflage the killing as a suicide. During the same evening, at their hotel, Sherrard was given whisky drugged with chloral hydrate furnished by Mrs. Spinelli, Simeone offering the drink to Sherrard, and later Simeone and Hawkins assisted in carrying the partly unconscious youth to a waiting automobile. Hawkins and Ives then transported him to the river and threw him over the Freeport bridge into the water. These facts are substantiated in part by each defendant.

[11] At the conclusion of the case for the People, the attorney for Simeone strenuously contended that the evidence was insufficient to connect Simeone with the commission of the offense, and moved for a "directed" verdict in favor of his client. It was stipulated that the motion should apply to all of the defendants. In denying the motion, the court called attention to the circumstance that during the afternoon preceding the evening when knockout drops were administered to Sherrard, Simeone had taken part in a conversation on the subject of doing away with Sherrard; that there was evidence Simeone knew in the evening that the knockout drops were going to be put into Sherrard's whisky, and that he poured the whisky into a glass or paper cup from which Sherrard subsequently drank. Such evidence, or the substance of it, as above set forth, appears in written admissions of Simeone. There was sufficient legal evidence upon which to deny the motion for a directed verdict.

[12] While the testimony of an accomplice cannot be considered on the question of defendant's guilt or innocence unless the latter is connected with the commission of the offense by other independent evidence which, as appellant Simeone contends, must, to be sufficient, go further than merely to show the commission of the offense, or the circumstances of its perpetration—in this case the statements and admissions of appellant Simeone are sufficient to meet the requirements of this rule. People v. West, 4 Cal.2d 367, 49 P.2d 276. In addition to his statements that during the afternoon of the picnic the subject of administering knockout drops to Sherrard had been discussed; that he had offered the drink containing the drug to the youth, and had later carried the unconscious Sherrard on his shoulder from the hotel room, it was independently proved that there was chloral hydrate in the stomach of Sherrard, and that Simeone fled from the scene of the crime with the other perpetrators thereof. These facts taken collectively or separately are not consistent with a theory of the innocence of Simeone. People v. Robbins, 171 Cal. 466, 154 P. 317; People v. Kempley, 205 Cal. 441, 271 P. 478.

Up to this point, the sufficiency of the corroborative evidence has been considered as of the time of the submission of the case for the People. If, for the sake of argument, it be assumed, as appellant Simeone contends, that the testimony given by independent witnesses is insufficient as corroboration, and that error was committed in the admission of his written statements, there is the further fact that later, in his voluntary appearance as a witness, Simeone made admissions of his participation in the crime. The same condition prevails as to each of the other appellants voluntarily appearing as a witness in his or her own behalf at the trial, who made admissions connecting the witness with the execution of the murder plot. Pen.Code, § 1111; People v. Negra, 208 Cal. 64, 280 P. 354; People v. Tinnin, 136 Cal.App. 301, 28 P.2d 951; People v. Hanks, 35 Cal.App.2d 290, 95 P.2d 478; People v. King, 30 Cal.App.2d 185, 85 P.2d 928.

Upon submission of the case to the jury, the evidence showed that Simeone had advised that the death should have the appearance of a suicide. The independently proved circumstances of the finding of the body attired only in swimming trunks, and the discovery of Sherrard's clothing under circumstances apparently designed to indicate that Sherrard had placed them there while he went swimming, indicated that Simeone's instructions had been carried out.

On the trial each defendant testified on his or her own behalf to facts and circumstances tending to place the blame on some other defendant. On appeal, Mrs. Spinelli seeks to name Ives as the instigator of the plot to kill Sherrard, while Simeone attempts to have it appear that Mrs. Spinelli alone was responsible for the administration of the knockout drops (which she sometimes refers to in her testimony as "Mickey Finns"). Hawkins contends that he was merely following the directions and orders of others.

Did the facts justify the verdict returned? Let us consider the testimony of each defendant separately.

Mrs. Spinelli testified on direct examination that at the picnic, while Sherrard was down at the river swimming, she advised Hawkins that Sherrard had admitted to her that he had told his brother's fiancee all about the holdup in San Francisco and the killing of the proprietor of the barbecue stand, to which Hawkins replied that if Sherrard would tell one person, he would tell others, upon which Mrs. Spinelli remarked that since Sherrard was equally guilty he could not tell without involving himself. She said Hawkins then talked to Simeone and Ives about the matter and Ives said: "Well, that settles it. Bobby is going to die, and he is going to die right now." Later, in talking to Simeone, so she testified, Ives said "we can wait until we get to Gary, Indiana for this here"; that during the afternoon the four defendants discussed ways and means of getting rid of Sherrard; that among the methods suggested, it was proposed to tie him to a railroad track, beat him to death, run over him with the car, drown him, shoot him; that later on that evening when they returned to their hotel in Sacramento, Ives said to her: "You people going on through here and help me with this? * * * If you tell Mike and Gordon to help me, they will help me." She stated Ives then told her he could get outside help on the job if necessary, but "you know the price you are paying"; that she and Simeone then talked the matter over, the others being requested to remain outside the room during this conversation; that she told Simeone she had three grains of "Mickey Finn" crystals and she would go down and get some whisky and put them in. She further testified: "And when I went out of the room I taken these crystals with me and I emptied them out of a little small capsules, three grain capsules, that they were in into the bottle that had been on display here * * * and put enough whisky in it to dissolve the crystals and then I went back in the room and put the whisky on the dresser and laid this little bottle [a perfume bottle] on the dresser also." She stated that when Sherrard, Hawkins and Ives left the room for a moment she "opened the bottle and I poured these Mickey Finn—this solution into the cup that was on the dresser. * * * And then Al and Bobby and Gordon came back in the room, and Mike poured the whisky out, and he handed Bobby a cup * * * of whisky." She testified that neither Gordon nor Ives took the drinks poured for them, Hawkins saying "I don't drink when I am driving an automobile * * * if I know I am going to drive a car, I never drink"; that Ives said he never drank whisky—"only beer"; that Simeone and Sherrard continued to drink, and that the men "then played with wrestling around there, and they were sparring and boxing"; that shortly thereafter Sherrard became ill and was "kind of staggering"; that she requested the men to get him downstairs; that someone said "How are you going to get him out of here?" and Simeone replied: "I will pick him up"; that he set Sherrard up on his shoulder and carried him to the head of the steps; that she then picked up her purse and went downstairs with two of her children for something to eat.

It is not necessary to refer to the cross-examination of Mrs. Spinelli except to note the following: The gun used in the barbecue stand holdup and killing was found on Mrs. Spinelli at the time of her arrest on the present charge; it had been in her possession since approximately one hour after the killing of the proprietor of the stand. In her purse, also, were blackjacks. Referring to placing the crystals or the solution thereof in a cup, Mrs. Spinelli testified:

"Q. Well, at the time that Mike poured the whisky on top of the crystal solution, do you know whether or not he knew that the solution had been put into the cup? A. Well, to my best knowledge, yes.

"Q. Did you tell him you had? A. He was right there. * * *

"Q. That is, you did tell him you were going to put the knockout drops in there? A. He and I had talked about that ahead, when I talked to him alone in the room.

"Q. You talked with one another, you told him you were going to put them in? A. Yes.

"Q. And it was he who poured the whisky on top of them, and it was he who gave the drink to Bob? A. As far as I know, yes, sir."

Simeone testified that Ives had made several threats to get rid of Sherrard and suggestions as to how it could be done; denied that Mrs. Spinelli had ever mentioned knockout drops to him, but admitted that he had poured the whisky into three cups handed him by Mrs. Spinelli. He stated that Ives and Hawkins refused to drink and that he drank the portions poured for them; that he offered Sherrard the third drink; that Sherrard subsequently drank the whisky contained in a paper cup, and later he and Sherrard drank from the bottle. He denied that he handed Sherrard the cup containing the knockout drops. He testified that in removing Sherrard from the hotel room, he only went as far as the steps and then back into the house; that he did not know anything about the drowning until the next morning when one of the party spoke of it while they were in the car. On cross-examination Simeone testified that during the afternoon, as they were sitting on the bank of the river Mrs. Spinelli took from her purse a small bottle and showed it to Ives, Hawkins and himself. He stated: "Somebody asked what was in it and somebody said knockout drops." At this period Sherrard was down by the river. Simeone further testified: "Al was talking about shooting a guy in Frisco, which he shot a man in Frisco, and he was scared of Bob and wanted to take him out and get rid of him"; that Ives said "We ain't going to let Bob live because he is talking too much. I ain't going to fry for nobody", to which Simeone replied "If he does talk he will only hang himself". On being confronted with written statements made by him to the district attorney and his deputy, and, prior thereto, to a police officer, that it was agreed at the hotel room just prior to the serving of the whisky that knockout drops should be placed in Sherrard's drink in furtherance of their plan of the afternoon to kill him because he talked too much; that he knew when he poured the drinks that Mrs. Spinelli intended to place the knockout drops in Sherrard's whisky and referring to his participation in transporting the drugged youth from the hotel room to the waiting automobile, that "We took him downstairs", he denied having made such statements.

On the day of the picnic Hawkins drove several members of the party to the bank of the river and then returned to the hotel where he went up to Mrs. Spinelli's room. He testified "Well, she seemed to be fairly excited, she said * * * that Irene [Sherrard's brother's fiancee] was in town and * * * looking for Bob Sherrard * * * that we would have to do away with Bob, because * * * if Irene got hold of Bob, she would take him back to San Francisco, and he would talk, and we would all get in trouble." Hawkins further testified that upon their joining the others at the river bank, Mrs. Spinelli talked to Ives, Simeone and himself about the necessity of getting rid of Sherrard; that later he (Hawkins) drove Mrs. Spinelli, her daughter and two sons back to Sacramento to buy provisions for the picnic; that Mrs. Spinelli left the car and went to her hotel room where her daughter and Hawkins joined her. In this connection, Hawkins testified that Mrs. Spinelli was grinding some crystals with a bottle or a spoon and upon his asking her what they were, she said they were "Mickey Finn crystals"; that she was going to grind them and dissolve them in whisky; that after the picnic, drinks would be passed around, and she would put the knockout drops in Bob's drink and he would go in swimming and drown. Referring to the evening, on their return to the hotel, Hawkins testified that Simeone filled with whisky three of the cups furnished him by Mrs. Spinelli and offered him and Ives drinks, which they both refused; that Mrs. Spinelli offered Sherrard one of the cups and he drank its contents; that shortly thereafter Sherrard became groggy, stumbling around, holding on to things for support and falling time after time; that different members of the party picked him up on different occasions; that once Mrs. Spinelli hit him in the back of the neck; that a little later on she told them it was time for them to go out and get some sleep; that Sherrard was placed on Simeone's shoulder, and with his (Hawkins') and Ives' assistance he was taken down to the automobile and placed in the back seat; that as the car pulled out, Mrs. Spinelli said to Ives: "Take care of Bob. You know what to do."

Hawkins further testified that as the car rolled on toward the river, Sherrard kept "rambling in his speech and talking foolishly and he said something about a girl that he used to go with and he said something at the time I didn't understand what he meant, but afterwards I figured out that he must have known that he was going to be killed or going to * * * be taken for a ride"; that he was very pale and rigid in the back seat, coughing and gasping; that during the drive Sherrard "passed out"; that his pulse was "a good twice normal"; that as they neared the bridge, Ives changed to the rear seat, saying "I want to make it look like suicide"; that Ives removed Sherrard's clothing and placed on him bathing trunks; that they then stopped the car while Ives "laid the clothes in a pile" and then drove on until they reached the bridge, crossed it and went on for a quarter of a mile further, returned to the bridge, where they stopped at the approach, and Ives told him to get out and see whether there was any water "under that railing over there"; that when he told Ives there was none, they drove on to the bridge, when they observed another car parked on the other side of the bridge; that they drove on across until they reached the highway on the other side, turned and recrossed the bridge, went beyond it, turned and again came upon the bridge, Ives indicating where he wished Hawkins to stop; that Ives then "pulled Bob out of the car" and Hawkins "heard a splash". Hawkins further testified that when Ives told him to stop the car, he (Hawkins) did not have any idea what was about to take place.

On cross-examination Hawkins was asked "Your testimony is that you had no understanding or agreement, among yourselves, to destroy Bob, is that right? A. It was mentioned many times, but it was nothing any further than that—just mentioned * * * it was planned that we were to go in and hold up a place, and it would be fixed ahead of time so that when we walked into the place Bob would be shot and killed." Hawkins was confronted with his written statement previously made to the district attorney. He admitted parts of the statement and as to other parts said that he could not remember. Finally the court asked him the following question: "At the time that you testified that the defendant Ives boosted or threw the deceased over the railing of the bridge, did you know what he was doing then? The Witness. I did. * * *

"The Court: Well, what was the condition of the man at that time when his clothes were taken off and the swimming suit put on him; did he appear to know that this swimming suit was being put on him?

"The Witness: He was unconscious.

"The Court: Well, you knew he wasn't going to get into the river, didn't you—himself?

"The Witness: That is right.

"The Court: Well, how did you figure then that he was going to get into the river?

"The Witness: When he said that he wanted to make it look like suicide, I drew my own conclusions."

In response to this question by the district attorney "Why did you feel his pulse?", Hawkins answered: "Because he was gasping and coughing.

"Q. Well, what was running in your mind, did you think he was going to die? A. Well, I didn't know until I took his pulse.

"Q. What did you say to Ives? A. I said, 'This man is just about dead.' That there was my opinion of it. * * *

"Q. Did you ask him why he was removing his clothes? A. I did not.

"Q. Why didn't you? A. Because I knew then just about what was going to happen.

"Q. Oh, that is when you decided that a murder was going to be committed, was it? A. Yes, sir."

After the murder, Hawkins and Ives joined Simeone and Mrs. Spinelli at the hotel, from which all the parties were later ejected. They slept in the car in a lumber yard that night, and early the next morning fled from Sacramento in the direction of Reno.

The testimony of each defendant speaks for itself. There was an express agreement to kill Sherrard. Mrs. Spinelli's suggestion that knockout drops be administered to make the killing "merciful" was followed, and the drug was furnished by her. (The idea of mercy is hardly consistent with testimony that after Sherrard had consumed the drugged whisky, and during the wrestling affair, Mrs. Spinelli struck him across the back of the neck.) Simeone and Hawkins assisted in carrying Sherrard to the death car, which Hawkins drove. If the latter's testimony is to be believed, he did not know that Sherrard was to be drowned at the time he left the hotel. However, the evidence shows him to be operating the car on a bridge and over roads with an unconscious man "just about dead", whose clothing had been removed and replaced by bathing trunks. He knew that plans had been discussed to kill Sherrard, and that the killing was to have the appearance of suicide. Relative to placing the bathing suit on Sherrard, he testified: "I knew then just about what was going to happen". He crossed the bridge several times and made every effort to see that there were no witnesses. He saw Ives pull Sherrard's limp body from the car. He stood by—turned his head a bit and heard the "splash". To the question "You knew what had happened?" Hawkins answered "Yes".

[13] Eliminating statements made by Ives to the police and to the district attorney, likewise his testimony given at the trial, and confining consideration to the evidence heretofore related, that evidence is amply sufficient to justify the findings of the jury as reflected in its verdict. However, in view of the claim made on appeal by Simeone that Ives' testimony was erroneously admitted and prejudicial to defendants' rights—which could with equal force be made by Mrs. Spinelli and Hawkins—we include a resume of such testimony.

Defendant Ives testified that he met Mrs. Spinelli during the month of March 1940; that he often visited at her home and associated there with her and the other defendants; that at the river bank picnic, Mrs. Spinelli showed him a bottle, saying "* * * we are going to pull some jobs with drunkards; give them some dope". Referring to the evening of the same day, Ives testified that Simeone offered him a drink in a paper cup, which he refused; that thereupon Simeone took a sip and then poured the contents of the cup into Sherrard's drink; that "Bob started stumbling" and "Mike started knocking the hell out of him" and "Bob fell down by the Duchess and then she hit him over the neck like that (indicating) two times; that Simeone carried the unconscious or partially conscious Sherrard on his shoulder to the foot of the stairs, Hawkins assisting him; that he himself opened the door of the car and, with Hawkins' assistance, put Sherrard in the back seat; that Hawkins drove the car and that Ives sat by his side; that during the ride Bob spoke about some girl and said "I think you guys are going to give me the works". Ives further testified "Mike told me to put on a bathing suit and make it look like suicide. * * * We just drove off and took his clothes off and I threw him in there. * * *

"Q. Did you ever have any intent to kill Robert Sherrard, Al? A. Not then; just when I got my orders to get rid of him, that is all. * * *

"Q. Now, who was it that told you to throw him in the river? A. Mike.

"Q. Mike Simeone? A. That is right.

"Q. Did Mrs. Spinelli say anything about it? A. They both said it.

"Q. What is that? A. They both commanded—both of them said it.

"Q. Both of them told it to you—A. That is right.

"Q. * * * to throw him in the river? A. That is right."

Ives testified that on the drive Hawkins told him that he (Hawkins) had felt Sherrard's pulse, and that Hawkins said "This guy is going out fast"; that Hawkins assisted in removing Sherrard's clothing and placing on him the bathing trunks; that Sherrard was then taken to the bridge where, after driving around to be sure no one was about, Ives was going to throw Sherrard over where they first stopped the car, but Hawkins suggested that Sherrard might hit his head against a cement or concrete abutment, so Ives took him a distance away and "dumped" him over the rail into the river.

On appeal, Simeone is represented by a different attorney than the one who defended him at the trial. In addition to the claim of error in denying the motion for a directed or advised verdict of acquittal, the new attorney sums up the evidence against Simeone as follows: "1. That Simeone had apparently been convicted of a felony; 2. That he associated with Ives and Hawkins socially for a period of not more than two weeks prior to the murder. 3. That he had known Mrs. Spinelli for more than a year and lived with her as man and wife during part of that time; 4. That he was not present when the murder was committed; 5. That after the murder of Sherrard, the appellant Simeone accompanied the perpetrators and Mrs. Spinelli to Nevada and perhaps aided in their escape or attempted escape; 6. That previous to the occurrences of the night of the murder of Robert Sherrard, Simeone had reason to believe generally that Albert Ives, Gordon Hawkins, and Mrs. Spinelli were committing unlawful acts of some character; 7. That he undoubtedly learned that they had been involved in a murder in San Francisco, the details of which he did not know."

From the foregoing it is argued that there is merely a suspicion Simeone may have had something to do with the crime, but that the evidence is devoid of proof tending to connect him with advising or encouraging it or placing him at the scene of its commission. We believe this contention has been heretofore sufficiently answered.

Prejudicial error is claimed on behalf of appellant Simeone, in that the court did not fully instruct the jury relating to conspiracy, accomplice and "other matters". Further attention has not been called to "other matters" and reference is made to specific instructions only by number. The instructions have been scrutinized with the view of safeguarding the interest of each defendant. No error appears therein. On the contrary, considering the instructions collectively, they were framed in a manner particularly favorable to the defendants and to each of them.

[14-17] Appellant Simeone contends that the court should have granted a new trial on its own motion, on the ground of newly discovered evidence. The newly discovered evidence is the fact that after the verdict of guilty of murder, Ives was found to be insane at the time of its perpetration. On the motion for a new trial the court went into this question exhaustively. Unlike Mrs. Spinelli and Hawkins, Simeone did not enter a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity. As stated, such pleas by Mrs. Spinelli and Hawkins were withdrawn. The court was cognizant of the testimony offered in support of Ives' insanity plea. Two of the expert witnesses based their opinions as to his sanity at the time of the commission of the offense upon the theory that he was under the complete domination of someone else; that he was boastful of the fact that he was "the trigger man", a killer, and proud of his selection by his associates to actually do the killing. We are not called upon to approve or disapprove the conclusions reached by the jury upon the question submitted to it as to the sanity of Ives. The jury found Ives to be insane on the date of the commission of the offense. However, the expert witnesses, by affidavit or oral testimony, on the motions for new trial, in substance admitted that Ives was at all times since the 14th day of April, 1940 (the date of the commission of the murder), capable of giving a correct account of the things he had seen or heard, including the details of the Sherrard homicide. Assuming the insanity verdict to be in accordance with the contention that Ives did not know or appreciate the difference between right and wrong on the date of the commission of the offense, still no evidence appears that he was of unsound mind at the time he appeared in his own behalf as a witness on the trial. The circumstances of a killing may show a general malignant disregard for the lives of others, evidencing a heart insensible to social obligation, and an insufficient mentality to distinguish between right and wrong, yet the possessor of such heart and mind may be competent to testify. Unsoundness of mind does not per se establish the incompetency of a witness. It was for the trial court to determine whether Ives was able to perceive and could make known his perceptions to others. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1879, 1880. One may be insane upon a certain subject but sane as to other matters. One may be unable to distinguish legally between right and wrong, and still be able to narrate facts chronologically, correctly, intelligently and truly. People v. Tyree, 21 Cal.App. 701, 132 P. 784; In re Mazuran, 88 Cal.App. 272, 263 P. 339. On the motions for new trial the trial judge in this case had an opportunity of considering whether Ives understood and appreciated testimony given under oath; whether he had the mental power to recollect, and the ability to narrate; in other words, the trial judge had the opportunity to and did pass upon the truthfulness of the testimony given by Ives on the trial.

[18] The trial judge was very careful to satisfy himself that an injustice had not occurred in the matter of the verdicts against Mrs. Spinelli, Hawkins and Simeone as the result of the Ives testimony. Each defendant was given every opportunity to present evidence in his or her defense. If a new trial had been granted to Mrs. Spinelli or Hawkins, the order would undoubtedly have applied equally to Simeone. There would have been no reasonable ground for granting the motions upon the ground of newly discovered evidence in favor of two of the defendants and denying it as to the third. The affidavits filed and the arguments of the attorneys in support of the motions were considered as applying to all defendants. There was abundant evidence of the guilt of each defendant independent of the testimony of Ives, who was subsequently found by the jury to have been insane at the time of the commission of the offense, so that it cannot be said that appellants or any of them were prejudiced by his testimony.

[19-21] The final point raised by the present attorney in the Simeone appeal is that the trial attorney was incompetent to properly represent the defendant; that he "showed gross ignorance or incompetence in his conduct of the trial". The point is a novel one. It often happens that an attorney will vigorously criticize opposing counsel, but seldom one on his own side. However, this is a death penalty case, and we are disposed to consider any objection advanced. The original attorney was not selected by the defendant, but was appointed by the court, Pen.Code. § 987, as indeed was the case with respect to all the defendants. They and each of them are entitled to competent legal representation. Const.California, art. I, § 13. We realize that the accusation against the trial attorney is a grave one; and, if true, it is also indirectly an attack upon the trial judge responsible for his selection, but these considerations are of no importance as compared to the rights of a defendant to a fair trial. It is claimed that at the time of his appointment, "the ink was hardly dry" on the trial attorney's certificate of admission to the bar; that he had been practicing but one year. The reason advanced is hardly pertinent in gauging the competency of an attorney to conduct a murder trial. He might have had twenty years of experience in the trial of civil cases and yet be grossly incompetent to defend one upon a charge of murder. One may be specially adapted to try criminal cases, irrespective of the length of time he has been practicing; or the selection may have been ill advised. The attorney may have demonstrated stupidity and ignorance; he may have blundered and floundered to the prejudice of his client. State of Missouri v. Jones, 12 Mo.App. 93. The best criterion of the competency, care and alertness of the attorney referred to is the record in the case.

The trial counsel is criticized for one question propounded to his client, as to whether Simeone and Mrs. Spinelli had lived together in an eastern city. That fact had already been established by several written statements introduced in evidence, and by the direct testimony of Mrs. Spinelli.

Attention is also called to a question asked under a mistaken assumption of the evidence upon cross-examination of defendant Ives, and to the failure to confront Ives with the previous testimony of a police officer. The mistaken assumption was rectified and the confronting of Ives with the transcript of the testimony of another witness was hardly the recognized method of impeaching a witness on the stand or refreshing his recollection.

The next criticism directed by counsel against the conduct of the trial by the former counsel is that affidavits were not filed on the motions for new trial to cover the fact that Ives had been declared insane. The verdict on the Ives insanity plea was returned by the same jury before the same judge in the same court and is part of the record on this appeal. We fail to understand how the filing of such affidavits—that Ives was insane—could have assisted the trial judge in his consideration of the motions.

During the first day of the trial it was stipulated by all the attorneys that objections made by any of them to the admission of testimony should be deemed to have been made on behalf of all the defendants. It is noteworthy that the trial judge carefully differentiated in his rulings on the admission of evidence applicable to one or more of the defendants and inapplicable to others. At times the burden of defense was cast upon one defendant's attorney, and at other times upon another. The efforts of each defendant to save himself at the expense of another defendant caused a conflict of interest, with one defense attorney battling another. At all times Simeone's trial attorney seemed alert to protect the interest of his client. Certainly the record does not disclose "an exhibition of ignorance, stupidity". On the contrary, a keen knowledge of the facts and the law applicable thereto was displayed, demonstrating that the trial judge had properly protected the rights and interests of Simeone in the selection of his legal representative. If any point was overlooked by Simeone's attorney, it is not apparent in the record. It is a noteworthy fact that the trial judge not only correctly ruled upon the evidence sought to be introduced, but zealously guarded the rights of the defendants throughout the preliminaries, the trial and the subsequent proceedings.

We are convinced that the verdict of the jury against each and all of the defendants was fully justified, and that the denial by the trial court of the respective motions for new trial necessarily followed. Each defendant was fairly tried, and, notwithstanding the nature of the penalty fixed by the law of this state, justly convicted.

The judgments of conviction and the orders appealed from are, and each of them is, affirmed.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J.; SHENK, J.; EDMONDS, J.; TRAYNOR, J.; CARTER, J.; PETERS, J., pro tem.

17 Cal.2d 432

MILLER v. McCOLGAN.

L. A. 17355.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 20, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 20, 1941.

1. Corporations ⇐1

A corporation has a personality distinct from that of its shareholders, who own neither corporate property nor corporate earnings, but simply have an expectancy in each and become owners of a portion of each only when corporation is liquidated by action of directors or a portion of corporation's earnings is segregated by declaring dividends.

2. Taxation ⇐123

The "source" of dividends as affecting taxable situs is the stock itself, rather than the activities, property, and earnings of the corporation, which constitute the ultimate source of the income. St.1935, p. 1117, § 25(a).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Source".

3. Taxation ⇐122

The property of shareholders in their shares is distinct from the corporate property, franchises, and capital stock, and may be separately taxed.

4. Taxation ⇐363½

The federal practice which allows American residents a credit for income taxes paid to foreign countries on dividends is not applicable in computing state income tax, since it is dictated by specific statutory provisions. St.1935, p. 1117, § 25(a); 26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev. Code, § 119.

5. Taxation ⇐123

Under the doctrine of "mobilia sequuntur personam", corporate shares have their situs or location for purposes of taxation in the state or country wherein their owner resides, unless they have acquired a business situs elsewhere.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mobilia Sequuntur Personam".

6. Statutes ⇐215

Legislation should be construed in the light of court decisions existing at time of enactment.

7. Taxation ⇐204(2), 363½

The statutory provision for credit against income tax for income tax paid to other state or country on income derived from sources without the state is in effect an "exemption" from liability for a tax already determined and admittedly valid, and hence must be strictly construed against the taxpayer. St.1935, p. 1117, § 25(a).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Exemption".

8. Taxation ⇐169, 363½

The situs of stock in Philippine corporation owned by California resident was in California under rule "mobilia sequuntur personam", where stock certificates were in the Philippines but there was no indication of a separate business situs, and hence tax paid to Philippines on income from dividends and on profit from sale of stock to Philippine buyer through Philippine broker was not within California statute authorizing credit against income tax for taxes paid on income from "sources" without the state. St.1935, p. 1117, § 25(a).

9. Taxation ⇐98, 260

The general principle "mobilia sequuntur personam" as applied to situs of intangible personalty for purposes of taxation has a well-established exception to the effect that there may be a business situs of intangibles distinct from the domicile of the creditor.

10. Taxation ⇐169, 363½

That the Philippines may impose income tax on income from dividends from Philippine corporations, or from sales of property having a situs in other jurisdictions, does not mean that such income is derived from the Philippines under California theories of taxation and statutes, so as to require California court to treat such income as derived from sources in the Philippines, and to be credited against California income taxes, but merely that the Philippines have adopted a different theory of taxation. St. 1935, p. 1117, § 25(a).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Henry M. Willis, Judge.

Action by Merton L. Miller against Charles J. McColgan, Franchise Tax Commissioner of the State of California, to recover part of income tax paid under protest. From a judgment directing a refund, defendant appeals.

Reversed with direction.

Rehearing denied; TRAYNOR, J., not participating.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney and Valentine Brookes, Deputies Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Claude I. Parker, John B. Milliken, Bayley Kohlmeier, and Stuart T. Baron, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendant as Franchise Tax Commissioner of the State of California from a judgment directing a refund of that part of the income tax for 1935 theretofore paid under protest by plaintiff.

There is presented here for our consideration a single question of law, to-wit: Under section 25(a) of the California Personal Income Tax Act of 1935, St. 1935, p. 1117, is plaintiff entitled to a credit against his California tax in the amount of the tax paid by him for said year on the same income to the Philippine government?

The facts upon which this appeal is based were stipulated and are substantially as follows: Plaintiff is a resident of the state of California. During the year 1935 plaintiff owned stock in the Balatoc Mining Company, a Philippine corporation, engaged in the mining business. All of the properties and activities of that company were in the Philippines, and it did not carry on any business in California. During the year 1935 plaintiff received dividends from the Balatoc Mining Company in the amount of $104,130.50, of which the sum of $29,055, accrued and payable as dividends in 1934, was eliminated from consideration here, and the balance of said dividends, or $75,075.50, was taxable and was taxed by California.

During the same year 1935 plaintiff sold certain stock of the Philippine mining corporation for a profit. The sales were made in the Philippines, and the certificates representing these stocks were delivered by plaintiff's agent in the Philippines to brokers in the Philippines, and after the sale thereof the proceeds received were delivered to plaintiff's agent in the Philippines and were by him transmitted to plaintiff.

During the entire year 1935 there was in full force and effect in the Philippines a net income tax law which imposed a tax upon the entire net income of residents of the Philippines and also upon the entire net income of nonresidents of the Philippines derived from sources within the Philippines. Under the income tax law of the Philippines, as it is interpreted by their taxing officials, dividends paid by Philippine corporations to nonresident stockholders and gains from sales of stocks in the Philippines by nonresident aliens constitute income derived from sources within the Philippines, within the meaning of their tax law, and are subject to their income tax. Furthermore, it has been held by the supreme court of the Philippines that dividends paid by Philippine corporations to nonresident stockholders are subject to the Philippine income tax. Manila Gas Corp. v. Collector of Internal Revenue, Supreme Court Decision No. 42780, Jan. 17, 1936.

Pursuant to the law of the Philippines, plaintiff filed an income tax return with the Collector of Internal Revenue of the Philippines, in which he reported the dividends received by him from the Balatoc Mining Company and the gains derived by him from the sale of stocks in the Philippines, and paid a tax thereon to the Philippines for the year 1935 in the amount of $6,638.54.

Plaintiff as a resident of California filed his income tax return for the year 1935 with the Franchise Tax Commissioner of the State of California and included in his return the dividends received by him from the Balatoc Mining Company in the sum of $75,075.50 and the gain derived from the sale of stock in the Philippines in the sum of $7,830.72. It is agreed that the amount of $3,434.99 of the $6,638.54 paid by plaintiff as income tax to the Philippines for the year 1935 was paid upon income which was also included in plaintiff's taxable income for 1935 for California personal income tax purposes. Pursuant to the terms of section 25(a) of the California Personal Income Tax Act, plaintiff claimed a credit on his California return for the taxes paid by him to the Philippine government on the same income. In computing plaintiff's tax liability to California for the year 1935, defendant, as Franchise Tax Commissioner, disallowed the deduction and, as a result thereof and after protest by plaintiff, assessed a deficiency tax against plaintiff. The latter paid the deficiency tax and brought this action to secure a refund. It was agreed by the parties that if plaintiff was entitled to a credit for income taxes paid by him to the Philippines upon income which was also included in plaintiff's income tax return for California, the amount of that credit was $3,434.99. The trial court concluded that the credit should have been allowed, and defendant brings this appeal from the judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff.

Section 25(a) of the California Personal Income Tax Act of 1935 provided: "Whenever a resident taxpayer of this State has become liable to income tax to another State or country upon his net income, or any part thereof, for the taxable year, derived from sources without this State, and subject to taxation under this act, the amount of income tax payable by him under this act shall be credited with the amount of income tax so paid by him to such other State or country, but such credit shall not exceed such proportion of the tax payable under this act as the income subject to tax in such other State or country bears to the taxpayer's entire income upon which the tax is imposed by this act."

The important words are "income * * * derived from sources without this State," for if the income was derived from sources within this state, the credit provision is inapplicable, and respondent is not entitled to recover.

Appellant contends (a) that the source of the dividends received by respondent in California was the stock itself and therefore the income was not from sources without this state; and (b) that the source of capital gain from the sale of the shares of stock was also in California and therefore no credit was permissible in respect to the tax paid to the Philippine government. In support of this position appellant relies primarily on the common law doctrine of mobilia sequuntur personam, a well-established guiding principle in the taxation of intangibles.

[1, 2] In our approach to the problem presented here let us first consider the nature of this property—corporate stock—and the status of corporations and shareholders. It is fundamental, of course, that the corporation has a personality distinct from that of its shareholders, and that the latter neither own the corporate property nor the corporate earnings. The shareholder simply has an expectancy in each, and he becomes the owner of a portion of each only when the corporation is liquidated by action of the directors or when a portion of the corporation's earnings is segregated and set aside for dividend payments on action of the directors in declaring a dividend. This well-settled proposition was amplified in Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Doughton, 270 U.S. 69, 81, 46 S.Ct. 256, 258, 70 L.Ed. 475, 43 A.L.R. 1374, wherein appears the following cogent language: "The owner of the shares of stock in a company is not the owner of the corporation's property. He has a right to his share in the earnings of the corporation, as they may be declared in dividends, arising from the use of all its property. In the dissolution of the corporation he may take his proportionate share in what is left, after all the debts of the corporation have been paid and the assets are divided in accordance with the law of its creation. But he does not own the corporate property." Since the shareholder by reason of his stockholding is entitled to share in any dividends which may be declared, it logically follows, as appellant urges, that the source of dividends is the stock, because income which comes to one solely because of ownership of property has a source in that property.

[3] At this point it is pertinent to draw a distinction between the immediate source of the income with respect to a particular recipient, and what might be called the ultimate source of the same income. For example, the Balatoc Mining Company owns its mines and the machinery and materials therein. Its legal ownership is complete. Respondent owns stock in this corporation, which stock represents a number of intangible rights in him legally distinct from the ownership rights of the corporation in the mine and supplies. When we think of source, it seems safe to say that the corporate income has its source in the mining and management process. When the same income reaches respondent as dividends, it is arguable that its source as well is to be found in the corporate activities. However, the dividends, so far as respondent is concerned, represent a yield of the wealth invested in his legally recognized property interest, the shares of stock. Thus, to respondent the source of the income is the corporate stock, the legally created property interest owned by respondent and without which he would not receive this benefit. The shares of stock are the immediate source of the income to the recipient, though the ultimate source is to be found one or more steps back in the process where the new wealth was first called into existence. It is this fundamental differentiation which underlies the well-established principle that "the property of the shareholders in their respective shares is distinct from the corporate property, franchises and capital stock, and may be separately taxed. Van Allen v. Assessors (Churchill v. Utica) 3 Wall. 573, 584, 18 L.Ed. 229, 234; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U.S. 679, 687, 24 L.Ed. 558, 560; Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U.S. 129, 136, 137, 6 S.Ct. 645, 29 L.Ed. 830, 832; New Orleans v. Houston, 119 U.S. 265, 277, 7 S.Ct. 198, 30 L.Ed. 411, 415." Hawley v. Malden, 232 U.S. 1, 9, 34 S.Ct. 201, 58 L.Ed. 477, Ann.Cas.1916C, 842.

In harmony with this line of decision, it appears that there is in the beginning an income to the corporation, and that part of such income in turn is passed on to the shareholder in the form of dividends. As such it represents in law an income to the shareholder quite distinct from the income to the corporation. Therefore, in the absence of an express statutory mandate to the contrary, it logically follows that the source of the income to the shareholder (the dividends) is the corporate stock.

Respondent contends that the activities, the property and the earnings of the corporation, and not the stock, are the source of dividends, and in this connection he cites the Philippine case of Manila Gas Corporation v. Collector of Internal Revenue, supra, as establishing that his income was from sources within the Philippines. However, it appears from the opinions in that case that the Philippine statute expressly declared that interest on bonds (intangibles) paid by corporations resident in the Philippines was taxable. Further, it may be gleaned from the Philippine court's opinions that prior to the enactment of the statute there concerned that court had held that interest paid by Philippine residents to nonresidents was not from sources within the Philippines.

[4] Also, it should be noted that the federal practice, which allows American residents a credit for income taxes paid to foreign countries on dividends, is not applicable here because it is dictated by specific statutory provisions. And Lord Forres v. Commissioner, 25 B.T.A. 154; Bence v. United States, Ct.Cl., 18 F.Supp. 848, and Helvering v. Stockholms Enskilda Bank, 293 U.S. 84, 55 S.Ct. 50, 79 L.Ed. 211, relied on by respondent, all involved the construction of section 217 of the Federal Revenue Act, 26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev.Code, § 119, which expressly declares that dividends paid to nonresidents by corporations doing business in the United States are derived from sources within this country. The courts had no alternative but to apply the statute as they did unless they were to hold the statute unconstitutional. This they could not do in view of the principles enunciated in Burnet v. Brooks, 288 U.S. 378, 53 S.Ct. 457, 77 L.Ed. 844, 86 A.L.R. 747, to the effect that congress had the power to enact such a statute as construed and applied to the property in question. These cases cited by respondent turned on constitutional considerations of the scope of the taxing power of the federal government and because of the distinct differentiation in legal principles involved there, those decisions have no bearing on our determination of the present question, whose pivotal point centers on the proper construction of the precise language employed in the statute subject of interpretation.

[5] Having fixed upon the source of the particular income as the corporate stock, the next task is to assign to this source a taxable situs. Under the doctrine of mobilia sequuntur personam, shares of stock in a corporation have their situs or location in the state or country wherein their owner resides, unless they have acquired a business situs elsewhere. The possibilities of this case being affected by the doctrine of business situs will be discussed later in this opinion.

[6] In 1935 when the Income Tax Act was enacted by our legislature the courts of California and the federal courts had declared that the taxation of intangibles was subject to the rule of mobilia sequuntur personam. First National Bank v. Maine, 1932, 284 U.S. 312, 52 S.Ct. 174, 76 L.Ed. 313, 77 A.L.R. 1401; Beidler v. South Carolina, 1930, 282 U.S. 1, 51 S.Ct. 54, 75 L.Ed. 131; Baldwin v. Missouri, 1930, 281 U.S. 586, 50 S.Ct. 436, 74 L.Ed. 1056, 72 A.L.R. 1303; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Minnesota, 1930, 280 U.S. 204, 50 S.Ct. 98, 74 L.Ed. 371, 65 A.L.R. 1000; Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Virginia, 1929, 280 U.S. 83, 50 S.Ct. 59, 74 L.Ed. 180, 67 A.L.R. 386; Blodgett v. Silberman, 1928, 277 U.S. 1, 48 S.Ct. 410, 72 L.Ed. 749, and In re McCreery's Estate, 1934, 220 Cal. 26, 29 P.2d 186; Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company v. County of Los Angeles, 1922, 188 Cal. 491, 205 P. 1076; and Hinckley v. County of San Diego, 1920, 49 Cal.App. 668, 194 P. 77. The principle is well established that legislation should be construed in the light of court decisions existing at the time of its enactment.

Moreover, long prior to the adoption of our Income Tax Act of 1935 the Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin in the case of State ex rel. Manitowoc Gas Co. v. Wisconsin Tax Comm., 161 Wis. 111, 152 N.W. 848, had held as a matter of statutory construction that interest on bonds paid by residents to nonresidents was not income from sources within Wisconsin and consequently could not be taxed by that state. That case involved construction of the language of that part of the Income Tax Act of 1911 which provided for taxation of nonresidents "upon such income as is derived from sources within the state or within its jurisdiction" St.Wis.1911, § 1087m—2, subd. 3, and in concluding that the assessment against nonresident bondholders was invalid, the court said at page 850 of 152 N.W.: "* * * The situs of a bond remains at the domicile of the bondholder. So the interest in question did not, as to nonresident bondholders, constitute an income derived from sources within the state * * *." If the rule of mobilia is applicable to income from bonds, it necessarily is equally applicable to income from stock. So it may be said that the situs of a share of stock is at the residence or domicile of the owner. First National Bank v. Maine, supra.

In support of his contention that the earnings and property of the corporation are the source of dividends, respondent cites the later Wisconsin case of State ex rel. Froedtert G. & M. Co. v. Tax Comm., 221 Wis. 225, 265 N.W. 672, 267 N.W. 52, 104 A.L.R. 1478, which involved the application and validity of the privilege dividend tax of that state. Wisconsin desired to share with nonresidents their dividends from corporations deriving earnings and profits from Wisconsin. In Newport Co. v. Wisconsin Tax Comm., 219 Wis. 293, 261 N.W. 884, 100 A.L.R. 1204, certiorari denied 297 U.S. 720, 56 S.Ct. 598, 80 L.Ed. 1004, the Wisconsin supreme court held that income from stock owned by a nonresident corporation had its source at the domicile of the owner. Concluding that an income tax on dividends paid to nonresidents by Wisconsin corporations would be held invalid, Wisconsin in 1935 imposed a tax on corporations doing business in Wisconsin for the privilege of paying dividends to nonresidents to the extent the dividends were paid from income earned by the corporations in Wisconsin. In the Froedtert case [221 Wis. 225, 265 N.W. 673], wherein suit was brought to procure a declaratory judgment as to the constitutionality of the privilege dividend tax statute, this tax was upheld, but the reason assigned was that the tax did not purport to be an income tax, or in any way to be a tax upon the dividend of the shareholder, but was an excise tax "for the privilege of declaring and receiving dividends, out of income derived from property located and business transacted in this state." Then in J. C. Penney Co. v. Wisconsin Tax Comm., 233 Wis. 286, 289 N.W. 677, 126 A.L.R. 1333, when the question of applicability of this tax statute to a locally licensed foreign corporation came before the supreme court of Wisconsin, it was held that under those circumstances the statute ran afoul the due process clause. This case was then taken to the Supreme Court of the United States on the sole question of whether or not the Wisconsin Privilege Dividend Tax offended the 14th Amendment of the Constitution. That court in its decision of December 16, 1940 (State of Wisconsin v. J. C. Penney Co., 61 S.Ct. 246, 250, 85 L. Ed. 267, 130 A.L.R. 1229), quite properly recognized the logic of the proposition that a foreign corporation admitted to do business in Wisconsin should be subject to the same burdens and liabilities as is a similar Wisconsin corporation, and because the "taxing power exerted by the state" of Wisconsin bore a "fiscal relation to protection, opportunities and benefits given by the [said] state," this statute was held constitutional as being within the confines of the due process clause.

Careful examination of these Wisconsin cases reveals that the basis of the Froedtert and Penney decisions was constitutional considerations of the privilege dividend tax, an excise tax on corporate earnings as distinguished from a tax on the income of the shareholder, and the question of local source of income as related to taxable situs was disregarded therein. In the instant case we have the definite problem of statutory interpretation, and in this connection it is particularly significant that the two Wisconsin cases based on the proper construction of phraseology practically identical with that now under consideration here—State ex rel. Manitowoc Gas Co. v. Wisconsin Tax Comm., supra, and Newport Co. v. Wisconsin Tax Comm., supra—applied the rule of mobilia to income taxation and held that the place in which the intangibles had their taxable situs was also the place in which the income therefrom had its source.

[7] In support of his argument that the source of dividend income is the place where the corporation earns its profits and carries on its business, respondent also cites the recent case of Union Electric Company of Missouri v. Coale, Mo.Sup., 146 S.W.2d 631, 632, wherein it was held that dividends received by a domestic corporation from a foreign corporation not doing business in Missouri was not income "from sources in this state [Missouri]" within the meaning of the Missouri income tax law. Mo.St.Ann. § 10115, p. 8080. However, we note an important distinction present in the Missouri decision which prevents it from being completely analogous to the instant case. The issue in the Missouri case was whether certain income was taxable, and the supreme court of Missouri held that the point must be strictly construed against the government. Apparently, this rule of construction was a governing factor in the conclusion reached. In the case at bar the provision allowing a credit (sec. 25(a)) is in effect an exemption from liability for a tax already determined and admittedly valid, and such statute must be strictly construed against the taxpayer. Pacific Company, Ltd., v. Johnson, 212 Cal. 148, 298 P. 489, affirmed in 285 U.S. 480, 52 S.Ct. 424, 76 L.Ed. 893. Furthermore, the Missouri court in its opinion made no mention of either Newport Co. v. Wisconsin Tax Comm., supra, 219 Wis. 293, 261 N.W. 884, 100 A.L.R. 1204, certiorari denied 297 U.S. 720, 56 S.Ct. 598, 80 L. Ed. 1004, or Domenech v. United Porto Rican Sugar Company, 1 Cir., 62 F.2d 552, certiorari denied 289 U.S. 739, 53 S.Ct. 656, 77 L.Ed. 1486, each of which considered at great length the question of source of income in its relation to taxable situs for intangibles. Both these cases decided the exact issue involved in the Missouri decision squarely contra to the latter and applied without exception the rule of mobilia in such circumstances. As the result of these pertinent observations, the limitations of the holding in Union Electric Company of Missouri v. Coale, supra, in so far as they reflect on the present case must be recognized.

[8] Respondent urges that the long line of federal cases (First National Bank v. Maine, supra; Beidler v. South Carolina, supra; Baldwin v. Missouri, supra; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Minnesota, supra; Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Virginia, supra; and Blodgett v. Silberman, supra) as well as the California case of In re McCreery's Estate, supra, cited by appellant as supporting his contention that the situs of the stock owned by the respondent was in California and that the source of the dividends was also in California, has no application to the instant case because those cases involve inheritance and property taxes. But it appears to us that if there is any reason for the rule of mobilia sequuntur personam in connection with property or inheritance taxation, there is every bit as much reason for that rule in income taxation. The practical difficulties inherent in the application of any other principle in determining the source of income have undeniably constituted an important factor in the adoption and survival of this well-established common law tenet. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Doughton, supra. Respondent cites as authority for his statement that this rule has not been applied by the courts to income taxation, the case of Lawrence v. State Tax Comm., 286 U.S. 276, 52 S.Ct. 556, 76 L.Ed. 1102, 87 A.L.R. 374, in which the court held that Mississippi had constitutional jurisdiction to tax a resident on compensation for personal services performed in another state. However, the income in question was not derived from the ownership of intangibles, but from the performance of personal services. The references made by the court to intangibles were made in support of the right of Mississippi to tax under the facts of the case and were not made to indicate that the income in question was from intangibles. No corporation intervened between the performance of the services and the right of Lawrence to the income. He acquired the right to the income immediately on completion of the service. The intangible, if any, was merely a note for his compensation and was not the source of his income, but instead was mere evidence of it.

The doctrine of mobilia sequuntur personam has been repeatedly and consistently maintained in determining the taxable situs of intangible property, and as recently as the 1938-1939 term the Supreme Court of the United States again recognized it in Curry v. McCanless, 307 U.S. 357, 59 S.Ct. 900, 906, 83 L.Ed. 1339, 123 A.L.R. 162, wherein the majority opinion stated: "In cases where the owner of intangibles confines his activity to the place of his domicile it has been found convenient to substitute a rule for a reason [citations omitted], by saying that his intangibles are taxed at their situs and not elsewhere, or, perhaps less artificially, by invoking the maxim mobilia sequuntur personam [citations omitted], which means only that it is the identity or association of intangibles with the person of their owner at his domicile which gives jurisdiction to tax. But when the taxpayer extends his activities with respect to his intangibles, so as to avail himself of the protection and benefit of the laws of another state, in such a way as to bring his person or property within the reach of the tax gatherer there, the reason for a single place of taxation no longer obtains * * *."

The discussion regarding the source of the dividend income is equally applicable to the source of profit from the sale of the stock. As the rule of mobilia gives this stock a situs in California, all income from it was from sources in California. Its sale to a Philippine customer through a Philippine broker does not mean that the profit from its sale was income from Philippine sources. Respondent made a profit from the sale of property located in California, so the profit is derived from sources in California, and the mere fact that the certificates, the evidences of title, were in the Philippines does not alter this conclusion. First National Bank v. Maine, supra; Beidler v. South Carolina, supra; Baldwin v. Missouri, supra; and Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Minnesota, supra.

[9] At this point it should be noted that the general principle in relation to situs for the purposes of taxation of intangible personal property embodied in the maxim mobilia sequuntur personam has a well-established exception to the effect that there may be a business situs of intangibles distinct from the domicile of the creditor. But respondent has not divided his activities so as to bring himself within this exception. He did not set his property aside in a Philippine trust or engage in business in the Philippines. In consequence, nothing appears here to indicate that the mobilia rule is not applicable to this case.

[10] By virtue of express statutory provision the Philippines do not apply the maxim of mobilia sequuntur personam so as to avoid their taxation of nonresidents on dividends received by them from Philippine corporations or on the income from sales of property having a situs in other jurisdictions. That the Philippines may impose such a tax does not mean that under our theories and our act such income is derived from the Philippines. Rather it simply indicates that the Philippines have adopted a theory and philosophy of taxation different from that adopted by California, which has uniformly applied the well-recognized principle of mobilia sequuntur personam in determining the situs of intangibles for purposes of taxation.

In accord with the foregoing analysis it is our conclusion that respondent is not entitled to a credit for taxes paid to the Philippines upon the dividend income and the gain from the sale of these stocks.

The judgment is reversed with direction to the trial court to enter judgment for the appellant in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J.; EDMONDS, J.; SHENK, J.; CARTER, J.; SPENCE, Justice pro tem.

TRAYNOR, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

17 Cal.2d 423

ROBINSON v. McCOLGAN.

S. F. 16377.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 20, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 20, 1941.

Taxation ⇐104

Dividends received by residents of China on stock of California corporation were not subject to California income tax, though stock certificates were held in a living trust in California for sole purpose of receiving dividends and forwarding them to owner, since stock had a situs in China under the rule "mobilia sequuntur personam". St. 1935, p. 1093, § 5.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mobilia Sequuntur Personam".

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Janet D. Robinson against Charles J. McColgan, Franchise Tax Commissioner of the State of California, for refund of income tax paid under protest. From a judgment directing the refund, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Rehearing denied; TRAYNOR, J., not participating.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, James J. Arditto, and Valentine Brookes, Deputies Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Edward Hale Julien, of San Francisco, for respondent.

McCutchen, Olney, Mannon & Greene, of San Francisco, amici curiae for respondent.

CURTIS, Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendant, as Franchise Tax Commissioner of the State of California, from a judgment directing a refund of the income tax for the year 1936 paid by plaintiff under protest.

There is but a single question of law presented for decision, to-wit: Was plaintiff, a nonresident of the United States, taxable under the California personal Income Tax Act of 1935, St.1935, p. 1090, on income from dividends declared on shares of stock of a California corporation, the stock certificates being in the custody of plaintiff's agent, a California national bank?

The facts upon which this appeal is based were stipulated and are substantially as follows: During the year 1936 plaintiff, a citizen of the United States, was a resident of the International Settlement in Shanghai, China, and thus was a nonresident both of California and of the United States. During said year she received as income dividends in the amount of $78,780.50 on common stock of W. P. Fuller & Company, a California corporation. The stock certificates were not used in connection with any business operations carried on here by plaintiff, but were simply held by the Bank of America in a living trust in San Francisco for the sole purpose of receiving the dividends thereon and forwarding the same to plaintiff. This trust had no fixed situs in California, but could be removed from the state at any time by the plaintiff, the trustor, without any previous consent of the trustee bank. The latter had no duties under this trust other than as custodian of these certificates of stock to send the income from the trust to the plaintiff, the trustor. The only asset of this trust was the aforementioned stock, and the trustee bank had no power to sell, invest or reinvest the trust corpus or property, nor had it any active duties of trust management.

Plaintiff reported these dividends on her income tax return for the year 1936 and paid as tax on this income the amount of $5,140.86. In due course plaintiff filed a refund claim, which was rejected by the defendant as Franchise Tax Commissioner, whereupon plaintiff brought this action to recover said sum. The cause was submitted on the foregoing stipulated facts, and the trial court rendered judgment decreeing that plaintiff recover from defendant as Franchise Tax Commissioner the aforesaid amount as income taxes erroneously paid for the year 1936. Defendant Tax Commissioner has appealed from this judgment.

Appellant's alleged authority for imposing the tax on respondent was found in sec. 5 of the California Personal Income Tax Act of 1935, which provided in part as follows: "There shall be levied, collected and paid for each taxable year upon the entire net income of every resident of this State and upon the net income of every nonresident which is derived from sources within this State, taxes in the following amounts * * *." Stats.1935, Ch. 329.

In support of his contention that income from the dividends declared on the stock in question was properly the subject of this tax provision, appellant devotes practically all of his argument to a discussion of constitutional principles, with particular emphasis on the power of California to tax a nonresident living outside of the United States on intangibles, the evidences of which are physically present within this state. In this connection appellant relies strongly on the Estate of McCreery, 1934, 220 Cal. 26, 29 P.2d 186, which followed the doctrine of Burnet v. Brooks, 1933, 288 U. S. 378, 53 S.Ct. 457, 77 L.Ed. 844, 86 A.L.R. 747, a federal estate tax case, which involved only the element of physical presence of securities within the United States and none of the elements of business situs. In the aforementioned California case this court upheld the power of the legislature to subject to the California inheritance tax stock in a California corporation belonging to a nonresident alien, represented by certificates physically present, but having no business situs in California at the time of decedent's death. The difficulty we find with this line of argument adopted by appellant is the fact it assumes, apparently without question, that the dividends declared on this nonresident's stock by a California corporation were "derived from sources within this state" within the meaning of the Act. But in our opinion the determination of source of this income is the crux of the problem presented here for consideration, and it is, therefore, to the matter of statutory interpretation that we first turn our attention. It is only if this issue is decided against respondent that the principle of constitutionality becomes important to our decision in this case.

The significant words to be construed in sec. 5 quoted above are "income * * * derived from sources within this State". In this connection we refer to this court's pertinent discussion of statutory interpretation in its decision rendered today, involving issues closely related to the instant case —Miller v. McColgan, Cal.Sup., 110 P.2d 419—wherein the rule of mobilia sequuntur personam was applied in holding that dividends declared by a Philippine corporation were income from sources within California because they were the product of intangible property (corporate stock) having a situs in California at the domicile of the owner, a resident of California. By analogy it appears to be indisputable that here the dividends, subject of a naked California trust, have their source in corporate stock whose situs is at the residence of respondent in Shanghai, China, so that the income sought to be taxed by appellant would not be included within the meaning of sec. 5 as we construe the legislative intention expressed therein. It is our conclusion that since the issue of statutory construction in favor of respondent is decisive of this case, we need not consider here the constitutional questions involved in multiple taxation of non-residents having evidence of their ownership of intangible property within the taxing jurisdiction.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J.; EDMONDS, J.; SHENK, J.; CARTER, J.; SPENCE, Justice pro tem.

TRAYNOR, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

17 Cal.2d 426

HOLMES v. McCOLGAN.

L. A. 17306.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 20, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 20, 1941.

1. Taxation ⇐104

Under Personal Income Tax Act enacted in June, 1935, applicable to net income accrued after January 1, 1935, defining net income and gross income, and providing that method of computing gains from sales of realty, which gains are included in gross income, shall follow federal practice under which gain is the excess of sale price of property over its cost, where owner by discovery, location, and purchase of interest in mining property and mining lease gave option to purchase in November, 1934, and option was exercised in January, 1935, difference between cost and selling price of property and mining lease was "income" subject to tax and not "capital" not subject to tax, since accretions to capital are taxable as "income", not when such accretions occur, but when gain is realized by sale. St.1935, pp. 1094, 1095, 1123, §§ 6, 7(a, d), 36; Revenue Act 1934, §§ 111–113, 26 U.S.C.A.Int.Rev. Acts, pp. 691–701.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Capital" and "Income".

2. Statutes ⇐226

The policy of the legislature in following federal provisions in the Personal Income Tax Act makes available to the state a groundwork of relevant federal experience and judicial pronouncements which should be followed to insure effective administration of the act. St.1935, p. 1090.

3. Statutes ⇐225¾

Where legislation is framed in the language of an earlier enactment on the same or analogous subject, which has been judicially construed, there is a very strong presumption of intent to adopt the construction as well as the language of the prior enactment.

4. Statutes ⇐226

Where statute is patterned after legislation of another state or of the federal government which has been judicially construed in the jurisdiction of its enactment, there is a strong presumption of intent to adopt the construction as well as the language of the statute.

5. Constitutional law ⇐190, 283
Taxation ⇐54

The Personal Income Tax Act applicable to net income accrued after January 1, 1935, which statute was enacted on June 13, 1935, as applied to income received on sale of mining property and lease in January, 1935, pursuant to an option given in previous year, is not invalid on the ground that it is retroactive in effect and violative of the "due process of law" clauses of the State and Federal Constitutions. St.1935, p. 1090; Const.Cal. art. 1, § 13; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Joseph W. Vickers, Judge.

Action by M. A. Holmes against Charles J. McColgan to recover money alleged to have been illegally collected as income taxes. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend and judgment was rendered for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Rehearing denied; TRAYNOR, J., not participating.

Ralph D. Brown, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen. (H. H. Linney, James J. Arditto, and Valentine Brookes, Deputies Atty. Gen., Roger J. Traynor, of Berkeley, of counsel), for respondent.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

This action was brought to recover money alleged to have been illegally assessed and collected as personal income taxes for the calendar year 1935. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend and judgment was rendered in favor of defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

The following facts are set forth in the complaint: In 1933 and 1934 plaintiff and certain of his children became the owners by discovery, location and purchase of an interest in mining property situated in Kern County, California, known as the Silver Queen, and a mining lease of a portion thereof known as the Emrick-Holmes lease.

In November, 1934, for a cash consideration of $4,000 they gave an option to purchase a 60% interest in the Silver Queen for $1,000,000 in money and $900,000 from the proceeds of the property to be paid on a graduated percentage schedule of the production therefrom. At approximately the same time they granted an option for the purchase of the Emrick-Holmes lease for a cash consideration of $100,000.

The options were exercised in January, 1935, and the sellers received for their 60% interest in the Silver Queen a cash payment of $271,000, a series of notes totalling $725,000, and an agreement covering payments to be made from production; and for the Emrick-Holmes lease they received $100,000 cash. Plaintiff received $108,400 as his share of the cash payment on the purchase price of the Silver Queen and $16,666.66 as his share of the sum paid for the Emrick-Holmes lease.

There was no increase in the value of the property between January 1, 1935, the applicable date of the Personal Income Tax Act, St.1935, p. 1090, and the date of sale. The defendant Franchise Tax Commissioner treated the difference between the cost of the property and the selling price thereof as income and imposed and collected a personal income tax thereon.

Appellant contends that no part of the proceeds of these sales is income within the meaning of the Act and that the increase in value of the property which accrued prior to January 1, 1935, and was realized by sale subsequent thereto, but prior to the enactment of the law on June 13, 1935, cannot legally be taxed as income. He advances the theory that on January 1, 1935, the property constituted a capital asset, and that the proceeds from the sales therefore represented a return of capital and not income. He contends that the Act cannot be applied to these proceeds without violating Article I, section 13 of the Constitution of the State of California and the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Briefly, it is his position that the Act does not provide for the taxation of the gains in question; and that if it did it would be unconstitutional.

[1] An examination of the Personal Income Tax Act makes it evident that the legislature intended to tax the gains in question. Section 36 makes the tax applicable to net income received or accrued after January 1, 1935. Section 6 of the Act defines net income as the gross income computed under section 7 less the deductions allowed by section 8. Section 7(a) defines gross income as including gains from sales of property, real or personal. Section 7(d) provides that the method of computing such gains shall follow the federal practice as set forth in sections 111, 112 and 113 of the federal Revenue Act of 1934, 26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev. Acts, pp. 691–701, which sections and the sections referred to therein are incorporated by reference. Under section 7(d) of the California Act appellant's gain, by reference to the provisions of the federal Act, is the excess of the sale price of the property over its cost. Its realization after January 1, 1935, brings it directly within the provisions of the Act.

Despite the applicability of the Act, however, its constitutionality is brought into question by appellant's contentions that the gain in question is capital and therefore not taxable as income, and that the Act, adopted on June 13, 1935, cannot be applied retroactively to January 1, 1935.

The first contention seeks to revive an issue squarely presented to this court in Fullerton Oil Co. v. Johnson, 2 Cal.2d 162, 167-172, 39 P.2d 796, 798, and decided adversely to appellant's contention in an opinion which fully considered the question he raises.

That case involved the Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act, St.1929, p. 19, which imposed a tax measured by net income and which incorporated by reference the federal method for computing gain or loss in its provisions for the depletion allowance for oil and gas wells. The adoption of that method brought gains accruing before the effective date of the Act but realized thereafter into the measure of the tax, and the court stated that "the main point to be determined" was whether such gains were capital and not income and therefore constitutionally beyond the province of the tax. To this question it gave a clear answer: "* * * it is our opinion the tax here involved is one measured by income and not capital. It is true that by the 1931 amendment respondent is deprived of the opportunity of using the January 1, 1928, values as a base, and that it must use the cost or March 1, 1913, values as a base. It is further true that in thus computing the depletion allowance any increase in value in the properties occurring between 1913 and 1928 would thus be included in the tax base. That fact, however, does not make the tax one measured by capital as distinguished from income as those two terms are usually understood, and are used in the act here involved. Under the federal Income Tax Act, the federal courts have established the principle that 'income' within the meaning of the Income Tax Act is 'realized gain,' and that such realized gain is taxable in the year of its realization regardless of when it accrued. Thus under the federal act increases in the value of capital assets accruing subsequent to March 1, 1913, are taxable as income not in the year such increases in value occur, but in the year such increases in value are actually realized by sale or other transfer. Merchants' Loan & Trust Co. v. Smietanka, 255 U.S. 509, 41 S.Ct. 386, 65 L.Ed. 751, 15 A.L.R. 1305; Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189, 40 S.Ct. 189, 64 L.Ed. 521, 9 A.L.R. 1570. * * * We can see no constitutional difference between accretions to capital prior to the date of the taxing statute and those occurring subsequent thereto. If increases in the value of property constitute income, and constitute income in the year in which realized rather than in the years when such increases in value accrue, it would seem that constitutionally speaking it makes no difference when such increases in value accrue—whether before or after the effective date of the taxing statute. This very point has already been decided in accordance with the above views by the United States Supreme Court."

[2-4] In the light of this judgment of the court, and the compelling reasons for following established federal practice to insure effective administration of the Act, the legislature adopted the federal method of computing capital gains and losses in the Personal Income Tax Act as it did in the Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act. A departure from federal practice in this respect might easily create myriad administrative difficulties inimical to the interests of both the state and the taxpayers. The legislature has consistently followed the federal provisions generally in the Personal Income Tax Act. This policy makes available to the state a groundwork of revelant federal experience and judicial pronouncements. "It is a cardinal principle of statutory construction that where legislation is framed in the language of an earlier enactment on the same or an analogous subject, which has been judicially construed, there is a very strong presumption of intent to adopt the construction as well as the language of the prior enactment. * * * A similar principle applies where a statute is patterned after legislation of another state, or of the federal government, or, indeed of a foreign country, which has been judicially construed in the jurisdiction of its enactment." Union Oil Associates v. Johnson, 2 Cal.2d 727, 734, 43 P.2d 291, 295, 98 A.L.R. 1499.

[5] The limited retroactivity of the Act to which appellant objects is characteristic of the generally accepted practice of making a tax law applicable, beginning usually on January 1, to that part of the year which precedes its enactment. When a similar objection was raised to the federal Income Tax Act of 1913, 38 Stat. 114, the United States Supreme Court stated in Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 240 U.S. 1, 36 S.Ct. 236, 242, 60 L.Ed. 493, L.R.A.1917D, 414, Ann. Cas.1917B, 713: "The statute was enacted October 3, 1913, and provided for a general yearly income tax from December to December of each year. Exceptionally, however, it fixed a first period embracing only the time from March 1, to December 31, 1913, and this limited retroactivity is assailed as repugnant to the due process clause of the 5th Amendment, and as inconsistent with the 16th Amendment itself. But the date of the retroactivity did not extend beyond the time when the Amendment was operative, and there can be no dispute that there was power by virtue of the Amendment during that period to levy the tax, without apportionment, and so far as the limitations of the Constitution in other respects are concerned, the contention is not open, since in Stockdale v. Atlantic Ins. Co., 20 Wall. 323, 331, 22 L.Ed. 348, 351, in sustaining a provision in a prior income tax law which was assailed because of its retroactive character, it was said: 'The right of Congress to have imposed this tax by a new statute, although the measure of it was governed by the income of the past year, cannot be doubted; much less can it be doubted that it could impose such a tax on the income of the current year, though part of that year had elapsed when the statute was passed.' "

The principle of the Brushaber case is applicable here. It is reiterated in Roth Drugs, Inc., v. Johnson, 13 Cal.App.2d 720, 57 P.2d 1022, upholding the validity of the Retail Sales Tax Act of 1933 even though retroactively applied to gross receipts from retail sales. In Welch v. Henry, 305 U.S. 134, 59 S.Ct. 121, 83 L.Ed. 87, 118 A.L.R. 1142, the United States Supreme Court went much beyond the Brushaber case in upholding a Wisconsin tax on dividends which was retroactive from 1935 to 1933. The constitutional validity of such retroactive provisions is now too well established to be questioned.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; EDMONDS, J.; CARTER, J.; SPENCE, Justice pro tem.

TRAYNOR, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

17 Cal.2d 396

HARNED v. WATSON.

L. A. 17602.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 18, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 18, 1941.

1. Breach of marriage promise ⇐34

In action for breach of promise to marry wherein defendant contended that his promise to marry was contingent upon happening of a future event, whether plaintiff's answer to a question on cross-examination that every time question of marriage was discussed defendant made date of marriage contingent upon his straightening out of his finances established promise to marry contingent upon happening of future event when considered with the rest of the evidence, was for jury.

2. Breach of marriage promise ⇐34

In action for breach of promise to marry wherein defendant contended that his promise to marry was contingent upon happening of a future event, whether proposal was conditional was for the jury.

3. Breach of marriage promise ⇐8

In action for breach of promise to marry wherein defendant contended that his promise to marry was contingent upon happening of a future event and the evidence showed that condition occurred, conditional promise was rendered absolute and defendant could not escape liability.

4. Breach of marriage promise ⇐23

Evidence warranted an award of damages on ground that there was a breach of an unconditional promise to marry within a reasonable time.

5. Breach of marriage promise ⇐23

Where it was shown that friendship of parties was not secretive and that defendant attended church and took communion with plaintiff and took her on trips with his closest friends and to their homes, sent presents to his friends signed by both parties, invited his friends to apartment plaintiff and defendant were sharing and introduced her to members of his family and defendant's friends treated plaintiff with respect, evidence warranted implied finding that plaintiff was "chaste" so as to authorize award of exemplary damages for seduction under promise to marry.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Chaste".

6. Breach of marriage promise ⇐23

In action for breach of promise to marry wherein plaintiff sought exemplary damages for seduction, chastity of the plaintiff was not required to be proven by direct evidence but could be shown prima facie by presumption from other facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction.

7. Evidence ⇐151(1)

In action for breach of promise to marry wherein plaintiff sought exemplary damages for seduction, permitting plaintiff to testify that defendant's promise to marry induced her to submit to sexual intercourse was not objectionable on ground that testimony was "conclusion" of the witness, since such testimony was the best evidence of the state of mind of the plaintiff, it being a fact peculiarly within her own knowledge.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conclusion".

8. Appeal and error ⇐1064(1)

In action for breach of promise to marry where there was sufficient evidence to warrant an award of punitive damages for seduction, the withdrawal of an instruction that there was no evidence to sustain allegation of seduction was not prejudicial error.

9. Breach of marriage promise ⇐14

Where plaintiff, a 45 year old woman, induced by promise of marriage of defendant, a 70 year old man, gave up her millinery business which was her only means of livelihood and lived with defendant for nearly a year and was seduced under promise of marriage and defendant refused to marry plaintiff, plaintiff was entitled to bring an action for breach of marriage promise and seduction.

10. Breach of marriage promise ⇐31

Evidence authorized verdict for $2,000 actual damages for breach of marriage promise and $8,000 exemplary damages for seduction under promise to marry in favor of 45 year old woman and against 70 year old man.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles E. Haas, Judge.

Action by Amy Harned against Harry W. Watson for breach of promise to marry. From an adverse judgment, the defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Prior opinion, 102 P.2d 368.

Michael F. Shannon, Thomas A. Wood, and Charles W. Wolfe, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Cantillon & Glover, Thomas B. Sawyer, John E. Glover, and Richard Cantillon, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment after verdict whereby the jury awarded the plaintiff $2,000 actual damages and $8,000 exemplary damages as the result of the breach of an alleged agreement of the defendant to marry the plaintiff.

Plaintiff, a woman forty-five years of age, first met defendant at a social function in 1935. She had been married but had obtained a decree of divorce many years before and for the past sixteen years had been making her living as a milliner, earning an average of $200 per month in 1935. The defendant, a man seventy years of age, was married at the time of the first few meetings of the parties. The wife died in July, 1936, and the defendant soon began to frequent plaintiff's apartment and to take her to luncheons and various social events. According to plaintiff, the defendant first asked her to marry him and she accepted in November, 1936, although no definite date for the marriage was fixed at that time. As a result of a quarrel there was a break in the relationship in January, 1937, and marriage was not again discussed until June 3 of that year. On that date the engagement was affirmed.

Plaintiff carried on her millinery business at her apartment, and as a result of defendant's presence most of the time, her business fell off rapidly. Her further testimony in this regard was that she expected to marry soon and thus did not attempt to hold her business.

In September, 1937, defendant suggested that she quit her millinery work and that they look for another apartment for her which would be suitable for them both after they were married. An apartment was found and partially furnished by defendant. When the time came to move in, defendant suggested that he move in also. On objection to this by the plaintiff, the defendant assured her that they would be married within a short time and placed his mother's wedding ring on her finger "to seal the bargain". The parties lived together at this apartment from October, 1937, to September 17, 1938. During this period both parties admitted that they indulged in sexual intercourse.

Although the defendant denied all plaintiff's testimony that he had promised to marry her the record is replete with evidence weakening such denial. He admitted telling her that he loved her; he accompanied her to church and took communion by her side; he introduced her to his daughter and intimate friends; he escorted her to his clubs; he sent presents to his friends with cards bearing her name and his; he wrote letters and poems of endearment; praised her for her sweetness and her beauty; gave her passes to the races on which she was designated as his wife; took her on trips in the company of his friends; and paid many of the expenses for the upkeep of the apartment.

The date of the marriage was discussed many times after the original proposal, but each time the plaintiff was put off with some excuse. At the time of the affirmance of the engagement on June 3, 1937, defendant stated that he had certain affairs to straighten up and that then they would get married. When they moved into the apartment the defendant stated that they would marry as soon as his son, who was expected any day, arrived. The son came and went, but no marriage resulted. After the son's departure plaintiff again tried to get a definite date set for the wedding. The defendant asked for "ten more days". It seems he wanted to close a deal with a Mr. Dahlberg. The ten days passed and no marriage. Finally, on September 17, 1938, plaintiff made a final attempt to fix a wedding date. The reply was, "Well, a little bit more time and my health will be all right." There was no evidence that defendant was in ill health at the time and plaintiff just "couldn't see it". She "just couldn't go any further, * * *". The defendant moved out of the apartment and the parties have not been together since that date.

The complaint, as amended, alleges, in part, that at defendant's request, plaintiff promised to marry defendant, though no definite date was set; that she is still ready and willing to marry defendant; that after said promise of marriage, the defendant seduced plaintiff about November 15, 1937, by means of his said promise and plaintiff's reliance thereon; that on June 3, 1937, the offer of marriage was renewed; that from time to time thereafter the marriage date was discussed; that upon plaintiff's demand on September 17, 1938, that defendant marry her he refused to do so.

The jury awarded plaintiff $2,000 actual damages and $8,000 punitive damages.

Defendant's first contention is that the promise to marry, if any, was contingent upon the happening of a future event, namely, when his "financial affairs were straightened out"; that there is a total absence of either pleading or proof that such a contingency has occurred; and that therefore the suit should have been dismissed.

[1, 2] In making an award of damages we must assume that the jury found from the evidence that there was an unconditional promise to marry within a reasonable time. Appellant argues that a conditional contract was established, as a matter of law, because nowhere in the record is there any testimony that the contract was unconditional. We cannot agree with appellant. Referring to the first proposal in November, 1936, the plaintiff testified: "* * * he said, 'I have become to feel that I can't do without you'; and asked me, would I marry him." It is clear that from such testimony the jury could find that there was an unconditional contract. Even though there was a break in the relationship in the early part of 1937, this contract apparently was not adversely affected thereby. This is evidenced by the testimony of the plaintiff. Respecting this breach in their prior friendly relations and their subsequent reconciliation, the plaintiff testified: "* * * Mr. Watson said, * * * 'and I wondered if you felt that the engagement of marriage was ever broken or if it is off; is it off?' I said, 'No, Harry, it has never been off, as far as I was concerned.' And he said, 'It had not been with him'; and if I so felt the same as he did, he did not see why we couldn't continue the engagement again." This reaffirmation of their engagement was based upon their original unconditional agreement of marriage. It is true that following the above-quoted testimony the defendant's financial affairs were discussed and that certain things should be straightened out before marriage. It is further true that in answer to the question on cross-examination, "But every time he discussed the question of marriage he always made the date of the marriage contingent upon his straightening out of his finances and his other things, did he not?" the plaintiff answered "Yes, he did." However, this was an answer to just one of many questions asked and it was within the province of the jury to decide whether this one answer was determinative when considered with the rest of the evidence. Whitaker v. Whitaker, 137 Cal.App. 396, 30 P.2d 538; Parker v. Herndon, 19 Cal. App. 451, 126 P. 183. It is quite common after a proposal and acceptance to discuss, in a practical way, the existing situations of the parties, financial and otherwise, but such discussion does not necessarily mean that the marriage itself is conditional on the straightening out of such affairs. Whether such proposal is conditional or not is a question for the jury to determine.

That the alleged condition was no more than an excuse is shown by the fact that different reasons for not marrying or setting a date were given by the defendant at different times. Once it would be after certain mortgages were cleared up; another time after his son came out; still another after a certain deal with a Mr. Dahlberg; and finally, when all other excuses had been used, "* * * when I get my health in shape".

[3] Even if we assume that the promise to marry after the son came out was a condition as to time and not just an excuse, the evidence shows that such condition occurred. The son did come to Los Angeles and apparently objected to the marriage.

The contingency upon which this particular promise was made, having occurred, the conditional promise was rendered absolute.

The appellant relies, to some extent, on the case of Bailey v. Brown, 4 Cal.App. 515, 88 P. 518, 519. Just one quotation from the record of that case, as disclosed in the opinion, is sufficient to demonstrate its inapplicability here. The plaintiff there testified: "The time agreed upon that we were to be married was after my mother's death." There was apparently no dispute as to this and no evidence to the contrary. The mother was still living and the court properly ruled that there was a failure to prove the cause of action alleged.

[4] Under the facts and circumstances above related we are of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence to justify the jury's implied finding that there was an agreement of marriage unfettered by any condition. In this regard the language in the case of Murphy v. Davis, 19 Cal.App.2d 316, 65 P.2d 917, 918, is particularly pertinent. It is there stated: "Appellant's second contention is that 'there is a fatal variance between the alleged contract to marry in respondent's pleadings and the proof,' and in this behalf he contends that the complaint alleged that 'the defendant promised to marry the plaintiff within a reasonable time,' whereas the proof was that defendant promised to marry plaintiff when he got his 'affairs straightened out' or when his 'lawsuits were terminated.' A contract to marry is ordinarily evidenced by several expressions and many circumstances. The record shows that the above expressions were merely two, among many, of defendant's intention to marry the plaintiff. Many of his promises were made without including any statement of the time for performance; and in the absence of such a statement the law will imply that it shall be performed within a reasonable time, depending, of course, upon the circumstances of each particular case. 4 Cal.Jur. 456; 4 R.C.L. 147. Under the above rule the record contains a plethora of substantial evidence that the defendant promised to marry the plaintiff within a reasonable time, including many circumstances from which an inference to the same effect may be fairly drawn. It is not the province of this court to disturb a finding of fact as to the terms of the oral contract if there be any substantial evidence to sustain the finding."

Appellant's second contention is that there was no basis for the award of punitive or exemplary damages. This contention is based on the following propositions: The plaintiff relied only on seduction as a ground for exemplary damages as shown by the complaint and by the instructions given by the court. This being true it was necessary to prove seduction. In order to make such proof the plaintiff had the burden of affirmatively proving her chastity before the illicit intercourse took place. This the plaintiff completely failed to do and, therefore, there was no basis for the award of exemplary damages. In this respect appellant further argues that the plaintiff cannot rely on any presumption of chastity. This latter argument is supported first by the observation that it has been established in Swett v. Gray, 141 Cal. 83, 74 P. 551, that an allegation of chastity, at the time of the act, is an essential element in stating a cause of action for damages for seduction; that presumptions of law need not be averred in a complaint (citing Johnson v. Clark, 7 Cal.2d 529, 61 P.2d 767; Henke v. Eureka Endowment Ass'n, 100 Cal. 429, 34 P. 1089); that therefore there is no presumption of chastity. In further support of his argument that there is no such presumption and that chastity must be affirmatively proved, appellant refers to the criminal cases of People v. Roderigas, 49 Cal. 9; People v. Wallace, 109 Cal. 611, 42 P. 159; and People v. O'Brien, 130 Cal. 1, 62 P. 297; which he claims so hold.

Although there is authority for the proposition that there is a presumption of chastity in breach of promise cases (see 9 C.J. p. 349, § 64; 11 C.J.S., Breach of Marriage Promise, § 28), appellant's argument that there is no presumption of chastity where seduction is pleaded and that it must be affirmatively pleaded is well reasoned and convincing. Furthermore, it must be admitted that the criminal seduction cases cited do hold that there is no presumption of chastity which would negative a defendant's constitutional right of a presumption of innocence. Such cases might be distinguished from a civil case in which seduction is pleaded, but we do not deem it necessary to indulge in any discussion of the rather complex field of presumptions. We are of the opinion that there was sufficient affirmative evidence from which the jury might, and apparently did, infer that the plaintiff was chaste at the time she consented to the illicit relationship.

[5, 6] First, the actions of the appellant himself, in relation to the plaintiff, point to a belief on his part that she was in no way a "fallen woman". The friendship of the parties was not a secretive, after dark affair. He attended church and took communion with her; took her on trips with his closest friends and to their homes; sent presents to his friends signed by both parties; invited his friends to the apartment the parties were sharing; and introduced her to members of his family. In turn, appellant's friends, who were professional men and other respected members of the community, treated plaintiff with respect and introduced her to their friends and families. One P. C. Gernert, who considered himself appellant's "dearest and best pal", requested and permitted plaintiff to act as hostess for his young adopted daughter at a Hallowe'en party. Plaintiff had, for years, worked as a milliner and in that capacity served many young business girls. She was permitted to carry on the business in her apartment and her landlady's young daughter was permitted to help her with her work. From the evidence referred to and from a review of the entire record we cannot but conclude that there was sufficient evidence from which the jury might infer chastity. That the jury may so infer is brought out by the very cases relied on by the appellant for the proposition that there is no presumption of chastity. In People v. O'Brien, supra [130 Cal. 1, 62 P. 298], it is stated: "That there may be an inference of chastity of a woman by the jury, and that the jury, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, should so infer, must be admitted." It might be here noted that nowhere in the record is there the slightest hint that plaintiff was of unchaste character. The court in People v. Roderigas, supra, in commenting on the necessity of affirmatively proving chastity, stated: "Character in this respect is a fact, and one which must be alleged in the indictment, and established by the prosecution, in order to [secure] a conviction of the accused. It need not, however, be proven by evidence given directly upon the point, but may be shown prima facie, by presumption from other facts and circumstances attending the transaction; as, for instance, that the unmarried female—the subject of the injury—was at the time residing with her parents, or other relatives, or her guardian, or in some respectable household, or by proof of other like circumstances consistent with, and the usual concomitants of, chaste female character." (Italics added.)

[7] Appellant further claims that the trial court erred in admitting certain testimony of respondent in regard to her seduction. She was asked the question "Was it his promise that induced you to submit yourself for sexual intercourse?" to which she answered, "Yes". Appellant objected at the time on the ground that the question called for a conclusion and opinion of the witness. The objection was overruled and appellant here claims that such was error on the same ground. The trial court properly overruled the objection. One of the essential elements to be established in the proof of seduction is reliance on the promise of marriage. The state of mind therefore is a fact to be proved, the best evidence of which is the testimony of the victim herself, such fact being peculiarly within her own knowledge. Such testimony was apparently permitted in the case of People v. Votaw, 38 Cal.App. 714, 177 P. 485. As to fraud and reliance generally such testimony was held proper in the cases of Fagan v. Lentz, 156 Cal. 681, 105 P. 951, 20 Ann.Cas. 221, and Luitweiler Pumping Engine Co. v. Ukiah Water & Implement Co., 16 Cal.App. 198, 116 P. 707, 712. That a party might testify directly to his own intent or motive has been well established by the cases of Fleet v. Tichenor, 156 Cal. 343, 104 P. 458, 34 L.R.A.,N.S., 323, and People v. Moore, 48 Cal.App. 245, 191 P. 980.

[8] The trial court first instructed the jury that there was no evidence to sustain the allegation of seduction and that it could not award punitive damages. The court later told the jury to disregard such instruction. The appellant now complains that the giving and withdrawal of such instruction so confused the jury that it was prejudicial error sufficient to compel a reversal. We have already determined that there was sufficient evidence to uphold the award of punitive damages as a result of seduction and we do not feel that any prejudicial error was committed.

[9, 10] We are not unmindful of the fact that this is not the usual breach of promise and seduction case, in which advantage was taken of a young and innocent girl. The plaintiff was a middle-aged woman who should have had sufficient worldly wisdom to guard against the situation in which she now finds herself. However, it cannot be denied that, on the faith of the promises of the defendant, she has suffered injury. She has given up her millinery business which was her only means of livelihood, and she will undoubtedly have difficulty in regaining it. Her relationship with the defendant was apparently well known, so that she must now suffer the silent or outspoken criticism of her friends and the community in which she must live. Such actions on the part of the plaintiff, in permitting the situation to exist, are not to be condoned, but when such acts occurred, actions for damages for breach of promise and seduction were permissible under the laws of this state. Evidence was sufficient to warrant the verdict of the jury; therefore, such verdict and the resultant judgment must be affirmed.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHENK, J.; TRAYNOR, J.; CARTER, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 166

LOLLI v. MARKET ST. RY. CO. et al.

Civ. 11403.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 21, 1941.

As Corrected March 11, 1941.

1. Negligence ⇐97

In personal injury suit, verdict should be for defendant, if jury finds plaintiff guilty of any negligence, however slight, which was sole proximate cause of, or proximately contributed to cause, any injuries complained of.

2. Negligence ⇐13, 65

There are no degrees of negligence or contributory negligence recognized in California.

3. Street railroads ⇐98(8)

It is duty of person crossing or about to cross street railway company's tracks to exercise his faculties of sight and hearing and watch and listen for cars coming from any direction.

4. Negligence ⇐4

The test of what constitutes "negligence" is standard of ordinarily prudent man under normal circumstances, and presence of unusual or extraordinary circumstances affecting transaction modifies application of general rule.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Negligence".

5. Negligence ⇐4, 13

In California, "negligence" is not divided into well defined degrees, but the rule is that every person must exercise reasonable care, and what is "reasonable care" depends on factors of time, place, person and surrounding circumstances.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Negligence" and "Reasonable Care".

6. Negligence ⇐80

Generally, one who is aware of danger and neglects to take reasonable precautions to avoid injury cannot recover damages therefor, subject to certain limitations, as when one seeks to rescue another from imminent peril.

7. Negligence ⇐80

One acting recklessly and rashly in seeking to rescue another from imminent peril by placing himself in position of danger not necessary to effect rescue and failing to act as ordinarily prudent person would act under similar circumstances cannot recover damages for resulting injury.

8. Negligence ⇐80

In determining whether one neglecting to take reasonable precautions to avoid injury in seeking to rescue another from imminent peril is precluded from recovering damages for such injury, questions whether danger was caused by imperiled party alone, by another, solely by party from whom recovery is sought, or by several parties' concurrent acts, whether rescuer realized that there was immediate peril or merely sought to aid one presumably injured under circumstances wherein there was no such peril, and circumstances of approach to position of party in peril, must be considered.

9. Trial ⇐267(1)

In personal injury suit, trial court had right to modify plaintiff's requested instructions, stating correct legal principles applicable to evidence and reasonable inferences therefrom, or to give other instructions, on question of contributory negligence.

10. Negligence ⇐136(31)
Street railroads ⇐117(17)

In action for injuries to one struck by defendant's street car while standing between parallel tracks to investigate possible injuries to occupants of damaged automobile, whether plaintiff's conduct constituted negligence and whether such negligence was slight or reckless were fact questions for jury under evidence.

11. Negligence ⇐135
Street railroads ⇐114(7, 13)

In action against street railway company and others for injuries to one struck by street car while standing between parallel tracks in investigating possible injuries to occupants of damaged automobile, evidence held sufficient to warrant implied finding by jury either that defendants were not negligent or that they were negligent, but plaintiff was also negligent, even to extent of recklessness, in assuming position of danger.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas M. Foley, Judge.

Action by Bruno Lolli against the Market Street Railway Company and others for personal injuries. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

A. B. Bianchi and Aylett B. Cotton, both of San Francisco, and F. E. Hoffmann, of San Mateo, for appellant.

Wm. M. Abbott, Cyril Appel, and Ivores R. Dains, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

WARD, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered upon the verdict of a jury in favor of defendants in an action to recover damages for personal injuries. A motion for new trial was automatically denied by failure of any action thereon within the statutory period. Code of Civ.Proc., sec. 661. The appeal is primarily directed to challenging certain instructions upon contributory negligence given at defendants' request or upon the court's own motion.

The action arises out of an accident which occurred at about midnight on the Mission street viaduct in San Francisco, over which the Market Street Railway Company maintains street car tracks running north and south. Repair work was in progress in connection with the track used for southbound traffic necessitating excavation between the rails of such track and about sixteen or eighteen inches on each side thereof for a distance of some forty feet. The excavation was well illuminated by thirty red lanterns and twenty flares, and there was sufficient space left to the west of the excavation for the use of southbound vehicular traffic. Plaintiff, driving in a southerly direction on Mission street, had just about reached the block where the excavating was being done, when another car passed him, drove into the excavation, zigzagged, and finally came to a stop at the south end thereof, its left front wheel torn off. Plaintiff drove by the car in the excavation, parked his car at the west curb about forty-five or fifty feet farther on, and walked back to the place of the accident. On ascertaining that the driver of the automobile was not hurt, but was intoxicated, he proceeded to the left side of the car, facing south, to investigate possible injuries to other occupants of the car. As he stood between the two street car tracks, he was struck by a northbound street car of defendant company and injured.

In support of the appeal, the plaintiff urges that the trial court erred in instructing the jury on the subject of contributory negligence and its several elements, for the reason that under the circumstances of this case, that is, where the conduct charged to be negligent occurred in an effort to render assistance to persons in peril, no lack of care short of recklessness—of which he contends there was no evidence—will bar a recovery.

[1-5] The court in effect instructed in the usual manner and in substance on the subject of contributory negligence, among the instructions given being that if the jury found the plaintiff "was guilty of any negligence, however slight, which was the sole proximate cause or which proximately contributed to cause any injuries complained of, then your verdict should be for" the defendants; that there are no degrees of negligence or contributory negligence recognized in this state; that it is the duty of any person crossing or about to cross the tracks of a street railway company to exercise his faculties of sight and hearing and watch and listen for cars coming from any direction. The court also instructed that the "test of what constitutes negligence on his part is the standard of an ordinarily prudent man under normal circumstances" and that "the presence of unusual or extraordinary circumstances affecting the transaction will always modify the application of the general rule". In substance these instructions correctly state recognized rules. In California negligence is not divided into well defined degrees. Rather, the rule is that every person must exercise reasonable care. What is reasonable care is dependent on the factors of time, place, person and surrounding circumstances.

[6-9] The general rule is that one who is aware of danger and neglects to take reasonable precautions to avoid injury is not permitted to recover. This rule is subject to certain limitations; for instance, when one seeks to rescue another person from imminent peril. In such case the general rule that negligence on the part of an injured party, no matter how slight, precludes recovery, is not always applicable. In attempting to rescue another, one may assume a dangerous position which under other circumstances would deprive him of redress. However, if the rescuer acts recklessly and rashly by placing himself in a position of danger not necessary to effect the rescue, and does not act as an ordinarily prudent person would act under similar circumstances, recovery is not permitted. Henshaw v. Belyea, 220 Cal. 458, 31 P.2d 348; Petersen v. Lang Transp. Co., 32 Cal. App.2d 462, 90 P.2d 94. Each case must be decided upon the facts presented. Whether the danger was caused by the imperiled party alone, by another person, or solely by the defendant, or by the concurrent acts of several parties, are questions that must be considered; also, whether the "rescuer" realized that there was immediate peril or, under circumstances wherein there was no imminent peril, merely sought to render aid to one presumably injured. The circumstances of approach to the position of the party in peril must also be considered. These and other facts may play an important part in the right of the "rescuer" to recover for injury sustained. These circumstances likewise bear upon the propriety of giving to a jury instructions on contributory negligence. In the instant case, appellant presented instructions on that subject. Assuming that correct legal principles were stated applicable to the evidence and reasonable inferences that could be drawn therefrom, the court had a right to modify such instructions or to give others.

[10] Whether appellant's conduct constituted negligence, and, if so, whether it was slight or reckless were questions of fact under all the circumstances of the case. At appellant's request certain instructions were given; others refused, presumably because they were either repetitions or covered by other instructions. The following given instruction is a fair sample: "In determining whether or not plaintiff was guilty of negligence which proximately contributed to the injury which he sustained, you are instructed the test of what constitutes negligence on his part is the standard of an ordinarily prudent man under normal circumstances. And the law leaves it for the jury to determine what such an individual would do under such circumstances. The presence of unusual or extraordinary circumstances affecting the transaction will always modify the application of the general rule. And, if you find from the evidence in this case that there were unusual or extraordinary circumstances affecting the transaction, it is your province to determine whether or not the plaintiff under such unusual or extraordinary circumstances acted as an ordinarily prudent man would have acted." Not one direct reference to "recklessness" or "rashness" appears in any of the offered instructions. Appellant relies upon Petersen v. Lang Transp. Co., supra, wherein a verdict in favor of a defendant was reversed on the ground that an instruction involving recklessness was refused. In the present case the record does not disclose the offer of such instruction.

[11] The conclusion reached by the jury in this case relative to the negligence of the plaintiff or the defendants is not definitely ascertainable. Suffice to say that an implied finding that defendants were not guilty of negligence would have to be sustained in view of all the evidence in this case. If the implied finding is that defendants were negligent, but that plaintiff was also negligent, even to the extent of recklessness, in assuming a position near the damaged automobile immediately adjacent to the path of an oncoming street car, the evidence in this case would warrant an affirmance of such finding.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PETERS, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 146

HAYWARD LUMBER & INVESTMENT CO. v. PRIDE OF MOJAVE MINING CO. et al.

Civ. 2608.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 18, 1941.

1. Mechanics' liens ⇐136(2)

A notice of a materialman's lien upon realty was fatally defective in so far as notice gave wrong section number in describing land.

2. Mechanics' liens ⇐136(2)

Under a notice of a materialman's lien against property described as "section 22 * * * and those certain mining claims in said section known as Pride of Mojave, Four Star and Enterprise", reference to mining claims was not sufficient identification of property to render lien enforceable against property described in complaint to foreclose lien as "Northwest quarter (1-4) of Section 33, * * * and those certain mining claims located within said quarter-section and known as 'Pride of Mojave', 'Four Star' and 'Enterprise'." Code Civ.Proc. § 1203.

3. Mechanics' liens ⇐136(1)

A notice of a mechanic's lien which entirely omits to describe real estate sought to be charged with lien is fatally defective.

4. Mechanics' liens ⇐158

A notice of a materialman's lien upon realty is not an instrument susceptible of reformation, and if notice is void or insufficient to identify the property there is no method of reforming notice. Code Civ.Proc. § 1203.

5. Evidence ⇐20(1)

It is common knowledge that extensive mining operations have been carried on in Kern county ever since the creation of the county.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Robert B. Lambert, Judge.

Action by Hayward Lumber & Investment Company against Pride of Mojave Mining Company and others to foreclose a materialman's lien upon real property. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to a third amended complaint without leave to amend and dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals, opposed by C. C. Calkins and others.

Affirmed.

Philip T. Lyons, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Alfred Siemon and Bennett Siemon, both of Bakersfield, and W. W. Kaye, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

KLETTE, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to a third amended complaint without leave to amend, and dismissing the action. The complaint was to foreclose a materialman's lien upon real property in Kern county described as follows:

"Northwest quarter (1-4) of Section 33, Township 11 North, Range 12 West, S. B. B. & M., and those certain mining claims located within said quarter-section and known as 'Pride of Mojave', 'Four Star' and 'Enterprise'."

The notice of lien, a copy of which was attached to the complaint as an exhibit, described the property as follows:

"Section 22, Township 11 North, Range 12 West, S. B. B. & M., and those certain mining claims in said section known as Pride of Mojave, Four Star and Enterprise."

[1] It will be noted that the notice of lien describes the property as section 22, while the complaint describes it as the northwest ¼ of section 33. In so far as the notice of lien gives the wrong section number, it is fatally defective. Bishop v. Hayward Lumber & Investment Co., 19 Cal.App.2d 234, 65 P.2d 125; D. I. Nofziger Lumber Co. v. Waters, 10 Cal.App. 89, 101 P. 38. In the first of the above cases, the notice of lien described the property as section 3, while the foreclosure proceeding described it as section 30. In the second of the above cases the notice of lien described the property as lot 18 in block 5, while the property sought to be impressed with the lien was lot 18 in block 4. In each of these cases the court held that the lien could not be enforced against the property described in the complaint.

[2] Appellant urges, however, that the reference to the three mining claims is a sufficient identification of the property. This contention is untenable. In the case of Fernandez v. Burleson, 110 Cal. 164, 42 P. 566, 52 Am.St.Rep. 75, plaintiffs performed labor on the Bare Bar mining claim. The notice of lien filed by them referred to the claim as being in Virginia Bar Mining District, in Siskiyou county, California, and described it by monuments, metes, and bounds. This description did not fit the Bare Bar claim, but did fit an adjoining claim, the Otto Bar. The court held the description insufficient to charge the Bare Bar with a lien.

[3, 4] Appellant then relies on section 1203 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that certain mistakes shall not invalidate the lien, and calls attention to the fact that the case of Fernandez v. Burleson, supra, was decided before this section was adopted. This is correct. However, the case of Bishop v. Hayward Lumber & Investment Co., supra [19 Cal. App.2d 234, 65 P.2d 127], was decided long after the adoption of section 1203, supra, and contains the following statement of the law:

"The lien upon which the appellant's foreclosure proceedings rest is not one of defective description of the premises claimed and found to be owned by the plaintiff, but presents an instrument in which no description whatever is given of her property, and falls under the rule announced in the case of Penrose v. Calkins, 77 Cal. 396, 19 P. 641, where it is said: 'A notice of a mechanic's lien which entirely omits to describe the real estate sought to be charged with the lien is fatally defective.' And likewise, in the case of Fernandez v. Burleson, 110 Cal. 164, 42 P. 566, 52 Am.St.Rep. 75, where it is said: 'Where there is no description in the notice of lien sufficient to identify the mining claim upon which the work was actually done with reasonable certainty, to the exclusion of other premises, the notice of lien is insufficient.' And in which case it is further held that the notice of lien is not an instrument susceptible of reformation. In other words, if the notice of lien is void or insufficient to identify the property and therefore is void, there is no method of reforming such an instrument, for the simple reason that the law requiring the filing of a notice of lien is intended to give the general public notice thereof, and the reformation founded upon the plaintiff's complaint, and judgment to that effect would be wholly ineffective to give notice of the lien to the general public as required by the Code of Civil Procedure."

[5] The court holds that the mere reference to certain mining claims in the notice of lien is not sufficient to cure the defect in the erroneous description of the property. They are described as being in section 22, and not in the northwest quarter of section 33, as set forth in the complaint. It is a fact of common knowledge that extensive mining operations have been carried on in Kern county, ever since the creation of the county, and from all that appears, there may be many mining claims bearing the same name as those mentioned in the notice of lien.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 84

BRINTLE v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF LONG BEACH et al.

Civ. 12786.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 19, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 17, 1941.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐211

The position of director, associate, or assistant director of a bureau or department of educational research is not included among positions for which certificates may be issued under statute, and hence is not within terms of statute authorizing acquisition of permanent tenure in position "requiring certification qualifications." School Code, §§ 5.121, 5.122, 5.124, 5.131, 5.142, 5.150, 5.160 to 5.167, 5.420 to 5.490, 5.500, 5.502, 5.770 et seq.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Requiring Certification Qualifications".

2. Schools and school districts ⇐48(2)

Under rule "expressio unius est exclusio alterius", legislature in enumerating types of certificates which might be granted by county board of education intended to exclude authority to grant certificates for other types of employment. School Code, §§ 5.150, 5.160 to 5.167.

3. Municipal corporations ⇐211

In statute providing for permanent tenure for positions "requiring certification qualifications", the quoted phrase was intended to refer to particular classes of certificates enumerated in the School Code. School Code, §§ 5.131, 5.142, 5.150, 5.160 to 5.167, 5.420 to 5.490.

4. Schools and school districts ⇐133

One who was occupied in educational research during practically all of nine years, did no classroom teaching, and held no credentials or certification authorizing him to teach, did not acquire permanent tenure even as a classroom teacher. School Code, §§ 5.500, 5.502, 5.770 et seq.

5. Officers ⇐11

Statutes enacted to establish tenure for state employees must be strictly construed, and no person can gain a permanent tenure or be advanced to a higher class in the service except by following the statutes and rules adopted by administrative board. School Code, §§ 5.121, 5.122, 5.124, 5.131, 5.-142, 5.150, 5.160 to 5.167, 5.420 to 5.490, 5.500, 5.502, 5.770 et seq.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ingall W. Bull, Judge.

Action by Shirley Lance Brintle against the Board of Education of the City of Long Beach and others, for writ of mandate to compel reinstatement in position. From a judgment denying the petition, petitioner appeals.

Affirmed.

Tanner, Odell & Taft and Robert A. Odell, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, and W. B. McKesson, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant filed his petition for a writ of mandate requiring respondent Junior College District and the Board of Education of the city of Long Beach to reinstate him in his position of "assistant to the supervisor of educational research" in the Long Beach junior college, with the status of permanent tenure and to pay him the salary for such position for the time elapsing since his discharge at the end of his last year with the school. This appeal followed a judgment denying appellant's petition.

Appellant's contention that he be reinstated as a permanent employee is based upon the following facts: appellant was employed by the respondent Junior College District as counsellor for the 1930–1931 school year; as counsellor-registrar for 1931-32; as dean of records for 1932-33 and 1933-34; as vice-principal and dean of men for 1934-35 and 1935-36; as vice-principal with supervision of evening junior college for 1936–1937; as vice-principal for 1937–1938; and as assistant to the supervisor of educational research after December 6, 1937. Appellant was notified on May 9, 1938 that his services would not be required for the next ensuing school year. During all of that time appellant held a special secondary research credential issued by the state board of education which authorized him to serve in the public schools as director, associate or assistant director of a bureau or department of educational research. At all times mentioned herein he held a certificate for such service in the public schools of Los Angeles county in which the respondent Junior College District is located. Not until December 10, 1937, did appellant obtain general secondary school and administration credentials from the state board of education.

Despite various positions held by him, appellant contends that he was actually employed to do educational research work and that more than ninety per cent of his time was consumed in doing such work and that this position required certification qualifications during the school years of 1930–1931, 1931–32, and 1932–33, and that by virtue of the provisions of section 5.500 of the School Code, he became a permanent employee when he was employed for the 1933–34 school year in the same position. But the findings of the trial court, contrary to appellant's demands, were as follows: that appellant was not employed for educational research work until December 6, 1937; that prior thereto, in addition to his duties as counsellor, dean of records and vice-principal, appellant engaged in research activity in connection with the administering of achievement and intelligence tests of the students and the percentage of drafts and charts incidental to enrollment and the progress of students at said Junior College; that employment to do educational research work was not a position requiring a certification of qualifications.

From the facts so found, the decision of the court was that appellant was not employed for three consecutive years in a position requiring certification qualifications; that he was not re-elected for the 4th year to a position requiring certification qualifications and that accordingly appellant did not acquire permanent tenure.

In view of the findings, our task is to determine: (1) Whether the findings are supported by the evidence, and (2) whether appellant while actually employed to fill the various positions held prior to December 6, 1937, is entitled to base his right of tenure as "assistant supervisor of educational research" upon the fact that he did engage in research activity while employed as counsellor, dean of records and vice-principal.

Section 5.500 of the School Code provides: "Every employee of a school district of any type or class, who after having been employed by the district for three complete consecutive school years in a position or positions requiring certification qualifications, is re-elected for the next succeeding school year to a position requiring certification qualifications shall, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, at the commencement of said succeeding school year, be classified as and shall become a permanent employee of the district." It is thus apparent that permanent tenure may only be acquired in a "position * * * requiring certification qualifications". Since appellant does not claim to have acquired permanent tenure as a counsellor, counsellor-registrar, dean of records, dean of men or vice-principal, but only with respect to educational research work, it follows that if the latter type of work does not require certification qualifications within the meaning of section 5.500 the judgment of the trial court must be upheld.

By section 5.121 of the School Code, there is "created a commission of credentials, to consist of the superintendent of public instruction, and four persons appointed" by him. By section 5.122 it is authorized to issue credentials to candidates who can "meet the standard set by the state board of education". By section 5.124 this board is empowered "to authorize the commission of credentials to issue credentials upon which county boards of education may grant the certificates enumerated". Sections 5.160 to 5.167. The minimum general standards for all types of credentials is prescribed by sections 5.131 and 5.142. Section 5.150 authorizes the state board of education to prescribe the qualifications upon which county, and city and county boards of education may grant certificates: "(a) To teach in junior colleges, senior high schools, four-year high schools, junior high schools, elementary schools, and kindergartens. (b) To supervise instruction and to administer schools as supervisors, principals, and superintendents. (c) To act as school librarians. (d) To act as school attendance officers. (e) To supervise the health and development of pupils." By section 5.160 the county boards of education are empowered to grant the certificates enumerated in sections 5.161 to 5.167, which provide for the following certificates: High school, junior high school, elementary school, kindergarten-primary, special certificates (authorizing the holder to serve as librarian or to teach the branches of learning named in such certificate) and supervisor of health.

[1, 2] None of the foregoing provisions of the School Code authorizes or requires the granting of a special secondary certificate or credential, such as that held by appellant, authorizing him to act as director, associate or assistant director of educational research. The failure of the legislature to authorize the granting of such credential leaves no doubt that in enumerating and describing the various certificates which the county boards are authorized to grant by virtue of sections 5.150 and of 5.161 to 5.167, the legislature described all of the positions "requiring certification qualifications". Applying the familiar rule of expressio unius est exclusio alterius, it must be held that the legislature, in enumerating the several types of certificates, intended to exclude the authority to grant certificates for other types of employment not coming within the enumerated classes. (Secs. 5.161 to 5.167.) Since the position of "director, associate or assistant director of a Bureau or Department of educational research" is not included among the positions for which certificates may be issued, it cannot be one "requiring certification qualifications".

[3] That the legislature, in employing the phrase "positions requiring certification qualifications" intended to refer to the particular classes of certificates enumerated in the School Code is clear when the provisions of Chapter II of Division 5, part 3 (secs. 5.420 to 5.490), of the Code are considered. This Chapter II sets forth the general qualifications which must be met by persons who are employed in positions requiring certification qualifications. By section 5.420 the governing boards of school districts are empowered "to employ for positions requiring certification qualifications, only persons who hold legal certificates in full force and effect and on file at the time such employment becomes effective". The succeeding sections prescribe the qualifications and type of certifications and type of certificate required for employment as principal, teacher, librarian, supervisor, administrator and physical inspectors. Nowhere in this chapter do we find even the suggestion of an educational research certificate. The rights of employees other than those requiring certification qualifications are set forth in sections 5.770 et seq. The term of employment of the employes there mentioned cannot "extend beyond the close of the next ensuing school year". It is needless to consider those sections, however, for appellant bases his claim to permanent tenure solely upon the provisions of section 5.500.

[4, 5] (2) From the foregoing it clearly appears that even though appellant's position had been one requiring certification qualifications, his only prospect for a permanent tenure would have been that of classroom teacher. According to section 5.502 persons employed in administrative or supervisory positions requiring certification qualifications can become permanent employees as classroom teachers only but not as administrators or supervisors. Since appellant was occupied during practically all of his nine years in doing research work and did no classroom teaching at all, and since he held no credentials or certification authorizing him to teach during the entire period of his employment, we find no codal provision by which appellant, however so competent, could have acquired permanent tenure even as a classroom teacher. In view of the language of the cited sections, he is not, merely because he engaged in research activity while holding various positions of responsibility entitled to permanent tenure as assistant to the supervisor of educational research. Our conclusion announced in Allen v. State Board of Equalization, 110 P.2d 73, this day filed is apropos. There certain employees of the State Board of Equalization, while holding positions of "collector" performed the services of "inspector" for over two years. They sought in vain to collect the differential between the salary of the two positions because they had not been certified as eligibles for the higher position prior to doing the work. Statutes enacted to establish tenure for state employees must be strictly construed. No person can gain a permanent tenure or be advanced to a higher class in the service save only by following the statutes enacted by the legislature and the rules adopted by the administrative board. Since the position held by appellant did not require certification qualifications, he is not entitled to be classified as a permanent employee. A decision favorable to appellant upon the remaining questions raised could be of no avail.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WOOD, J.; McCOMB, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 847

KAMP v. SECURITY NAT. BANK OF PASADENA.

Civ. 12793.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 27, 1941.

Appeal and error ⇐773(2)

Where transcripts of appeal were filed July 19, 1940, appellant filed three requests for additional time within which to file opening brief which time expired October 11, 1940, no further requests for time were made and no briefs were filed and on January 17, 1941, an order was issued to show cause why appeal should not be dismissed for want of prosecution, but no cause was shown either prior to, or at time of the hearing, appeal was dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas C. Gould, Judge.

Action by H. Kamp against the Security National Bank of Pasadena, etc. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Appeal dismissed.

Bernard Brennan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Alfred G. Allen, of Pasadena, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The transcripts on appeal herein were filed July 19, 1940. Thereafter appellant filed three requests for additional time within which to file his opening brief, which time expired October 11, 1940. No further requests for time having been made, and no brief having been filed, on January 17, 1941, an order was issued to appellant to show cause on February 26, 1941, why the appeal should not be dismissed for want of prosecution. No cause having been shown, neither prior to nor at the time of the hearing.

It is ordered that the appeal herein be, and the same hereby is, dismissed.

CARBONE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR NAPA COUNTY et al.*

Civ. 6564.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 19, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 21, 1941.

Hearing Granted April 17, 1941.

1. Bastards ⇐8

The paternity of an illegitimate child may be established in the same suit in which support of the child is sought to be enforced, or may be separately established. Civ.Code, §§ 137, 196a, 231.

2. Bastards ⇐16, 94

Costs, counsel fees, and maintenance of an illegitimate child may be enforced against the father after paternity has been established, but not in suit for support before paternity has been established. Civ.Code, §§ 137, 196a, 231.

3. Bastards ⇐16

Rights or obligations under statute expressing purpose to enforce father's obligation to support and educate illegitimate offspring may vest in absence of proof of parentage of the child. Civ.Code, § 196a.

4. Bastards ⇐16

In statute providing for proceeding to compel support of illegitimate child, references to divorce statutes manifest intent that parent's obligation to support illegitimate child could be enforced in manner provided for in divorce statutes after paternity has been established, but not before. Civ. Code, §§ 137, 196a.

5. Bastards ⇐16, 94

In proceeding to compel support of illegitimate child, costs and maintenance cannot be imposed pendente lite against alleged father, either during trial or on appeal, before paternity has been finally established. Civ.Code, §§ 137, 196a, 231.

Petition by Diane Lee Carbone, a minor, for writ of mandamus to compel the Superior Court of Napa County, Percy S. King, Judge, to make an order for costs, counsel fees and maintenance of the minor petitioner pending trial of a suit for support under Civil Code, sec. 196a.

Writ denied.

Allen Spivock, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Rutherford, Rutherford & Rutherford and Wallace Rutherford, all of Napa, for respondents.

THOMPSON, Justice.

By means of a writ of mandamus the mother and guardian ad litem of an illegitimate child seeks to compel the Superior Court of Napa County to make an order for costs, counsel fees and maintenance of the child pending the trial of a suit for support under the provisions of section 196a of the Civil Code. It is claimed that section of the code, as amended in 1939, authorizes the allowance of such payments from an alleged father of an illegitimate child, pendente lite, even before the paternity has been determined, just as a husband or wife may become liable therefor in a suit for divorce under section 137 of the same code.

The petition alleges that a complaint was filed in the Superior Court of Napa County by Peggy Fredericks, the mother and guardian ad litem of Diane Lee Carbone, an illegitimate infant child, under section 196a of the Civil Code, claiming that the defendant, Leo Carbone, is the father of the child, and demanding judgment for her support. The defendant in that action was never married to Peggy Fredericks. That suit has not been tried, nor has the paternity of the child been established. An order to show cause was issued against the defendant, directing him to furnish reason why he should not pay costs, counsel fees and maintenance during the pendency of the action. After hearing, the proceeding to show cause was dismissed. This petition for a writ of mandamus was then filed.

* Subsequent opinion 117 P.2d 872.

The only question to be determined is whether the alleged father of an illegitimate child, to whom the mother was never married, may be compelled to pay costs, counsel fees and support money under section 196a of the Civil Code before the paternity of the child has been established.

[1-4] It is true that the paternity of an illegitimate child may be established in the same suit in which the support of the child is sought to be enforced. Sec. 196a, Civ. Code; Kyne v. Kyne, 38 Cal.App.2d 122, 100 P.2d 806. The paternity of the child may also be separately established under section 231 of the Civil Code. There is no doubt that costs, counsel fees and maintenance of an illegitimate child may be enforced against the father after the paternity has been first established. We are, however, of the opinion that costs, counsel fees and maintenance may not be enforced against a defendant in a suit for support of an illegitimate child, under section 196a of the Civil Code, until after the paternity of the child has first been established. Schallman v. Haas, 33 Cal.App. 28, 164 P. 336. The very purpose of the last-mentioned section, as it is expressed therein, is to enforce the legal obligation of "the father as well as the mother, of an illegitimate child" to support and educate their offspring. No rights or obligations under that section may vest in the absence of proof of the parentage of the child. That section, as amended in 1939, merely authorizes the court "to order and enforce performance" of the previously-determined obligations thereunder, in the same manner that alimony or maintenance may be enforced by execution or otherwise in a divorce proceeding under section 137 of the Civil Code. If the legislature had intended by the enactment of section 196a to authorize the collection of costs, counsel fees or maintenance pendente lite against a defendant merely because he was accused of being the father of an illegitimate child, it would have been very easy to have so expressed it. Section 137 of the Civil Code clearly provides that: "During the pendency of any such [divorce] action the court may, in its discretion, require the husband or wife, as the case may be, to pay * * * alimony," etc. No such language appears in section 196a. Evidently the legislature meant, by reference to the various sections with relation to divorce proceedings, that a parent's obligation to support his illegitimate child could be enforced in the same manner provided for in those sections after the paternity had been first established. Before that status has been determined there is no obligation to support the child which could be enforced by either equity or law.

[5] It would be a very unjust and dangerous rule that would permit the imposition of costs and maintenance pendente lite against an innocent person merely because he was wrongfully accused of being the father of an illegitimate child. Such a rule might encourage irresponsible persons to collect from various innocent individuals in a succession of suits maintained without merit.

It is argued that society has an interest in seeing that the parents of children properly maintain and care for their offspring. That is true. But society is presumed to possess a higher standard of justice than to attempt to enforce the maintenance and support of illegitimate children upon innocent persons, or upon anyone until his parentage of the child has been first established in the manner required by law.

In the Schallman case, supra, in which a hearing by the Supreme Court was denied, after the paternity of an illegitimate child had been first established in a suit brought for that purpose under section 196a of the Civil Code, an order for costs and counsel fees was subsequently made for the purpose of prosecuting the appeal. That order was reversed. In response to the contention of the respondent that section 196a authorized the allowance of costs and counsel fees pendente lite, just as they are allowed in divorce proceedings, the court said [33 Cal.App. 28, 164 P. 338]: "But there is no analogy between divorce suits or any other action between a husband and wife pertaining to or involving their marital relation and obligations and an action founded upon section 196a of the Civil Code. No more than in any other of the various classes of actions has a court the inherent power, if, indeed, it can have or be given any power in that respect at all, to require a litigant in a case of this character to provide his adversary with the means necessary to defray the costs and expenses incident to the prosecution or resisting of an appeal or for the support of such adversary, pending the disposition of the cause on appeal. This proposition necessarily follows from the fact that the essential issue to be determined in an action of this kind is contested. The gist or gravamen of this action is the paternity of the alleged illegitimate child."

On principle it is equally true that costs, counsel fees and maintenance during the trial of a cause under section 196a may not be charged against an alleged father of an illegitimate child, until the paternity has been finally established. If such payments may not be collected for prosecution of an appeal from the judgment they certainly are improper charges to be imposed during the trial of the cause.

In the Kyne case, supra, the paternity of the illegitimate child was determined at a trial of the cause. The court ordered the defendant to pay for the support of the child from the date of its birth. From that judgment an appeal was perfected. The question of the right to impose upon the defendant costs, counsel fees or maintenance pendente lite was not involved in that case. There is nothing in that case in conflict with what we have previously said regarding the necessity of first proving the paternity of the illegitimate child before the obligation for its support or the costs of suit may be imposed upon a litigant.

The writ of mandamus is denied.

We concur: PULLEN, P. J.; TUTTLE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 155

MAXON v. AVERY.

Civ. 2601.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 20, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 17, 1941.

1. Joint tenancy ⇐3

The test of person's competency to create joint tenancy with right of survivorship is whether he was mentally competent to deal with subject before him with full understanding of his rights and actually understood nature, purpose, and effect of what he did.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1050(1)

In action by incompetent's guardian to set aside joint tenancy and quiet plaintiff's title to note and trust deed, executed to ward, his wife, and defendant as joint tenants, with right of survivorship, by purchaser of ward's ranch, admission of purchaser's opinion testimony that ward was of sound mind and capable of transacting business as to his property at time of transaction was not sufficiently prejudicial to justify reversal of judgment for defendant, even if technically erroneous because witness was not intimate acquaintance of ward. Code Civ.Proc. § 1870, subd. 10.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1047(3)

In action, tried without jury, by incompetent's guardian to set aside joint tenancy and quiet plaintiff's title to note and trust deed, executed by purchaser of ward's ranch to ward, his wife, and defendant, as joint tenants, with right of survivorship, court committed no error prejudicial to plaintiff in striking out testimony that ward's wife made a motion "around the head" during conversation between ward and witness three years before transaction in question, in view of other evidence on issue of ward's mental incompetency, as appellate court cannot presume that trial court would have accorded stricken testimony any greater weight than such other evidence.

4. Joint tenancy ⇐3

In action by incompetent's guardian to set aside joint tenancy and quiet title to note and trust deed, executed by purchaser of ward's ranch to ward, his wife, and defendant as joint tenants, with right of survivorship, evidence held sufficient to sustain trial court's finding as to ward's mental competency at time of such transaction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; Glenn L. Moran, Judge.

Action by Donald A. Maxon, guardian of Norton H. Tharp, an incompetent person, against Rose V. Avery, to set aside a joint tenancy with right of survivorship and quiet plaintiff's title to certain money, a note, and a trust deed. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

W. R. Bailey, Walter C. Haight, and John F. Downey, all of Visalia, for appellant.

Farnsworth, Burke & Maddox and James K. Abercrombie, all of Visalia, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action to set aside a joint tenancy with the right of survivorship and quiet the plaintiff's title in and to certain money and a certain note and trust deed.

On or about June 2, 1936, Norton H. Tharp, who was then 76 years of age, sold a ranch, which was his separate property for $13,500, receiving $3,500 in cash and a note for $10,000 secured by a trust deed upon the property. The note and trust deed were made out in favor of Tharp, his wife, and Rose V. Avery, who was a niece of his wife, as joint tenants with the right of survivorship, and the cash received was deposited in a bank under a similar arrangement. The couple had no children, and Tharp's wife died on November 15, 1936. On January 11, 1937, Tharp was adjudged incompetent and Donald A. Maxon was appointed as guardian of his person and estate.

The guardian brought this action alleging that on June 2, 1936, Tharp was weak in body and mind and unable to care for his property; that the defendant occupied a confidential relationship with him; that without his knowledge or understanding and in violation of that relationship she had procured the placing of the proceeds of this ranch in such joint tenancy; and that the creation of this joint tenancy was procured by fraud and undue influence.

The court found in all respects in favor of the defendant, but findings and judgment were entered after Tharp had died. On a former appeal (Maxon v. Avery, 32 Cal.App.2d 300, 89 P.2d 684, 685), taken on the grounds that the findings were not supported by the evidence and that the judgment was void, having been entered before the administrator of Tharp's estate was substituted as the party plaintiff, this court reversed the judgment on the latter ground and with respect to the first ground, said: "Conceding, but not holding, that the evidence would have supported contrary findings and a judgment in favor of the appellant, it would have to be held that the findings and judgment as entered are amply supported by the evidence. In fact, they are supported by a preponderance of the evidence."

On a rehearing, after vacating the former findings and judgment, the court again entered substantially the same findings of fact, finding, among other things, that it was not true that at the time in question Tharp "was weak in mind, or was unable unassisted to care for himself or his property" except that he was, on account of age, unable to perform the physical labor of caring for his real property; that he personally conducted the negotiations for the sale of this property; that at all times during said transaction he was mentally competent; that he freely discussed the details of this transaction, the disposition to be made of the moneys to be received therefrom and the terms of the trust deed and note, not only with his wife but also with other competent disinterested persons who gave him independent advice particularly as to the disposition to be made of said moneys and the payees to be named in said note and trust deed; that after full consideration and discussion and with full knowledge and understanding and of his own free will Tharp consummated said sale and made the disposition in question of the proceeds thereof; that it was not true that the defendant occupied a confidential relationship with Tharp; that it was not true that she caused or procured the making of the joint tenancy with respect to the proceeds of the sale; and that there was no fraud or undue influence. Another judgment was entered, from which the plaintiff has appealed upon a clerk's transcript covering the proceedings after the going down of the remittitur on the other appeal and with a stipulation that the reporter's transcript filed in connection with the other appeal should be used and considered on this appeal.

No contention is now made that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the findings and judgment. The appellant admits that the sale of the farm was fair and just and for an ample consideration, but contends that the court made four errors in connection with the receipt of evidence which were prejudicial and without which it would have been established that at the time in question Tharp "was of such unsound mind as not to fully comprehend the transaction".

[1] The test to be applied in such a case as this is whether the party was mentally competent to deal with the subject before him with a full understanding of his rights; whether he actually understood the nature, purpose and effect of what he did. Carr v. Sacramento C. P. Co., 35 Cal. App. 439, 170 P. 446. In Hellman Commercial T. & S. Bank v. Alden, 206 Cal. 592, 275 P. 794, 799, the court said: "One may be incompetent to some extent and yet have sufficient mentality to comprehend the nature and effect of a transaction and therefore execute a valid contract."

[2] Appellant's first two assignments of error relate to two questions asked of the lady who bought this farm from Mr. Tharp. The first question was "I will ask you to state, based on your observation and your talk and your dealings with him, during this period of months, whether or not in your opinion he was of unsound mind?" The second was, "State whether or not, in your opinion, Mr. Tharp, during these negotiations, as you saw and observed him, was capable of transacting business as to his property?" Objections to both questions were overruled and the answer to each was unfavorable to the appellant. It is argued that this witness was not qualified to express an opinion on such matters since she was not an intimate acquaintance, within the meaning of subdivision 10 of section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Reliance is placed upon the case of the Atkins Corporation v. Tourny, 6 Cal.2d 206, 57 P.2d 480. In that case the witness had known the party in question a week and had had five conversations with her. The court held that it was error to allow the witness to give his opinion concerning the sanity of the party but found it unnecessary to decide whether that error, standing alone, would justify a reversal.

In the instant case, this witness had had four interviews with Tharp over a period of nearly two months. Some of these interviews lasted several hours during which Mr. Tharp showed her the boundaries of his property, showed her a number of things about it, including the location of several springs, and told her about his riparian rights.

No definite rule has been established as to just what is required to constitute one an intimate acquaintance of another. This witness had considerable opportunity to observe Tharp and his actions and words in connection with the actual handling of his property. It is conceded that he made a good sale of the property and there is no evidence that the respondent influenced him or attempted to influence him in connection with the sale or with the disposition of the proceeds thereof. It may be noted that these questions were directed more to the appearance of Tharp, under a particular set of circumstances, rather than to a general opinion as to his mental condition. The testimony thus brought out was in fact unnecessary and merely cumulative because the testimony of this witness, as to what was said and done by Tharp during this period, led naturally to the same conclusion and was most persuasive. Whether or not the admission of this testimony was technically erroneous it cannot be held, under the circumstances of this case, to have been sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal. De Arellanes v. Arellanes, 151 Cal. 443, 90 P. 1059.

The same may be said with respect to the third assignment of error, which relates to a similar question asked of a bank official who acted as escrow agent in connection with the sale of this farm.

[3] In the remaining instance it is claimed that the court erred in striking out that part of the testimony of one witness in which he testified that during a conversation between Tharp and himself, Tharp's wife made a motion "around the head" and in which, in response to the question "She made a motion with her hand going around her head?", the witness replied, "Yes, I guess, I don't know that is what he mean." He first testified that Tharp did not see his wife make this motion, and later testified that he did see it. It is argued that such a motion is commonly understood as indicating that the person to whom it refers is "out of his head" and that this testimony was admissible because Mr. Tharp said nothing, although he saw his wife make the motion. Aside from any other consideration, this incident occurred three years prior to the transaction in question. If we assume this evidence had a bearing on the issues, there was no jury, there was a great deal of other evidence on that issue, and it can hardly be presumed that the court would have accorded it any greater weight had it been admitted.

[4] While there was evidence that Tharp's mental condition rapidly deteriorated after his wife's death and while there is some evidence that might be said to be technically sufficient to have supported a finding that he was not in full possession of his faculties at the time of this transaction, a rereading of the transcript convinces us that the evidence largely preponderates in favor of the findings as made.

This conclusion is supported not only by the direct evidence indicating that Tharp fully understood what he was doing in this transaction, but by the nature of the appellant's evidence given in an attempt to prove the contrary. While some of these witnesses expressed the opinion that Tharp was then of unsound mind the reasons given for such opinions were so unsubstantial, in most cases so clearly inadequate, and in many cases so trivial, it can well be seen why the trier of fact refused to give any weight thereto. As examples, one of these witnesses stated, as reasons for his opinion, that Tharp frequently had trouble in starting his 12-year-old Star automobile, and that he was asking $25 an acre for his land when the witness thought it was worth not more than $2.50 an acre. It may be here observed that in this transaction Tharp sold the land for $20.45 per acre. Another witness thought he was of unsound mind because he was somewhat forgetful at times, and because he expressed an intention or desire of going different places at different times. One of Tharp's nephews drew the same conclusion because Tharp got angry on two occasions when the witness' cattle trespassed upon Tharp's land. And the appellant administrator, the husband of Tharp's niece, testified that Tharp was not mentally competent to transact business at the time in question, although when asked whether he had had any occasion to observe Tharp's ability to conduct business transactions during the spring and summer of 1936, he replied: "No, other than he could not start his car, and such as that."

No undue influence or fraud appears, and the manner in which the proceeds of this sale were disposed of were not unnatural or unreasonable since the evidence shows that Tharp was very fond of his wife's niece, the respondent, that he resented his nephews' allowing their cattle to trespass upon his property and had had other controversies with them, and that he had expressed the desire that his sister's family receive none of his property. Under the circumstances here appearing it cannot be assumed that a different ruling with respect to any of these items of evidence, would have affected the result, and any possible error was not prejudicial. Cooper v. McDonald, 32 Cal.App.2d 114, 89 P.2d 412.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: MARKS, J; GRIFFIN, J.

LADAS et al. v. JOHNSON'S BLACK & WHITE TAXICAB CO. et al.

Civ. 6435.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 25, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 27, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 24, 1941

1. Appeal and error ⇐989

Where judgment denying recovery for death of pedestrian was challenged on ground that there was in the record no evidence of contributory negligence, issue before the District Court of Appeal was whether there was substantial evidence in entire record to support finding of contributory negligence.

2. Automobiles ⇐244(53)

In action for death of pedestrian who after alighting from street car sought to cross street in rear of car but was struck by taxicab approaching from opposite direction, evidence did not sustain denial of recovery on ground of contributory negligence.

3. Automobiles ⇐164(1)

A motorist approaching street car stopped at regular place must exercise great care in passing to avoid injuring passengers alighting from or boarding car.

4. Automobiles ⇐164(3)

Motorist passing street car on side opposite gates must at his peril anticipate sudden appearance of persons around rear end of car.

5. Automobiles ⇐164(3), 168(4)

Motorist passing street car on side opposite gates must signal approach and have automobile under control as precaution against injuring person passing around rear of car.

6. Automobiles ⇐206

Pedestrian who after alighting from a street car sought to cross street in rear thereof had right to assume that operators of motor vehicles entering intersection from opposite direction would exercise a proper degree of care. Vehicle Code, §§ 560, 562, St. 1935, p. 188.

7. Automobiles ⇐244(59)

In action against taxicab company for death of pedestrian who sought to cross street in rear of street car after alighting therefrom, evidence that cab driver saw street car stop at lighted intersection, that he saw two people emerge from behind rear of car, that he recognized them as women, that the pedestrians were struck when within 10 or 12 feet of curb while car was traveling about 10 or 12 miles an hour warranted application of "last clear chance" doctrine.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Last Clear Chance".

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Antone Ladas and others against Johnson's Black and White Taxicab Company and others, to recover damages for the death of Amelia Ladas from injuries sustained when struck by a taxicab. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal.

Reversed.

Busick & Busick, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Butler, Van Dyke & Harris, of Sacramento, for respondents.

PULLEN, Presiding Justice.

This action was for the recovery of damages for the death of Amelia Ladas, the wife of Antone Ladas, and the mother of Steve, Margaret and Athena Ladas. From a judgment in favor of defendants this appeal was taken.

About 9:30 p. m. on the 20th day of December, 1938, Amelia Ladas and her 15-year-old daughter, Margaret, alighted from a south-bound street car at Tenth and V streets in the city of Sacramento, and as they were proceeding easterly across the street, Mrs. Ladas was struck by a north-bound taxicab driven by Wendell Danforth and belonging to defendant Johnson's Black and White Taxi, a corporation. Mrs. Ladas died the next day from the injuries sustained.

The cause was tried by the court, sitting without a jury, and upon submission a judgment was rendered in favor of defendants, finding that defendants were guilty of negligence, but that the deceased had been guilty of contributory negligence. It is the contention of appellants that there is in the record no evidence of contributory negligence upon the part of the deceased, and that the judgment should be reversed.

Tenth street is approximately 48 feet in width from curb to curb and runs north and south. In the street are two sets of car tracks, the most westerly rail of which is about 14 feet 10 inches from the westerly curb of Tenth street. V street, also 48 feet wide, runs east and west and crosses Tenth street at a right angle. The pedestrian lanes upon these streets at this point are unmarked.

The driver testified that he was traveling north on Tenth street "straddling the east rail of the car track", which was 14 feet 10 inches from the east curb of Tenth street. It is undisputed that Mrs. Ladas was struck by the right front fender of the taxi and she was picked up at a point about five or six or seven feet north of the northerly edge of the north pedestrian lane across Tenth street, and about seven feet west of the east curb line of Tenth street.

In regard to other physical facts the court found,

"That it is true that on or about the 20th day of December, 1938, at or about the hour of 9:30 p. m. of said day, Amelia Ladas was walking in a general easterly direction across said Tenth street, and at a point thereon immediately north of the intersection of Tenth and V Streets; that it is true that at said time the said Amelia Ladas was walking in a place provided for pedestrians to cross said Tenth street; that it is true that at said time and place defendant Wendell Danforth, while acting as the agent, servant and employee of Johnson's Black and White Taxi Company, a corporation, was driving and operating said Chevrolet automobile owned by defendant Johnson's Black and White Taxi Company, a corporation, in a careless and negligent manner and in a general northerly direction on and along said Tenth street with V street, and across the crosswalk hereinbefore referred to."

The findings with reference to the conduct of Mrs. Ladas, the deceased, are:

"That it is not true that at the said time and place, the said Amelia Ladas was walking in a careful or prudent manner across said street, but on the contrary, the court expressly finds that at said time and place the said Amelia Ladas, although walking in a crosswalk, was herself careless and negligent, in that said Amelia Ladas, immediately prior to crossing said street, did alight from a south-bound street car, and did thereafter, without exercising due or any care or caution whatever, step from behind said street car directly into the path of said automobile then and there being driven and operated by defendant Wendell Danforth, and in this regard the court further expressly finds that the said Amelia Ladas did then and there carelessly and negligently fail to maintain any lookout whatever for traffic proceeding along said street before stepping from behind said street car or before endeavoring to proceed across said street."

[1] The issue then comes down to an examination of the entire record to see if there is substantial evidence to support the finding of contributory negligence on the part of Mrs. Ladas. The testimony of the taxi driver that she was attempting to cross the street at a point considerably north of the pedestrian lane need not be taken into account, for the court definitely found that in that particular his testimony was untrue and that she was in the pedestrian lane.

[2] As to her acts and that of the driver of the taxi, the record discloses that she and her daughter alighted from the front entrance of a south-bound street car. According to a Mr. Bergerson, also a passenger on the car, who alighted before Mrs. Ladas, the door of the street car from which they alighted was right in the crosswalk so one could look directly down V street toward Ninth street. Miss Bergerson, who also preceded Mrs. Ladas in alighting from the car, testified the car stopped just about the center of the pedestrian lane. Margaret Ladas testified the car stopped in the pedestrian lane. At any rate, the undisputed testimony was the passengers alighted either within or practically within the pedestrian lane. The Bergersons, immediately upon alighting, crossed in front of the standing street car and proceeded easterly across Tenth street. Mrs. Ladas and her daughter stood in the pedestrian lane and waited until the car started, and after it had passed them they also started easterly across Tenth street, walking in the pedestrian lane and reached the center of Tenth street. Margaret, who was walking on her mother's left or on the side furthest from the oncoming taxi, testified she looked toward the south and then saw the lights of an oncoming automobile a considerable distance south on Tenth street, but believing they had time to pass in front of the automobile, proceeded on their way across the street. At that time the taxi had not yet reached the south crosswalk. According to a map in evidence the daughter indicated the taxi, at the time they were in the center of the street, as approximately 40 feet south of the pedestrian lane on the south side of the intersection, which point would be about 64 feet from where the two women then stood. When Mrs. Ladas and her daughter reached a point some 15 or 16 feet easterly of the center of the street, the daughter again glanced to the right or south, and saw the car almost upon them. She took a big step but was struck by the taxi, throwing her about six feet northerly of the pedestrian lane with her feet in the gutter. Her mother was found lying about five feet north of the pedestrian lane, with her feet about three or four feet from the east curbing of Tenth street. The cab, according to Mr. Bergerson, had come to a stop about 15 or 16 or 17 feet north of where Mrs. Ladas was lying. Mr. Bergerson, who, with his sister, had passed in front of the standing street car from which Mrs. Ladas and her daughter were alighting, continued easterly across Tenth street, and then southerly along the easterly pedestrian lane across V street, had reached a point on the sidewalk at the southeasterly corner of Tenth and V streets when he heard what sounded like a package drop. He turned around and saw someone lying in the street. He heard no automobile horn, nor the application of any brakes. All agree the entire intersection was well lighted by street lights.

Danforth, the driver of the cab, testified he was between the alley and V street when he saw the street car at a stop. (The alley is 160 feet south of V street.) He also testified as he was crossing the pedestrian lane he saw Mrs. Ladas walking out from behind the street car and they then started to run across the street in a sort of southeasterly direction, and he struck them with his right front fender, and that he was practically stopped when Mrs. Ladas struck his fender. He claims he did not knock either the mother or daughter any distance at all. According to the points indicated on the map in evidence the taxi driver indicated that it was about 12 feet from the point where he first saw the deceased emerge from behind the street car to the point of impact. During the time it took these women, the elder of whom was 54 years of age, to travel that distance, they were at all times in view of the taxi driver. Mr. Butler, a civil engineer, by measurements, located a blood spot on the pavement (accepted as the place where Mrs. Ladas' head struck the pavement) as seven feet northerly from the northerly edge of the crosswalk, and six feet easterly from the east rail of the street-car track.

The foregoing is a summary of the material evidence bearing upon the case, and from such evidence we cannot find sufficient evidence to justify the holding of contributory negligence upon the part of the deceased.

It is to be noted that the taxicab was straddling the easterly rail of the car track and the deceased was struck by the right front fender of the taxi; in other words, according to the evidence, Mrs. Ladas traveled about 17 feet from the point where she alighted from the street car to the point of impact, and did not step directly into the path of the approaching taxi, as suggested by the findings in that regard. The driver of the taxi testified that when he first saw the street car come to a stop he was between the alley and V street. He could not recall seeing anyone cross in front of the street car and proceed in front of the street in front of him; but when he first saw Mrs. Ladas and her daughter they were walking out from behind the street car, the car then being in motion and clearing the pedestrian lane. He also testified Mrs. Ladas and her daughter were considerably north of the crosswalk. That has been found to be untrue. He admitted he did not sound his horn and that the intersection was well lighted. According to the points indicated upon the map by the driver of the taxi, Mrs. Ladas would have traveled about 12 feet while he was going six feet to the point of impact. He also testified he stopped at the instant of impact, but all the witnesses place his cab as 15 to 18 feet north of where Mrs. Ladas was picked up.

Analyzing the testimony as found by the court and as revealed by the physical facts the deceased and her daughter were in the pedestrian lane. They waited for the street car to move and travel far enough for the rear of the car to clear the pedestrian lane. They then started across the street and had reached a point beyond the most easterly street car rail, where they were struck by the right front fender of the taxi as it was straddling the easterly rail. The taxi, according to the driver, was traveling from 10 to 12 miles an hour when he first saw Mrs. Ladas and her daughter. It does not appear when, if ever, he slackened that speed.

[3-5] As said in McGarry v. Coyle, 120 Cal.App. 182, 7 P.2d 312, 313: "There can be no question that it is the duty of an automobile operator, approaching a street car which has stopped at a regular stopping place, to exercise very great care in passing, to avoid injuring persons alighting from or seeking to board the car. Such operator, in passing a street car on the side opposite the car gates, is bound at his peril to anticipate the probable sudden appearance of persons around the rear end of the car, and must give signals of his approach and have his automobile under control as a precautionary measure to avoid injury to them."

[6] Plaintiff and her mother had a right to assume that operators of motor vehicles entering the intersection from the south would exercise a proper degree of care.

Section 560 of chapter 10 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 188 relating to pedestrians' rights and duties, provides: "(a) The driver of a vehicle shall yield the right of way to a pedestrian crossing the roadway within any marked crosswalk or within any unmarked crosswalk at an intersection, except as otherwise provided in this chapter."

And by section 562 of the same code it is provided the driver is not relieved from the duty to exercise due care for the safety of any pedestrian upon the roadway.

In Lowell v. Harris, 24 Cal.App.2d 70, 74 P.2d 551, 559, an action for the death of a pedestrian, the court said: "Under the law Mr. Lowell in his use of the crosswalk had the right of way; and while proceeding with ordinary care, he was justified in assuming, in the absence of reasonable warning of danger, that his right of way would be respected. * * * Just what observation he made, while so proceeding, concerning traffic approaching from the south is not known. He was not required in the exercise of his right of way to keep looking continuously to the south * * *. There being no definite evidence as to the precautions otherwise taken by him in his course, the presumption is that during his progress he used reasonable care and vigilance for his own safety. [Citing cases.] To ignore that presumption 'would be in effect to presume negligence on the part of one in excuse of negligence on the part of another.' [Citing cases.] If, though he saw Wilson approaching from a distance, Mr. Lowell, as a result of his observation, deemed himself secure in the protection of his right of way, or miscalculated the distance or the speed of the truck, he would not necessarily be chargeable with contributory negligence as a matter of law." Citing and quoting from White v. Davis, 103 Cal.App. 531, 284 P. 1086.

[7] The record here indicates that the driver of the cab saw the street car stop at a street corner when he was between the alley and V street; he saw two people emerge from the rear of the moving car; he recognized they were women, the younger woman on the outside; the street lights were lighted; the pedestrians were struck when they were within 10 or 12 feet of the easterly curb; he was traveling about 10 or 12 miles an hour, and stopped within two or three feet after striking Mrs. Ladas. These facts and circumstances give rise to the application of the last clear chance doctrine. In Sego v. Southern P. Co., 137 Cal. 405, 70 P. 279, 280, it is said:

"Generally, it is a defense to an action of tort that the plaintiff's negligence contributed to produce the injury. But in cases falling within the foregoing description, where the negligent acts of the parties are distinct and independent of each other, the act of the plaintiff preceding that of the defendant, it is considered that the plaintiff's conduct does not contribute to produce the injury, if, notwithstanding his negligence, the injury could have been avoided by the use of ordinary care at the time by the defendant. * * *

"Defendant, knowing her danger, did not use ordinary care in protecting her from danger. In that case, technically speaking, plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, for her negligence did not proximately contribute to the injury. In cases of that character, it may be well said that the later negligence is the proximate cause of the injury, and that the earlier negligence of the party injured is too remote to be classed as contributory negligence."

The judgment must be reversed. It is so ordered.

We concur: THOMPSON, J.; TUTTLE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 176

HANSEN v. STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION et al.

Civ. 6430.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 21, 1941.

1. Mandamus ⇐72

While a writ of mandate will issue to correct an abuse of discretion, if the case is otherwise proper, an officer in whom public duties are confided by law is not subject to the control of the court in the exercise of the judgment and discretion which the law reposes in him as a part of his official functions.

2. Intoxicating liquors ⇐72

Since there is no inherent right in a citizen to sell intoxicants, court will not interfere with action of state board of equalization in refusing to grant a specific license therefor unless it clearly appears that board has abused the broad discretion vested in it with respect thereto by the Constitution. St.1935, p. 1123, as amended; Const. art. 20, § 22.

3. Intoxicating liquors ⇐69

The constitutional provision authorizing state board of equalization to license the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors and to deny or revoke any specific liquor license for good cause shown, vested in the board broad discretionary powers in the matter of granting or refusing to grant liquor licenses. Const. art. 20, § 22.

4. Intoxicating liquors ⇐69

Under constitutional provision authorizing state board of equalization to deny or revoke a specific liquor license on the ground of public welfare or morals, whether or not "good cause" existed for the denial of a specific liquor license was a matter for determination by the board and not by the court. St.1935, p. 1123, as amended; Const. art. 20, § 22.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Good Cause".

5. Intoxicating liquors ⇐74

In proceeding for writ of mandate to require state board of equalization to issue liquor licenses, evidence taken at hearing before board as to peculiar character and high moral tone of community in which applicant sought to engage in liquor business, justified a finding that there was "good cause" for denial of the specific licenses upon the ground that the granting thereof would be contrary to public welfare and disclosed no abuse of discretion on the part of the board warranting an interference by the court. St.1935, p. 1123, as amended; Const. art. 20, § 22.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Proceeding by Anton E. Hansen for a writ of mandate directed to the State Board of Equalization of California to require the board to issue certain licenses provided for by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Ralph O. Marron, of Monterey, and Robert M. Holstein, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Albert Hutchinson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

TUTTLE, Justice.

This is an appeal from the judgment rendered in favor of respondents upon the sustaining of a demurrer to the amended petition of appellant for a writ of mandate, requiring respondents to issue an off-sale distilled spirits license and other licenses described in the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act of the state of California. (Stats. 1935, chapter 330, p. 1123, as amended; Deering's General Laws, Act 3796.)

The original petition was amended after a demurrer thereto was sustained. The demurrer to the amended petition was sustained without leave to amend. Permission to further amend was not requested by appellant.

The individual respondents are members of respondent State Board of Equalization, and are made parties in their official capacity. We shall refer herein to the respondents as the board.

We do not deem it necessary to give an extended summary of the amended petition. Respondents concede that it sets forth all the formal procedural steps required by the statute mentioned. It is further alleged that a public hearing was held by the board in connection with the application. A copy of the testimony taken at such hearing was made part of the petition, and was thus brought before the trial court on demurrer. The factual situation, from the record, appears to be as follows:

The premises for which the licenses were sought are described as in a business district of Pacific Grove, five blocks from the nearest school and five hundred feet from the nearest church, which is maintained in a Salvation Army meeting hall. Appellant was either a lessee or permittee of the premises, the property belonging to a third person, and proposed to deal in alcoholic beverages exclusively.

No alcoholic beverage business has ever been maintained in Pacific Grove, and all property in the city has been conveyed to its present owners subject to restrictive covenants running with the land against the use of any of such property for the business of manufacturing or vending alcoholic beverages; these restrictions are still effective and have been enforced since a time prior to the establishment of the city of Pacific Grove; and an organization known as the Pacific Grove Retreat Association has existed since June 1, 1875, for the express purpose of preserving and enforcing such restrictions upon the use of the real property within the city.

The city itself was originally conceived and laid out as a religious camp meeting ground by the Methodist Church; a considerable number of the persons residing in Pacific Grove have moved to that city because of the nature of the community.

It was stipulated at the hearing that the city was an outstanding recreational center for children and young adults; that parents and children had made their home in Pacific Grove because of this unusual recreational development and the general moral tone of the city. There is no industry in the city, and no adjacent agricultural industry, the entire city being a purely residential area. The city is comparatively free of crime, particularly crimes involving drunkenness. The city maintains and operates a high school for special instruction during the summer months, at which attend a considerable number of persons of high school age, including a goodly number from outside of the city and the state, and those who come from outside of the city are in the main without chaperonage or adult attendance during the summer school course.

The persons who participated in the protest and hearing were the officials and leading citizens of said city. The protest was presented upon the official and formal resolution of the city council.

Appellant contends that the petition shows that the board, in refusing to grant the license, acted arbitrarily, wilfully, and without cause. Section 22, article XX of the Constitution of California, provides as follows: "* * * The State Board of Equalization shall have the exclusive power to license the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors in this State, and to collect license fees or occupation taxes on account thereof and shall have the power, in its discretion, to deny or revoke any specific liquor license if it shall determine for good cause that the granting or continuance of such license would be contrary to public welfare or morals. * * *"

[1] The cases relied upon by appellant lay down the well-recognized rule that mandamus will issue to correct an abuse of discretion, if the case is otherwise proper. Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Commission, 187 Cal. 533, 202 P. 874. On the other hand—as stated in 16 Cal.Jur. page 809, sec. 28: "It is a familiar rule governing the issuance of the writ of mandate that an officer in whom public duties are confided by law is not subject to the control of the courts in the exercise of the judgment and discretion which the law reposes in him as a part of his official functions."

In an attack of this character, upon a finding and order of an administrative board, the attitude of a reviewing tribunal is well expressed in the following language found in the case of Maxwell v. Civil Service Commission, 169 Cal. 336-339, 146 P. 869, 871: "Courts should let administrative boards and officers work out their problems with as little judicial interference as possible. They may decide a particular question wrong—but it is their question. Such boards are vested with a high discretion, and its abuse must appear very clearly before the courts will interfere."

[2] It must be borne in mind here that "Unlike the rule with respect to the right to deal in ordinary commodities considered in the numerous cases cited and relied upon by respondent, there is no inherent right in a citizen to sell intoxicants (Ritz v. Lightston, 10 Cal.App. 685, 103 P. 363; Foster v. Board of Police Commissioners, 102 Cal. 483, 37 P. 763, 41 Am.St.Rep. 194)." State Board of Equalization v. Superior Court, 5 Cal.App.2d 374-377, 42 P. 2d 1076, 1077.

In the case of Guzzi v. McAlister, 21 Cal.App. 276-278, 131 P. 336, 337, the court stated, concerning an alcoholic beverage license under a city ordinance with provisions somewhat similar to the constitutional provisions here under consideration: "* * * If, in the opinion of the city council, the public welfare demanded that no license for the sale of liquor be granted, for a good and sufficient reason, at the particular place, or to these particular persons, it is not within the province of the courts to determine otherwise."

[3-5] The constitutional provisions mentioned above are designed to give the board broad discretionary powers in the matter of granting or refusing to grant licenses of this character. Whether or not "good cause" for the denial of the license existed was a matter for determination by the board, and not by the courts. We cannot agree with the contention of appellant that "the purpose of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act is clearly to permit any qualified person desiring to secure a license for the sale of alcoholic beverages to secure such license provided he and the premises for which the license is sought meet the requirements of the act and the rules and regulations which the board is by the provisions of the act empowered to promulgate." Such a rule would deprive the board of any discretion whatever, and would be in direct conflict with the Constitution. We are satisfied the petition shows that the board had before it ample evidence to justify a finding that there was good cause for the denial of the license upon the ground that the granting of the same would be contrary to public welfare.

We find no abuse of discretion upon the part of respondents, and, accordingly, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PULLEN, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

MITCHEL et al. v. BROWN et al.

Civ. 2604.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 25, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 24, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 24, 1941.

1. Deeds ⇐90, 93

Deeds are to be construed in like manner as contracts and the intent of the grantor must be determined if possible from the terms set forth in the instrument. Civ.Code, §§ 1066, 1636, 1638, 1641.

2. Contracts ⇐147(1)

A contract must be so interpreted as to give effect to mutual intention of parties. Civ.Code, § 1636.

3. Contracts ⇐152

The language of a contract governs its interpretation if language is clear and explicit and does not involve absurdity. Civ. Code, § 1638.

4. Contracts ⇐152

The whole of a contract is to be taken together so as to give effect to every part if reasonably practicable, each clause helping interpret the other. Civ.Code, § 1641.

5. Contracts ⇐143

It is not the province of the court to alter a contract by construction or make a new contract for the parties nor to rewrite the clear terms of the lawful contract. Civ. Code, §§ 1066, 1636, 1638, 1641.

6. Mines and minerals ⇐55(5)

Where grantors owning undivided half interest in minerals underlying 160 acre tract of land before executing deed conveying 2½ per cent. interest in minerals inserted in handwriting the words "an undivided one half of" before the description of the 160 acre tract so that the deed read 2½ per cent. of all oil, gas, etc., in an undivided one half of land in question, and there was no evidence that grantors intended to convey 2½ per cent. of all oil and gas underlying entire 160 acres or that grantees accepted deed under such belief, grantors intended and deed conveyed 2½ per cent. of the oil and gas recovered from land they actually owned which was an undivided one half interest in 160 acres and not entire tract.

7. Appeal and error ⇐1008(3)

Where appeal depends solely upon the construction to be given to the language of the contract from the instrument itself, reviewing court must determine the meaning of the contract as a matter of law and the rule precluding reviewing court from disturbing the determination of the trial court where there is substantial evidence to support his conclusions has no application.

8. Appeal and error ⇐842(8)

Where only issue before trial court was the construction and effect to be given certain words of deed conveying an interest in oil and gas underlying certain tract of land and there was no evidence other than the deed itself construction of the deed was a "question of law" for reviewing court.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Law".

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action to quiet title and for other relief by J. Burris Mitchel and others against Arthur Polk Brown and others. From a judgment for the plaintiffs, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Borton, Petrini, Conron & Borton, of Bakersfield, for appellants.

Newby & Newby and Dee Holder, all of Los Angeles, and Alfred Siemon and Bennett Siemon, both of Bakersfield, for respondents.

KLETTE, Justice pro tem.

On October 27, 1936, Arthur P. Brown, and Maybelle B. Brown, his wife, two of the defendants and appellants, executed and delivered to the Mitchel Company, Ltd., a corporation, the predecessor in interest of plaintiffs and respondents, a mineral deed, which, omitting the opening and closing clauses, the description of property not involved in this case, and the consideration stated, was as follows:

"Witnesseth:

"That said First Parties, * * * do by these presents grant, bargain and sell unto second party and to its successors and assigns forever, an undivided two and one-half per cent (2½%) of all oil, gas, gasoline, and other hydrocarbon substances, and/or minerals now underlying and within or that may be hereafter produced, saved, sold and delivered from the following described property situate in the County of Kern, State of California, to-wit:

"All those pieces or parcels of land in Section 21, Township 27 S, Range 24 E., M. D. B. M. in the County of Kern, State of California, according to the Official Plat of the survey of said land, returned to the General Land Office, described as follows:

"Parcel No. 1:
(Describes property not involved in this case.)

"Parcel No. 2:
(Describes property not involved in this case.)

"Parcel No. 4:
(Describes property not involved in this case.)

"J.E.Mc N.P. 10/27/36

" 'An undivided ½ of' Parcel No. 5:
"The NW ¼ of said Section 21.

"The acceptance of this Deed by Second Party shall constitute an agreement, whereby it agrees to pay its proportionate share of any and all taxes levied against any oil, gas, gasoline, hydrocarbon substances and minerals underlying said land, or that may be hereafter produced from said land, as assessed by the County Assessor.

"Notice is hereby given that Parcels No. 1, 2, 4 and 5 are subject to an oil and gas lease wherein first parties herein and Charles A. Reed and Rosa B. Reed, husband and wife, are lessors, and the Mitchel Company, Ltd., a California corporation, is lessee.

"Said two and one-half per cent (2½%) interest so conveyed hereby shall be deducted from the royalty interest of first parties, from the above mentioned leases or any other leases that hereafter may be made, covering said above described property.

"To have and to hold said two and one-half per cent (2½%) interest of all oil, gas, gasoline, hydrocarbon substances and other minerals unto Second Party and its successors and assigns forever."

The complaint is in three counts, the first to quiet title to 2½ per cent of all oil, gas, etc., underlying the northwest quarter of section 21, which is parcel No. 5 of the deed; the second to reform the deed to conform to the intent of the parties, that plaintiffs have a 2½ per cent interest in all gas and oil underlying the northwest quarter of said section 21; and the third for declaratory relief.

The answer places in issue the material allegations of the complaint, and alleges that the words, "an undivided ½ of", contained in said deed, were interlined in handwriting, and that the intention was to convey a 2½ per cent interest in the oil and gas of an undivided one-half interest in said quarter section. The answer admits, by failing to deny, that the interests of James P. George and Evangeline M. Ogden, two of defendants and appellants, were acquired with knowledge of the alleged rights of plaintiffs and respondents.

At the trial, the second count, that to reform the deed, was abandoned by plaintiffs and respondents, and the hearing had on the first and third counts of the complaint, being to quiet title and for declaratory relief, respectively. No witnesses were sworn, and the only evidence before the court was a copy of the deed, and a stipulation of counsel, made in open court, that at the time the deed was executed, defendants and appellants, Arthur P. Brown, and Maybelle B. Brown, only owned an undivided one-half interest in the land in question.

The only issue therefore before the trial court, and before this court, on the appeal, is the construction and effect of the words, "an undivided ½ of", inserted in the deed, in handwriting, before its execution and delivery.

The court found in favor of plaintiffs and respondents on practically all of the material allegations of the complaint, and rendered judgment, that plaintiffs and respondents, were entitled to 2½ per cent of all oil, gas, etc., underlying said 160 acres of land. Defendants and appellants have appealed from this judgment.

Several of the findings are not supported by the evidence, or the admissions of the pleadings. There was no evidence before the court to sustain the finding that it was the intention of the parties to the deed to convey 2½ per cent of all oil, gas, etc., underlying the 160 acres of land, nor to support the finding that the predecessors in interest of plaintiffs and respondents, accepted said deed under the belief they were to receive 2½ per cent of all oil, gas, etc., from said land, in accordance with the original intention of the parties. The finding of the court, that plaintiffs and respondents, are entitled to 2½ per cent of all oil, gas, etc., under said quarter section, and that the title thereto be quieted in them, is based upon a construction of the deed, with which we do not agree.

[1-5] Deeds are to be construed in like manner as contracts, and the intent of the grantor arrived at, if possible, from the terms set forth in the instrument. Sherriff v. Sherriff, 32 Cal.App. 681, 163 P. 878; Firth v. Los Angeles Pacific Land Co., 28 Cal.App. 399, 152 P. 935; Marlin v. Robinson, 123 Cal.App. 373, 11 P.2d 70; sec. 1066, Civ.Code. A contract must be so interpreted as to give effect to the mutual intention of the parties. Sec. 1636, Civ.Code; Marlin v. Robinson, supra. The language of a contract is to govern its interpretation, if the language is clear and explicit, and does not involve an absurdity. Sec. 1638, Civ.Code. The whole of a contract is to be taken together, so as to give effect to every part, if reasonably practicable, each clause helping to interpret the other. Sec. 1641, Civ.Code. It is not the province of the court to alter a contract by construction, or to make a new contract for the parties, nor can the court rewrite the clear terms of a lawful contract. Wells v. Union Oil Co., 25 Cal.App. 2d 165, 76 P.2d 696; Grey v. Tubbs, 43 Cal. 359; Greene v. Vargas, 7 Cal.App.2d 127, 45 P.2d 347; Hill v. General Petroleum Corp., 128 Cal.App. 284, 16 P.2d 1035.

[6] Applying these rules of construction to the deed before us, we can only conclude that it was the intention of the grantors to convey 2½ per cent of the oil, gas, etc., recovered from the land they actually owned, which was an undivided half interest in 160 acres, and that they did not intend to convey that percentage of all the oil recovered from the entire tract, as held by the trial court. The grantors were in the position of having a deed before them to execute, which conveyed 2½ per cent of all oil, gas, etc., in certain land, including 160 acres of land in which they held only an undivided one-half interest. Before signing, they inserted in handwriting, the words "an undivided ½ of", before the description of the property in which they held only a one-half interest. This left the deed reading 2½ per cent of all oil, gas, etc., in an undivided one-half of the land in question. Their intention in so doing was quite clear. It was to limit the 2½ per cent royalty to the undivided interest which they owned, and exclude it as to the interest they did not own. If, as contended by respondents, they still intended to convey a 2½ per cent of the oil in the entire 160 acres of land, they were doing a meaningless and useless act. As to all of the other land described in the deed, they were only conveying a 2½ per cent interest, and it is not reasonable to suppose that they intended to convey 2½ per cent of the oil, etc., of the entire 160 acres of land, which would be the equivalent of 5 per cent of the one-half interest held by them.

[7, 8] When an appeal depends solely upon the construction to be given to the language of a contract, from the instrument itself, the reviewing court is called upon to determine the meaning thereof, as a matter of law. Under such circumstances, the rule on appeal, which precludes the appellate court from disturbing the determination of the trial court, where there is substantial evidence to support its conclusions, has no application. Texas Company v. Todd, 19 Cal.App.2d 174, 64 P.2d 1180; Wall v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 33 Cal.App.2d 112, 91 P.2d 145. Under the circumstances of this case, no evidence, other than the deed itself, having been received, the construction of the deed is a question of law for this court to determine on appeal.

Our conclusion is, that the only reasonable construction to be placed upon said deed is, that it only conveyed a 2½ per cent interest in the oil, gas, etc., in the property which was owned by the grantors, to-wit, an undivided one-half interest in the quarter section, and not in the entire 160 acres of land, and that the findings and judgment are not supported by the evidence.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 199

PEOPLE v. MARTIN.

Cr. 2168.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 24, 1941.

Appeal and error ⇐787

Where appellant's opening brief was long overdue under court rule and court granted appellant extension of 30 days to file opening brief but opening brief was not filed, notwithstanding lapse of over 4 months after filing of reporter's transcript and frequent requests from clerk's office and appellant's counsel did not appear in opposition to motion to dismiss appeal, appeal was presumably not prosecuted in good faith and was dismissed for lack of prosecution. Rules of the District Court of Appeal, rule 2, § 15; rule 5, § 1.

Appeal from Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Lile T. Jacks, Judge.

Proceeding by the People against Charles Martin. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals.

Appeal dismissed for lack of prosecution.

Raine Ewell, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and David K. Lener, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

In November of 1940 this cause was placed on the calendar, and heard on November 25th. The appellant's opening brief was then long overdue under rule II, section 15. At that time, counsel for appellant stated that he was engaged in trial work and requested an extension. The court granted appellant thirty days to file the opening brief. In spite of frequent requests from the clerks' office, the brief has not yet been filed. Since the filing of the reporter's transcript on October 21, 1940, appellant has had over four months to file his brief. Under such circumstances, and counsel for appellant not appearing in opposition to the motion, this court is entitled to presume that the appeal has not been prosecuted in good faith. Under authority of rule V, section 1, the appeal is dismissed for lack of prosecution by appellant.

43 Cal.App.2d 126

PEOPLE v. ANDREW.

Cr. 605.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 4, 1941.

1. Criminal law ⇐511(2)

Evidence tending to connect a defendant with commission of crime in corroboration of testimony of an accomplice is not required to establish precise facts testified to by accomplice, but, even though circumstantial and slight, is sufficient if it tends to connect accused with commission of offense. Pen. Code, § 1111.

2. Criminal law ⇐511(3)

Evidence corroborating testimony of accomplice may be circumstantial or gained from defendant's admissions, statements, testimony or conduct as a witness. Pen.Code, § 1111.

3. Criminal law ⇐511(2)

Evidence that defendant after being informed that accomplice had filed a complaint against him sent accomplice money each week for ten weeks, sought to see accomplice in jail, and sent accomplice communications requesting loyalty, tended to connect defendant with offense and was sufficient to corroborate testimony of accomplice against defendant who made inconsistent statements while testifying in his own behalf. Pen. Code, § 1111.

4. Indictment and information ⇐176

Where indictment charged that act of sex degeneracy took place on or about April 20, testimony that act occurred at about 4 o'clock in the morning of April 21 did not create a "fatal variance". Pen.Code, § 288a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Fatal Variance".

5. Criminal law ⇐823(1)

In prosecution for act of sex degeneracy alleged to have occurred on or about April 20, instruction requiring jury to find as basis for conviction that act was committed upon April 20 did not mislead jury and was not prejudicial, where in body of instruction and in other instructions court referred to time that offense was alleged to have been committed as on or about April 20. Pen. Code, § 288a.

6. Criminal law ⇐1172(1)

A court will not set aside a verdict and grant a new trial because of erroneous instruction in record where instruction was not calculated to mislead and jury was bound to find as it did.

7. Indictment and Information ⇐171

A variance between allegations and proof as to date on which offense was committed is not material unless defendant was misled in making his defense or placed in danger of being twice in jeopardy.

8. Criminal law ⇐822(12)

An instruction on corroboration of accomplices that corroborative evidence need not establish actual commission of offense nor extend to all details of accomplice's statement, but that it is sufficient if it tends to connect defendant with commission of offense, taken in connection with other instructions including one in language of statute relating to corroboration of accomplices, was sufficient. Pen.Code, § 1111.

9. Criminal law ⇐1038(3)

The defendant could not complain of instruction given upon subject of corroboration of accomplices where he had failed to request an instruction in language desired. Pen.Code, § 1111.

10. Criminal law ⇐564(5)

Testimony that crime was committed in certain town was sufficient to show place of offense, notwithstanding absence of testimony as to county in which town was located.

11. Criminal law ⇐304(6)

The court would take judicial notice of county in which town where crime was committed was located.

12. Criminal law ⇐1023(10)

An appeal does not lie from the sentence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Harry C. Westover, Judge.

Don Andrew was convicted of the act of sex degeneracy covered by § 288a of the Penal Code, and he appealed from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, and also took a purported appeal from the sentence.

Purported appeal from the sentence dismissed and the judgment and order affirmed.

George Stahlman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Lewis Drucker, Deputy Atty. Gen., of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MORAN, Justice pro tem.

Appellant was charged with having committed a violation of the provisions of section 288a of the Penal Code, with and upon the person of one Roy Jones, on or about the 20th day of April, 1940, in the County of Orange. Trial by jury was had and a verdict returned finding appellant guilty as charged. A motion for a new trial was made and denied. Notice of appeal was given from the order denying the motion for a new trial and from the judgment, and there is also a purported appeal from the sentence pronounced against appellant.

The grounds of appeal presented and argued in appellant's opening brief are (1) alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment, in that the evidence produced to corroborate the testimony of the accomplice was not sufficient to support the verdict of guilty returned against him; (2) that there is a variance between the proof of time of the occurrence of the act charged and the time it is alleged to have been committed in the information; (3) alleged error by the court in giving certain instructions, and (4) that no venue was proven at the trial.

The most important facts are briefly as follows:

Appellant was the owner of a house located at 1975 Diamond street, Laguna Beach, California. Appellant and said Roy Jones had been very close friends for several years, had lived together during various periods of time and appellant had at different times employed Jones to work for him and was so employing him at the time of the alleged commission of the offense mentioned.

Jones testified that on the evening of Saturday, April 20, 1940, he went to said house owned by appellant, and remained there that night, that at about 4 o'clock Sunday morning appellant came in, got in bed with him and that they then and there committed said alleged act of sex degeneracy with which appellant is charged. Jones further testified that he and appellant had committed the same act on numerous occasions prior to that time.

On April 28, 1940, said Roy Jones was arrested on another similar charge to that filed against appellant and was thereafter incarcerated in the Orange county jail. A day or two after Jones was taken into custody appellant was arrested on the charges filed against him herein. He was thereafter released from custody, presumably on bail, and remained at liberty until after the trial of this case. During this period of time that appellant was at liberty he sent Jones $5 a week for several weeks, the total amount, according to appellant's testimony, being $50; appellant also went to said county jail and endeavored to see Jones, but not being permitted to do so, then wrote or printed and sent to said jail for Jones three different communications, which read in part as follows: (1) "Roy Jones * * * Can't see you. They won't let me. Please don't testify against me." (2) "Ask if you can receive any books or magazines. Anything you wish will be sent. * * * Regardless of what the law does or tries to do it cannot break down those sincere friendships of which there are so few. One who does not stick by his friend in time of trouble is not worthy of the name. Just remember that. * * * When and if you are released and you wish to make a trip and are allowed to, a ticket will be provided by the company, to any point in the U. S. you wish to go. So don't worry about your condition when you get out. * * * A new and different venture will be invested in soon and part or all of the profits will be yours, so that you will be self-maintaining when you are free." (3) "It won't be so very long now and probably you will be out. It would be nice to take a vacation somewhere when you do, mountains or something, and you can if you want to." Appellant also took the witness stand at the trial of this case and testified in his own behalf.

[1] The first contention of appellant to be made on this appeal is that the evidence corroborating the testimony of said accomplice is insufficient to meet the requirements of section 1111 of the Penal Code. The rule as to what extent corroboration is necessary to connect or tend to connect a defendant with the commission of a crime appears in the case of People v. Negra, 208 Cal. 64, 69, 280 P. 354, 356, where the court states: "The evidence tending to connect a defendant with the commission of the crime may be slight and, when standing by itself, entitled to but little consideration. * * * The law does not require that the evidence necessary to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice shall tend to establish the precise facts testified to by the accomplice; and strong corroborative testimony is not necessary to support a judgment of conviction founded on the testimony of an accomplice. Even though circumstantial and slight, the evidence is, nevertheless, sufficient if it tends to connect the accused with the commission of the offense."

[2] In the case of People v. King, 33 Cal.App.2d 538, at page 542, 92 P.2d 510, at page 512, the court stated: "Such corroboration may be circumstantial or gained from the defendant's admissions, statements, testimony or conduct as a witness. As the court said in People v. Todd, 9 Cal.App.2d 237, 49 P.2d 611, 614: 'Furthermore, evidence showing a consciousness of guilt, * * * may serve as a requisite corroborative circumstance * * *.'"

The information filed against appellant charged him with having on or about the 20th day of April, 1940, committed a violation of the provisions of section 288a of the Penal Code, with and upon the person of said Roy Jones.

[3] Aside from the testimony of said accomplice, we find the following facts and circumstances, among others, established by the corroborating evidence, most of them appearing in said communications and the testimony of appellant; Jones was arrested on or about April 28, 1940; appellant was arrested a day or two later; some one informed appellant that Jones had filed a complaint against him; appellant sent Jones $5 a week for ten weeks; appellant was released from custody a short time after his arrest and thereafter went to the jail to see Jones. He was not permitted to do so, so then sent Jones the three communications hereinbefore mentioned. Appellant while testifying in his own behalf made inconsistent statements and many replies to questions propounded to him that are not consistent with his innocence.

We conclude that the attempt of appellant to influence said accomplice not to testify against him, coupled with his promises of reward, and the other facts and circumstances, hereinbefore mentioned, that appear from the corroborating evidence, are not consistent with the theory of innocence but strongly evidence a consciousness of guilt, and, standing alone, implicate the appellant and most conclusively tend to connect him with the commission of the crime; and consequently that said corroborating evidence more than meets the requirements of section 1111 of the Penal Code.

[4] Appellant contends that there is a fatal variance between the proof of the time of the occurrence of the act charged and the time that it is alleged to have been committed in the information; and, that the jury entirely disregarded the instructions of the court with reference thereto.

The court charged the jury as follows: "* * * and in this action or in this class of actions it is necessary that the defendant be found guilty of the specific act charged. In this action the offense is alleged to have taken place on or about the 20th day of April, 1940. In order for you to convict the defendant you must find beyond a reasonable doubt that the specific act alleged in the Information was committed by the defendant. Now, I mean by that, Ladies and Gentlemen of the Jury, that if you convict the defendant you must convict because you find that he committed the act charged upon the 20th day of April, 1940."

Appellant argues that the jury could not, therefore, convict appellant unless it found that he committed the act charged on the 20th day of April, 1940. There was no evidence that the offense was committed on April 20, 1940, the only evidence as to the time of the commission thereof being that of the accomplice, who testified that it occurred at about 4 o'clock, Sunday morning, April 21, 1940. The court was, therefore, in error in fixing the time as of "the 20th day of April, 1940" in the last part of this instruction.

In the body of this instruction the court charged the jury: "In this action the offense is alleged to have taken place on or about the 20th day of April, 1940." In all of the other instructions the court referred to the time that the offense was alleged to have been committed as "on or about the 20th day of April, 1940".

The information charged that the offense was committed "on or about the 20th day of April, 1940"; and the jury found the defendant guilty "as charged in the Information".

[5, 6] It is evident that the members of the jury were fully and properly instructed that the offense was alleged to have been committed "on or about the 20th day of April, 1940", and that said erroneous instruction did not tend to mislead them. A court will not set aside a verdict and grant a new trial, even if it should find in the record an erroneous instruction which was not calculated to mislead the jury and where the jury was bound to find as it did. People v. Salorse, 62 Cal. 139, 144.

The accomplice, Roy Jones, testified that said alleged offense was committed at about 4 o'clock, Sunday morning, April 21, 1940. This was the only evidence fixing the time of the commission of the offense. The appellant was, therefore, fully informed and knew the facts and circumstances surrounding their occurrence with sufficient definiteness as to time to meet the issue with a defense, if any defense thereto existed. People v. Barnett, 99 Cal.App. 409, 414, 278 P. 885.

The appellant testified that he was not at his home, where said offense was alleged to have been committed, on the night of Saturday, April 20, 1940, nor at any time thereafter prior to his arrest, which occurred more than a week later, and he also denied that he committed the act charged. He did not present any other evidence in support of this alibi.

[7] It is, therefore, quite apparent that he was not misled in making his defense. The testimony shows that the offense charged was committed in the early morning of the day following the date alleged in the information. In these circumstances, the variance as to date would not be material, unless defendant was misled in making his defense or placed in danger of being twice in jeopardy. People v. Becker, 140 Cal.App. 162, 164, 35 P.2d 196.

A full consideration of the proof in this case shows that there was not such a material variance.

[8] Appellant contends that there was no instruction given in this case whereby the jury was instructed that the corroborating testimony, standing alone or without the aid of the accomplice's testimony, must tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime; and cites the case of People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 56 P. 44, in which the court held that corroborating testimony standing alone, or without the aid of the accomplice's testimony, must tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime.

Appellant also contends that the court erred in giving the following instruction: "You are further instructed that to corroborate an accomplice the evidence need not establish the actual commission of the offense, nor extend to every fact and detail covered by the statements of the accomplice, or to all the elements of the offense, nor prove that the accomplice has told the truth. The corroborative evidence must tend in some slight degree, at least, to implicate the defendant. While it need not be strong, more is required by way of corroboration than mere suspicion. It is sufficient if the corroborating evidence tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, though if it stood alone it would be entitled to little weight. It is not necessary to corroborate the accomplice by direct evidence. If the connection of the accused with the alleged crime may be inferred from the corroborating evidence in the case it is sufficient."

The language set forth in the foregoing instruction is identical with the rule contained in the case of People v. Yeager, 194 Cal. 452, 472, 229 P. 40.

The court also gave another instruction in the exact language of section 1111 of the Penal Code; and, at the request of appellant, gave further instructions clearly showing that the testimony of the accomplice must be corroborated by independent evidence, that is evidence sufficient to connect the defendant with the charge.

We believe that the instructions given by the court upon corroborative evidence as hereinabove mentioned are more than adequate and do not come within the criticism of the case of People v. Compton, supra.

[9] Furthermore, appellant cannot now complain of the instructions given by the court upon corroborative evidence, for if he had wanted an instruction including the identical language contained in the case of People v. Compton, supra, he should have requested it. People v. Olds, 86 Cal.App. 130, 260 P. 321.

Appellant contends that there is no testimony as to where Laguna Beach is located either in Orange county or in any other county in the state of California.

[10, 11] There is evidence in the record that the crime was committed in Laguna Beach, and the court will take judicial cognizance of its location and could have properly instructed the jury that Laguna Beach was in Orange county. People v. Wright, 79 Cal.App. 523, 250 P. 204; People v. Christian, 48 Cal.App. 646, 649, 192 P. 182; People v. De Soto, 33 Cal. App.2d 478, 92 P.2d 466; and, In re Meisner, 30 Cal.App.2d 290, 291, 86 P.2d 124.

[12] An appeal does not lie from the sentence. People v. Valencia, 30 Cal.App. 2d 126, 86 P.2d 122.

After carefully reviewing the record of this case, we reach the conclusion that the conduct of the appellant, his testimony and the communications sent to the accomplice, sustain the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict as to corroborating circumstances, indicating consciousness of guilt, which standing alone tend to connect the appellant with the commission of the crime; that the fact that the crime appeared to have been committed in the early morning following the day charged in the information does not constitute a material variance for the reason that it comes within the charge of time set forth in the information "on or about the 20th day of April, 1940"; and that the appellant was not misled nor prejudiced by said erroneous instruction; that the trial court fully covered the law as to corroborating evidence by the instructions given upon that subject; and that the court can take judicial notice that Laguna Beach is in Orange county.

The purported appeal from the sentence is dismissed, and the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are and each is affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 134

PEOPLE v. LANG TRANSP. CORPORATION et al.

Civ. 6370.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 18, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐910

In action by state and truck driver against transportation corporation and driver of its truck for damages to bridge which collapsed and injuries to individual plaintiff, where defendant corporation made no specific objection to state's evidence of overweight of such defendant's truck and load on ground that such question was not within issues applicable to state and did not request that jury be so advised, appellate court must assume on state's appeal from judgment on jury's verdicts for defendants that weight of such truck became issue in state's case, though directly set up as cause of bridge's collapse by individual plaintiff only.

2. Bridges ⇐27

In state's action against transportation corporation and driver of its truck for damages to bridge, burden was on plaintiff to prove overweight of truck and load, if overweight thereof was in issue.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1002

In state's action against transportation corporation and driver of its truck for damages to bridge, where plaintiff showed truck's registered gross weight on registration dates before and after accident and weight of load at time of accident, testimony of defendant corporation's witnesses that truck was lightened by about 1,000 pounds between first registration date and time of accident and that approximately 1,000 pounds was added to its weight after accident created conflict in evidence as to weight of truck at time of accident, thus removing such issue from appellate court's consideration on state's appeal from judgment on jury's verdicts for defendants.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1002

The jury's finding on fact issue, as to which evidence was substantially conflicting, will not be disturbed on appeal from judgment on jury's verdict.

5. Bridges ⇐27

In state's action against transportation corporation and driver of its truck for damages to bridge as alleged result of negligence in driving truck into bridge, causing it to collapse, testimony of director of public works on cross-examination as to complaints before accident by citizens of community in which bridge was located that bridge was dangerous and had been scene of numerous accidents was admissible to show notice to state of defective character of bridge.

6. Trial ⇐85

An inadmissible portion of document, remainder of which is admissible in evidence, cannot be reached by general objection to admission of entire document, but inadmissible portion must be specified.

7. Bridges ⇐27

In state's action for damages to bridge, alleged by defendants to have been in defective or dangerous condition, evidence of prior or subsequent accidents thereat is admissible to prove existence of such condition, actionable negligence, and notice to state of such condition.

8. Bridges ⇐27

In state's action against transportation corporation and driver of its truck for damages to bridge, evidence of prior accidents thereat, as shown by transcript of meeting between Director of Public Works and citizens of community in which bridge was located, was admissible to show notice to state of defective character of bridge, as alleged by defendants.

9. Bridges ⇐27

In state's action against transportation corporation and driver of its truck for damages to bridge, defendant corporation was properly permitted to show that long timbers were installed as wheel guards on bridge after accident in order to offset inference from plaintiff's previous evidence as to safe use of bridge by defendant corporation's trucks after accident that it was not unsafe for proper use.

10. Evidence ⇐539

A structural engineer, who had studied stresses and strains of various types of buildings, was qualified to testify as expert on question whether bridge of given dimensions and materials could support given load, though his actual experience in building bridges was limited to two rather small structures.

11. Evidence ⇐555

A structural engineer, testifying as expert on question whether bridge of given dimensions and materials could support given load, was within his right in adopting findings of American Society for Testing Materials as basis for his conclusions as to strength and quality of certain specific metals used in bridge.

12. Appeal and error ⇐971(2)

The trial court's ruling as to expert witness' qualification will not be disturbed by appellate court, unless abuse of discretion appears.

13. Appeal and error ⇐237(2)

Where expert witness, basing his testimony as to certain matter partly on another expert's testimony, properly testified as to many other matters, a motion to strike out such derivative testimony was necessary to present question on appeal as to whether trial court erred in admitting it.

14. Trial ⇐93

Where expert witness, basing his testimony as to certain matter partly on another expert's testimony, properly testified as to many other matters, motion made at close of his testimony to strike out all of it was properly denied as too broad.

15. Appeal and error ⇐1050(1)

In state's action against transportation corporation and driver of its truck for damages to bridge, admission of defendants' bridge design expert's testimony, based on testimony of expert on bridge stresses, as to what load bridge could carry, did not warrant reversal of judgment on jury's verdict for defendants, even if erroneous.

16. Evidence ⇐555

In state's action against transportation corporation and driver of its truck for damages to bridge, a metallurgist's expert testimony as to test of iron in bridge to determine its fitness for its particular use was not inadmissible because of his use of tentative specifications of American Society for Testing Materials, in view of testimony that such specifications had become standard in year during which action was tried.

17. Bridges ⇐35

The state, negligently maintaining bridge, cannot avoid liability for resulting damages by proving violation of law by another.

18. Negligence ⇐82

As comparative negligence rule is not recognized in California, neither party to action for injuries proximately contributed to by both parties' negligence can recover damages.

19. Bridges ⇐27

In state's action against transportation corporation and driver of its truck for damages to bridge, state was entitled to presumption that defendant corporation would use due care in traversing bridge, but was also required to use due care in maintenance of bridge before it could recover.

20. Bridges ⇐27

In state's action against transportation corporation and driver of its truck for damages to bridge, giving of instruction that plaintiff, in maintaining bridge, was entitled, if itself not negligent, to rely on presumption that law would be obeyed, and hence was not required to anticipate danger which could come only from violation of law by another, was not error.

21. Bridges ⇐27

In state's action against transportation corporation and driver of its truck for damages to bridge, instruction that, before jury could find against defendants, it must find from evidence that they were negligent in operation of truck, that plaintiffs sustained damages as proximate result of such negligence, and that plaintiffs did not proximately contribute to its damage by its own negligence, was not erroneous as in effect shifting burden of proving contributory negligence, as such instruction merely defined issues and did not mislead or confuse the jury.

22. Trial ⇐295(1)

Instructions must be considered in their entirety and are unobjectionable as whole, if, as so considered, they state law of case fairly and clearly, though they may be amenable to just criticism in some respects by selecting isolated passages from single instructions.

23. Appeal and error ⇐1047(3)

In state's action for damages to bridge, trial court's refusal to strike out metallurgical expert's testimony on ground that he applied more severe bending tests than that authorized by specifications of testing standard held not error warranting reversal of judgment on jury's verdict for defendants, in view of evidence that, though tests were started with smaller pin than specified, pin of required diameter was used as soon as iron was started to bend so that it would hold in testing machine.

24. Appeal and error ⇐1050(1)

In state's action against transportation corporation and driver of its truck for damages to bridge, admission of testimony of one who lived near bridge as to identity of iron rods, taken from river after bridge collapsed, as parts of bridge, was not error warranting reversal of judgment on jury's verdict for defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; H. S. Gans, Judge.

Action by the People and Charles Huron against the Lang Transportation Corporation and another for damages to a bridge and personal injuries to plaintiff individual. Judgment for defendants, and the People appeal.

Affirmed.

C. C. Carleton, Frank B. Durkee, C. R. Montgomery, and Robert E. Reed, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

Jerome D. Peters, of Chico, and Orville A. Schulenberg, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiff commenced an action against defendants for damages to a bridge, and from the judgment in favor of defendants this appeal is taken.

For many years prior to October 27, 1936, the date of the accident here in question, the state had maintained a wrought iron, through truss type bridge over the Sacramento river at Red Bluff, as part of its highway system. The bridge consisted of five 153-foot spans with a small pony truss at the easterly end, some 48 feet long. On the day in question the easterly 153-foot span collapsed and fell into the river, carrying with it two trucks and a trailer. One of the trucks was driven by Charles Huron and was owned by Contract Carriers Inc. The other, a gasoline truck and trailer, belonged to Lang Transportation Company, and was operated by Ray Williams.

The People of the state of California brought an action to recover the damage to the bridge; Charles Huron, one of the drivers, brought an action for personal injuries, and Contract Carriers Inc. an action for damage to its truck, all against the Lang Transportation Company and its driver. These several actions were consolidated for trial, but a mistrial was granted as to plaintiff Contract Carriers Inc. At the conclusion, verdicts were returned in favor of defendants in both cases. Plaintiff Huron has not appealed, and there is before us now an appeal only by the People from the judgment.

The complaint charged the defendants with the negligent driving of the truck into the bridge, causing it to collapse. The answer denied that allegation, and as separate defenses set up unavoidable accident and contributory negligence.

Upon appeal it is urged the verdict is against law in that the evidence showed the truck and its load exceeded the maximum weight permitted by law; in receiving evidence of prior accidents and complaints, and in admitting evidence of precautions taken after the accident and in giving certain instructions.

[1] In considering the first specification that the truck and load of the Lang Corporation was overweight, it appears from the complaint and answer and the opening statement on behalf of the People that the matter of overweight of the Lang truck was not directly an issue, the action being one for negligently driving the truck into the side of the bridge. It does appear, however, that in the action by Huron against the defendants, the overweight of the truck was directly set up as a cause of the collapse of the bridge, and evidence was introduced upon the consolidated trial by the state to establish the fact of overweight. Upon proper objections the court could have limited the applicability of that evidence to the plaintiff who asserted that particular cause of action, but our attention is directed to no specific objection by the Lang Corporation that the question of overweight was not within any of the issues applicable to the state, nor a request that the jury be so advised as to that matter, and we must assume that the weight of defendant's truck became an issue in the case. However, from our view of the case that appellant failed to prove the Lang trucks were overweight, that issue is not important.

[2] It is conceded that the gross weight of any vehicle with its load permitted on any public highway is 34,000 pounds, and the gross weight of any combination of vehicle is 68,000 pounds. The January, 1936, application for license for the Lang truck gave the unladen weight as 19,250 pounds. At the time of the accident the truck carried 2,590 gallons of gasoline, weighing 16,047.64 pounds, and if the truck weighed 19,250 pounds at the time of the accident, the total weight was 35,297.64 pounds or 1,207 pounds in excess of the statutory limit. The trailer and its load was less than 34,000 pounds. If overweight was an issue, the burden of proving overweight was upon the state. In support of that issue plaintiff showed the registered gross weight of the truck in January, 1936, and January, 1937, as 19,250 pounds, and established the weight of the load at the time of the accident.

[3] As against this evidence the road superintendent of the Lang Corporation testified that subsequent to registration in January, 1936, and prior to the accident, the weight of the truck had been lightened "by about one thousand pounds" by a change from a Mack attachment with two sets of dual wheels to a lighter equipment known as a Fager attachment.

W. S. Carson, a driver for the Lang Corporation testified he knew the truck and trailer in question; that in April, 1936, about six months before the accident, the two sets of dual wheels were removed and one set of duals installed, and at the time of the accident, at the rear there was only one tire on each side, which change would lighten the truck "some thousand pounds". The manager of the Sacramento division testified that prior to the accident and after the registration in January, 1936, the six-wheel attachment was changed on the truck, making a difference of "approximately 1000 pounds" less in weight of the truck.

C. E. Slaughter, the road superintendent for defendant company testified that after the accident the gas motor was taken out and a Cummings Diesel engine substituted, adding approximately 1,000 pounds to the weight of the truck—thus explaining why the weight of the truck appeared unchanged at the registration periods of 1936 and 1937. This testimony, if accepted and believed by the jury, was sufficient to create a conflict as to the weight of the truck at the time of the accident, and removed that issue from our consideration.

Appellant still claims that accepting the testimony of the witnesses, one of whom testified the substitution of equipment reduced the weight of the truck "some thousand pounds", another said it made a difference of "approximately one thousand pounds", and another "about a thousand pounds", the truck was still 297 pounds in excess of the legal limit. To reach that conclusion, however, appellant must interpret the testimony of the witnesses as meaning a reduction of exactly one thousand pounds. This, however, was not the testimony, it was approximate, and may have been more or less than one thousand pounds. Whether, therefore, the issue of overweight was properly presented as an issue by the pleadings, or whether the court erred in not more particularly limiting the testimony to a particular party, is no longer material.

It is to be recalled, too, that there were two heavily laden trucks upon the bridge at the same time. Huron, the driver of the truck of the Contract Carriers Inc., testified he was traveling east and when he had reached the center of the bridge span in question the Lang truck was approaching him from the west. He immediately put on his brakes and had practically come to a stop. The Lang truck had also slowed down, and the two trucks were almost, if not completely, stopped as the cabs of the two trucks were about even with each other when the span collapsed. Inasmuch as the Contract Carriers' truck weighed about 25,000 pounds it cannot be said as a practical matter that the few hundred pounds overweight, if any, of the Lang truck caused the span to collapse.

[4] It is also contended the Lang truck struck the side of the bridge, thereby causing it to collapse. The testimony as to this point is sharply conflicting. The driver of the Lang truck denied at the trial striking the bridge, although an attempt was made to impeach that testimony by testimony that in the presence of others, he had said he did not hit the bridge. Huron also stated he heard the Lang truck strike the bridge and so stated to his employer and to an officer of the state highway patrol. There is some evidence of paint from the Lang truck on the supporting members of the bridge and friction marks on the side of the truck. Pieces of the guard rail were found wedged between the chassis and the truck when the truck was removed from the river bed, but these facts are evidence the jury could, and evidently did, consider in coming to their apparent conclusion the truck did not strike the bridge. There being a substantial conflict upon this issue, the finding of the jury will not be disturbed.

[5] Error is claimed in admitting testimony of complaints by citizens of Red Bluff at a time prior to the accident that the bridge was dangerous and that it had been the scene of numerous accidents. The fact of these complaints was brought out on the cross-examination of Mr. Earl Lee Kelly, then the director of public works, and was specifically offered and admitted to show notice to the state of the defective character of the bridge. Upon this theory the evidence was admissible. Uttley v. City of Santa Ana, 136 Cal.App. 23, 28 P.2d 377.

[6] In the minutes of a meeting between the citizens of Red Bluff and the director there were certain statements contained therein referring to prior accidents, but this testimony was not admitted to prove such prior accidents or that the bridge was too narrow. It was merely a report of the proceedings of that meeting. No specific objection was made to these particular objectionable passages nor motions to strike, the only objection made being general and going to the report as a whole. The principle is well established that if a portion of a document is inadmissible in evidence, and the remainder admissible, the objectionable portion cannot be reached by a general objection to the entire document, but the inadmissible portion must be specified. Estate of DeLaveaga, 165 Cal. 607, 133 P. 307; Ballos v. Natural, 93 Cal.App. 601, 269 P. 972.

Certain cases such as Wilkerson v. City of El Monte, 17 Cal.App.2d 615, 62 P.2d 790, and Thompson v. Buffum, 17 Cal.App. 2d 401, 62 P.2d 171 are cited by appellant in support of its claim that evidence relating to prior accidents was inadmissible, but in those cases the evidence of prior accidents was offered to prove the dangerous condition of the place, rather than to show notice of the condition.

[7, 8] As pointed out in an annotation in 65 A.L.R. page 380 evidence of prior or subsequent accidents may be offered (1) to prove the existence of a defective or dangerous condition; (2) to prove actionable negligence, and (3) to prove notice, and states that the majority of the more recent and better reasoned cases support the rule that evidence of prior accidents is admissible to prove notice. That has long been the rule in California as shown by Uttley v. City of Santa Ana, 136 Cal.App. 23, 28 P.2d 377, supra, and Rafferty v. City of Marysville, 207 Cal. 657, 280 P. 118. Here the fact of prior accidents was brought before the jury by the transcript of a meeting between Mr. Kelly and certain citizens of Red Bluff. No motion was made to strike this particular testimony, but aside from that we do not believe it was error to have received it for the purpose for which it was offered.

[9] It is also claimed the court erred in permitting it to be shown that wheel guards had been installed on the bridge after the accident, but appellant invited this testimony when it showed that after the accident certain Lang trucks had safely used the bridge. Upon the theory that long timbers installed as wheel guards had strengthened the bridge, a witness having so testified, respondent was properly permitted to show this to offset the inference of appellant that the bridge, having been subsequently used by Lang trucks without accident, was not unsafe to proper use.

[10-12] An exception is also taken to the ruling of the court in permitting Harvey A. Smith, a licensed structural engineer, to testify as an expert upon the stresses of the bridge. Mr. Smith recounted at some length his experience as a structural engineer. He attended the University of California, worked for about a year in the division of architecture, state of California, drawing and designing; had designed various structures and engaged in general practice as a structural designer, with offices in San Francisco. His entire experience as such structural engineer covered twenty-five or thirty years. It is true his actual experience in the building of bridges was limited to two rather small structures, but it would seem that a structural engineer who had studied stresses and strains of various types of building would be qualified to determine whether a bridge of given dimensions and materials could support a given load, and the trial court so ruled. Mr. Smith was asked as to the strength and quality of certain specific materials but he refused to commit himself as to specific metals stating that that was the province of a metallurgist and that he based his calculations upon certain recognized and established tables of strength of materials as accepted by the American Society for Testing Materials. No one can be a specialist or an expert in all fields, and the witness was within his right in adopting the findings of that recognized society as a basis for his conclusions.

The trial court held him qualified, and the ruling of that court upon the qualification of an expert will not be disturbed unless an abuse of discretion appears. People v. Hinkle, 64 Cal.App. 375, 221 P. 693, 27 Cal.Jur. 41 and cases there cited.

[13-15] Appellant also claims the court erred in permitting O. D. Smith, an expert on bridge design, to base his conclusions upon the testimony of the expert on stresses, Harvey A. Smith. Mr. O. D. Smith in testifying as to what the bridge could carry told the court he had not personally computed the stress on the bridge members but had used in his calculations the figures given by Mr. Harvey A. Smith. Appellant objects now upon the theory one expert cannot give testimony based upon the testimony of another expert. Howland v. Oakland Consolidated, etc., Co., 110 Cal. 513, 42 P. 983. Regardless of the applicability of this rule there seems to have been no objection to the testimony when given by Smith on his direct examination, and when it developed his findings were based in part upon the testimony of another expert, no motion was made to strike it out. Such a motion was necessary, for the witness properly testified as to many other matters. At the close of the testimony by Mr. Smith, a motion was made to strike out all of his testimony, but such a motion was too broad, and properly denied. Regardless of that fact, however, we cannot believe such testimony, even if erroneously admitted, could so affect the case as to constitute reversible error.

[16] The testimony and qualifications of George E. Dalbey, a metallurgist, called as an expert by respondent is also attacked, principally upon the ground that the iron in the bridge had been tested and judged by certain unapproved specifications of the American Society for Testing Materials, rather than the approved or adopted standards. Upon questioning by the court it developed that each year certain tentative specifications are issued by the society and at the end of that year they become the standard specifications for the following year. The witness used the tentative specifications of 1937, and in 1938, when this action was tried, the so-called tentative specifications used by the witness had become standard. We can see no error in thus adopting that standard. The sole purpose of the test was to determine the fitness or unfitness of the material for its particular use. Other objections are urged to the testimony and finding of Dalbey, but we cannot see in them sufficient gravity to justify a reversal, even if true.

[17-20] The court gave the following instruction as submitted by plaintiff, but inserted the italicized words, which appellant now contends were erroneous: "The plaintiff, the People of the State of California, in maintaining the bridge was entitled, if itself not negligent, to rely upon the presumption which the law makes, that the law will be obeyed and accordingly was not required to anticipate danger which could come only from a violation of law on the part of another." Appellants cite us to Rodkey v. City of Escondido, 8 Cal. 2d 685, 67 P.2d 1053, wherein plaintiff sought damages against the city for personal injuries sustained while driving over a storm drain. It appeared plaintiff was, at the time, traveling at an excessive rate of speed. The court held that a municipality was not bound to maintain its highways in a condition to preclude the possibility of injury or accident and was not an insurer of the safety of travelers upon its streets, but was obligated only to exercise ordinary care to maintain its streets in a reasonably safe condition for their use in a proper manner. This clearly and concisely expresses the rule, but we cannot see wherein it is not in accord with the principle of law set forth in the instruction. In the cited case it is held the driver would obey the law and slacken his speed in passing through a residential district where the storm drain was installed. If the storm drain had been installed upon the open road and the city had knowledge of its dangerous installation a different conclusion might have been reached. In the instant case there is no admitted negligence upon either the part of the state or of the truck company. Impliedly the jury found also that the Lang truck was not overweight, but in any event the state could not negligently maintain a bridge and then avoid liability by proving some violation of the law on the part of another. California does not recognize the rule of comparative negligence and if it were established that both parties were negligent, which negligence approximately contributed to the injury, neither could recover. The state was entitled to the presumption as pointed out in the Rodkey case, supra, that the truck company would use due care in traversing the bridge, but the state also was required to use due care in the maintenance of the bridge before it could recover. The instruction might well have been omitted under the facts here, but we see no error in its having been given.

[21] Appellant also claims the court gave an instruction that in effect shifted the burden of proof of contributory negligence. The instruction told the jury that before it could find against the defendants it must find from the evidence, first, that the defendants were negligent in the operation of its truck; secondly, that by reason of such negligence and as a proximate result thereof, plaintiff sustained damages, and thirdly, that at the time and place in question plaintiff did not proximately contribute to its damage by its own negligence. This instruction did not stand alone. The jury was correctly instructed as to the meaning and effect of preponderance of evidence and the burden of proof. The jury were clearly told that contributory negligence was an affirmative defense, and that the burden of proving contributory negligence was upon the defendants. The instruction complained of was not attempting to discuss the burden of proof or preponderance of evidence but was merely defining the issues. We cannot believe the jury was misled or confused.

[22] As said in Hamilton v. Hammond Lumber Co., 13 Cal.App.2d 461, 56 P.2d 1257, 1258: "The instructions must be considered in their entirety, and if, as so considered, they state the law of the case fairly and clearly, then they are, as a whole, unobjectionable, even though by selecting isolated passages from single instructions they may in some respects be amenable to just criticism."

What has just been said is also applicable to certain formula instructions, which standing alone might be subject to criticism; but as a whole the jury was fully and fairly instructed, and no miscarriage of justice has resulted for such errors, if any.

[23, 24] Other citations of error are called to our attention. It is claimed the court erred in not striking out the testimony of Dalbey, the expert in metallurgy, because he applied a more severe bending test than that authorized by the specifications of the testing standard. It appears, however, that these tests of bending were started with a smaller pin than specified, but as soon as the iron was started to bend so it would hold in the testing machine, a pin of the required diameter was used. This deviation would not appear to nullify the test, and by bringing the fact of the more severe test before the jury, upon cross-examination, we can assume the jury would take that fact into their deliberations. The refusal to strike out the test was at least not reversible error. The same conclusion can be reached as to the testimony of Mr. Stauffer who lived near the bridge, and was asked to identify certain iron rods taken from the river after the collapse, as parts of the bridge.

This case was strenuously tried by counsel on both sides, and involved many issues and called for considerable technical information. There may have been testimony admitted that could have been omitted, but on the whole, in view of the entire record, the jury seems to have reached a proper determination on the question of responsibility.

The judgment is affirmed.

43 Cal.App.2d 150

JACKSON v. THOMPSON et al.

Civ. 12449.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 19, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐622

Defendants' "Notice of Ruling" which was served one day after oral announcement by court to parties that court was dismissing action for lack of prosecution, and which was served almost a week before court's order was formally entered in the minutes, was a nullity, and time to file a request for transcript in connection with appeal did not commence to run. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 583, 953a, 953d.

2. Appeal and error ⇐347(2)

Though an order of dismissal under the statute dealing with dismissal of actions for want of prosecution is not a "judgment" in the strict sense of the word, it is nevertheless treated as such for purposes of appeal, and therefore the time for appeal from such order of dismissal runs from the date of entry of such minute order. Code Civ.Proc. § 583.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Judgment".

3. Appeal and error ⇐134(1)

An appeal cannnot be taken from an order or judgment until it is formally entered in the minutes.

4. Judgment ⇐278

The entry of court's oral order in the court clerk's "rough minutes" is not an "official record" of any character, and until official entry has been made in the minutes of the court, the order remains but a mere oral announcement.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Official Record".

5. Appeal and error ⇐348(2)

The directions of the statute requiring that notice of entry of judgment or order granting a new trial, required by statute dealing with bill of exceptions, by statute dealing with motion for new trial, or by statute dealing with appeals from superior court, must be in writing unless there is a waiver, are strictly enforced. Code Civ. Proc. § 953d.

6. Appeal and error ⇐348(2)

The actual presence of counsel in court at time order or judgment is made does not excuse compliance with requirement for written notice under statute dealing with notice of entry of judgment or order as required by statute dealing with appeals from superior court, unless such written notice be waived in writing or by oral stipulation entered in the minutes. Code Civ.Proc. § 953d.

7. Appeal and error ⇐348(1)

Where defendants' "Notice of Ruling" was served prior to entry on or about May 27th in official minutes of court of order for dismissal of action for lack of prosecution, plaintiff's request on June 10th for transcript was timely, since "Notice of Ruling" was premature and ineffective. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583, 953a, 953d.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Ernest D. Wagner, Judge.

Action by Duncan P. Jackson against Margaret C. Thompson and others. From an order striking from the records and files of the action a "Notice and Request for Transcript" filed therein by plaintiff in connection with an appeal from an order of dismissal, the plaintiff appeals.

Order reversed.

T. H. Canfield, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

Fred A. Shaeffer, of Santa Maria, for respondents.

WHITE, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order of the superior court of Santa Barbara county striking from the records and files of the action a "Notice and Request for Transcript" filed therein by such plaintiff in connection with his appeal from an order of dismissal made in said action.

There is no dispute concerning the factual situation with which we are here confronted. This action was instituted in the superior court, and during the month of May, 1939, was pending therein. On May 15, 1939, pursuant to motion theretofore duly made by defendants, and in the presence of counsel for all parties, the court orally announced from the bench its order granting said motion and pursuant thereto dismissing the action for lack of prosecution under the provisions of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The clerk thereupon entered such oral order of the court in the court clerk's "rough minutes", but such order was not formally entered in the minutes of the court until approximately one week later than the date of its rendition. However, on May 16, which was the day following the date upon which the oral order of dismissal was made, defendants' counsel served upon plaintiff's attorney a "Notice of Ruling", evidently intended to be a notice of the entry of the order or judgment of dismissal. After receiving such notice, plaintiff's attorney examined the minute book of the superior court and found that such order of dismissal had not been entered. It might here be noted that no other notice of entry of the order or judgment of dismissal was ever served upon plaintiff. On June 10, 1939, plaintiff filed in the superior court his "Notice of Appeal" from the order of dismissal and on the same day he also filed a "Notice and Request for Transcript". It was this last-named document which was stricken from the files by the court, and which order forms the basis of this appeal.

[1] Appellant contends that pursuant to the provisions of sections 953a and 953d of the Code of Civil Procedure his time to file a request for transcript did not commence to run until notice of the entry of the dismissal order had been served upon him; and that such notice could not legally be served upon him until the dismissal order made by the superior court had been formally entered in the minutes of the court. In this claim appellant must be upheld. The so-called "Notice of Ruling", having been served on May 16, one day after the oral ruling on the motion to dismiss, but several days prior to the formal entry of such order in the minutes of the court, was a nullity and of no legal effect.

[2] It has been held that an order of dismissal under section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, such as the one with which we are here concerned, while not a judgment in the strict sense of the word, is nevertheless treated as such for the purposes of appeal, and therefore the time for appeal from such order of dismissal runs from the date of entry of such minute order. Southern Pac. R. R. Co. v. Willett, 216 Cal. 387, 390, 14 P.2d 526.

[3, 4] That no appeal can be taken from an order or judgment until it is formally entered in the minutes is and for a long time has been the unquestioned law of this state. Commencing with the case of Brownell v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 703, 109 P. 91, it has been uniformly held that the entry of the court's oral order in the court clerk's "rough minutes" is not an official record of any character, and until such official entry has been made in the minutes of the court the order granted remains but a mere oral announcement. It is uncontradicted in the instant case that such official entry of the oral order did not occur until several days after the "Notice of Ruling" was served upon plaintiff's counsel.

[5-7] Since the enactment of section 953d of the Code of Civil Procedure in 1927, the strictness with which its statutory directions are enforced has been emphasized in numerous cases. For instance, in this connection it has been held that the actual presence of counsel in court at the time the order or judgment is made does not excuse compliance with the requirement for written notice unless such written notice be waived in writing or by oral stipulation entered in the minutes. Savage v. Superior Court, 36 Cal.App.2d 521, 523, 524, 97 P.2d 990. Since the purported "Notice of Ruling" was served prior to the entry of the dismissal order in the official minutes of the court, it was premature and of no force or effect. Therefore plaintiff's request for a transcript on appeal was timely.

From the foregoing it follows that the order from which this appeal is taken must be reversed. It is so ordered.

We concur: YORK, P. J.; DORAN, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 110

PEOPLE v. SMITH.

Cr. 3416.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

Hearing Denied March 17, 1941.

1. Larceny ⇐65

Evidence, though circumstantial, was sufficient to sustain conviction of grand theft of automobiles.

2. Criminal law ⇐1159(2)

To determine the weight of the evidence is not the function of the District Court of Appeal, and its duty is to decide only whether the evidence is such as to warrant an inference of guilt.

3. Criminal law ⇐1159(2)

Before the District Court of Appeal can set aside a judgment of conviction, it must be made clearly to appear that on no hypothesis is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached by the trial court.

4. Criminal law ⇐1159(2)

Whether evidence constitutes proof of the fact found is for the jury's determination or the determination of the court sitting without a jury.

5. Criminal law ⇐1159(2)

The finding of a jury or of a court sitting without a jury will prevail unless the evidence preponderates so greatly against the verdict as to make it manifest that the verdict is the result of passion or prejudice.

6. Larceny ⇐58

In prosecution for grand theft of automobiles, evidence was sufficient to establish the identity of parts taken from automobiles after thefts had been proved.

7. Larceny ⇐58

The identification of stolen property by its owner is specifically made, where the owner points out the identification marks and knows that the property is his own.

8. Criminal law ⇐693

Assignment of error as to the trial court's ruling in requiring defendant in grand theft prosecution to answer certain questions asked him on cross-examination relative to his past livelihood and the origin of his moneys would be disregarded, where the questions relative to the origin of his moneys were answered before the objection.

9. Witnesses ⇐277(3)

In prosecution for the theft of two automobiles, wherein defendant denied that he had stolen the two automobiles, district attorney was entitled to cross-examine defendant as to number of automobiles and kinds of automobiles defendant had fixed up for sale. Pen.Code, § 1323.

10. Witnesses ⇐277(4)

After defendant denied on direct examination that he stole automobiles as charged, it was proper for the district attorney to cross-examine the defendant as to all matters about which he was examined in chief. Pen.Code, § 1323.

11. Witnesses ⇐277(3)

Any question which has the tendency to elicit from a defendant the whole truth about any matter on which he has been examined in chief, or which would explain, qualify, or destroy the force of his direct testimony, is legitimate cross-examination. Pen.Code, § 1323.

12. Witnesses ⇐277(3)

In prosecution for theft of automobiles, it was proper for the district attorney to develop any details which would be reasonably calculated to show that defendant's denial in chief that he stole the automobiles was not true. Pen.Code, § 1323.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; A. A. Scott, Judge.

Urban U. Smith was convicted on two counts of grand theft, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

William J. F. Brown, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Bayard Rhone, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Defendant, having been convicted on two counts of grand theft by the court without a jury, takes this appeal from the judgments and from the order denying motion for a new trial.

As grounds for reversal, he urges (1) that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment and (2) that the court erred in overruling certain objections to questions propounded to appellant upon his cross-examination.

In December, 1939, defendant contacted one Harry Chudacoff to whom he disclosed a desire to purchase six or seven wrecked cars. In the later part of April, 1940, Chudacoff arranged for the purchase of a 1939 Dodge coupe from the Aetna Insurance Company at a price of $185, and he was paid by appellant the sum of $10 for his services in effecting the purchase. The car while going at a speed of 60 miles per hour had hit a telephone pole. Its front end was crushed, the radiator, the shell, grill and entire assembly, both front fenders, the hood assembly, the frame, knee action, right front wheel, hub, tire, tube, steering gear assembly, carburetor, fan, pump assembly, manifold and right door, windshield glasses and door glasses were broken.

Count 1 of the information accused defendant of stealing the car of one John E. Canaday. On May 29, the police discovered a dark blue Dodge de luxe coupe stripped and abandoned at 21st and Harvard boulevard. This was the car stolen from Canaday, who had parked it at 6th and Normandie, two miles distant from the place where it was found by the police. When last seen by Canaday on Sunday, the 26th of May, his coupe was in good condition, contained a Motorola radio and standard equipment. When he saw it on the following Wednesday, it had been stripped of its hood, right door, radiator, carburetor, radio, three hub caps and the front grill. The missing door had been replaced by an old one and wired in its place; the front grill and hood had been replaced with an old part, and substituted parts had been put on Canaday's car from different cars which were all of different colors.

In the early part of June, Canaday at the request of the police called at the garage where they stated his car was impounded. He recognized it as his own car by the license number, certain private papers of his own and other distinguishing features. About ten days later Canaday called at the same shop where he inspected another 1939 Dodge coupe. He found upon it the parts which he definitely identified as those taken from his own car. His Motorola radio had been installed in this second car and was in the same condition as it was just before his own car disappeared. The right door of his car, which had been installed in the rebuilt Dodge, had been painted a different color but beneath the paint the color of his own car was readily distinguished. By reason of his familiarity with the parts of his own coupe, he recognized all the parts which had been taken from his car and installed in the car inspected by him on the later occasion.

Count 2 of the information accused the defendant of the theft of a four-door Dodge sedan, belonging to one Wilson Evans, on or about June 1, 1940. At the time the Evans car disappeared, it was standing on the parking lot of the Hollywood race track. Its color was light blue, or quadrant gray. It was equipped with Goodyear Lifeguard tires and tubes, the valve tips of which were painted blue. The car was also equipped with a Philco radio. When it was found by the police on June 4th, at a garage at 1015 West Washington, the glass was broken from the front door, the radio and cigarette lighter and the spare tire had all been removed; the car was standing over a pit in the garage. The pan from beneath its motor had been removed and in its place a wrecked pan which had been taken from appellant's wrecked car had been attached. The drive shaft of the Evans car had been supplanted with a wrecked drive shaft. When the investigating officers arrived at the premises mentioned, appellant was working on the Dodge coupe which he had purchased from Chudacoff. He was then about 50 feet distant from the Evans car. Dressed in clothing such as is usually worn by garage mechanics, defendant stated that he was repairing and fixing up the wrecked car which he had purchased. A right-hand door had been installed on his car in place of the original door which had been torn off in the collision prior to his purchase. The new door, recently painted over, originally had the color of the Canaday car. The radiator grill was painted gray on the outside but its inside was still the color of the Canaday car. The Motorola radio had been taken from the Canaday car and installed by appellant in his car. The Philco radio was identified by Evans as that which had belonged in his Dodge and was now found in the rear of appellant's car. Also, in the back of appellant's newly built Dodge was found the spare tire, tube and wheel from Evans' car.

Appellant stated to the officers that he had fixed up the old radiator shell and the old door; that the hood had been wrecked; that he had to get a new one. Thereupon, witness Belknap, who was connected with the automobile theft bureau, approached the officers and appellant, bringing a gray hood from the front end of the garage. The officers scraped the paint and found beneath the color of the Canaday car. Appellant stated to the officers that he did not remember where he had got the hood or the Motorola or the Philco radio, or the floorboard lying beside his car. Taking the ignition key from appellant's car, the officers found it to fit the lock in a wrecked door lying some distance from appellant's car. Defendant did not remember where he got the door. It was thereupon observed that the lock and handle had been removed from the door recently installed in appellant's car. The three hub caps from the Canaday car were installed on appellant's car. One of the wheels on appellant's car had the same color as the Evans car, while the tip of the tube had the same light blue color as those on the tips of the valve stems of the tubes of Evans' car.

Appellant stated to the officers that he was in charge of the garage. Invoices were found showing appellant had given his address as that of the shop where he was found.

At the trial defendant testified that he had his car stored at the Washington boulevard address but denied that it was his place of business or that he paid the rent or that he had a lease upon the premises. He denied that he had been in the vicinity from which the vehicles had been taken and denied the thefts. He testified he had purchased the door and other accessories from a salesman who called upon him, but he produced no invoices and had no memory of the salesman's name.

[1-5] While the evidence is purely circumstantial, it might have convinced a trier of fact of appellant's guilt as readily as the direct testimony of a Christian martyr that he had witnessed the taking and stripping of the two cars. Even though it had not been so convincing as it appears to us, it is not our function to determine the weight of the evidence. Our duty is to decide only whether the evidence is such that it can be held sufficient to warrant the inference of guilt. Before we can set aside a judgment of conviction for a crime "it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below". People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 104 P.2d 778, 780. Whether the evidence constitutes proof of the fact found is for the jury's determination. Such a finding will prevail "unless the evidence preponderates so greatly against the verdict as to make it manifest that the verdict is the result of passion or prejudice". People v. Wong Chong Suey, 110 Cal. 117, 121, 42 P. 420, 421.

[6, 7] The evidence was sufficient to establish the identity of the parts taken from the Canaday and Wilson cars after the thefts had been proved. People v. Farrell, 67 Cal.App. 128, 227 P. 210. The identification of stolen property by its owner is specifically made where the owner pointed out the identification marks and knows that the property is his own. People v. Miller, 45 Cal.App. 494, 188 P. 52; People v. McGill, 82 Cal.App. 98, 255 P. 261.

The corpus delicti was established as to the crime of theft of both the Canaday and Evans cars. They were surreptitiously removed from the place where they were parked. They were both valuable properties. When found they had been stripped not only of valuable attachments but even of such parts as a door, hood, radiator, etc. The trial judge had only to determine whether the evidence was sufficient to show that defendant participated in the commission of the crime. Since one of the cars stood in the very garage of which appellant said he was the manager and where he was at work, and since, in addition, he was in possession of parts from both of the cars, the evidence abundantly supports the judgment.

Appellant's contention that he was never shown to have been in possession of either of the stolen cars is frivolous for two reasons. In the first place the Evans car was on the premises where appellant was working on his own car at the time of his arrest, and the accessories and parts from both cars were at the time being installed by appellant in his own car and had been painted with the manifest intention of concealing their identity. No one else at the garage asserted any right to the Evans car. No one else was pointed out as having taken any parts from either car; only appellant with his "improbable explanation" (People v. Melson, 84 Cal.App. 10, 257 P. 555) stood there with the stolen parts and accessories in his very hands.

[8] Appellant assigns as error the rulings of the court in requiring the defendant to answer certain questions asked him on cross-examination relative to his past livelihood and the origin of his monies. But as the questions relative to the origin of his monies were answered before the objection, it must be disregarded.

[9-12] The inquiry as to the number of cars and kinds of cars appellant had fixed up for sale was proper cross-examination. Merely because defendant denied he had stolen the two cars in question was not conclusive against the district attorney who had introduced sufficient proof of such nature as to convince the defendant that he should take the witness stand. After giving his denial on direct examination, it was proper to cross-examine him as to all matters about which he was examined in chief. Penal Code, section 1323. By the code section cited, the court is divested of any discretion in allowing a range of cross-examination beyond the matters brought out upon direct examination. "Any question which would have the tendency to elicit from him the whole truth about any matter upon which he had been examined in chief, or which would explain or qualify or destroy the force of his direct testimony * * * would be legitimate cross-examination". People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 466, 35 P. 80, 83. Defendant having testified that he had a businessman's coupe stored in the Washington boulevard garage, having denied that he had any lease on the premises and having denied that he told the police officer that he was the manager of the garage, having denied that he had stolen the cars or that he took parts from them, it was correct practice to develop any details which would be reasonably calculated to show that his denial in chief was not truth.

The judgments and the order are affirmed.

We concur: McCOMB, J.; WOOD, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 230

STANDARD PIPE & SUPPLY CO. v. MARVIN et al.

SCHUERMAN v. SAME.

Civ. 11568.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 26, 1941.

1. Mines and minerals ⇐112(2)

That attempt to bring in oil by drilling well was unsuccessful did not render well or surrounding land immune from mechanics' liens for drilling well, as against contention that there was not involved a "work of improvement" within statute. Code Civ. Proc. § 1183.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Work of Improvement".

2. Appeal and error ⇐1071(3)

Where under the evidence and findings it was clear that plaintiffs furnished materials for work done in the exploration for oil on a 13-acre tract being worked as a single development under a community lease that finding that the entire tract was necessary for the convenient use and occupation of the dry hole was not supported by the evidence was immaterial, since plaintiffs' liens were for materials furnished to be used and consumed in development of "real property worked as a mine" within statute, and such liens extended to the entire tract. Code Civ. Proc. § 1183.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Real Property Worked as a Mine".

3. Mines and minerals ⇐112(3)

Where materials are furnished for work done in the exploration for oil on a tract which was being worked by lessee as a single development under a community lease covering the entire tract, no question as to the extent of land required for the convenient use and occupation of the structure or improvement is presented. Code Civ.Proc. § 1183.

4. Mines and minerals ⇐54½

Where undivided one-third interest in tract was subject to mortgage which had been recorded prior to execution of community lease covering tract and prior to any work done, or materials furnished, the lien of the mortgagee was superior to mechanics' lien for materials furnished in exploration for oil. Code Civ.Proc. § 1186.

Appeal from the Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Joseph W. Vickers, Judge.

Separate actions by the Standard Pipe & Supply Company and by Emma Schuerman, etc., against L. Jean Marvin and others, to foreclose mechanics' liens which were consolidated. From judgments for plaintiffs, defendant Bertrand O. Woods and others appeal.

Judgments reversed with directions.

Walter W. Hoye, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

R. Dechter and B. L. Hoyt, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SPENCE, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment entered in consolidated actions foreclosing mechanics' liens.

Defendants Woods were the owners of a portion of a 13-acre tract upon which an oil well had been partially drilled. Defendants Woods and defendants Capser were the owners in common of the remaining portion of said 13-acre tract. Said defendants, as lessors, thereafter entered into what is commonly known as a community lease with defendant Marvin, as lessee, granting to said lessee the exclusive right to possession of said 13-acre tract for the purpose of exploring for oil and drilling oil wells thereon. Under the terms of said lease, defendants Woods and defendants Capser were to participate equally in the landowners' share of the oil produced irrespective of the place on said tract where producing wells might be located. The lessee entered upon the premises under said lease and commenced deepening the partially drilled well thereon with the knowledge and consent of defendants. Plaintiffs furnished materials used in said work and the lessee failed to pay for said materials. Oil was not produced from said well and the lessee ceased the performance of work and filed a notice of cessation of labor. Plaintiffs filed liens on said 13-acre tract and brought these actions to foreclose said liens. The cause was tried upon stipulated facts and the uncontradicted evidence of a single witness and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiffs.

[1] Defendants first contend that "The 'dry hole' involved herein is not a 'work of improvement' within the purview of section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure; hence neither said hole nor any of the surrounding land is subject to mechanics' liens for the drilling thereof." We are of the opinion that this contention is without merit and that it may be disposed of upon the authority of Western Well Works v. California Farms Company, 60 Cal.App. 749, 214 P. 491.

[2, 3] Defendants further contend that "The finding of the trial court that the whole of the 13-acre tract described in the consolidated decree herein is necessary for 'the convenient use and occupation' of the 'dry hole', 'found' to have resulted from the deepening of the existing dry hole on said premises, is not supported by the evidence." In our opinion the finding at which this contention is directed is an immaterial finding in this case. Under the evidence and findings, it is clear that the plaintiffs furnished materials for work done in the exploration for oil on the 13-acre tract, which tract was being worked by the lessee as a single development under a community lease covering the entire tract. The liens of plaintiffs were therefore liens for materials furnished to be used and consumed in the development of "real property worked as a mine" within the meaning of the second paragraph of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure and said liens extended to the entire tract. Berentz v. Belmont Oil Mining Co., 148 Cal. 577, 84 P. 47, 113 Am.St.Rep. 308. As was said in California Corrugated Co. v. Stewart, 215 Cal. 120, at page 122, 8 P.2d 1013, at page 1014, "In such cases no question of fact as to the extent of land required for the convenient use and occupation of structure or improvement is presented."

[4] The only further contention of defendants which requires consideration is the contention that "The trial court erred in holding that the claimed mechanics' liens of respondents are senior and superior to the lien of the mortgage of appellants Capser." In support of said contention, defendants cite and rely upon section 1186 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the trial the parties stipulated that the defendants Capser were the owners of a valid mortgage covering the undivided one-third interest of defendants Woods in and to a portion of the 13-acre tract and that said mortgage had been executed and recorded prior to the execution of the community lease and prior to the time that any work had been commenced or any materials had been furnished for the redrilling in question. The trial court failed to make any finding on this subject but decreed that the liens of plaintiffs were superior to all claims of the several defendants. Plaintiffs concede that the trial court erred in decreeing that plaintiffs' liens were superior to the lien of said mortgage and this concession is in accord with our views. It therefore appears appropriate to reverse the judgment with directions.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to amend its findings and judgment so that the portions thereof relating to the question of the priority of the mortgage of defendants Capser over the liens of plaintiffs will conform to the stipulation entered into by the parties upon the trial and to the views herein expressed. The parties will bear their own costs on this appeal.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 211

BALLF v. CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

Civ. 11189.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 25, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 27, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 24, 1941.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐217(3)

Refusal of the Civil Service Commission of the City and County of San Francisco to certify name of the person standing highest on the list of eligibles for position of general clerk-stenographer in the office of the board of supervisors was in violation of charter imposing imperative duty upon the commission to certify name of person ranking highest on the current list of eligibles for position to be filled.

2. Municipal corporations ⇐217(3)

Where requisition was filed with the Civil Service Commission of City and County of San Francisco for a person to fill position, the commission was required to certify the name of the person ranking highest on the current list of eligibles, and its failure to do so, and the certification of another person, were not justified by provision of rule of commission relating to transfers from one position to another.

3. Municipal corporations ⇐216(2)

The rule-making power vested by a city charter in a municipal agency must be exercised in conformity with all charter provisions, and any rule adopted by such agency which has the effect of opening the way to circumvent or nullify charter provision is to that extent inoperative and void.

4. Mandamus ⇐178

In mandamus proceeding to require Civil Service Commission of City and County of San Francisco to certify the name of person standing highest on current list of eligibles for a permanent position, judgment relieving such person of the necessity of passing a probationary period in the position was error as contrary to charter providing that any appointment to a permanent position shall be on probation for a period of six months.

5. Mandamus ⇐178

In mandamus proceeding to require Civil Service Commission of City and County of San Francisco to certify the name of the person standing highest on current list of eligibles for a permanent position, date of seniority should be fixed as of the date such person was entitled to have his name certified.

6. Mandamus ⇐178

In mandamus proceeding to require Civil Service Commission of City and County of San Francisco to certify the name of person standing highest on current list of eligibles for position with board of supervisors, judgment properly contained provision that such person be granted a leave of absence without pay from position he was then occupying in recorder's office while serving probationary period in new position.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Sylvain J. Lazarus, Judge.

Proceeding in mandamus by Harry A. Ballf against the Civil Service Commission of the City and County of San Francisco and others, to compel the defendant to certify plaintiff's name to the Board of Supervisors as appointee for the position of general clerk-stenographer in the office of such board. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendants appeal.

Judgment modified and as modified affirmed.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Edmond P. Bergerot and Thomas P. Slevin, Deputies City Atty., all of San Francisco (L. R. Bunney, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Harry A. Ballf, in pro. per.

KNIGHT, Justice.

This proceeding in mandamus was instituted in the superior court by the plaintiff, Harry A. Ballf, to compel the defendants, Civil Service Commission of San Francisco and the members thereof, to certify his name to the board of supervisors as appointee for the position of "General Clerk-Stenographer" in the office of said board. Judgment was entered in his favor, and the defendants appeal.

The controversy arises out of the following situation: In March, 1938, Fred Moran resigned as bond and ordinance clerk of the board of supervisors; and shortly afterward Robert J. Dolan, then occupying the position of general clerk-stenographer

(B-408) for a probationary period in the office of the purchaser of supplies, requested transfer to the position left vacant by Moran's resignation. The request was denied, for the reason, among others, that the position sought by him with said board was of a classification different from the one he then held. During the following month, April, 1938, proceedings were initiated to reclassify the position in the office of said board as general clerk-stenographer (B-408), the same classification as the one then held by Dolan. The reclassification became effective on July 1, 1938, the operative date of the salary ordinance of the city for the year 1938–39; and on July 17, 1938, Dolan renewed his application for transfer to said position.

Section 142 of the charter provides that with exceptions not here pertinent "All positions in all departments and offices of the city and county * * * shall be included in the classified civil service of the city and county, and shall be filled from lists of eligibles prepared by the civil service commission * * *"; and section 148 of the charter provides: "Whenever a position controlled by the civil service provisions of this charter is to be filled, the appointing officer shall make a requisition to the civil service commission for a person to fill it. Thereupon, the commission shall certify to the appointing officer the name and address of the person standing highest on the list of eligibles for such position. * * *" (Italics ours.) In conformity with the requirements of the latter section the board of supervisors on August 19, 1938, filed a requisition with the commission for a person to fill the newly-created position of general clerk-stenographer (B-408), the appointee to report for duty on August 29, 1938. The respondent Ballf, then occupying a position as general clerk-typist (B-512) in the recorder's office, stood at the top of the current list of eligibles for the position of general clerk-stenographer (B-408); whereas Dolan stood ninth on the same list; and in furtherance of his efforts to secure the position with the board of supervisors, Dolan obtained waivers from all those ranking above him on said eligibility list except Ballf, who, desiring the position himself, declined to give such waiver. Nevertheless, the commission refused to certify Ballf's name to the board of supervisors, and on September 2, 1938, transferred Dolan to the position in question.

[1] We agree with the conclusion reached by the trial court that the action of the commission in so doing was violative of the provisions of said section 148 of the charter above quoted, which imposes the imperative duty upon the commission to certify the name of the person ranking highest on the current list of eligibles for the position to be filled. In fact, appellants themselves concede that such is the mandate of the charter, for in their brief they say: "In most jurisdictions wherein the merit system is in effect the appointing officer may select one of the three highest eligibles. This gives the appointing officer a choice. In this jurisdiction the appointing officer must take the highest eligible." But in justification of their action in disregarding the current list of eligibles and giving Dolan priority over Ballf, appellants rely on the opening clause of the concluding sentence of a rule theretofore adopted by the commission, relating to the matter of transfers of employees from one office to another. It is known as rule 34, and declares, among other things, that whenever, in the judgment of the commission, it is for the best interests of the service, an employee holding permanent appointment under one appointing officer may, upon his written request, be transferred by the commission to a permanent regular position "of the same class" under another appointing officer, providing the employee first obtains the approval of the appointing officers of the departments concerned; furthermore, that a person so transferred shall begin as a new appointee and serve a probationary period; and that the acceptance of such transfer by an appointee "shall immediately and automatically cancel all his rights in the position from which he was transferred." Toward the end the rule declares: "In making transfers under this Section, preference shall be given to the appointee who has a clean record and who has had the longest service under Civil Service permanent appointment in his class"; and the rule concludes: "Unless otherwise ordered by the Commission, no appointee from a current list of eligibles may transfer to a permanent position carrying regular salary unless such appointee has examination rank higher than that of the highest eligible remaining on such current list." (Italics ours.)

[2, 3] It is manifest, however, that the discretionary power the commission thus purports to confer upon itself by virtue of the concluding sentence of said rule may not be invoked in a situation such as the one here presented, because, as shown, the charter in mandatory terms declares that in response to a requisition made by the appointing officer the commission must certify the name of the person standing highest on the current list of eligibles for the office to be filled, which in this case was Ballf; and it is a fundamental principle of municipal law that the rule-making power vested by a city charter in a municipal agency must be exercised in conformity with all charter provisions, and that any rule adopted by such agency which has the effect of opening the way to circumvent or nullify charter provisions is, to that extent, inoperative and void. Upon reading the entire rule it is quite obvious that its purpose was to establish a procedural setup to be followed in matters of transfer, none having been provided by the charter; and that it was intended that the discretionary authority the commission conferred upon itself by the concluding sentence of the rule, as well as that embodied in the proviso relating to "clean record" and "longest service", should be exercised in those situations where requests were made by two or more employees holding permanent appointments of the same classification, for transfer to a permanent position of the same classification under a different appointing officer. But here the commission was not dealing with that kind of case. Ballf was not seeking "transfer" to the position with the board of supervisors; nor indeed under rule 34 would he have been permitted to do so, because the permanent position held by him in the recorder's office was of a classification different from the position to be filled in the office of the board of supervisors; that is to say, his position in the recorder's office was that of general clerk-typist (B-512); whereas the position with the board was that of general clerk-stenographer (B-408). His legal right to certification to the latter position arose from the fact that he ranked highest on the current eligible list of appointees for a permanent position of that classification; therefore, when the board filed its requisition with the commission for a person to fill a position of that classification, it was the mandatory duty of the commission under the plain wording of section 148 of the charter to certify Ballf's name to the board. Neither the commission nor the board had any choice in the matter.

[4, 5] We are of the opinion also, however, that the trial court exceeded its authority in incorporating in the judgment provisions relieving Ballf of the "necessity of passing a probationary period" in the position in the office of the board of supervisors, and in fixing July 1, 1938, as the date of the commencement of his seniority therein. Proper provision was made that he was not entitled to the salary of the office until he reported for duty; but the date of seniority should have been fixed as of September 2, 1938, such being the date he was entitled to have his name certified to said board.

With respect to the matter of the probationary period, said section 148 of the charter, which is the basis of Ballf's right to certification, also contains this provision: "Any appointment to a position declared permanent by the commission [and this was such a position] shall be on probation for a period of six months. At any time before the expiration of six months the appointing officer may terminate the appointment." We find nothing in the arguments advanced by respondent which would tend to take the case out of the operation of the foregoing charter provision. The theory upon which the trial court apparently acted in inserting the provision was that if the commission had complied with the terms of the charter in certifying respondent's name to the board, he would, at the time of the entry of the judgment, have served the probationary period. The unequivocal language used in section 148 shows, however, that actual service, rather than constructive, is required.

[6] The trial court also incorporated in its judgment a provision to the effect that respondent be granted a leave of absence, without pay, from his present position in the recorder's office (B-512) while serving the probationary period in the position in the office of said board (B-408). This provision doubtless finds support in section 153 of the charter, which fixes a limitation of six months for a leave of absence to an employee accepting a position in some office of the city and county other than the one in which he is employed and where the duties are in no way related to the duties covered by his civil service classification, which, reasonably construed in the light of the language of the entire section, means the classification of the position he leaves to accept the position of different classification. A different situation is presented in the case of transferees under rule 34, because there, by the very wording of the rule, the employee is notified in advance that immediately upon his acceptance of the position to which he is transferred all rights to the position he leaves are automatically cancelled.

In accordance with the views above expressed, it is ordered that the judgment be modified by striking therefrom the provision eliminating the necessity of serving the probationary period, and by substituting the date September 2, 1938, for July 1, 1938; that as thus modified the judgment be and it is hereby affirmed; that a peremptory writ issue in conformity with the terms of the judgment as modified, and that respondent recover his costs of appeal.

We concur: PETERS, P. J.; WARD, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 170

POPE ESTATE CO. v. JOHNSON, State Treasurer.

Civ. 11438.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 21, 1941.

1. Judgment ⇐725(5)

A judgment for refund of portion of franchise tax for particular year paid under protest was "res judicata" against offsetting additional tax allegedly owed for such year, and hence such additional tax was no defense in mandamus proceedings to compel state treasurer to pay full amount of such judgment. St.1939, p. 2968, § 30.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

2. Taxation ⇐543

In action for refund of portion of franchise tax for particular year paid under protest, the state could raise defense that taxpayer had omitted items from its return for that year, even though claimed deficiency was barred by limitations. St.1939, p. 2968, § 30.

3. Taxation ⇐543

The statute giving right to offset taxes and interest "due" from taxpayer against judgment for refund of taxes did not give right to offset a claimed deficiency for the same year as that involved in the refund proceeding. St.1939, p. 2968, § 30.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due".

4. Taxation ⇐543(1)

A suit for recovery of the whole or a portion of a tax paid for a particular year throws open all questions relating to the same tax year, and neither tax collecting authorities nor taxpayer may split up the questions and prosecute question of liability for that year piecemeal.

5. Judgment ⇐592

The rule against piecemeal prosecution of question of tax liability for particular year in suit for recovery of tax for such year is absolute and prevents a second action involving a particular year, even though facts upon which the second suit rests occurred after the first suit was decided.

6. Judgment ⇐592

The rule against piecemeal prosecution of question of tax liability for particular year is not affected by fact that formal parties on behalf of government are different in the two proceedings.

7. Judgment ⇐592

The rule against piecemeal prosecution of question of tax liability for particular year applies even though first suit is by the government for a deficiency and the second by taxpayer for refund, where the same year's liability is at issue.

8. Judgment ⇐540

The scope of the "estoppel" of a judgment depends upon whether question arises in a subsequent action between the same parties upon the same or upon a different claim or demand, and, if claim or demand is the same, a judgment upon the merits is an absolute bar to the subsequent action.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estoppel".

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; I. M. Golden, Judge.

Action by the Pope Estate Company against Charles G. Johnson, Treasurer of the State of California, for writ of mandate ordering defendant to pay judgment for refund of franchise taxes paid under protest. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney and Adrian A. Kragen, Deputies Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Sullivan, Roche & Johnson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

The State Treasurer appeals from a judgment directing the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate ordering him to pay to plaintiff the sum of $3,167.91 with interest. In the trial court the cause was determined upon the petition of plaintiff and the demurrer of defendant.

As disclosed by the petition, the facts are as follows: On April 15, 1934, the plaintiff, a corporation doing business in California, filed with the state franchise tax commissioner its franchise tax return for the year 1933 showing a tax of $919.04, which was paid. Thereafter, in October of 1934, the franchise tax commissioner recommended the assessment of an additional tax against plaintiff for the year 1933 in the sum of $222.51. This additional levy was paid by plaintiff. In 1936 the franchise tax commissioner levied an additional tax against plaintiff for the year 1933 in the sum of $2,706.68. This additional levy was paid by plaintiff under protest. Thereafter, in May of 1937, plaintiff brought an action in the Superior Court of San Francisco for the refund of the amount paid under protest. This action was contested by the state, and on February 6, 1939, resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. This judgment was in the sum of $3,152.66, with interest, and became final through failure of the state to appeal. After the judgment became final, the plaintiff, on August 22, 1939, made written demand on the defendant state treasurer for its payment. The defendant refused to pay the judgment on the ground that the franchise tax commissioner had re-examined plaintiff's return for the taxable year 1933 and determined that plaintiff owed an additional tax for that year in the sum of $2,036.49. Plaintiff refused to accept this deduction from its judgment, and thereupon instituted the present mandamus proceedings to compel the payment to it of the full amount of the judgment. The trial court overruled the demurrer of defendant and entered its order and judgment from which this appeal is taken.

It is the theory of the appellant that, under section 30 of the Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act (Deering's General Laws of California, 1937, Act 8488), as amended in 1939 (Stats.1939, Chap. 1050, p. 2934, at p. 2968) when a taxpayer secures a final judgment for a refund of a portion of its franchise tax paid under protest, the state may reexamine the return for that and other years, and, if it finds that a further tax is due the state, may deduct this amount from the judgment.

Section 30 provides that the taxpayer may bring an action for a refund within one year from the date of payment, or within four years from the date prescribed for filing the return. After providing that the Attorney-General shall defend such action, the section provides that: "The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to pleadings, proofs, trials, and appeals are applicable to the proceedings herein provided for." After setting forth certain procedural matters not relevant to the present case, the section contains the paragraph upon which the state predicates its appeal. It reads as follows: "If judgment is rendered against the commissioner, the amount thereof shall first be credited against any taxes and interest due from the taxpayer under this act and the remainder refunded to the taxpayer or its successor by the State Treasurer on warrant drawn by the Controller."

It is the theory of the appellant that, under this section, although the period within which the state may levy an additional assessment has expired, when the taxpayer sues for a refund and secures a final judgment, the state may offset against such judgment, apparently without notice or hearing, not in the action for the refund, but after judgment for the refund has become final, any sum later determined to be due for the same year involved in the refund proceedings. The appellant argues that claims of the state barred by the statute of limitations, although they cannot be affirmatively enforced by action, in good conscience, should be allowed as an offset against a judgment for refund. It contends that section 30, quoted supra, is a statutory recognition of that doctrine.

[1-3] The difficulty with the argument of the appellant is that it completely disregards the doctrine of res judicata. When the taxpayer, the respondent, brought the action in the superior court for a refund of a portion of its 1933 tax, it put into issue the question as to whether a refund for the year 1933 was due to it. This placed in issue the question as to the total amount due from the taxpayer for the year 1933. The state, in that action could have raised the defense that, although the $3,000 plus claim for refund was proper, there were other items which the taxpayer had omitted from its return for that year, which, if included, would show that the taxpayer had underpaid its tax some $2,000. This is so even though the claimed deficiency for the year 1933 was barred by the statute of limitations. Lewis v. Reynolds, 284 U.S. 281, 52 S.Ct. 145, 76 L.Ed. 293. Therefore, when the court adjudicated that the taxpayer had overpaid its 1933 tax in an amount in excess of $3,000, it was in effect adjudicating that no other sum was due from the taxpayer. Whatever may be the proper interpretation of section 30, in so far as it may confer the right on the state to offset claimed deficiencies for prior or subsequent years to that involved in the refund proceeding, the section does not confer the right to offset a claimed deficiency for the same year as was involved in the refund proceeding. This is so because section 30 gives the right to offset as against such judgment "any taxes and interest due from the taxpayer". The adjudication that the taxpayer was entitled to a refund for the tax year 1933 is necessarily an adjudication that no other sum was due from the taxpayer under the franchise tax act for that year.

[4-7] The above principles have many times been stated by the federal courts. A suit for a recovery of the whole or a portion of a tax for a particular year throws open all questions relating to the same tax year. Neither the tax collecting authorities nor the taxpayer are at liberty to split up the question and prosecute in the courts the question as to liability for that year piecemeal. The rule is quite absolute in its character and applies so as to prevent a second action in the courts involving a particular year's liability even though the facts upon which the second suit rests occurred after the first was decided. International Curtis Marine Turbine Co. v. United States, Ct. Cl., 56 F.2d 708; Backus v. United States, Ct.Cl., 59 F.2d 242, certiorari denied 288 U.S. 610, 53 S.Ct. 402, 77 L.Ed. 984; Bankers' Reserve Life Co. v. United States, Ct.Cl., 44 F.2d 1000, certiorari denied 283 U.S. 836, 51 S.Ct. 485, 75 L.Ed. 1448; Bertelsen v. White, D.C., 58 F.2d 792, affirmed on different grounds, 1 Cir., 65 F.2d 719; Bowe-Burke Mining Co. v. Willcuts, D.C., 45 F.2d 394; Bindley v. Heiner, D.C., 38 F.2d 489; Chicago Junction Rys., etc., v. United States, Ct.Cl., 10 F.Supp. 156; 46 Yale Law Journal 1320 at p. 1327. The fact that the formal parties on behalf of the government are different in the two proceedings has no effect on the doctrine. Tait v. Western Md. Ry. Co., 289 U.S. 620, 53 S.Ct. 706, 77 L. Ed. 1405; Bertelsen v. White, supra. The rule applies even though the first suit is by the government for a deficiency and the second by a taxpayer for a refund, where the same year's liability is at issue. Bindley v. Heiner, supra. The cases are collected and commented on in an annotation appearing in 130 A.L.R. 374.

The basis of the rule is stated in Guettel v. United States, 8 Cir., 95 F.2d 229, 118 A.L.R. 1060 (see the same case in the lower court, D.C., 17 F.Supp. 725). In this case the taxpayer paid the federal estate tax and thereafter brought suit for a refund of certain designated items alleged to have been improperly included in the tax. After the judgment in that case had become final, the Supreme Court of United States decided a case indicating that the taxpayer was entitled to an additional refund. It was held that the second action was barred. The court stated (95 F.2d page 230):

"The estate tax was an entirety. It was a single tax based upon percentages of the net taxable value of the whole estate. It was not an aggregation of separate taxes upon separate items which went to make up the net taxable value of the estate. A single tax was assessed, and a single tax was paid. Because the tax assessed and paid was in excess of what was legally due the government, it was obligated to repay the entire excess; but the cause of action for the recovery of the whole excess arose out of one transaction and was a single cause of action, regardless of the number of grounds upon which the tax was excessive. A judgment having been obtained by the appellants for so much of the overpayment of the tax as was due to the inclusion of the value of insurance policies which were not a part of gross estate, this action to recover so much of the overpayment as was due to the inclusion of the value of Missouri real estate would seem to be barred by that judgment.

[8] "'The scope of the estoppel of a judgment depends upon whether the question arises in a subsequent action between the same parties upon the same claim or demand or upon a different claim or demand. In the former case a judgment upon the merits is an absolute bar to the subsequent action.' (Italics supplied.) Tait v. Western Maryland Railway Co., 289 U.S. 620, 623, 53 S.Ct. 706, 707, 77 L.Ed. 1405. The reason for this is that a judgment, if rendered upon the merits, is conclusive not only as to all matters which were decided, but as to all matters which might have been decided. [Citing cases.] The appellants were not at liberty to split up their claim for the recovery of their overpayment of the estate tax, and to prosecute it piecemeal or to present in their first suit only a portion of the grounds upon which they based their claim that the tax had been overpaid, and leave another ground or other grounds to be presented in a subsequent action." It was urged that the taxpayer did not know of his rights at the time the first action was tried. The court held on this point (95 F.2d page 232): "The rule of res judicata is based upon that public policy which requires that a single controversy which is capable of being completely determined in one suit shall be ended by the judgment in that suit, and shall not become the subject matter of subsequent litigation. See Southern Pacific Railroad Co. v. United States, 168 U.S. 1, 48, 18 S.Ct. 18, 42 L.Ed. 355. 'The public policy upon which the rule is founded has been said to apply with equal force to the sovereign's demand and the claims of private citizens. Alteration of the law in this respect is a matter for the lawmaking body rather than the courts.' Tait v. Western Maryland Ry. Co., supra, 289 U.S. 620, 624, 53 S.Ct. 706, 707, 77 L.Ed. 1405. The same public policy which gives rise to the rule should, we think, prevent its applicability being made dependent upon the knowledge or lack of knowledge of the parties as to their legal rights. Moreover, while a judgment upon the merits may be set aside for equitable reasons in a direct proceeding brought for that purpose, it may not be impeached collaterally."

Under these authorities we think the state is barred from urging in this proceeding that it has the right to offset against the final judgment the claimed deficiency in the 1933 tax of respondent. The final judgment in the refund action amounts to a final adjudication, conclusive on the state and taxpayer alike, that no further tax is due from the taxpayer for that year, and that the taxpayer is not entitled to any further refund for that year. Since this is so, section 30, by its very terms, referring only to the right to offset "due" taxes, has no application.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; WARD, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 153

FINK et al. v. WEISMAN et al.

Civ. 12979.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 20, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐799

Where appellants had not served and filed, at least ten days prior to hearing, in writing, their opposition to motion for dismissal of appeal, as required by court rules, opposition to the motion would not be considered. Rules for Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 20, § 3.

2. Appeal and error ⇐554(2)

Where appellants had failed to file in the District Court of Appeal either a reporter's or clerk's transcript, or an engrossed bill of exceptions, within time prescribed by law, their appeal from order directing that execution issue on judgment would be dismissed. Code Civ.Proc. § 953d.

Action by Benjamin Fink, interpleaded with William Austin Callaman and others against William Weisman and others, including Herbert L. Lantin, respondent. Judgment was entered in favor of respondent's assignor. From an order directing that execution issue on the judgment, William Austin Callaman and others appeal. A motion to dismiss the appeal was entered by respondent.

Motion granted; appeal dismissed.

Harry C. Mabry, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Maurice Rose, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

This is a motion by respondent to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that neither a clerk's nor reporter's transcript nor engrossed bill of exceptions has been filed in this court, and that the time within which to prepare and file the same has elapsed.

The record discloses that judgment was entered in favor of respondent's assignor February 6, 1934. On September 6, 1939, an order was entered by the trial court directing that execution issue on said judgment. From that order, November 4, 1939, appellants filed notice of appeal to this court. The record also discloses that neither a clerk's nor reporter's transcript nor engrossed bill of exceptions has been filed in this court or requested in the superior court.

[1, 2] At the time of the hearing of the present motion appellants offered to oppose the same upon the ground that notice of entry of the order from which an appeal had been taken was not served upon them in writing, nor had they waived notice of the same in writing or by oral stipulation made in open court and entered in the minutes of the court in conformity with the provisions of section 953d of the Code of Civil Procedure. See, also, Sterling Corporation v. Superior Court, 207 Cal. 370, 371, 278 P. 859. Respondent objected to our considering appellants' opposition to his motion, for the reason that the latter had not served and filed at least ten days prior to the hearing, in writing, their opposition to the motion, as required by Rule XX, section 3, Rules for Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal (213 Cal. lii, as amended by the Judicial Council October 5, 1932, effective November 5, 1932).

Respondent's objection is valid, and we will not consider appellants' opposition to respondent's motion. Since appellants have failed to file in this court either a reporter's or clerk's transcript or an engrossed bill of exceptions within the time prescribed by law, their appeal must be dismissed.

The present case well illustrates the reason for requiring counsel to strictly comply with the provisions of Rule XX, section 3, supra, for it appears from a certified copy of an affidavit of service filed in this court February 14, 1941, that on September 6, 1939, written notice of the entry of the order from which appeal is here taken was actually served upon appellants, but that an affidavit of service of the notice was not filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court until January 22, 1941. Had counsel for appellants complied with the provisions of the rule above mentioned, this fact would have been brought to the attention of respondent, who in turn would have been prepared to direct this court's attention at the hearing to the fact of service of written notice of entry of the order from which appeal is taken, thus obviating argument upon a point which was moot.

For the reasons above stated the motion to dismiss the appeal is granted and the appeal is dismissed.

MOORE, P. J., and WOOD, J., concurred.

43 Cal.App.2d 184

RICHTER v. ADAMS et al.

Civ. 2595.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 21, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 21, 1941.

1. Mines and minerals ⇐74

A lease giving right to drill for and remove hydrocarbons from lessor's property conferred no right in lessee to produce oil from other property, and hence lessee was entitled to payment from assignee of lease only out of oil produced from lessor's property, not out of oil from the same well but coming from other properties.

2. Pleading ⇐236(2, 3)

Amendment of a pleading immediately before or during trial is not a matter of right, but is within sound discretion of trial judge.

3. Appeal and error ⇐959(3)

An appellate court will not interfere with action of trial judge in permitting amendment of pleading immediately before or during trial, unless abuse of discretion clearly appears.

4. Pleading ⇐236(2, 3)

The exercise of discretion in permitting amendment of pleading immediately before or during trial must be sound and reasonable, not arbitrary nor capricious, and to a certain extent measure of the soundness of discretion used must be found in facts of each case.

5. Pleading ⇐236(2)

In action by oil and gas lessee to terminate assignees' interest in lease and recover for oil produced thereunder, refusing to permit assignees to amend their pleadings on the day set for trial, to show rendition of judgment several months before, holding that oil produced from their well was in fact produced from property other than the leased property, was an abuse of discretion, where assignees' new attorney had had only five days in which to familiarize himself with extensive record and there was strong indication that defense would be established if amendment were permitted and otherwise assignees would be compelled to pay twice for single wrong.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; W. L. Bradshaw, Judge.

Action by Edward R. Richter against Hugh Adams and others, for termination of interest in oil and gas lease, and for value of oil produced and sold from leased property. From an amended judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

J. W. Heard, Jr., of Bakersfield, for appellants.

Frederick E. Hoar, of Bakersfield, and Swaffield & Swaffield, Kenneth Sperry, and Joseph E. Madden, all of Long Beach, for respondent.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an appeal from an amended judgment terminating defendants' interest in and to an oil and gas lease dated February 20, 1933, made by Lizzie H. Glide, lessor, to Edward R. Richter, lessee, and the leasehold interest therein described, the hydrocarbons produced from the leased property, and certain oil well and drilling equipment, and also giving plaintiff judgment for $27,888.32 for oil produced and sold from the leased property. We will refer to the leased land as the Glide property and to the well involved as Glide No. 2. This is the second appeal in this case. Many of the facts are clearly set forth in the opinion on the first appeal (Richter v. Adams, 19 Cal.App.2d 572, 66 P.2d 226) and need not be repeated here.

After the reversal of the first judgment the case was again set down for trial. Defendants changed their counsel just before the new trial date. The new counsel appeared on the trial date, October 13, 1937, and asked for time to familiarize himself with the case. The trial judge re-set the case for October 18, 1937, with conditions imposed.

When the cause was called for trial, counsel for defendants presented and asked leave to file amended and supplemental pleadings. The motions were denied except as to one additional defense which was interposed.

In the answer on file it was admitted that much of the oil for which plaintiff demanded payment had been produced in and from the Glide property. By one of the amendments defendants sought to withdraw this admission and place in issue the question of whether or not the oil produced from Glide No. 2 was produced from the Glide property. It was alleged that the oil was not produced from the Glide property but was in fact produced from other property under lease to the Shell Oil Company and the Texas Company; that defendants had no knowledge of such facts until about April 24, 1936. Attached to the proposed answer were copies of findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment in cases decided in the superior court of Kern county entitled Shell Oil Company, a corporation, v. Hugh Adams et al., and The Texas Company, a corporation, v. Hugh Adams et al., which actions had been consolidated for trial.

In that case it was found that the Shell Oil Company and the Texas Company properties adjoined the Glide property; that Glide No. 2 at the surface was located 37.88 feet north and 25.58 feet east of the southwest corner of the Glide property; that the well had a total depth of 1780 feet measured from the derrick floor; that only the first 233 feet of that depth was within the Glide property; that all of the balance of the depth of the well was within the Shell Oil Company and the Texas Company properties; that all the oil and gas produced from Glide No. 2 came from the structures underlying the Shell Oil Company and the Texas Company properties; that none of it came from the Glide property; that 217,460.33 barrels of petroleum of the value of $114,379.03 had been produced through Glide No. 2 from the Shell Oil Company and the Texas Company properties; that the landowner's royalty had been paid and that defendants had converted the balance to their own use. Judgment was rendered against defendants for $92,376.71, the value of the oil so converted, less the landowner's royalty. Richter was not a party to this action. The findings and judgment are dated March 20, 1937. We are informed that the judgment became final and was in full force and effect at the time of the trial of this action. Other defenses were tendered in the offered pleadings which would have been good if they had been established.

The trial judge refused to permit the filing of this pleading. It remains for us to determine whether or not such ruling was an abuse of the discretion which the law vests in him.

[1] The lease from Mrs. Glide to Richter gave him the right to drill for and remove hydrocarbons from the Glide property only. Of course, it follows as a matter of law from such a lease that it confers no right in the lessee to produce oil from other property. Union Oil Co. v. Reconstruction Oil Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 170, 66 P.2d 1215. This lease was assigned to Adams, and of course the assignee had no greater right to trespass in the property of others than had the original lessee. The contract between Richter and Adams, from the provisions of which this action springs, provided for the payment of $8,500 from the latter to the former, and contained the following:

"Said sum shall be payable in the following manner, to-wit: Twenty-five (25) per cent of all money and proceeds received from the sale of oil, gas, other hydrocarbon substances, water, and/or all other things of value, produced, saved and sold from said premises, or any well or wells drilled or to be drilled on said premises, after the deduction of the one-sixth landlord's royalty, shall be set aside and designated as and made a fund for the payment of said $8,500 to first party herein, and shall be and become the property of the first party herein."

It seems clear that plaintiff was only entitled to payment of this $8,500 out of oil produced from the Glide property. It seems equally clear that if defendants could have established, as the plaintiffs in the oil company cases had established, that oil taken from Glide No. 2 all came from other properties and that none of it came from the Glide property, plaintiff would have been entitled to no part of it and no money judgment should have been rendered in his favor. This same proposition also had an important bearing on the other phase of the case, that is, the forfeiture of defendant's interest in the leasehold. The failure to pay plaintiff his portion of the revenue from the production of the well was an important, if not a principal, ground of that portion of the judgment.

[2-4] The rule that the amendment of a pleading immediately before or during a trial is not a matter of right but is placed within the sound discretion of the trial judge is too well established to need the citation of supporting authorities. It is equally well established that an appellate court will not interfere with the action of the trial judge unless it clearly appears that there has been an abuse of discretion. It is also true that the exercise of his discretion must be sound and reasonable and not arbitrary nor capricious. To a certain extent the measure of the soundness of the discretion used must be found in the facts of each case.

[5] Here, it must be admitted that defendants were dilatory in seeking to amend their pleadings. The judgment in the oil company cases had become final several months before they asked leave to plead the defense which was disclosed by that judgment. However, there are some rather unusual facts appearing in this case. A new attorney had been employed by defendants just before the case was set for trial. This attorney was given five days in which to familiarize himself with the rather extensive record in the case. At the end of that time he presented his pleadings and asked leave to file them. These pleadings presented defenses which, if established, would have been a complete defense to the action. That one of them might have been established is indicated by the judgment in the oil company cases. There it was flatly decided that the oil in question here was not produced from the Glide property. While plaintiff was not a party to that action, the judgment there rendered is a strong indication that a similar result might have been reached in this case had the amendment been permitted and similar evidence presented to that introduced in the oil company cases.

The result of the two judgments, the one before us and the one in the oil company cases, is to compel defendants to pay different parties for their one wrong in converting the same oil. While defendants should be held liable for their wrongful conversion of the oil, they should be compelled to compensate the parties actually damaged by their wrongful acts. They should not be compelled to compensate another who had not been damaged thereby. The effect of the judgment in this case is to hold that Richter was the owner and entitled to the possession of the oil produced from Glide No. 2, while the effect of the judgment in the oil company cases is to hold that the Shell Oil Company and the Texas Company were the owners and entitled to the possession of the same oil. That this contradiction might result in a grave injustice is too clear for argument. Where such a result can be avoided, technicalities of the law should not be permitted to defeat justice.

We cannot escape the conclusion that the trial judge seriously erred in denying defendants the right to file the amended and supplemental pleadings. Such refusal was an abuse of judicial discretion which should not be permitted to stand under the facts of this case. The amended and supplemental pleadings should have been filed under such terms, and with such costs imposed on defendants, as were just.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 204

In re GUARDIANSHIP OF CARLON'S ESTATE.

FERREL v. CARLON.

Civ. 6450.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 24, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 26, 1941.
Hearing Denied April 24, 1941.

1. Insane persons ⇐71

The probate court was without jurisdiction to authorize guardian of incompetent person's estate to convey title to personalty or lease realty belonging to estate as incidents to compromise of claim based on unenforceable executory contract by incompetent to sell cattle and rent grazing land to claimant. Probate Code, § 1530a.

2. Guardian and ward ⇐37
Insane persons ⇐65

The guardian of minor child or incompetent person exercises trust demanding highest degree of good faith and confidence.

3. Infants ⇐2
Insane persons ⇐4

The law is scrupulously careful to protect interests of minor children and incompetent persons incapable of looking after their affairs.

4. Insane persons ⇐71

The statutes authorizing incompetent person's guardian to compromise claim against estate by transfer of specific assets thereof with court's approval was not intended to authorize sale or confirmation of sale of personalty or approval of leasing or sale of realty in incompetent person's estate with less formality than is required in deceased person's estate. Probate Code, § 1530a.

5. Insane persons ⇐65

The statute authorizing guardian of incompetent person's estate to compromise any claim against estate authorizes compromise only of valid enforceable claims. Probate Code, § 1530a.

6. Insane persons ⇐71

The statute providing that all proceedings concerning sales by guardians must conform as nearly as possible to code provisions concerning sales by administrators indicates that rules respecting enforcement of executory contracts in deceased persons' estates shall also apply to incompetent persons' estates. Probate Code, § 1534.

7. Insane persons ⇐73

An executory memorandum of agreement by one adjudged incompetent before its terms were carried out to transfer title to his cattle and lease his grazing land to another was invalid and unenforceable against incompetent's estate, in absence of previous order for sale of cattle, payment of consideration, delivery of cattle, or definite description of land and specification of duration and material terms of proposed lease in memorandum.

8. Insane persons ⇐65

A guardian's alienation of property of ward, such as incompetent person, without first procuring court order therefor, is absolutely void.

9. Insane persons ⇐65

Representatives of estate, such as guardians of incompetents' estates, may allow only legal and enforceable claims against estates and must reject all illegal and unenforceable claims.

10. Insane persons ⇐65

A claim, which is unenforceable against incompetent person's estate because of uncertainty of executory contract on which claim is based, bar of statute of limitations, or otherwise, may not be subject of compromise in such estate. Probate Code, § 1530a.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; H. S. Schaffer, Judge.

In the matter of the guardianship of the estate of Timothy H. Carlon, an incompetent person. From an order authorizing W. J. Ferrel, the guardian, to lease the ward's realty and sell his personalty to the estate as incident to an order to compromise a claim against the estate, Jane Alice Carlon, the ward's wife, appeals.

Reversed, with direction.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

Lafayette J. Smallpage and Forrest E. Macomber, both of Stockton, for appellant.

Gumpert & Mazzera, of Stockton, and C. Ray Robinson, of Merced, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice.

Jane Alice Carlon, the wife of Timothy H. Carlon, an incompetent person, has appealed from an order of the probate court of Merced county, authorizing the leasing of real property and the sale of personal property belonging to his estate, incident to an order to compromise a purported claim under the provisions of section 1530a of the Probate Code.

Mr. Carlon is an old man possessed of real and personal property of a value in excess of the sum of $100,000. The appellant is his wife. They have been separated for some time. They executed an agreement settling property rights between them. No question is raised regarding her right to prosecute this appeal. October 10, 1938, he was adjudged to be incompetent and W. J. Ferrel was appointed and qualified as guardian of his estate. July 2, 1938, prior to the adjudication of incompetency, Mr. Carlon and Clyde D. Booth signed a memorandum agreement which was written in a small pocketbook belonging to the person last named. The memorandum was in the following language:

"July 2nd

"Tim agrees to sell cattle to me for $30.00 per head approximate number 1700 exact count to be determined when they come out of the mountains.

"Also I am to rent all grazing land in Mariposa and Tuolumne Co. for 10,000 per year & Mrs Ferratti is to be allowed to run her cattle on the range as in the past and Tim will graze his horses on range land at no cost.

"This does not include any river bottom land.

"I can depend on Tim for advise any time.

"Tim reserves 50 best steers to be sold off clover next season, he to pick them.

"(Signed) T. H. Carlon
"(Signed) Clyde D. Booth"

No part of the foregoing agreement was performed prior to the adjudication of incompetency. There was no delivery of cattle and no payment of any portion of the purchase price thereof. The proposed lease of land was not executed. Neither the duration, the terms of the proposed lease nor the description of the property were specified in the memorandum signed by the parties. No claim for specific performance of the executory contract was filed with the estate. January 19, 1939, Mr. Ferrel, the guardian, filed in the estate of his ward, a verified petition to compromise the claim of Clyde D. Booth, based on the foregoing written memorandum, pursuant to section 1530a of the Probate Code. There is attached to the petition, as exhibits, the written memorandum heretofore quoted, a proposed ten-year lease of 20,000 acres of land consisting of "all of the real property situated in the counties of Mariposa and Tuolumne, belonging to the estate of said incompetent person" for the yearly rental of $10,000, a bill of sale of 1800 head of cattle and a proposed agreement between the guardian and Clyde D. Booth covering many details of the proposed transaction. Opposition to that petition was filed by the wife of the incompetent person on the grounds that the probate court lacked jurisdiction or authority to compromise the purported claim, to transfer title to the cattle or to grant leave to lease the real property.

Section 1530a of the Probate Code provides that notice of the hearing of a petition to compromise a claim against the estate of an incompetent person shall be given in accordance with section 1200 of that code. That section requires proof of the giving of the required notice at the time of the hearing, as a prerequisite to acquiring jurisdiction of the proceeding. In making the order authorizing or rejecting a compromise of a claim against an estate, it is customary for the court to find that notices were previously given as required by law. The record on appeal in this proceeding contains no proof of the giving of notice of the hearing as required by law. The court failed to find that notice of the hearing was given. After a full hearing on the petition the court on May 31, 1939, made and entered its order. The order of the court does not specifically authorize the guardian to sell the cattle belonging to the estate of the incompetent person, nor does it authorize the leasing of the real property. It merely declares that "The court makes its ruling that petition to compromise claim against estate be granted". From that order this appeal was perfected.

[1] We are of the opinion the probate court was without jurisdiction to authorize the conveyance of title to personal property or to lease real estate belonging to the estate of the incompetent person, under section 1530a of the Probate Code, as incidents to the compromising of a purported claim against the estate based on the unenforceable executory contract above quoted.

[2-6] Section 1530a of the Probate Code, upon which the guardian relies, reads in part: "The guardian, with the approval of the court, may compromise any claim against the estate or any suit brought against the guardian as such, by the transfer of specific assets of the estate, or otherwise. To obtain such approval, the guardian shall file a verified petition with the clerk showing the advantage of the compromise."

We assume that the preceding section authorizes the probate court to approve a compromise of only such claims against the estate of an incompetent person as are valid and legally enforceable. Section 708 of the Probate Code provides that neither the administrator of an estate nor the judge may approve a claim which is barred by the statute of limitations. The guardian of a minor child or of an incompetent person exercises a trust demanding of him the highest degree of good faith and confidence. The law is scrupulously careful to protect the interests of minor children and incompetent persons who are incapable of looking after their own affairs. If a guardian be permitted to allow and satisfy an illegal claim against the estate of his ward, even with the approval of the probate court, it would place an unwarranted burden on the court, and open the door for speculation and dissipation of such estates. It is apparent the legislature did not intend to authorize the sale or confirmation of the sale of personal property or approve the leasing or sale of real property in the estate of an incompetent person with less formality than is required in the estate of a deceased person. If those transactions could be consummated in the guise of authorizing the compromise of illegal or unenforceable claims as mere incidents thereto, the estates of incompetent persons and minors might suffer great loss. We therefore conclude that section 1530a is intended only to authorize the compromising of valid, enforceable claims against estates. Section 1534 of the Probate Code indicates that the same rules with respect to enforcing executory contracts in estates of deceased persons shall also apply to the estates of incompetent persons. That section provides:

"Sales by guardians may be at public auction or private sale, as the guardian deems best. All proceedings concerning sales by guardians, giving notice of sale, reselling the same property, return of sale and application for confirmation thereof, notice and hearing of such application, making orders authorizing the sale of stocks, bonds, or investment certificates and shares of building and loan associations rejecting or confirming sales * * * ordering and making conveyances of property sold, and allowance of commissions, must conform, as nearly as may be, to the provisions of this code concerning sales by administrators, unless otherwise specially provided in this chapter."

As applied to the estates of deceased persons, section 850 of the Probate Code declares that executory contracts to convey real estate, made by decedents before their death, may be enforced only when the maker is bound by a written contract to make conveyances which "the decedent, if living, might have been compelled to make." 11b Cal.Jur. 201, sec. 800; 2 Bancroft's Probate Practice, 971, sec. 530.

Likewise, with reference to the making of leases of real property in the estates of deceased persons, section 844 of the Probate Code prohibits an executor or administrator from leasing property for a term exceeding one year without first obtaining an order of court so to do. The application for such an order must be made pursuant to sections 840 to 842 of the same code. It is there asserted the order must specify the amount of rental, the duration of the lease and the terms and conditions of the lease. Section 772 of that code provides that sales of personal property may be made only after the giving of public notice thereof containing a description of the property to be sold and a designation of the time and place of sale. It is provided the sale must be held at the courthouse door, at some other public place or at the residence of the decedent. No sale of personal property may be made unless it is present at the time of the sale, except as otherwise directed by the court. All of the foregoing conditions for sales of personal property or for leasing real property would be dispensed with if, in the guise of compromising an unenforceable executory contract in the estate of an incompetent person, the lease and transfer of title to the cattle which are involved in this proceeding, could be approved in this manner.

[7] We are of the opinion the executory memorandum of agreement to transfer title to the cattle and to lease the real property in the present proceeding is invalid and unenforceable since Mr. Carlon became incompetent before its terms were carried out, and because it is uncertain in its terms. There was no previous order for sale of the cattle. There was no consideration paid, and there was no delivery of the cattle. No title passed. The memorandum fails to describe the land so that it may be definitely located, and it fails to specify the duration of the proposed lease or its material terms. That memorandum could not have been enforced, in our judgment, if Mr. Carlon had not been adjudged incompetent. Written agreements to lease property, which were much more specific in their terms than the memorandum which is involved in this proceeding were held to be unenforceable for uncertainty. Wineburgh v. Gay, 27 Cal. App. 603, 150 P. 1003; Laugharn v. Bryant, 5 Cal.App.2d 721, 43 P.2d 312.

[8] It has been repeatedly held that alienation by a guardian of the property of a ward, without first procuring an order of court to do so, is absolutely void. Kendall v. Miller, 9 Cal. 591; Morse v. Hinckley, 124 Cal. 154, 56 P. 896; 108 A.L.R. 940, note; De La Montagnie v. Union Ins. Co., 42 Cal. 290. In the case last cited it is said in that regard: "We think, too, irrespective of adjudicated cases, that the plain intent of the statute is to make void every alienation of the property of the ward, if made by the guardian without the order of the Court; and that the rule, in itself, is one of wholesome application to such sales, whether of the personal or real estate of the ward."

[9] It has been repeatedly held that the representatives of estates may allow only legal, enforceable claims against the estates, and that they must reject all illegal and unenforceable claims. Etchas v. Orena, 127 Cal. 588, 593, 60 P. 45; 11a Cal.Jur. 785, sec. 558.

[10] In the text found in 3 Bancroft's Probate Practice, page 1397, section 785, it is suggested that a claim which may be allowed or compromised against an estate, must be a valid claim which might have been specifically enforced in the lifetime of the deceased. It is said in that regard: "A very interesting problem arises as to whether an obligation entered into by the decedent in his lifetime, but which remains wholly or in part executory at the time of his death, is a 'claim' * * * within the meaning of statutes requiring presentment in probate. It is well settled that if such a contract is not terminated by the fact of death of the decedent, his estate remains liable. If of such a nature as to have been specifically enforceable had the decedent continued to live, the contract is so enforceable after his death."

The clear inference is that if the executory contract is not legally enforceable it should not be allowed or compromised. If a claim which is based on an executory contract is unenforceable for uncertainty, because it is barred by the statute of limitations, or otherwise, it may not be the subject of compromise in the estate of an incompetent person under section 1530a of the Probate Code. It follows that the court was without authority to approve the compromise of the purported claim in this proceeding by authorizing the transfer of title to the cattle in question or the leasing of the real property in a manner not authorized by statute.

The order is reversed and the court is directed to disallow the purported claim of the respondent.

We concur: PULLEN, P. J.; TUTTLE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 847

BRADLEY v. RYLAARSDAM.

Civ. 12974.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 26, 1941.

Appeal and error ⇐801(1)

An appeal would be dismissed on respondent's motion, where certificate of clerk of Superior Court filed in support of motion set forth facts required by court rule, and all grounds stated in motion were supported by such certificate and the authorities cited. District Court of Appeals Rules, rule 6.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County.

Action by Harry E. Bradley, etc., against C. Rylaarsdam. From the judgment the defendant appeals.

Appeal dismissed.

George Cohn, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

H. Sidney Laughlin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The respondent having filed his motion to dismiss the appeal in the above entitled matter, supported by a certificate of the clerk of the superior court setting forth the facts required by rule VI of this court, and it appearing that all of the grounds stated in the motion are supported by the said certificate and by the authorities cited,

It is ordered that this appeal be, and the same hereby is, dismissed.

43 Cal.App.2d 106

PEOPLE v. SERNA.

Cr. 3394.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

1. Larceny ⇐23

Where one commits a series of successive acts of taking as the result of a single felonious intent, moved by a single, uninterrmittent force, such series constitutes only one continuous act, and is a "single offense" against the state.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Single Offense".

2. Larceny ⇐23

Whether a series of successive acts of taking constitutes several thefts or a single theft must be determined by the particular circumstances of each case.

3. Embezzlement ⇐22

Where a wrongdoer has lawfully gained possession of property, each of his successive acts in appropriating parcels of the trust fund to his own use is a "separate offense" constituting embezzlement, that is, theft.

4. Larceny ⇐18

Where a wrongdoer has by unlawful means acquired possession of the money or chattels of his neighbor, his guilt of the crime of theft is not dependent on whether he thereafter appropriates the fruits of the theft by a single act or at successive intervals.

5. Larceny ⇐23

If the circumstances do not show that exact time of completion of misappropriation is controlling, court may conclude that several transactions constitute a single offense.

6. Larceny ⇐23

Where the evidence establishes clearly the commission of several offenses by distinct appropriations, all different sums, on separate occasions, then they do not comprise a series of acts that are part of a "single offense", but are "separate offenses".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Separate Offense".

7. Larceny ⇐23

Though the general intent to deprive another of his possessions may have been framed in accused's mind before he completed his first offense, yet subsequent acts whereby the accused appropriates different sums of money or separate items of goods or chattels are "separate offenses."

8. False pretenses ⇐20½

If a defendant has fraudulent intent to obtain property by false representations, then his obtaining property on the first occasion, under the inducement of his false representation, constitutes a completed crime, and, when other property is thereafter obtained under the influence of the fraudulent representations, a "separate offense" is committed.

9. False pretenses ⇐20½

Where defendant applied to State Relief Administration for unemployment relief, and stated that he was unemployed and that no member of his family had any source of income, though at the time of application and thereafter his wife was employed and receiving income, and defendant received relief amounting to $347.76 in semimonthly installments of $28.98 each, the receipt of each semimonthly installment was a "separate offense", and hence defendant could not be charged with the crime of grand theft but merely with a series of petty thefts. Pen.Code, §§ 484, 995.

10. False pretenses ⇐20½

Though relief applicant's fraudulent statement in his application for relief tainted each transaction whereby he received semimonthly installments, it did not have the effect of amalgamating all of the transactions into a unified deed so as to render applicant guilty of grand theft. Pen.Code, § 484.

11. False pretenses ⇐20½

The fact that there existed a reservoir of unlimited resources from which relief applicant might have secured any sums of money by false representation, even in excess of $200, did not make the taking of any one of semimonthly installments of $28.98, aggregating $347.76, a part of a grand theft, but merely petty theft. Pen.Code, § 995.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Swain, Judge.

Pablo Serna was accused by information of grand theft. From an order setting aside the information, the People appeal.

Order affirmed.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Burdette J. Daniels, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

David C. Marcus, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The plaintiff appeals from an order setting aside the information wherein Serna was accused of grand theft. Defendant's motion was made upon the grounds that: (1) Defendant was committed without probable cause; (2) that a public offense had not been charged; and (3) that the transcript of the preliminary trial disclosed at most a series of petty thefts. Pen.Code, sec. 995.

Defendant is an alien residing in Los Angeles county. He applied to the State Relief Administration for unemployment relief. His application was filed October 4, 1937, in which he made the statement that he was unemployed and that no member of his family had any source of income. However, at the time of his application, his wife had been employed since the preceding September by the California Walnut Growers Association, with whom she continued until April, 1938, and through which she earned the sum of $459.89. The relief furnished defendant amounted to $347.76 which was paid to defendant in semi-monthly installments of $28.98 each.

[1-6] The sole question for determination as stated by the attorney-general is "whether the defendant can be charged with the crime of grand theft or whether he is only chargeable with a series of petty thefts". Because of the fact that the total sum received from the state exceeded $200, which is the value necessary to constitute the crime of grand theft, and because defendant made a written application containing a false statement prior to receiving any relief, the argument is made that all sums received by defendant from the State Relief Administration, after having made his application, are parts of one plan, one design, one taking from the state. In support of this contention, appellant cites section 484 of the Penal Code and certain decisions. People v. Mills B. Sing, 42 Cal. App. 385, 183 P. 865; People v. Dillon, 1 Cal.App.2d 224, 36 P.2d 416; People v. Fleming, 220 Cal. 601, 32 P.2d 593. Where a party commits a series of successive acts of taking as the result of a single felonious intent, moved by a single, unintermittent force, such series constitutes only one continuous act, one offense against the state. People v. Dillon, supra; Wharton's Criminal Law, 11th Ed., § 1169. Whether a series of successive acts of taking constitutes several thefts or one single crime must be determined by the particular facts and circumstances of each case. One of the guiding rules for reaching such determination is that where a wrongdoer has lawfully gained possession of property, each of his successive acts in appropriating parcels of the trust fund to his own use is a separate embezzlement, i. e., theft. But where he has by unlawful means acquired possession of the money or chattels of his neighbor, his guilt of the crime of theft is not dependent upon whether he thereafter appropriates the fruits of his theft by a single act or at successive intervals. People v. Stanford, Cal.Sup., 105 P.2d 969. If the circumstances of a case do not show that the exact time of completion of the misappropriation is controlling, the court may conclude that the several transactions constitute one offense. But where the evidence establishes clearly the commission of several offenses by distinct appropriations, all different sums, on separate occasions, then they do not comprise a series of acts of a single crime but they are many distinct crimes.

[7-11] While the general intent to deprive another of his possessions may have been framed in the mind of the accused before he completed his first offense, yet subsequent acts whereby the accused appropriated different sums of money or separate items of goods or chattels are distinct offenses. People v. Rabe, 202 Cal. 409, 261 P. 303. If the defendant had the fraudulent intent to obtain property by false representations then his obtaining property on the first occasion, under the inducement of his false representation, constituted a completed crime. "When at a later date other property was obtained under the influence of the fraudulent representations which had earlier been made a separate offense was committed." People v. Ellison, 26 Cal.App. 2d 496, 79 P.2d 732, 733. In the instant case, the receipt of money from the State Relief Administration was in each instance a separate offense. People v. Miles, 37 Cal. App.2d 373, 99 P.2d 551. His original application furnished defendant an entre or a basis for negotiating for each of the payments subsequently received. While his fraudulent statement in his application for relief tainted all of his transactions, Pen. Code, sec. 484, it did not have the effect of amalgamating all of them into a unified deed. Before he could receive even the first payment, he was required to endorse upon the warrant the following: "The payee in accepting and endorsing this warrant certifies that he or she has correctly reported his or her status to the said State Relief Administration; has complied with its regulations and is eligible for relief." It was therefore essential that the same endorsement be executed by defendant upon each subsequent warrant without which he could not have gained any further sums. He was never in a position at any time to appropriate to his own use any sum belonging to the state in excess of $28.98. In his reply brief, the attorney-general says that "Exhibit A" certified by Mrs. Hamren and approved by A. Parsons was a continuous authorization of the accounting division of the finance department of the State Relief Administration to issue a payroll semi-monthly and that from said payroll the warrant was to be drawn by the state controller continuously semi-monthly thereafter in the sum of $28.98, until this authorization was revised or cancelled by the social worker. But the testimony of Mr. Pettitt, assistant to the deputy chief accounting officer of the State Relief Administration, testified that each two weeks after November 8, 1937, he checked the record and sent to the state controller's office the payroll record for $28.98. The fact that there existed a reservoir of unlimited resources from which he might secure any sum of money, even in excess of $200, did not make the taking of any one of the sums of $28.98 a part of any crime except the petty theft which was committed by the taking of that particular sum. The State Relief Administration might have been closed on the day following defendant's receipt of his first payment, or the administration might have detected the falsity contained in the application, which would at once have terminated defendant's right to relief, or at any time after filing his application defendant might have experienced a change of heart, any one of which would have closed the state's resources against any further taking by defendant. In view of the foregoing.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: WOOD, J.; McCOMB, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 117

PEOPLE v. EGBERT.

Cr. 1750.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

1. Criminal law ⇐1144

Where defendant appealed from judgment following conviction and from order denying his motion for new trial, and only contention on appeal was with respect to order, District Court of Appeal would assume that lack of merit in appeal from judgment was conceded.

2. Criminal law ⇐911, 1156(1)

A motion for new trial is addressed to sound discretion of trial court and any ruling thereon will not be disturbed on appeal except upon a manifest and unmistakable abuse of discretion.

3. Criminal law ⇐945(1)

On defendant's motion for new trial on ground of alleged newly discovered evidence, the chief consideration before trial court was whether newly discovered evidence was of sufficient probative force to render probable a different result upon retrial.

4. Criminal law ⇐938(1)

Denial of defendant's motion for new trial on ground of alleged "newly discovered evidence" was not an abuse of discretion where facts in record justified conclusion that same result would probably be reached upon a retrial, and trial court could have found that affidavit filed by defendant in support of motion was entitled to little or no credence, and facts proposed to be shown upon new trial merely tended to corroborate defendant's story.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Newly Discovered Evidence".

5. Criminal law ⇐956(3)

Where defendant made a motion for new trial on ground of alleged newly discovered evidence and filed an affidavit in support of motion, that no counter affidavit was filed by the people did not entitle defendant to have motion granted, since whether affidavit called for an answer was for trial court to decide in exercising its discretion.

6. Criminal law ⇐1176

Denial of defendant's motion for new trial on ground of alleged newly discovered evidence did not result in a "miscarriage of justice" where record showed that defendant was fairly tried and convicted, and alleged newly discovered evidence merely tended to corroborate defendant's story and probably would not have produced a different result upon a retrial.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Miscarriage of Justice".

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Raymond T. Coughlin, Judge.

Carson Egbert was convicted of burglary of the first degree, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

James F. Gaffney and Peter Mannino, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Q. Brown, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

TUTTLE, Justice.

[1] Defendant appeals from the judgment following his conviction of burglary of the first degree, and also from an order denying his motion for new trial. The only contention on appeal is in respect to the latter, and we will therefore assume that lack of merit in the appeal from the judgment is conceded.

On the evening of September 8, 1940, at about the hour of 9 o'clock, Mrs. Carroll heard a noise at the rear door of her residence. She and her husband had already retired. She arose and went to the service porch and turned on the light. She saw a newly made hole in the screen of the outside door, and a bare arm extending into the house. The hand was reaching for the door knob on the inside. She saw a face pressed closely to the screen, which she testified was that of defendant. The man disappeared. The police were called. They found defendant a short distance from the house. He had parked his car in front of the Carroll home, and was walking toward it when apprehended. There were a number of scratches on his right arm, running parallel with the arm about one-eighth of an inch apart. These scratches were white when first noted, but turned red later.

Upon motion for new trial, defendant contended that it was a case of mistaken identity, and that he was some place other than the scene of the crime at the time of its commission. He based his motion upon newly discovered evidence, and in support thereof filed an affidavit by one Opal Smith, whom he testified he had met at a bar prior to the offense, but whose name he did not ascertain until about a week after the trial. She averred that she had met defendant the night of the crime, and after they had had a few drinks together, they drove in his car toward Land Park, which is a very short distance from the Carroll home; that they parked the car before they arrived at the park; that they remained there a short time; that she told defendant that she wished to go to the home nearby where she was employed; that defendant suggested that they walk in the park, which they proceeded to do; that after an argument, defendant left her and started to walk toward his car. The time was 9:55 p. m.

[2, 3] It is a well-settled rule that a motion for new trial is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and any ruling thereon will not be disturbed on appeal except upon a manifest and unmistakable abuse of discretion. The chief, if not the only, consideration before the trial court is whether or not the newly discovered evidence is of sufficient probative force to render probable a different result upon a retrial of the case. 20 Cal.Jur. p. 92, sec. 61.

[4] The record here does not show an abuse of discretion in the denial of the motion. The positive identification of defendant by Mrs. Carroll, the fresh scratches upon his arm, the manner in which he was dressed, the fact that he was found at the scene of the crime, and that his car was parked near the house which he attempted to enter—these and other facts in the record must have convinced the trial court that another trial would have been a futility. The court may have also reasonably found that the affidavit was worthy of little or no credence, taking into consideration the obvious character and associations of affiant.

[5] Appellant contends that no counter affidavit was filed by the People. None was necessary. The trial court, in the exercise of its discretion, must have taken that fact into consideration in denying the motion. Whether or not the affidavit called for an answer was a matter for the court to decide, in exercising its discretion.

Appellant relies upon the case of People v. Shepherd, 14 Cal.App.2d 513, 58 P.2d 970, where the order denying a motion for new trial was reversed. There, the newly discovered evidence consisted of the testimony of a witness who stated that he had committed the crime of which the defendant had been convicted, and that he, said witness, had pleaded guilty to the precise charge, and judgment had been pronounced against him. Furthermore, the District Attorney there announced that he would not oppose the motion. It could scarcely be denied that the trial of a defendant under such circumstances and without the proposed evidence, would be a manifest injustice, and it is clear that the denial of the motion was an abuse of discretion. Here, the facts which it is proposed to prove have no such probative force. At most, they merely tend to corroborate the story of defendant.

[6] The record shows that defendant was fairly tried and convicted. There are other facts and circumstances not related here which tend to prove his guilt. All the evidence clearly indicates that no miscarriage of justice resulted from the ruling of the court.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: PULLEN, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 70

BROWN et al. v. STATE PERSONNEL BOARD et al.

Civ. 12734.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 17, 1941.

1. Officers ⇐72(1)

Dismissal of probationary employee is not effected unless written reasons for dismissal are filed with the personnel board within the probationary period. St.1913, p. 1041, § 9.

2. Officers ⇐69

A civil service probationer is entitled to have the statutory procedure for dismissal strictly followed. St.1913, p. 1041, § 9.

3. Officers ⇐72(1)

Dismissals of probationary employees were invalid where reports of separation containing reason for dismissals were filed with personnel board more than six months after appointments of such employees, irrespective of custom of board of equalization in filing such reports after expiration of probationary period. St.1913, p. 1041, § 9.

4. Customs and usages ⇐8

Custom cannot overcome unequivocal statutory provisions.

5. Officers ⇐72(1)

The statement "services unsatisfactory" was not a statement of "reason" for dismissal within terms of statute requiring filing of statement of reasons for dismissal of probationary employee. St.1913, p. 1041, § 9.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Reason".

6. Officers ⇐72(1)

Under statute requiring reasons for dismissal of probationary employees to be filed, probationer's failure with respect to conduct, capacity, integrity, or moral responsibility, as ground for dismissal under rule of personnel board, should be described in language intelligible to a man of ordinary understanding. St. 1913, p. 1041, § 9.

7. Officers ⇐72(1)

In amended rule of personnel board requiring thorough investigation, to determine whether probationary employee is fully qualified for permanent civil service status, the language used, including the word "determine", indicates that appointing power is not clothed with authority to act arbitrarily or capriciously, but that its investigation is akin to that of any fact-finding tribunal, and must be reported to personnel board at the end of second and fourth months of probationary period, so as to circumvent arbitrary removal for reasons other than lack of the qualities prescribed.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Determine".

8. Officers ⇐72(1)

The mere fact that rule of personnel board, before amendment, required only a want of capacity or conduct to satisfy discretion of appointing power in dismissing probationary employee, did not relieve appointing power of statutory obligation to state reasons for dismissal in report, and statement "unsatisfactory services" was insufficient. St. 1913, p. 1041, § 9.

9. Officers ⇐72(1)

A dismissal of probationary employee did not fail because of discrepancy in name of his position as recited in separation report, in that position was given its former name.

10. Officers ⇐69

Where dismissals of probationary employees were ineffective because of failure to file sufficient statements of reasons for dismissal, alleged fact that employees were dismissed for political purposes was immaterial.

11. Mandamus ⇐143(2), 187(9)

The existence of laches as a bar to action for writ of mandate is a fact, determination of which is left largely to discretion of trial judge by consideration of all circumstances, and his determination will not be disturbed unless manifest injustice has been done or his conclusion is not reasonably supported by evidence.

12. Equity ⇐67

There is no fixed rule as to circumstances that must exist or time that must elapse before doctrine of laches can be appropriately applied, but the matter is in chancellor's sound discretion.

13. Action ⇐63

Definite principles guide the courts in determining whether a litigant has been diligent, as affecting existence of laches, and all of the facts of each case must determine guilt of laches.

14. Mandamus ⇐143(2)

One seeking mandamus to compel reinstatement to a civil service position after a wrongful discharge must act promptly, as affecting his rights under plea of laches.

15. Mandamus ⇐143(2)

A civil service employee was precluded from obtaining mandamus to compel reinstatement if prejudice resulted to his adversary from unexplained delay in seeking remedy, and prejudice rather than lapse of time is determinative, so that plea of laches is unavailable if delay has caused no material change in statu quo and no detriment to party pleading laches.

16. Mandamus ⇐168(4)

Evidence held to authorize finding that probationary employees seeking writ of mandate to compel reinstatement after wrongful dismissal were not guilty of "laches", in view of showing that board of equalization had knowledge of employees' insistence upon their rights, and that no prejudice resulted from delay in view of failure to show that other persons were employed to fill their positions.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Laches".

17. Mandamus ⇐187(9)

Under rule that all intendments must be invoked in support of trial court's judgment, reviewing court presumed, in support of findings and judgment negativing prejudicial effect of laches in seeking writ of mandate to compel reinstatement of probationary employees, that appointment of persons to fill discharged employees' positions occurred after action for writ of mandamus was commenced.

18. Mandamus ⇐143(2)

The contention that delay in bringing action for writ of mandate to compel reinstatement of discharged probationary employees was prejudicial, because it caused loss of testimony of witnesses who died before trial, was untenable where matters concerning which such witnesses could have testified were not shown, and dismissals of employees were ineffective as a matter of law, making such testimony immaterial in any event.

19. Mandamus ⇐187(9)

In absence of proof that, if discharged probationary employees were reinstated, they would have to be re-educated in changed procedure, reviewing court must presume that employees were familiar with the changed procedure, and hence no prejudice was suffered because of their delay in bringing action for writ of mandate.

20. Mandamus ⇐143(1)

An action for writ of mandate to compel reinstatement of dismissed probationary employees was not barred by statute authorizing employees to be laid off, and requiring such employees to bring action within one year, where dismissals were attempted because employees' services were not "satisfactory" rather than for reasons authorizing "lay-off". St.1933, p. 712, § 14a.

21. Officers ⇐65

The statute authorizing employees to be laid off under specified circumstances, and requiring action brought by employee to be filed within one year, is applicable only to suspensions, which are authorized only when there is lack of work, lack of funds, or in the interests of economy, and not to outright dismissals. St.1933, p. 712, § 14a.

WOOD, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Parker Wood, Judge.

Action by Robert A. Brown and others against the State Personnel Board of the State of California and others, for writ of mandate directing reinstatement of petitioners to civil service positions. From a judgment granting the relief sought, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; CURTIS, J., dissenting. TRAYNOR, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of this matter.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Bayard Rhone, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellants.

Robert W. Kenny, Morris E. Cohn, and Howland & Prindle, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

It having been adjudged that a writ of mandate should issue to the state board of equalization directing that petitioners be reinstated to their several positions and be paid their accrued salaries from the dates of their wrongful dismissals, appellants take this appeal. In order more successfully to enforce the judgment the state personnel board and certain officers of both boards were joined in the action.

Petitioners are seven in number. Prior to appointment each was certified as eligible for his position by the personnel board. In the case of each of them, except petitioner Hudelson, a dismissal was attempted after he had served as a probationer for more than four months, and in most instances petitioners actually served the required six months probationary period less from two to ten days. The reason for every dismissal given in the separation report was: "services unsatisfactory", and nothing more. The positions held by petitioners as such probationers were those of supervising liquor control officer, liquor control officer and investigator. Petitioner Hudelson, as probationer, held the position of "supervising liquor control officer" for less than one month, having occupied the same position for five months preceding the commencement of such probationary term under a temporary authorization whereby he was designated "chief liquor control officer".

The principal contention made by appellants is that certain findings are in reality conclusions of law and are contrary to settled legal principles. With respect to petitioners Brown, Torrance, McNamara and Brady, the finding is that the reports of separation in each instance were not filed with the personnel board until after the expiration of the six months probationary period, when a permanent civil service status had been attained by those petitioners in their respective positions. With respect to petitioners Magee and Long, the court found that no written reasons for the attempted dismissals were ever filed with the personnel board and that as a result thereof those two acquired a permanent civil service status. With respect to Hudelson, the court found that no written reason for his attempted dismissal was ever filed with the personnel board; that no report of separation was filed, and that as a result Hudelson attained a permanent civil service status. With respect to all of the petitioners, it was found that the reports of separation failed to comply with the provisions of the Civil Service Act and the rules and regulations of the personnel board, in that they contained no written reasons for the dismissals.

This attack upon the findings presents for our consideration two primary questions: (1) Is it necessary in order to effect a dismissal of a probationary civil service employee that the report of separation be filed with the personnel board prior to the expiration of the employee's probationary period? (2) Is the statement that the employee was dismissed because of "services unsatisfactory" a proper statement of the reasons for his dismissal under the provisions of the Civil Service Act and the rules and regulations of the personnel board?

[1-4] Section 9 of the Civil Service Act, St.1913, p. 1041 (Deering's General Laws, 1913, Act 606) governs the case. That portion of the Act material to our consideration provides: "* * * All appointments shall be for a probationary period to be fixed by the commission but not to exceed six months. Unless such appointee shall have been dismissed within such probationary period by the appointing power, for reasons stated in writing and filed with the commission, his appointment shall become permanent." Unless written reasons for the dismissal of the employee were filed with the personnel board within the probationary period no dismissal was effected. Kelly v. State Personnel Board, 31 Cal. App.2d 443, 88 P.2d 264. At page 449 of 31 Cal.App.2d, at page 267 of 88 P.2d the court in that case said: "The statute has an obvious meaning, clear in construction, language and in law, that is that a written statement of reasons must be filed with the commission prior to the expiration of the probationary period, in order to effect the dismissal of a probationer." Such a construction gives effect to all parts of the statute. So construed, a civil service probationer is entitled to have the statutory procedure for dismissal strictly followed. Nilsson v. State Personnel Board, 25 Cal.App.2d 699, at 705, 78 P.2d 467. For like reason the court herein was warranted in concluding that the dismissals of Brown, Torrance, Magee and Brady were abortive, in that the reports of separation containing the reason for the dismissals were filed with the personnel board more than six months after the respective appointments. The custom of the board of equalization in filing reports of separation after the expiration of the probationary period is of no consequence. Custom cannot overcome unequivocal statutory provisions. American National Bank of San Francisco v. Sommerville et al., 191 Cal. 364, 216 P. 376; Davidson v. Burns, 38 Cal.App.2d 188, 192, 100 P.2d 1105, 101 P.2d 568.

[5-7] The reason for the dismissals contained in the several reports of separation was not sufficient to effect a dismissal of petitioners. At the time the reports (except as to Hudelson) were filed with the personnel board, Rule 9, section 1 of the personnel board provides as follows: "* * * If the conduct, capacity, moral responsibility or integrity of the probationer is found to be unsatisfactory, it shall be the duty of the appointing power to dismiss him from the office and to report the dismissal, together with the reasons therefor, to the executive officer of the board in writing * * *" (Italics ours.) The statement, "services unsatisfactory", is not a compliance with the above rule requiring that the reasons for dismissal of a probationer be stated in a report of dismissal. Rule 9 directs the appointing power to dismiss a probationer if he be found unsatisfactory with respect to his conduct, his capacity, his moral responsibility or his integrity. But in reporting the dismissal reasons must be given to the executive officer. "Unsatisfactory", applied to services, is not a reason. It is the result of the probationer's misconduct, or of his lack of capacity to do his work, or of his want of integrity or of moral responsibility. It is not a statement that he had failed in respect to one or more of those qualities of head and heart. Had the author of the separation reports taken pains to peruse the printed instructions on the forms prepared for making such reports he might have learned a lesson which he had not imbibed from the responsibilities of his office. For there he would have read: "A dismissal during probationary period for unsatisfactory conduct or capacity. Report must contain a statement of the reasons for dismissal." Where a report assigns as the reason for "separation" only the phrase "services unsatisfactory", or "unsatisfactory service", and no statement of fact is included with respect to the employee's lack of any one of the qualities prescribed by the statute, it is clear that there is no statement of "the reasons for the dismissal". In view of the requirement of Rule 9, a probationer's failure as to conduct, capacity, integrity or moral responsibility should be described in language intelligible to a man of ordinary understanding. Kelly v. State Personnel Board, supra. The dismissal of Kelly, attempted in the reported case, was made when Rule 9 allowed a discharge for unsatisfactory "conduct or capacity * * * in the discretion of the appointing power". But when these petitioners (excepting Hudelson) were dismissed Rule 9 had been amended so that it read: *"It shall be the duty of the appointing power during the probationary period * * * to investigate thoroughly his conduct, capacity, moral responsibility and integrity, to determine whether the employee is fully qualified for permanent civil service status."* Not only must the appointing power investigate such moral and mental qualities of a probationer, but he is required to make a determination as to "whether the employee is fully qualified for permanent civil service status". This language could mean nothing more than that the appointing power is not clothed with authority to act arbitrarily or capriciously. Its clear implication is that the investigation to be made by the "appointing power" is akin to that of any fact finding tribunal, and must be reported to the personnel board at the end of the second and fourth months of the probationary period. The language of the rule circumvents the arbitrary removal of a probationer for reasons other than for the lack of some of those qualities prescribed by Rule 9.

The case of Neuwald v. Brock, 12 Cal. 2d 662, 86 P.2d 1047, is not in point. Neuwald was discharged prior to the amendment of Rule 9 in October of 1935. Under the rule as it stood prior to that date the appointing power was authorized to dismiss a probationer in his own discretion if "the conduct or capacity of the probationer has not been satisfactory to the appointing power". Under that language not only did the appointing power have a broader discretion, but the reason assigned for the dismissal of Neuwald was in the language of the rule itself. It was because the reason stated for the dismissal of Neuwald followed the precise language of Rule 9 as it then existed that the Supreme Court approved of the dismissal. This is not akin to the language used in reporting the dismissals in the instant case and is therefore not in point.

[8] Hudelson stands in a situation quite different from that of the other petitioners. Nevertheless the foregoing discussion applies with equal force to his case. His attempted dismissal preceded by three months the aforementioned amendment to Rule 9. But the mere fact that the rule at that time required only a want of "capacity" or "conduct" to satisfy the discretion of the appointing power did not relieve the latter of the obligation which obtained then, to-wit, that reasons for a dismissal must be stated in the report of the appointing power. "Unsatisfactory services" was not a compliance with Rule 9 prior to the amendment.

[9] It is immaterial that the report of separation stated that Hudelson was dismissed from the position of "chief liquor control officer". Since that was the former name of the position which he held as probationer, there is no merit in the point urged by him that the "dismissal" failed because of the discrepancy in the name of his position recited in the separation report. Giving the office either name, the dismissal was abortive because the reasons assigned therefor were an insufficient compliance with Rule 9.

[10] The contention is made that the findings that petitioners were dismissed for political purposes are not supported by the evidence. This becomes immaterial in view of our decision that the dismissals were ineffective.

[11] It is earnestly urged that by reason of the fact that the present proceeding was commenced from two to two and a half years after the attempted dismissals of the several petitioners their action is barred by laches. The existence of laches is a fact the determination of which is left largely to the discretion of the trial judge by a consideration of all the circumstances of the case. His determination will not be disturbed unless a manifest injustice has been done or unless his conclusion is not reasonably supported by the evidence. Wolpert v. Gripton, 213 Cal. 474, 2 P.2d 767; Akers v. Hufford, 128 Cal.App. 146, 16 P.2d 802. The instant action was filed February 14, 1938. The trial court made complete findings on the plea of laches and concluded that the action of petitioners is not barred on that account. The substance of the findings is as follows: The resolutions of dismissal as to each of the seven were adopted on the following dates, to-wit: Hudelson, July 30, 1935; Brown, December 23, 1935; Long, February 5, 1936; the other four, January, 1936; that immediately after the attempted dismissals petitioners notified the appellant boards of their claims of wrongful dismissal and demanded reinstatement; that petitioners were diligent in making repeated demands for reinstatement; that petitioners were informed that their cases would be investigated and that they would be reinstated if their claims were just; that petitioners were told that other employees who had been dismissed at the same time had commenced actions to obtain their reinstatement, and that the board of equalization requested petitioners to refrain from commencing any actions to enforce their rights until after the pending litigation had been decided; that in December of 1937 the pending litigation was settled and those petitioners were reinstated, following which the board of equalization advised petitioners that they also would be reinstated; that the board of equalization was not obligated to employ persons to occupy the positions of petitioners after their attempted dismissals, but that the board did in fact employ such persons; that Ray Edgar and John C. Corbett, members of the board of equalization at the time of the attempted dismissals, had died prior to the time of trial and that two other employees had also deceased, but that appellants made no offer to prove what such deceased persons would have testified to had they been present at the trial, and that accordingly no prejudice resulted to appellants in the presentation of their defense.

[12-15] There is no fixed rule as to the circumstances that must exist or as to the period of time which must elapse before the doctrine of laches can be appropriately applied. 10 Cal.Jur. 526. "The matter is one which reposes in the sound discretion of the chancellor." Ibid. While definite principles guide the courts in determining whether a litigant has been diligent, precedents are of little value, for it is all of the facts of each case which must determine whether a petitioner has been guilty of laches. LaShells v. Hench, 98 Cal.App. 6, 276 P. 377. One of the guiding rules in determining the rights of a petitioner under a plea of laches is that he must be diligent. Where one seeks a writ of mandamus to compel his reinstatement to a civil service position after a wrongful discharge he must act promptly. Hayman v. City of Los Angeles, 17 Cal.App.2d 674, 62 P.2d 1047. If because of his delay in seeking his remedy, without offering a satisfactory explanation for the delay, a prejudice results to his adversary, he will be precluded from enforcing his demand. It is not so much a question of the lapse of time as it is to determine whether prejudice has resulted. If the delay has caused no material change in statu quo ante, i. e., no detriment suffered by the party pleading the laches, his plea is in vain. Hayman v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 17 Cal.App.2d page 680, 62 P.2d 1047.

[16] There was no abuse of discretion in holding that petitioners Brown, Brady and Hudelson were not guilty of laches. The evidence is amply sufficient to support the findings of the court as to those petitioners. Immediately following the attempted dismissals they demanded of a number of the board of equalization that they be reinstated. Such demands for reinstatement were repeated prior to the institution of the present action. Both of them were requested by an officer of the board to take no legal action to enforce their reinstatement until after the determination of proceedings then pending on behalf of other dismissed employees to secure their reinstatement. Both Brown and Brady requested hearings before the personnel board. Their motions for reinstatement were continued from time to time until they were finally dismissed. With respect to petitioner Hudelson, the evidence shows that he did not make such frequent demands for reinstatement as did Brown and Brady immediately following their attempted dismissals. Having communicated with the personnel board with reference to his reinstatement, Hudelson employed an attorney to enforce his rights.

It is thus clear that the board of equalization, immediately following the attempted dismissals of the three above named petitioners, had knowledge that all three insisted upon their asserted rights to be reinstated. The finding of the court that the long delay on the part of Brown and Brady in instituting their action to secure reinstatement was excusable is justified by the proof of their continual efforts to enforce their rights and by the evidence of their compliance with the request of the board to await the outcome of the litigation then pending. While the evidence of Hudelson's attempts to gain reinstatement is not sufficient to prove an adequate excuse for his long delay in filing suit, at the same time there is no evidence that appellants were prejudiced by the delay. It was stipulated that no person was employed to fill the position of supervising liquor control officer, Grade 2, from which the board had attempted to discharge Hudelson. The only material prejudice which the board could have suffered under the circumstances would have been the payment of a salary to the person taking Hudelson's place, as well as paying the accumulated salary of Hudelson for the same period of time.

With reference to petitioners Torrance, Magee, McNamara and Long, it is clear that the evidence does not support the findings of the court that they were diligent in presenting their claims for reinstatement. (a) Magee gave no testimony whatever at the trial. There is no evidence that the board of equalization ever knew of his demand for reinstatement. It does not appear that he made any effort to regain his position by reinstatement at any time prior to the commencement of this action. (b) Petitioner Torrance testified that prior to his dismissal he conversed with a former member of the board of equalization, and that four months after his attempted dismissal he talked with the chief liquor control officer of the board concerning the possibility of his employment in one of several vacancies. But in neither conversation was the subject of his reinstatement in his former position mentioned. (c) Petitioner McNamara testified that upon receiving notice to the effect that he was dismissed he discussed with his superior officer the reason for the attempted dismissal. Following a consultation with a deputy attorney general upon the subject shortly after receiving his notice on January 22, 1936, he was advised that the dismissal was valid. In the latter part of February, 1936, McNamara conferred with a member of the board of equalization, who advised him that his best course was to apply for another position. Thereafter he was informed by an administrative assistant to the board that there were then numerous vacancies. Then, for the first time, by writing he requested the personnel board to restore his name to the eligible list for the position of collector, and by letter inquired concerning the possibility of being reinstated to his former position of investigator. In reply he was informed that his reinstatement could come only through the board of equalization. There is no evidence that he ever requested the last named board to reinstate him. He had knowledge of the proceedings which had been instituted by other employees to effectuate their reinstatements. Although requested to join in those actions he refused to do so. (d) Following the adoption of the resolution to dismiss petitioner Long, that gentleman stated his grievance to the office of the lieutenant governor and lodged a protest with the board of equalization. Thereafter for a period of six months he made repeated attempts to confer with two members of the board of equalization. Also, he wrote letters to the board demanding to know the reasons for their action in attempting to dismiss him. All of the petitioners engaged an attorney in December of 1936 to try to effectuate their reinstatement. But there is no proof as to what action, if any at all, was taken by such attorney.

Since the evidence fails to support the findings of diligence on the part of the four last mentioned petitioners in prosecuting their demands to be reinstated, it follows that if their laches resulted in any prejudice to appellants the judgment is not supported as to them. If such prejudice did result, it must have been because of the employment of others, after the attempted dismissals, to perform the duties done by petitioners as probationers; or because material witnesses had deceased prior to the trial; or because such changes had been made in the law and in the rules governing the activities of the board of equalization as would require an unreasonable time for petitioners, after reinstatement to gain a ready knowledge of such changes.

[17] The only evidence relating to the employment of other persons to fill the positions formerly occupied by the four last mentioned petitioners is to the effect that, after the several dismissals, other persons were employed to fill such positions. But there is no evidence that, after the attempted dismissals and prior to the time when this suit was commenced, other persons were employed to fill the positions of those petitioners. Had substantial evidence to that effect been received it would have constituted proof that appellants had been prejudiced by the delay of such petitioners. The only approach to such proof is that certain persons were appointed to fill the positions formerly held by those four petitioners after the attempted dismissals. Under such circumstances the familiar rule that all intendments must be invoked in support of the judgment of the trial court applies. Accordingly it must be presumed in support of the findings and judgment that such persons, holding the positions once occupied by the four last mentioned petitioners, were employed after the present action was commenced. Basing our conclusion upon that presumption, we must hold that no prejudice could have resulted to the board from the delay. This is true since the board had notice of the claims for reinstatement at the time the new employees were installed in the positions formerly occupied by the named petitioners.

[18] The contention that the delay was prejudicial because it resulted in the loss of the testimony of witnesses who deceased prior to the trial is untenable. Appellants failed to make any offer of proof of the matters concerning which such witnesses could have testified had they been living at the time of the trial. Consequently we are unable to determine the materiality of such testimony. Since the dismissals were ineffective as a matter of law, such testimony could not have been material in any event. If such testimony had been directed to the reasons for the dismissals it would not be material, for the very good reason that the grounds for such attempted dismissals were of no importance.

[19] The contention that if petitioners are reinstated the board will have to reeducate them in the changed procedure is likewise unavailing. No evidence was offered to prove that petitioners are not familiar with all of the changes in the laws, rules and procedure relating to the business of the board which have occurred since their respective dismissals. In the absence of such proof we must presume that petitioners are familiar with such laws, rules and changes thereof, and that therefore no prejudice has been suffered on that account.

[20, 21] The final contention, that the causes of action of petitioners are barred by section 14a of the Civil Service Act, cannot be sustained. That section provides: "Whenever it is necessary because of lack of work or lack of funds, or whenever it is advisable in the interests of economy, to reduce the staff of any department or agency in the State service, the appointing power may * * * lay off employees according to the procedure set forth in this act and the rules and regulations thereunder. * * *" Stats.1933, Chapter 214, p. 712. The Act further provides that any action brought by a discharged employee against the appointing power must be filed within one year, and if compensation during the layoff is sought it must be commenced within ninety days. From the portion of the section which we have quoted it is obvious that it is not intended to apply to outright dismissals but only to suspensions. A suspension is authorized in three situations only: when there is a lack of work, lack of funds or in the interests of economy. In the instant case dismissals of all of the petitioners were attempted because their services were not "satisfactory", and not for any of the reasons which would authorize a "lay-off" or suspension. Moreover, there is no evidence that there was a lack of work or a lack of funds or that petitioners were discharged in the interest of economy. Therefore, the provisions of section 14a regarding the time within which an action under that section must be instituted are not applicable to the instant case.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: McCOMB, J.

WOOD, Justice (concurring in part).

I concur in the judgment in so far as it concerns petitioners Brown and Brady. I do not concur in the view that the other petitioners are not barred by laches. If their petitions had been promptly filed the state would not now be compelled to pay to them salaries for a long period of time during which the benefit of their services was not received.

43 Cal.App.2d 100

PEOPLE v. BEST.

Cr. 3372.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

Hearing Denied March 17, 1941.

1. Robbery ⇐24(3)

Evidence identifying accused as party who entered banks and by the use of firearms took away money, sustained conviction for grand larceny.

2. Robbery ⇐26

The question of identity of bank robber was solely for determination of jury where there was substantial evidence to support it.

3. Robbery ⇐23(1)

A witness may describe the firearms used by person accused of robbery, whether the witness saw the firearms during the commission of the crime or whether subsequently the accused identified them as his property.

4. Robbery ⇐23(1)

In prosecution for robbing banks, action of the trial court in allowing police officer to describe dark glasses and revolvers which the officer had seen and which the accused had admitted to the officer were the accused's property was not error.

5. Criminal law ⇐406(1), 409

In prosecution for robbing banks, wherein description of guns which accused had admitted to be his property corresponded with description given by witnesses of guns used in the robberies, such declarations were admissible as against interest, and action of the trial court in admitting the declarations was not abuse of discretion.

6. Criminal law ⇐1104(3)

Where accused assigned as error certain statements by district attorney in course of argument, but in application for transcript accused did not specify argument of counsel as a portion of the phonographic reporter's notes required by accused to be transcribed, the accused's request for a transcript of the entire proceeding from the commencement of trial to and including imposition of judgment did not comply with court rule requiring the court to order the phonographic reporter to transcribe such portion of his notes as in the opinion of the court might be necessary to present fairly and fully the points relied upon by an appellant. Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 2, § 7.

7. Criminal law ⇐1144(19)

Where accused assigned as error statements by district attorney in course of argument but none of the argument was contained in the record, if the accused's all-inclusive language in his application for transcript could be deemed to require the argument and assignment thereto to be transcribed, although he specified neither, the District Court of Appeal was required to conclude that there was no assignment made to the misconduct of the district attorney, in view of presumption that reporter performed his official duty, by excluding the arguments of district attorney and including in the transcript all matters necessary to comply with the rules of the District Court of Appeal. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 15; Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 2, § 7.

8. Criminal law ⇐1110(9)

If accused intended to prosecute appeal on misconduct of district attorney, on finding that record was void of argument criticized and of any assignment of error thereto, order for a diminution of the record would have brought to the District Court of Appeal any part of the argument of the district attorney and the assignments of error made thereto. Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 2, § 7.

9. Criminal law ⇐1119(4), 1129(1)

Where there was in the record neither argument of district attorney nor assignment of error by accused, the District Court of Appeal would not determine that prejudicial error occurred as result of the argument.

10. Criminal law ⇐792(2)

In prosecution for robbing banks, instruction that all persons concerned in commission of a crime, whether directly committing the act or whether abetting its commission, are punished as principals and are equally guilty, did not require reversal on ground that there was no evidence which would bring accused within the definition of an aider or abettor, in view of the fact that distinction between principals and accessories has been abolished.

11. Criminal law ⇐59(5)

All participants in felonies are chargeable as principals.

12. Criminal law ⇐59(5)

To "abet" another in the commission of a crime implies a consciousness of guilt in instigating, encouraging, promoting or aiding the commission of such crime. Pen. Code, § 31.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Abet".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; A. A. Scott, Judge.

James Best was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

James Best, in pro. per.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Gilbert F. Nelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

From two judgments of conviction of grand larceny, after former convictions of felonies, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. As grounds for reversal he contends: (1) That the proof was insufficient to establish his identity as the perpetrator of the crimes; (2) that the court erred in receiving certain testimony descriptive of firearms used by appellant in the commission of the crimes; (3) that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in his argument to the jury, and (4) that the court erred in giving certain instructions with reference to "aiding and abetting" in the commission of the robberies.

Appellant was indicted for the commission of three felonies. In the first count he was accused of having robbed by means of force certain Japanese men of the sum of $8,000. On this count he was acquitted. The facts forming the basis of count 2 are as follows: On July 21, 1939, two men entered the lobby of the Hill and Atlantic branch of the Security-First National Bank. One of them stood in the customers' lobby while the other entered the enclosure behind the gate and by displaying his revolver forced the employees of the bank to face the rear wall while he took money from the cash drawers. Appellant was identified as the one who took the money by the employees of the bank, including Powell, Nelmes and the manager, DeWalt. At the time of the robbery appellant held a handkerchief over his face but lowered it to make his conversation intelligible to DeWalt, who was at a distance of two feet from him. At that time DeWalt gained a profile view of appellant's face. As to his general appearance and size, he was identified by Powell, and with particular reference to his size and dress by Mr. Nelmes. At the time appellant wore dark, white-rimmed glasses and held an automatic revolver. He removed from the bank $6,603.12.

The facts supporting count 3 of the indictment are as follows: On December 11, 1939, two men entered the front door of the Whittier and Euclid branch of the California Bank. One stood at the front door covering the employees and customers with a revolver while his partner, menacing those present with an automatic pistol, took currency from the tellers' cages in the amount of $2,124 and removed it from the bank.

Appellant was identified as taker of the money by the manager, Mr. Connell, the assistant manager, Mr. Higgens, three tellers, Messrs. Thomas, O'Malley and Schlundt, and the stenographer, Miss Gracy. All of the witnesses were positive of their identification. At the time appellant carried a .45 automatic, blue steel pistol that was worn and faded. While robbing this bank appellant wore nothing to conceal his features. He was subsequently arrested in Portland, Oregon. While waiting to be transported to Los Angeles, appellant conferred with Officer Stromwell of the Los Angeles police. He admitted to the officer that the two revolvers which he carried were his property. One was the .45 automatic and the other was a .38 Colt used by appellant in committing the robberies. He was shown a pair of white-rimmed dark glasses and admitted their ownership also. The glasses were introduced in evidence and were identified by the bank employees as the glasses worn by appellant at the time of the robbery. The only witness offered by appellant to rebut the testimony of the People's witnesses, one Jack Coady, a customer of the Security-First National Bank, was unable to contribute any testimony of value with reference to the lack of identity of appellant as the robber.

[1, 2] The evidence is ample to support the finding of the jury that appellant was the person who entered the two banks and by the use of firearms took away the money of the bank. People v. Pianezzi, 42 Cal.App.2d 265, 108 P.2d 732. The question of the identity of the robber was solely for the determination of the jury where there was substantial evidence to support it. People v. Farrington, 213 Cal. 459, 463, 2 P.2d 814; People v. Connelly, 195 Cal. 584, 593, 234 P. 374; People v. Deal, 42 Cal.App.2d 33, 108 P.2d 103. That finding is fortified when the trial court in reviewing the evidence on the motion for a new trial denies the motion.

[3, 4] Appellant assigns as error the action of the court in allowing the police officer to describe the dark glasses subsequently received in evidence as an exhibit and the two revolvers which had been taken by the Portland police and held by them. There is no vice in allowing a witness to describe the firearms of a person accused of robbery, whether the witness saw the guns during the commission of the crime or whether subsequently the robber identified the guns as his property. People v. Powell, 71 Cal.App. 500, 513, 236 P. 311. Not only had the officer seen the revolvers, but to him appellant admitted that they were his property.

[5] The witnesses to both robberies described in detail the guns used by appellant. They described and identified the dark glasses worn by appellant in the commission of the robbery of the Security-First National Bank. The description of the guns, admitted by appellant, while in Portland to be his property, corresponded with the description by the witnesses of the guns used in the robberies. Such declarations were admissible as against interest and were competent evidence which, taken in connection with other proof, tended to establish the guilt of appellant. People v. Ammerman, 118 Cal. 23, 32, 50 P. 15. Admitting such declarations under the circumstances was addressed to the trial court's discretion, which is not shown to have been abused. People v. Connelly, 195 Cal. 584, 234 P. 374.

[6-9] Appellant assigns as error certain statements by the district attorney in the course of his argument. None of the argument of the district attorney is contained in the record. In his application for a transcript appellant did not specify argument of counsel as a portion of the phonographic reporter's notes required by him to be transcribed. It is true that appellant requested a "transcript of the entire proceeding from the commencement of the trial to and including the imposition of judgment". But this cannot be said to be a compliance with section 7, Rule II of the Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal. That rule requires the court to order the phonographic reporter to transcribe such portions of his notes as in the opinion of the court may be necessary to fairly and fully present the points relied upon by appellant. Misconduct of the district attorney is not mentioned in the "Application for Transcript". The judge's order was to prepare the transcript "as applied for". If appellant's all-inclusive language in his application for a transcript may be deemed to require the argument and his assignment thereto, although he specified neither, we must conclude that there were no assignments made to the misconduct of the district attorney, in view of the presumption that the reporter has performed his official duty, Code Civ. Proc., Sec. 1963, subd. 15, by excluding the arguments of the district attorney and by including in the transcript all matters necessary to comply with the rules of this court. If appellant had any intention of prosecuting his appeal upon the misconduct of the district attorney, on finding that the record was void of the argument criticized and the assignments made, the order for a diminution of the record would have brought to this court any part of the argument of the district attorney and the assignments of error made thereto. Since there is in the record neither argument of the district attorney nor assignment of error by appellant, we are in no position to determine that any prejudicial error occurred. People v. Green, 13 Cal.2d 37, 45, 87 P.2d 821; People v. Collins, 195 Cal. 325, 352, 233 P. 97.

[10-12] The final assignment of error made by appellant is that the court by instructing the jury that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether directly committing the act or whether they abetted its commission shall be prosecuted, tried and punished as principals and are equally guilty. Appellant contends that there is no evidence presenting such issue in his case, for the reason that the employees of the bank described him as the number one man of the robberies and that there is no testimony to the effect that defendant was any other member of the two robberies, and that there is no evidence which would bring him within the definition of an aider or abettor. But the distinction between principals and accessories was long ago abolished. Under the law all participants in felonies are chargeable as principals. Appellant would be equally as guilty whether he pressed his gun against the heads of the bank employees and required the delivery of the money or stood at the doorway and merely shouted terror to the employees if they did not comply with the demands by his partner for the bank's money. To "abet" another in the commission of a crime implies a consciousness of guilt in instigating, encouraging, promoting or aiding the commission of such criminal offense. Penal Code, § 31; People v. Steelik, 187 Cal. 361, 367, 368, 203 P. 78; Lassen v. Board of Dental Examiners, 24 Cal.App. 767, 772, 142 P. 505.

Judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: WOOD, J.; McComb, J.

JOHNSTON v. OTA et al.

Civ. 12881.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

1. Evidence ⇐43(3, 4)

Generally, a court will not take judicial notice of other actions, including those pending or concluded in the same court.

2. Evidence ⇐43(2, 3)

The authority of a court to take judicial notice of its own records is limited to proceedings in the same case.

3. Evidence ⇐43(3)

The court may take judicial notice of proceedings in another cause tried in the same court only where an unreasonable hardship will result from failure of the court to do so.

4. Judgment ⇐951(1)

Although judgment pleaded as a bar to an action was an adjudication of matter at bar and might have been rendered by the same court upon the same cause of action, and although such judgment and its supporting papers might be on file in the same court, the party pleading the prior adjudication carried the burden of establishing the plea and the burden could be met only by actual proof of the records of the prior case.

5. Judgment ⇐715(1)

In order to establish plea of "res judicata", it must appear either on the face of record or be shown by extrinsic evidence that precise issue raised was determined in prior suit.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

6. Evidence ⇐43(3)
Judgment ⇐951(4)

In action for breach of rental contract wherein plea of res judicata was filed, the trial court erred in taking judicial notice of judgment roll in prior action between the same parties before the same court, which was dismissed, and in sustaining plea of res judicata and dismissing the action without receiving formal proof.

7. Judgment ⇐572(2)

If demurrer filed by defendants in first action was sustained for lack of jurisdiction or because of uncertainties or ambiguities, judgment in the first action would not under the "res judicata" doctrine bar subsequent action based upon the same facts.

8. Judgment ⇐570(5)

If judgment in first action did not determine the merits of the existing controversy, upon a complaint that contained a valid declaration of all the ultimate facts, the judgment of dismissal based upon order sustaining general demurrer would not be a bar under the "res judicata" doctrine to a subsequent action based upon the same facts.

9. Judgment ⇐954

In action for breach of rental contract, wherein defendants who filed plea of res judicata rested their case upon the judgment attached to their answer as an exhibit, which showed that the parties to the action were the same as those to prior action, action of the trial court in denying plaintiff's offer to prove by the judgment roll that the claims asserted by the plaintiff were not the same as those asserted in prior action was error.

10. Judgment ⇐951(4)

Fact that judgment which was relied on to sustain plea of res judicata was attached as an exhibit to the answer merely established its genuineness and due execution and did not prove the matters adjudicated by the judgment. Code Civ.Proc. § 448.

11. Judgment ⇐570(5)

Generally, judgments merely of dismissal, whether voluntary or involuntary, are not on the merits and do not operate as a bar or "estoppel" in subsequent proceedings involving the same matters unless it appears that the judgment necessarily involves those matters.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estoppel".

12. Judgment ⇐725(1)

Every "estoppel" must be certain to every intent and not to be taken by argument or inference, and if upon the face of the record anything is left to conjecture concerning what was necessarily involved and decided, there is no "estoppel" in it when pleaded and nothing conclusive in it when offered in evidence.

13. Judgment ⇐715(1)

In order to justify judgment of "res judicata", it must be shown that the rights of the plaintiff alleged in second action are the same rights that had been adjudicated in first action. Code Civ.Proc. § 1911.

14. Judgment ⇐951(4)

The plea of former adjudication can be proved only by the judgment roll or other competent evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Georgia P. Bullock, Judge.

Action by John Johnston against Y. Ota and others on a rental contract. From an adverse judgment, the plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Mitchell & Gold, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joseph S. Dubin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment after trial of a plea of res judicata to counts 3 and 4 of the amended complaint after a dismissal of counts 1 and 2 on plaintiff's motion.

In the present action plaintiff demands damages for a breach of contract to pay rentals in the sum of $1,800 on lands of plaintiff and for $500 which plaintiff "was compelled to expend for the cultivation and irrigation of said lands (the alleged obligation of the lessee) an itemization of said expenses being attached" as an exhibit.

Defendant interposed a number of defenses including the plea in bar by reason of a former judgment of dismissal of an action brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendants. From such judgment of dismissal, it appears that an action involving the same parties had been dismissed by the same court on November 11, 1938, after "plaintiff has failed to file a third amended complaint".

When the case was called for trial, the court upon the motion of defendants proceeded with the trial of the plea of res judicata. Code Civ.Proc. § 597. At the trial no evidence was introduced. A copy of the judgment in the first case was attached as an exhibit to the answer. Without receiving any formal proof the court took judicial notice of the contents of the judgment roll and made findings substantially as follows: That counts 3 and 4 are upon the same claim and involve the same facts and parties as in the first action; that the evidence necessary to establish the allegations in the first action was and is the same evidence that would be necessary to establish plaintiff's claim in the third and fourth counts in the present action; and that all matters and things contained in the third and fourth counts of the second amended complaint in the present action "have been concluded and adjudicated in favor of said defendants and against plaintiff by reason of said judgment of dismissal".

The questions for our determination are: (1) Can the superior court take judicial notice of the contents of the judgment roll in a former adjudication between the same parties in another action, and (2) Was it error to refuse an offer of the judgment roll in the first action?

[1, 2] (1) The general rule is that the court will not take judicial notice of other actions, not even those pending or concluded in the same court. Bank of America v. Button, 23 Cal.App.2d 651, 74 P.2d 81; People v. Newell, 192 Cal. 659, 221 P. 622; Stanley v. McElrath, 86 Cal. 449, 25 P. 16, 26 P. 800, 10 L.R.A. 545; Paridy v. Caterpillar Tractor Co., 7 Cir., 48 F.2d 166; Glaze v. Bogle, 105 Ga. 295, 31 S.E. 169. The authority of a court to take judicial notice of its own records is limited to proceedings in the same case. Sewell v. Price, 164 Cal. 265, 128 P. 407.

[3, 4] In reversing the trial court which found, by judicial notice, that the action was barred by a judgment in a former action in the same court, the circuit court of appeals of the 7th circuit held that only under exceptional circumstances will a court notice proceedings in another cause, although tried in that court between the same parties. Paridy v. Caterpillar Tractor Co., supra. The only exception to the rule is where unreasonable hardship would result. Bank of America v. Button, supra. Although the judgment pleaded was an adjudication of the matter at bar and may have been rendered by the same court upon the same cause of action, and although such judgment and its supporting papers may be on file in the same court, still the party pleading such prior adjudication carried the burden of establishing his plea which can be done only by actual proof of its records. Glaze v. Bogle, supra.

[5] It must appear either upon the face of the record or be shown by extrinsic evidence that the precise issue raised in the second action was determined in the former suit. Russell v. Place, 94 U.S. 606, 24 L.Ed. 214. In a second action between the same parties where it was alleged that the land involved in the complaint was the same land that was involved in the first action, it was proper for the court to receive in evidence the transcript containing the judgment roll for the purpose of establishing the allegations of the complaint. Graves v. Hebbron, 125 Cal. 400, 58 P. 12.

[6-8] There was no circumstance in the instant case that would have justified the court's taking judicial notice of the judgment pleaded or of the pleadings which preceded it. The parties were represented by counsel and the record of the first case lay upon the counsel table within the view of the court. By use of it plaintiff offered to prove that the demurrer in the first case stated 15 grounds; that three were directed to the lack of substance to constitute a cause of action; one to the jurisdiction of the court and 11 items were special demurrers on the grounds of uncertainty and ambiguity. The transcript may have shown that the demurrer might have been sustained on the question of jurisdiction; or on one or more of the numerous grounds of special demurrer; or that it may have been sustained because of an omission of technical allegations that are indispensable to the statement of a valid cause of action. If it had been sustained for lack of jurisdiction, the judgment would not be a bar to the filing of a new action. Kirsch v. Kirsch, 113 Cal. 56, 45 P. 164. If it had been sustained because of uncertainties or ambiguities, the judgment would not be a bar to the filing of a new action. Goddard v. Security Title, etc., Co., 14 Cal.2d 47, 92 P.2d 804. Even though the judgment of dismissal is based upon the order of the court sustaining a general demurrer, such judgment might not have adjudicated the substantial rights of the parties. If the judgment did not determine the merits of the existing controversy, upon a complaint that contained a valid declaration of all the ultimate facts, then the prior judgment on demurrer is not a bar to the present action. Goddard v. Security Title, etc., Co., supra; Erganian v. Brightman, 13 Cal.App.2d 696, 57 P.2d 971.

[9] (2) After the defendants had rested their case upon the judgment attached to their answer as an exhibit, the court erred in denying plaintiff's offer to prove by the judgment roll the claims asserted by plaintiff, to-wit, that the claims set forth in the present action are not identic with those alleged in the prior action. While it is true that the exhibit showed beyond a peradventure that the parties to the action were the same, still it was necessary, in order to establish the plea in bar, that the defendants prove that the present action involved the identical matters and things that were adjudicated by the dismissal of the first action. And, when they declined to offer any proof of their plea, and the court was disposed favorably thereto, plaintiff's offer of legal evidence to defeat the plea should have been received.

[10-12] If we may assume the accuracy of respondent's representations in their brief, the court would have found the identicity of the issues in the two cases. But the record before us shows only findings of fact without evidence to support them. The fact that the judgment was attached as an exhibit to the answer, merely establishes its genuineness and due execution. Code Civ.Proc. § 448. It does not prove the matters adjudicated by the judgment of dismissal. There were no means by which the court could have determined whether the demurrer in the former case was sustained for want of jurisdiction or upon one or more of the special demurrers or whether it was for lack of substance in the complaint to constitute a cause or causes of action. "Generally, judgments merely of dismissal, whether voluntary or involuntary, are not on the merits, and do not operate as a bar or estoppel in subsequent proceedings involving the same matters, unless it appears that the judgment necessarily involves those matters." Campanella v. Campanella, 204 Cal. 515, 520, 269 P. 433, 435. Because of an utter want of proof, there was no judicial determination by the court of the matters pleaded in bar. Id. "Every estoppel must be certain to every intent and not to be taken by argument or inference. If upon the face of the record anything is left to conjecture as to what was necessarily involved and decided, there is no estoppel in it when pleaded and nothing conclusive in it when offered in evidence". Coke on Littleton, par. 362b.

[13, 14] In order to justify the judgment of res judicata, it must be shown that the rights of the plaintiff alleged in the present action against the same defendants are the identic rights that had been adjudicated in the former action. Finally, as if endeavoring to make certain that the dominion of a judgment might not be extended beyond the limitations indicated by the authorities, both ancient and modern, the legislature in the early years of our statehood enacted section 1911 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to-wit: "That only is deemed to have been adjudged in a former judgment which appears upon its face to have been so adjudged, or which was actually and necessarily included therein or necessary thereto." The plea of former adjudication can be proved only by the judgment roll or other competent evidence. Graves v. Hebbron, supra; City of Los Angeles v. Moore, 31 Cal.App. 39, 159 P. 872; Stanley v. McElrath, supra; Divide Creek Irrigation Dist. v. Hollingsworth, 10 Cir., 72 F.2d 859, 96 A.L.R. 944.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed.

We concur: WOOD, J.; McCOMB, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 233

STATE COMPENSATION INS. FUND v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 2591.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 26, 1941.

1. Workmen's compensation ⇐836

Under the Workmen's Compensation Law, the risk of accidental injuries is shared by employer and employee.

2. Workmen's compensation ⇐810

Under the Workmen's Compensation Law, an injured employee should not receive, in an ordinary case, greater compensation than his wages would have been had he not been injured. St.1937, p. 280, § 4459.

3. Workmen's compensation ⇐803

Where employee was found to have been totally but temporarily disabled by a back injury on August 15, 1937, and was given total, temporary disability up to December 8, 1937, the date of his recovery from the back injury, he had no "earning capacity" at time of carbon monoxide gas injury on August 16, 1937, on which to base a second award until he recovered from his first injury. St.1937, p. 280, § 4459.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Earning Capacity".

4. Workmen's compensation ⇐872

An injured employee is entitled to receive but one total temporary disability award over the same period even though he receives two separate injuries. St.1937, p. 280, § 4459.

Proceeding by the State Compensation Insurance Fund against the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California and others to annul awards of the commission against the State Compensation Insurance Fund for injuries suffered by E. J. Hunter, an employee of the Kettleman North Dome Association.

Award affirmed.

Donald Gallagher and A. V. Prothero, both of San Franciso, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten and Dan Murphy, Jr., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

MARKS, Justice.

Petitioner has filed two separate proceedings to annul two separate awards of the Industrial Accident Commission against petitioner, the insurance carrier, for injuries suffered by E. J. Hunter, an employee of the Kettleman North Dome Association. The facts of the two cases and the law involved are so closely related that they should be considered in one opinion to obviate needless repetition.

On December 14, 1937, Hunter filed an application with the Industrial Accident Commission seeking compensation for injuries to his lower back suffered on August 15, 1937. This application bore the I. A. C. number 58176 and will be referred to as the back injury case. After various hearings and rehearings the commission found that Hunter had suffered total temporary disability on August 15, 1937, and awarded him weekly indemnity payments of $21.27 for the period of August 15, 1937, to December 8, 1937, the admitted date of his recovery from the back injury, less the waiting period of seven days. Hunter's weekly earnings were $34.43.

Hunter filed a second application for total temporary disability caused by inhaling carbon monoxide fumes on August 13, 14, and 16, 1937. The application bore the I. A. C. number 58754, and will be referred to as the carbon monoxide case. The Industrial Accident Commission, after numerous hearings and rehearings, found that Hunter had suffered total temporary disability from the carbon monoxide fumes on August 16, 1937, and awarded him weekly indemnity payments of $21.26 from August 16 to December 8, 1937, and thereafter, less the waiting period of seven days. This award was also based on a weekly wage of $34.43.

While Hunter's wages, had he not been injured, would have been $34.43 per week, under the two awards he will receive $42.53 per week from August 16 to December 8, 1937, less the waiting periods.

The facts in the case are all admitted. The parties only disagree on the law applicable to those facts.

Petitioner admits that Hunter was entitled to total temporary disability but argues that he was not entitled to double total disability allowances up to December 8, 1937. As the allowance for the back injury had been paid in full, petitioner contends that it is entitled to credit that amount on the award for the carbon monoxide injury. We are cited to no cases deciding these questions.

[1] In discussing the theory underlying Workmen's Compensation Laws, the Supreme Court said in Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 686, at page 693, 151 P. 398, at page 401: "It may be noted that, under the particular scheme embodied in this act, the loss resulting from accidental injuries is not imposed upon the employer alone. The scale of compensation fixed by section 15 allows to the employé, in addition to medical and surgical expenses, an indemnity based upon his loss of earnings; but this indemnity covers not the whole, but only a part or a percentage of such loss. The risk of accidental injuries is thus shared by employer and employé."

The text writers have adopted this view and have pointed out the danger in awarding an injured employee compensation in an amount in excess of his ordinary earnings. See Campbell, Workmen's Compensation, sec. 30; Hobbs, Workmen's Compensation Insurance, p. 64.

In considering a related question, this court said in Gardner v. Industrial Accident Commission, 28 Cal.App.2d 682, 684, 685, 83 P.2d 295, 297: "The facts and findings in the instant case are sufficiently parallel to the facts and findings in the case of Edson v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra [206 Cal. 134, 273 P. 572], to cause the holding in that case to control the decision of the case before us, i. e., that the Industrial Accident Commission is not authorized, in computing the percentage of permanent disability of an employee caused by an industrial injury, to include any percentage of such disability attributable to a prior industrial or non-industrial disease or injury; nor is it justified in including in an award any amount as compensation for the disability attributable solely to the prior injury or disease and for which the employment was in no wise responsible. Hercules P. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 131 Cal.App. 587, 593, 21 P.2d 1014; County of Los Angeles v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 14 Cal.App.2d 134, 136, 57 P.2d 1341; Tanenbaum v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 4 Cal.2d 615, 52 P.2d 215."

[2] The foregoing authorities clearly indicate that under the Workmen's Compensation Laws an injured employee should not receive, in an ordinary case, greater compensation than his wages would have been had he not been injured.

We believe the answer to the question first presented is found in section 4459 of the Labor Code, St.1937, p. 280, which provides as follows: "The fact that an employee has suffered a previous disability, or received compensation therefor, does not preclude him from compensation for a later injury, or his dependents from compensation for death resulting therefrom, but in determining compensation for the later injury, or death resulting therefrom, his average weekly earnings shall be fixed at the sum which reasonably represents his earning capacity at the time of the later injury."

[3, 4] In the back injury case Hunter was found to have been totally, but temporarily disabled on August 15, 1937, and was given total temporary disability up to December 8, 1937, the date of his recovery from that injury. Three hundred and twenty-eight dollars and sixteen cents, the total amount of this award, was paid him by petitioner.

The Industrial Accident Commission found that the carbon monoxide injury was suffered on August 16, 1937. As Hunter was totally disabled on the date of the second injury and not able to work, it should follow that he had no "earning capacity" at the time of his second injury upon which to base the second award, as required by section 4459 of the Labor Code. This would be true until December 8, 1937, when he recovered from his first injury and could have resumed his employment had he not suffered the second injury.

There seems to be no good reason why the award in the back injury case should be disturbed. Hunter suffered a compensable injury on August 15, 1937, for which he is entitled to compensation until his recovery from that injury on December 8, 1937. No question is raised as to the amount of the award.

The award in the back injury case bearing the Industrial Accident Commission's number 58176 is affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 236

STATE COMPENSATION INS. FUND v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 2592.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 26, 1941.

1. Workmen's compensation ⇐872

An injured employee is entitled to receive but one total temporary disability award over the same period even though he receives two separate injuries.

2. Workmen's compensation ⇐872, 904

Where injured employee was paid full compensation for back injury up to his recovery from that injury on December 8, 1937, compensation for carbon monoxide gas injury sustained on day following back injury should only have been awarded to commence at time of recovery from back injury, but award for the gas injury could be sustained by crediting the total temporary disability compensation paid for the back injury on the award made for the gas injury.

Proceeding by the State Compensation Insurance Fund against the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California to annul an award of the commission against the State Compensation Insurance Fund for injuries suffered by E. J. Hunter, an employee of the Kettleman North Dome Association.

Award annulled and cause remanded with instructions.

Donald Gallagher and A. V. Prothero, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten and Dan Murphy, Jr., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

MARKS, Justice.

The facts of this case and the law bearing upon them are sufficiently set forth in State Compensation Ins. Fund v. Industrial Acc. Comm., Cal.App., 110 P.2d 510, the opinion being filed herewith.

[1] We there held that E. J. Hunter, the injured employee, was entitled to receive but one total temporary disability award over the same period even though he received two separate injuries.

[2] He has been paid full compensation in the back injury case up to his recovery from that injury on December 8, 1937. No question is raised as to his being entitled to his compensation in this case (carbon monoxide case) for the disability he suffered after that date. While the Industrial Accident Commission should only have awarded compensation in this case to commence at the time of the recovery in the back injury case, its award in this case may be sustained by crediting the total temporary disability compensation paid Hunter in the back injury case on the award made in this case.

The award in the Industrial Accident Commission case number 58754 (carbon monoxide case) is annulled and the cause remanded to the Industrial Accident Commission with instructions to reenter the award in favor of E. J. Hunter as finally made and to credit thereon the amount paid him by petitioner for total temporary disability to December 8, 1937, in Industrial Accident Commission case number 58176, the back injury case.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 53

DIERSSEN v. CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Civ. 11364.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 17, 1941.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐217(3)

The San Francisco charter provision that any citizen having qualifications prescribed by provision that all employees of such city and county shall have been residents thereof for at least one year before their appointments may submit himself for any examination under conditions established by Civil Service Commission imposes, as "conditions precedent" to taking examination, citizenship and residence in such city and county for one year before closing date for filing applications to take examination, not merely year's residence before appointment to position. St.1931, p. 3062, § 144; St.1933, p. 2805, § 7.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conditions Precedent".

2. Mandamus ⇐15

The "clean hands" doctrine applies to mandamus proceeding, which is essentially equitable in nature.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Clean Hands".

3. Mandamus ⇐164(2)

A judgment dismissing petition for writ of mandate to compel San Francisco City and County Civil Service Commission to place petitioner's name first on list of eligibles for appointment as superintendent of agriculture after Commission's removal of his name from tentative list on ground that he had not been resident of such city and county for one year before closing date for filing applications to take examination for such position cannot be sustained by appellate court on theory that exhibits attached to Commission's return demonstrated that petitioner, who filed no affidavit denying their genuineness and due execution, did not come into court with "clean hands" because exhibits showed that he was resident of another county during such time and filed conflicting sworn statements as to his residence. Code Civ.Proc. § 448; St.1931, p. 3062, § 144; St. 1933, p. 2805, § 7.

4. Municipal corporations ⇐62, 63(1)

A chartered city or city and county may confer quasi judicial power, such as power to determine facts, on boards or commissions dealing strictly with municipal affairs, including Civil Service Commission, and fact findings thereof may be interfered with by courts only where board or commission acts arbitrarily, capriciously or fraudulently or clear abuse of its discretion is alleged and proved. Const. art. 11, §§ 6, 8½, subd. 4.

5. Municipal corporations ⇐63(1)

The courts are powerless to interfere with fact findings of board or commission, such as Civil Service Commission, empowered by city or city and county charter to determine facts, if there is any substantial evidence supporting such findings. Const. art. 11, §§ 6, 8½, subd. 4.

6. Constitutional law ⇐30
Municipal corporations ⇐62

The constitutional provisions, authorizing chartered city or city and county to confer quasi judicial power, such as power to determine facts, on boards or commissions dealing strictly with municipal affairs, do not automatically confer such power on local boards, nor require city or city and county to do so in its charter, and such power does not exist, if not expressly or impliedly conferred by charter. Const. art. 11, §§ 6, 8½, subd. 4.

7. Municipal corporations ⇐217(3)

The San Francisco charter confers on City and County Civil Service Commission power to pass on qualifications of persons taking civil service examinations, including qualifications such as age, residence, experience, etc., as well as those disclosed by examinations. St.1931, pp. 2990, 3059, 3060, 3062, 3064, §§ 21, 140, 141, 144, 145, 147; St. 1938, Ex.Sess., p. 132, § 147.1.

8. Municipal corporations ⇐63(1)

The administration of plan, set up by San Francisco charter, for making of civil service appointments, by City and County Civil Service Commission should not be interfered with by courts, unless it be shown that Commission acted fraudulently, capriciously, arbitrarily, or in violation of charter provisions, as Commission acts in quasi judicial capacity in passing on qualifications of persons taking civil service examinations, including question of their residence. St. 1931, pp. 2990, 3059, 3060, 3062, 3064, §§ 21, 140, 141, 144, 145, 147; St.1938, Ex.Sess., p. 132, § 147.1.

9. Mandamus ⇐154(5)

In proceeding for writ of mandate to compel San Francisco City and County Civil Service Commission to place petitioner's name first on list of eligibles for appointment as superintendent of agriculture, petition alleging that petitioner took examination for such position and was placed first on tentative list of eligibles and that Commission, after filing of protest, determined, without right and in utter disregard of proofs adduced by petitioner, that he lacked residence qualification, was insufficient to state cause of action, in absence of allegation that Commission acted arbitrarily, fraudulently, capriciously or in abuse of discretion. St. 1931, pp. 2990, 3059, 3060, 3062, 3064, §§ 21, 140, 141, 144, 145, 147; St.1938, Ex.Sess., p. 132, § 147.1.

10. Mandamus ⇐154(5)

As San Francisco charter confers discretionary or quasi judicial power on City and County Civil Service Commission to pass on question of residence of persons taking examinations for civil service positions, petition for writ of mandate to compel Commission to place petitioner's name first on list of eligibles for appointment to such a position after Commission's removal of his name from tentative list on ground that he was not resident of city and county for required time must allege that Commission acted arbitrarily, fraudulently, capriciously or in abuse of discretion, and averment that petitioner's evidence would support conclusion contrary to that of Commission does not allege abuse of discretion, in absence of denial of existence of other evidence supporting Commission's action. St.1931, pp. 2990, 3059, 3060, 3062, 3064, §§ 21, 140, 141, 144, 145, 147; St.1938, Ex.Sess., p. 132, § 147.1.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas M. Foley, Judge.

Proceeding by Norman E. Dierssen for a writ of mandate to compel the Civil Service Commission of the City and County of San Francisco to place petitioner's name first on the list of eligibles for appointment to the position of superintendent of agriculture. From a judgment denying and dismissing the petition, petitioner appeals.

Affirmed.

Cross & Brandt, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Norman Sanford Wolff, Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco (Grover O'Connor, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Petitioner appeals from a judgment of the superior court of San Francisco denying and dismissing with prejudices his petition for a writ of mandate. By the writ, petitioner seeks to compel the Civil Service Commission to place his name as number one on the list of eligibles for appointment to the position of superintendent of agriculture. It appears that petitioner received the highest grade in the examination held for the position, and was placed at the top of the tentative eligibility list, but, upon objections being filed by the applicant second in rank on the ground that petitioner did not have the necessary residence qualification, the Commission, after several hearings, removed petitioner's name from the list. Objection was also filed to petitioner on the ground that he did not have the required experience qualification, but the commission did not determine this question in view of its ruling that he lacked the residence requirement. As announced in the examination scope circular, the required residence was residence in San Francisco for one year immediately preceding January 27, 1939, the closing date for filing applications to take the examination.

The Commission filed a return to the alternative writ of mandate, alleging its determination, after hearing, against petitioner's claim of residence. To this return were attached photostatic copies of various documents showing that at various times between 1933 and 1938 petitioner had stated, sometimes under oath, that his residence was Sacramento county. Among these exhibits was a copy of petitioner's affidavit of registration, under the permanent registration law, showing that petitioner had registered on February 5, 1936, and, at that time, under oath, gave Elk Grove, Sacramento county, as his residence. Also attached were photostatic copies of pages from the roster of voters which sets forth the names of those who voted in the primary election of August 30, 1938, and the general election of November 8, 1938. From this roster it appears that petitioner voted in these elections and signed the roster, giving his address as Elk Grove. In his application to take the examination he gave January 4, 1934, as the date he became a resident of San Francisco, claiming to have been a resident of that city since that date.

Upon motion of respondent, the trial court, without the taking of evidence, dismissed the petition for the writ. The respondent had moved for dismissal on the grounds that petitioner had not come into court with clean hands; that the court was without jurisdiction to interfere with the determination of the Commission, and that the petition did not state a cause of action. The judgment of the trial court, as shown by the recitals therein, is predicated on all three grounds.

[1] Petitioner urges that the Commission had no authority to require that an examinee must have one year's residence prior to the closing date for filing applications to take the examination; that under the Charter all that is required is one year's residence prior to appointment. Aside from the fact that the petition for the writ was not based on that theory, and, in fact, alleged residence in San Francisco since January 4, 1934, petitioner's interpretation of the charter provisions is not justified.

The Charter of San Francisco became effective January 8, 1932, St.1931, p. 2973. Section 144 provides in part: "Any citizen having the qualifications prescribed by section 7 of this charter may submit himself for any examination under conditions established by the civil service commission. * * *" Section 7 of the charter was amended in 1933 (Stats. of 1933, p. 2805) and reads in part as follows: "All employees of the City and County shall be citizens and shall have been residents thereof, for at least one year prior to the appointment, unless otherwise specifically provided in this Charter * * *." Petitioner contends that under section 7 of the charter, supra, the only requirement is that he be a resident one year prior to his appointment, not one year's residence prior to taking the examination. Eligible lists continue in effect for two years, and may be continued in effect for four years. Thus, under petitioner's interpretation, a person who is a nonresident when he takes the examination may qualify for appointment within the two or four-year period. This is not a reasonable nor proper interpretation of the two sections. Section 7 refers to appointees, not to examinees. Moreover, section 7 refers to all appointments—both civil and noncivil service appointments. Section 144, supra, however, refers specifically to examinees. Petitioner's interpretation would mean that every citizen of United States would be eligible to take every examination, but only those who had been residents of San Francisco for one year prior to their appointment could be appointed to a position. The interpretation of petitioner completely disregards the words, "having the qualifications prescribed by section 7 of this charter". Those words would be meaningless if petitioner's construction is correct.

For these reasons, we think the only proper interpretation of the two sections is that section 144 imposes as conditions precedent to taking an examination the requirements of section 7—citizenship and one year's residence in San Francisco. Section 7, applying to noncivil service, as well as civil service employees, requires citizenship and one year's residence prior to appointment. This interpretation gives effect to both sections of the charter, is reasonable, and provides a workable system.

[2, 3] Using this interpretation as its basic premise, in support of the judgment, the respondent urges that, since petitioner did not file an affidavit denying the genuineness and due execution of the written exhibits attached to the return, under section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure, their genuineness and due execution were admitted; that they demonstrate that petitioner was a resident of Sacramento county during the time in question; that at any rate petitioner has filed under oath, conflicting statements as to his residence; that this demonstrates that he did not come into court with clean hands; that the clean hands doctrine applies to mandamus proceedings.

There can be no doubt that a mandamus preceeding is essentially equitable in nature, and that the clean hands doctrine is applicable to such a proceeding. Hutchison v. Reclamation Dist. No. 1619, 81 Cal. App. 427, 254 P. 606. If the evidence should show that petitioner with full knowledge of the nature of his acts, under oath, had stated his residence for voting purposes to be Sacramento, and later proved that he was a resident of San Francisco for the same period, he very likely would be guilty of a criminal offense. Sec. 139 of Elections Code, St.1939, p. 58. Under such circumstances, the clean hands doctrine might well be applicable. The difficulty with this argument as applied to the facts of the instant case, however, is that the trial court did not apply the doctrine after the facts had been shown by evidence, but upon the pleadings. Apparently, this was done on the theory that, because the petitioner had failed to file an affidavit denying the genuineness and due execution of the exhibits to the return, under section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he must be deemed to have admitted those facts. We have serious doubts as to whether section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to documents of the type here involved. The documents are merely evidentiary matter to support the allegation in the return that petitioner did not possess the residential qualifications. The defense to the petition was that the Commission had found, on competent evidence, that petitioner was not a resident of San Francisco for the required period. To support that defense the exhibits were attached. We do not believe that section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure was intended to apply to written instruments of that type. Moreover, even if the section were applicable, all that would be admitted by failing to file the affidavit would be that the documents were genuine and had been executed by petitioner. The petitioner could lawfully attack the instruments for any cause not going to their genuineness or due execution. He could, without further pleading, introduce competent evidence to sustain any other defense, such as fraud, mistake, undue influence and the like. See cases collected 21 Cal.Jur., p. 168, in section 114. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the judgment appealed from cannot be sustained on the theory that the record demonstrates, as a matter of law, that petitioner did not come into court with clean hands.

The judgment, however, was not based solely on that ground. The trial court also held that it had no jurisdiction to interfere with the action of the Commission, and that the petition did not state a cause of action. The two points are integrally connected. They are based on the following premises: (1) That local boards, such as the Civil Service Commission, may lawfully be invested with judicial or quasi judicial power; (2) that the Charter of San Francisco vests such power, so far as the question of residence is concerned, in the Commission; and (3) that where such power is vested a petition is defective that does not allege facts to show that the Commission acted arbitrarily, capriciously or fraudulently. These points will be considered in order.

[4, 5] The question as to whether by charter provision local boards, such as a Civil Service Commission, may be invested with judicial fact finding powers seems never to have been seriously questioned in this state. The books are full of cases expressly or impliedly holding that where fact-finding powers have been conferred on local boards their determination will not be set aside unless an abuse of discretion is pleaded and proved, that is, unless it be alleged and proved that the board acted arbitrarily, capriciously or fraudulently. Croly v. Board of Trustees of City of Sacramento, 119 Cal. 229, 51 P. 323; Stanley-Taylor Co. v. Supervisors, 135 Cal. 486, 67 P. 783; Barto v. Supervisors, 135 Cal. 494, 67 P. 758; County of Yolo v. Joyce, 156 Cal. 429, 105 P. 125; Imperial Water Co. v. Supervisors, 162 Cal. 14, 120 P. 780; Maxwell v. Civil Service Commission, 169 Cal. 336, 146 P. 869; Pratt v. Rosenthal, 181 Cal. 158, 183 P. 542; Mann v. Tracy, 185 Cal. 272, 196 P. 484; Garvin v. Chambers, 195 Cal. 212, 232 P. 696; Klevesahl v. Byington, 1 Cal.App.2d 671, 37 P.2d 179; Ludolph v. Board of Police Com'rs, 30 Cal.App.2d 211, 86 P.2d 118. It is true that in Standard Oil Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 6 Cal.2d 557, 59 P. 2d 119, and Drummey v. State Bd. of Funeral Directors, 13 Cal.2d 75, 87 P.2d 848, and other recent cases, it has been held that state-wide administrative boards constitutionally cannot be vested with judicial or quasi judicial power. Those cases are predicated on the theory that Art. VI, section 1, of the State Constitution vests the entire judicial power of the state in the courts. All of those cases, including the earlier cases of Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Comm., 187 Cal. 533, 202 P. 874, and Dept. of Public Works v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 215, 239 P. 1076, upon which the later cases are predicated, expressly recognized that the holdings therein were applicable only to state-wide boards and did not apply to local boards. Thus, in the Drummey case, supra, 13 Cal.2d at page 81, 87 P.2d at page 852, it is stated: "The theory of the Tulare and Standard Oil cases is that, if the legislature attempted to confer judicial or quasi-judicial power on state-wide administrative boards, the statutes would be unconstitutional as in violation of section 1 of article 6 of the state Constitution, which vests the entire judicial power of the state in the courts, except as to local boards, and the railroad and industrial accident commissions, which are governed by special constitutional provisions." (Italics added.) Quite obviously, what the Supreme Court had in mind when it stated in the Drummey case, supra, that, "local boards * * * are governed by special constitutional provisions," were the broad provisions of Art. XI, section 6, of the Constitution dealing with the powers of chartered cities. That section, so far as pertinent herein, provides that, "Cities and towns hereafter organized under charters framed and adopted by authority of this Constitution are hereby empowered * * * to make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs, subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in their several charters * * *". Moreover, Art. XI, section 8½, Sub. 4, provides that, "It shall be competent in any charter framed in accordance with the provisions of this section * * * for any city or consolidated city and county, and plenary authority is hereby granted, subject only to the restrictions of this article, to provide therein or by amendment thereto, the manner in which, the method by which, the times at which, and the terms for which the several county and municipal officers and employees whose compensation is paid by such city or city and county * * * shall be elected or appointed * * *". Obviously, a civil service system is strictly a municipal affair. Under these provisions a chartered city or city and county may lawfully confer quasi judicial power on boards or commissions dealing strictly with municipal affairs, such as the power to determine facts, and, if such finding is made, the courts may interfere only where the board acts arbitrarily, capriciously, or fraudulently.

Stated another way, the courts are empowered to interfere with the findings of such boards only where a clear abuse of discretion is alleged and proved. If there is any substantial evidence to support the board's findings, the courts are powerless to interfere. This is apparently the law even as to state-wide boards where the board has fact-finding powers and is not attempting to take away an existing right. McDonough v. Goodcell, 13 Cal.2d 741, 91 P.2d 1035, 123 A.L.R. 1205. We, therefore, conclude that by charter provision a city or city and county may lawfully confer on local boards dealing with strictly municipal affairs judicial or quasi judicial power.

[6-8] The sections of the Constitution above referred to, however, do not automatically confer such power on local boards, nor do they require a city or city and county to so provide in their charter —they merely empower such city or city and county to so provide in their charter. If the charter does not expressly or impliedly confer such power, the power does not exist. French v. Cook, 173 Cal. 126, 160 P. 411; Sheehan v. Board of Police Com'rs., 197 Cal. 70, 239 P. 844; Sheehan v. Board of Police Com'rs., 47 Cal.App. 29, 190 P. 51. This, then, presents the second question mentioned above—Does the charter of San Francisco expressly or impliedly confer judicial or quasi judicial power on the Civil Service Commission to pass on the question of the residence of applicants to take a civil service examination? Clearly, the charter confers on the Commission the power to prepare examinations, to grade them, to prepare tentative and final eligible lists from which appointments shall be made, and to generally supervise and control the civil service system. Section 21 of the Charter confers on boards operating under the charter the general power to hold hearings, subpoena witnesses, etc., relative to the affairs under their control. Section 140 of the Charter creates the Commission "which is charged with the duty of providing qualified persons for appointment to the service of the city and county". Section 141 provides that the Commission "shall be the employment and personnel department of the city and county and shall determine appointments on the basis of merit and fitness * * *". Section 144 above referred to, and, as interpreted in this opinion, requires one year's residence in San Francisco as a condition precedent to taking any examination. Section 145 provides for the giving of examinations by the Commission and for the creation by it of eligible lists. Section 147 expressly commands the Commission to remove the name of any person on an eligible list who has secured his place on the list "by fraud, concealment of fact or violation of commission rules". Section 147.1 added in 1938 (Stats. of 1938, Extra Session, p. 132), provides for the posting of grades after an examination and for the inspection of examination papers, and then provides: "The Civil Service Commission shall have power to correct any error which in its judgment may have occurred in the rating of any participant in said examination, and to alter said published or posted list of eligibles and to make changes accordingly therein which in the opinion of said commission may be justified by any re-examination of said papers, questions, answers, marks or grades given in said examination * * *".

Respondent argues that section 147.1, supra, expressly confers discretionary power on the Commission to correct errors not only in examination papers but also in the sworn application of an examinee, and that this includes the power to pass on the question of residence as set forth in the application. Great emphasis is placed upon the language conferring upon the Commission "power to correct any error which in its judgment may have occurred in the rating" of an examinee. It is argued that, if, because of a false statement as to residence, an examinee has been placed on the tentative list, an error in rating has occurred. Petitioner argues that section 147.1 applies only to errors in connection with the marking of examination papers. While there can be little doubt that section 147.1 was intended primarily to confer discretionary power on the Commission to correct errors in the marking of papers, there is much merit in the argument that the grant of power is broad enough to include the power to correct any error that results in a false rating, including power to pass on the correctness of statements made in the application, which includes the power to pass on the question of residence. However, it is not necessary to base this portion of the opinion solely on section 147.1, supra. A reading of the various sections of the Charter above referred to demonstrates that San Francisco, exercising its plenary power with regard to the method and manner of appointments, has set up a complete scheme for the making of such appointments. It is further apparent that the complete administration of this plan has been conferred upon the Commission. The obvious intent of the sections as a whole is that power has been conferred on the Commission to pass on the qualifications of examinees, including not only such qualifications as are disclosed by the examination, but also such other qualifications such as age, residence, experience, etc. It is also quite clear that it is the intent of the charter that the administration of this plan should not be interfered with by the courts unless it be shown that the Commission acted fraudulently, capriciously or arbitrarily, or in violation of the provisions of the charter. That is but another way of stating that in passing on such questions, including the question of residence, the Commission acts in a quasi judicial capacity.

[9, 10] The only question left for determination is whether the petition states a cause of action. So far as pertinent here, the petition alleges that petitioner took the examination; was placed first on the tentative list; that a protest was filed on the ground that petitioner lacked both the experience and residence qualifications; that the Commission determined that he did not possess the residence requirement; that the action of the Commission is without right "and in utter disregard of the proofs, oral and documentary, adduced by petitioner before respondent as aforesaid, which proofs demonstrate that petitioner is, and ever since on or about the 4th day of January, 1934, has been, a bona fide legal resident of said City and County and State".

This petition, as a matter of law, is insufficient to state a cause of action for a writ of mandate. If the charter did not confer discretionary or quasi judicial power on the Commission to pass on the question of residence, the petition here involved would be sufficient. It was obviously framed on that theory. But, as already held, the charter does confer discretionary or quasi judicial power on the Commission to pass on that question. Since that is so, it must be alleged in a mandamus proceeding attacking its action that it has acted arbitrarily, fraudulently, capriciously, or in abuse of discretion. An averment that petitioner's evidence would support a conclusion contrary to that of the Commission does not properly or at all allege an abuse of discretion, in the absence of a denial of the existence of other evidence supporting the action of the board exercising judicial power. These principles are well-settled. In Bennett v. Brady, 17 Cal.App.2d 114, 116, 61 P.2d 530, 531, the rule is stated as follows: "In passing upon the sufficiency of the petition to state a cause of action, the attached transcript of evidence cannot be considered for the purpose of supplying any deficiency in its allegations. People v. Reid, 195 Cal. 249, 232 P. 457, 36 A.L.R. 1435. A petition in substantially the same form was held in Hogan v. Retirement Board [13 Cal.App. (2d) 676], 57 P.2d 520, not to state a cause of action because it failed to show respondents had acted arbitrarily, capriciously, fraudulently, or without due regard for the applicant's rights. To state a cause of action, the petition must set forth facts showing that a pension ought to have been allowed, and that respondents' refusal to do so was an abuse of their discretion. 16 Cal.Jur. 861. If all the evidence produced at the hearings was susceptible of the sole construction that petitioner was entitled to a pension, respondents abused their discretion in refusing to award it and can be compelled by mandate to do so. Bank of Italy v. Johnson, 200 Cal. 1, 251 P. 784. However, the petition fails to bring itself within this rule, for it merely alleges that petitioner's evidence, not all the evidence, established and proved the allegations of her application. For aught that appears, her evidence may have conflicted with other evidence or supported different inferences. The general demurrer was properly sustained." See, also, County of San Luis Obispo v. Gage, 139 Cal. 398, 409, 73 P. 174, where it was held that an allegation that a board rejected certain claims "without right and against the facts" was insufficient where the board is vested with discretionary power.

The allegation in the petition here involved, above quoted, amounts to no more than a charge that petitioner's evidence produced before the Commission was sufficient to support a finding of residence, or that such evidence, standing alone, would compel such finding. The allegation is, in effect, that the action of the Commission was in disregard of the evidence produced by petitioner, without reference to what other evidence may have shown. There is a complete failure to deny the existence of other evidence. The allegation fails to comply with the test laid down in the cases referred to above. For that reason, the petition fails to state a cause of action.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; WARD, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 189

FAGAN v. FAGAN.

Civ. 2902.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 21, 1941.

1. Parent and child ⇐3(1)

The parent of a minor child is primarily liable for the child's support and should be compelled to support the child unless legally excused from that burden. Civ.Code, §§ 138, 196, 203; Probate Code, § 1504.

2. Parent and child ⇐3(3)

An impoverished and indigent minor child may maintain an action to declare herself free from dominion of parent for abuse of parental authority, and to obtain support and education, though her custody has been previously awarded to a guardian of her person. Civ.Code, §§ 138, 196, 203; Probate Code, § 1504.

3. Parent and child ⇐3(1)

The mere nomination of a guardian by a 16-year-old child is not a "waiver" of her claim to future support by father who has abandoned her. Civ.Code, §§ 138, 196, 203; Probate Code, § 1504.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waiver".

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Franklin G. West, Judge.

Action by Shirley Dorothy Fagan, by her guardian Dorothea Gebhardt, against James J. Fagan, Jr., for support and maintenance. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Reversed with instructions.

Henry F. Boyen and Frank Fontes, both of San Francisco, and Roland Thompson, of Santa Ana, for appellant.

Rutan, Mize & Kroese, of Santa Ana, and Mason & Windham, of Long Beach, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

This is an appeal by the plaintiff and appellant Shirley Dorothy Fagan, a minor, from a judgment in favor of the defendant and respondent James J. Fagan, Jr., after an order sustaining a general demurrer without leave to amend.

The sole question involved on this appeal is whether or not the first amended complaint contained facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the defendant and whether or not the lower court erred in refusing permission to file a second amended complaint.

The first amended complaint shows that respondent and his wife were divorced prior to 1933; that there had been born to them the appellant a daughter; that the divorce was obtained by the mother in the state of Nevada; and that by the divorce decree the mother was given custody of appellant and respondent required to pay $50 per month for her support. By implication it appears that respondent complied with this order for several years. The mother died in the year 1933, and the child went to live with her grandparents, one of whom is now her general guardian.

In 1938, a petition for appointment of appellant's grandmother as her general guardian was filed and in that proceeding appellant nominated her grandmother as such guardian and the respondent contested the proceeding. It resulted in the appointment and qualification of the grandmother as the general guardian in accordance with the petition and nomination by appellant. This status and relationship existed at the time of the commencement of this action.

The second amended complaint, proffered for filing and refused, contained similar allegations to the amended complaint and the additional allegations: "That at the time of the appointment of plaintiff as guardian of the person of said minor, and for a long time prior thereto, defendant had been guilty of parental abuse of authority in failing, neglecting and refusing to pay for the support and maintenance of his said minor child and had been and was guilty of abandoning his child without cause or justification (which fact it is alleged the court found to be true). * * * Defendant is not a fit or proper person to have the care, custody or control of said minor child; said minor child was justified in refusing to live at defendant's home and in nominating said Dorothea Gebhardt as the guardian of her person; and that by reason of said conduct said minor child has, at the time of said nomination and appointment of Dorothea Gebhardt the guardian of her person and for a long time prior thereto had been, and was, entitled to be free from the domination of said defendant; * * * that said minor does not have any estate or any property * * * and is wholly dependent upon said grandparents for her support * * * that the defendant, the father of said minor, has real and personal property of the value of $15,000 and upwards and has income in excess of $5,000 per year and is financially able to support, care for and maintain said minor".

Respondent concedes that should this court reverse the trial court on the appellant's first point then the second amended complaint should be allowed filed as against objections made in the trial court, but reserving to the respondent his right to demur specially and to move to strike out any objectionable or redundant matter contained therein.

The question presented is this: May an impoverished and dependent minor over 14 years of age, having nominated one, other than its parent, as general guardian, and while still the ward of such a general guardian, maintain an action against its parent (who is admittedly financially responsible) under section 203 of the Civil Code of the state of California, or any other section, for freedom from parental authority and for support? It was the respondent's contention, and the lower court ruled, that a parent deprived of the custody of a child by the appointment and qualification of another as its general guardian, is relieved of the duty of supporting such child, and that a father who has lost the custody of a child is not liable nor responsible for its support.

Appellant admits that this contention is supported in part by some of the earlier decisions of our higher courts such as the cases of Selfridge v. Paxton, 145 Cal. 713, 715, 79 P. 425, and Calegaris v. Calegaris, 4 Cal.App. 264, 87 P. 561, but contends that most of the earlier cases mentioned have been overruled or modified, and that it is well settled in this state that a father who has lost custody of his minor child, either by divorce or guardianship proceedings, is still responsible for its support, maintaining that the duty of a parent to support a minor child is contained in the following sections: sections 138 and 203 of the Civil Code; section 270 of the Penal Code; and section 3501 of the Labor Code, St. 1937, p. 268. In support thereof appellant cites Dixon v. Dixon, 216 Cal. 440, at page 442, 14 P.2d 497; County of Los Angeles v. Superior Court of Alameda County, 128 Cal.App. 522, 18 P.2d 112; Matter of Guardianship of Michels, 170 Cal. 339, 343, 149 P. 587; Federal Liability Insurance Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 195 Cal. 283, 288, 233 P. 335; Svoboda v. Superior Court, 190 Cal. 727, 214 P. 440; §§ 1501 and 1504 Probate Code; 20 Cal.Jur. page 436, § 34; Southern California Edison Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 92 Cal.App. 355, 268 P. 415; Llewellyn Iron Works v. Industrial Accident Commission, 191 Cal. 28, 214 P. 846; Boens v. Bennett, 20 Cal.App.2d 477, 67 P.2d 715; People v. Schlott, 162 Cal. 347, 349, 122 P. 846; and Ex parte Miller, 109 Cal. 643, 42 P. 428. Respondent contends that reading sections 196 and 203 of the Civil Code together and construing them together, that the defendant, the father of the child, is relieved of support of the minor, plaintiff in this action; that the only right that can be enforced under section 203 of the Civil Code is the duty of support and education, and for the definition of such duty one must look to section 196 of the Civil Code, citing Ex Parte Miller, supra, and In re Ross' Guardianship, 6 Cal.App. 597, 92 P. 671.

Appellant concedes that under section 1504 of the Probate Code if a minor having a father living has property, the income of which is sufficient for her support, maintenance and education in a manner more expensive than her father can reasonably afford, regard being had to the situation of the father's family and to all the circumstances of the case, the expenses of the support, maintenance and education of such minor may be defrayed out of the income of her own property, in whole or in part, as judged reasonable, but argues that in the case at bar there is no such situation; that the father is able to take care of his minor child but for some reason known only to himself he refuses to do so and leaves her education to the support and charity of others; that the duty of a father to support and maintain his minor child has been recognized by the courts even in the absence of any statute declaring it.

Respondent contends that the duty of a parent to support a minor child is not found in section 203 of the Civil Code; that that section creates the right in a minor child, under proper circumstances, to free itself from an abusive parent and, in connection therewith, enforce the duty of support and education; that the duty of a parent to support a minor child is stated and limited in section 196 of the Civil Code; and that the loss of custody and parental authority upon which the duty to support rests, is defined in section 204 of the Civil Code. The contention that a husband deprived of the custody of a child is not liable for its maintenance and support receives support in language used in some of the earlier cases. This is particularly true in an action by a third person against a husband who is not entitled to the custody of his child.

Selfridge v. Paxton, supra, was an action for surgical services performed on a minor child, brought by a third person against a husband and wife who had been divorced and where the custody of the minor child had been awarded to the mother. It was there held that the husband was not liable to the third party under sections 196 and 207 of the Civil Code.

Calegaris v. Calegaris, supra, involved an order modifying a decree of divorce, directing the defendant to pay $60 per month for the maintenance and support of minor children, where the custody of the children had been previously awarded to the mother. In reversing the judgment the court there held, under the facts related, that the husband was not liable under section 196 of the Civil Code because he had been deprived of the custody of the children, but said [4 Cal.App. 264, 87 P. 562]:

"If the conditions of the parties had changed materially after the decree, or if the means allowed to plaintiff had been exhausted, or if the circumstances had been such as to call for aid from defendant to assist in the education of the minors, the question would have been different."

In Lewis v. Lewis, 174 Cal. 336, 163 P. 42, it was held that under the express provisions of section 138 of the Civil Code a court which has granted a divorce has power to modify its judgment at any time during the minority of the children of the marriage by providing for the custody, education and support of such children, even though the judgment may have contained no provision on that subject, and that no reservation in the decree itself is necessary to the exercise of this power. In the syllabus it was stated:

"The obligation of the father so deprived of the custody of the child, under a divorce decree which made no provision for its support, is one to be enforced by the court which granted the divorce, and in the divorce action itself. A separate action by the child against the father to compel him to furnish support and education will not lie."

In Blair v. Williams, 86 Cal.App. 676, 261 P. 539, which was an action for nursing care to a child by a third party against the husband, who was separated from his wife and by a divorce decree was ordered to pay her for the care of herself and child, it was held that under sections 196 and 207 of the Civil Code, the father was not responsible for the support of his children after entry of an order granting custody of the children to the mother, either with or without a provision for their maintenance.

In Ex Parte Miller, 109 Cal. 643, 42 P. 428, 429, in a concurring opinion by Mr. Justice Temple, it was said: "When a parent is deprived of the custody of his child, and therefore of the right to its services and earnings, by the summary proceeding, he is no longer liable for its support and education. This is true as a general proposition of law, and it is recognized by our Code. Section 196 [of the Civil Code], provides that a parent entitled to the custody of a child must give him support and education suitable to his circumstances; plainly implying that the parent does not owe that duty to a child when he is not entitled to its custody." And that "In no other case, except as provided in section 203, has the court the power to deprive the parent of his authority, and yet hold him liable for the maintenance of his child * * *." See, also, In re Ross' Guardianship, supra.

It appears from the later decisions that a distinction has been drawn between a right of action by a minor against a parent brought directly for the support of the minor, and an action by a third party to recover for services performed on behalf of the minor.

In Pacific Gold Dredging Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 184 Cal. 462, at pages 465 and 466, 194 P. 1, at page 3, 13 A.L.R. 725, the court said: "It is true that it has been held that a father, deprived of the custody of his child in divorce proceedings, without requirement that he contribute to its support, is not liable to a third party furnishing such child with the necessaries of life * * * but, under section 207, Civil Code, third persons seeking such recovery are limited in their right of action to the parent in charge of the minor. It is also held, in People v. Hartman [23 Cal.App. 72, 137 P. 611], that the defendant was not liable to prosecution, under section 270 of the Penal Code, upon a charge of willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously failing to furnish necessary food, clothing, shelter, or medical attendance for his infant child. * * * We find no authority for holding that, as between parent and child, the father is absolved from his legal duty to provide support to his minor child, who has no other source of maintenance, because, on account of his own fault, he has been deprived of the custody of such child. Both a legal and moral obligation rests upon a father to support his minor children. And while, as between himself and third parties, that obligation may be shifted in proceedings of divorce or guardianship, and he may by misconduct forfeit his right to the custody of his child, it may be doubted if by such proceedings, to which he is not a party, a minor can be deprived of his natural right to turn to his father for maintenance, if the substituted source of supply fails. It has been held that such right to look to a father for maintenance cannot be taken from the infant by contract between the parents * * * and it certainly would be a reproach upon the law if a father, by his own misconduct making him an unfit custodian of the child, could absolve himself from legal responsibility for its support."

This holding was affirmed in Federal Mutual Liability Insurance Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra [195 Cal. 283, 233 P. 337], and the cited case of Lewis v. Lewis, supra, was discussed. It was there stated that "the better rule was that announced in the case of Pacific Gold Dredging Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra", and in holding that the father was obligated to support his minor child, said:

"Whether such conclusion is based upon the proofs of the voluntary resumption on the part of the father of his parental relations and obligations to his child, or upon the legal liability for the support of his child imposed by the terms of the divorce decree, or upon the broader ground of the basic legal obligation imposed by law upon a father to support his dependent child to the end that it shall not become a public charge, the award of the Commission upon either and all of these grounds can be sustained. The fact that the mother of the child, who had committed its custody to other relations, and had remarried and was living in a foreign land and beyond the jurisdiction of our local court, was also contributing somewhat to the child's support is, we think, an entirely immaterial feature of the case."

In Svoboda v. Superior Court, supra, the holding in Pacific Gold Dredging Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, is preferred to that stated in Lewis v. Lewis, supra.

In Watkins v. Clemmer, 129 Cal.App. 567, 19 P.2d 303, 308, which was an action to recover upon an alleged account stated for medical and surgical services furnished by the plaintiff to the minor son of the defendant, the services having been performed at the instance of and the bill sent to the mother, who had custody of said minor by a decree of divorce from defendant, the court, after citing Pacific Gold Dredging Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, said:

"The later cases follow the Pacific Gold Dredging Case, wherein it is said: 'We find no authority for holding that, as between parent and child, the father is absolved from his legal duty to provide support. * * * And while, as between himself and third parties, that obligation may be shifted in proceedings of divorce or guardianship, * * * it may be doubted if by such proceedings, to which he is not a party, a minor can be deprived of his natural right to turn to his father for maintenance, if the substituted source of supply fails.' * * * It will be readily observed that all these cases deal with the duty of support as between the minor and his parent, and not with the duty of support as between a third party and the parent."

One of the most recent cases on the general subject is Dixon v. Dixon, 216 Cal. 440, 14 P.2d 497, where the father's obligation to support his daughter had ended in Oklahoma (where a girl attains majority at 18 years of age). She thereafter came to California, where her mother sued the father in the daughter's behalf for the daughter's support. The father was held liable for the danghter's support here until she reached 21. The court said: "Neither the age of majority in Oklahoma nor the provisions of a decree of divorce in that jurisdiction have any bearing whatsoever on this issue."

The Supreme Court, upholding an order for the child's support, briefly disposed of the case as follows: "Since the recasting of section 270 of the Penal Code by the act of 1923 (St.1923, p. 592), the failure of a father to provide necessary support and maintenance for his minor child has been a criminal offense. This is true, regardless of agreements, property settlements, decree of divorce, or decrees respecting custody or maintenance of the minor, affecting the husband and wife. All doubt or confusion on this subject has also been settled by recent decisions of this court." (Citing cases.)

Foy v. Foy, 23 Cal.App.2d 543, 73 P.2d 618, 620, refers to Dixon v. Dixon, supra, for authority for the statement that: "Although a decree of divorce had been previously granted, still the court under said section [137 Civ. Code] could order the husband to support his child." It was also held that "A court of equity in the exercise of its general chancery powers had inherent jurisdiction, independent of statute, to award and control the custody of children * * * [and] may provide for the maintenance of a child pending a determination of its custody". And "The husband's choice of attack by an independent equitable proceeding rather than by a motion in the divorce action is immaterial * * *."

In Southern California Edison Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 92 Cal. App. 355, 268 P. 415, 416, although involving the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, the facts resemble those in the instant case. The court said:

"Whatever may be said of earlier decisions, it now seems to be the settled rule of law in this state that by no act, conduct, or arrangement of whatever sort may a parent shift from his shoulders the legal responsibility and moral duty to support his minor child. It is an absolute, inalienable right enjoyed by the child, which no form of contract between the parents, nor alteration of the domestic status of either of them, may affect. Were the rule to the contrary, it is readily conceivable how a minor child of a rich father (by reason of the divorce of its parents and the subsequent marriage of the mother to a possibly shiftless and impecunious man, who under the law, on taking the child into his household, might become legally liable for the maintenance of the child) might be deprived of an education and the bare necessities of life, or even reach such a state of destitution as to become a public charge." (Citing cases.)

In Ex parte Gordan, 95 Cal. 374, 30 P. 561, the court held that the power of the court in an action for divorce to compel the father to support his minor child does not depend solely upon section 139 of the Civil Code, and whether he is with or without fault in the matters involved in the action, it is his duty to support such child, and the court may compel him to do so, although the child is given to the custody of a stranger to the action.

Boens v. Bennett, supra, was an action brought under section 203 of the Civil Code by a minor son against his father for support. The father obtained a final decree of divorce in the courts of this state, which decree erroneously attempted to award the custody of the minor children residing out of the state, including the plaintiff's son, to the father. It was appellant's contention that respondent should assert and establish his claim in the divorce case and not by a separate action. The court there said, at page 484 of 20 Cal. App.2d, at page 719 of 67 P.2d:

"The obligation, both moral and legal, rested upon this defendant father, who brought his minor son from New York to California, to give the latter support suitable to the former's circumstances, and if the court believed, as it had a right to believe, from the evidence, that the father repudiated this obligation and by his conduct cast his son and the responsibility for the latter's maintenance upon others, then it was proper for the court to make an award to a guardian of such sum as was necessary to support the minor child according to the circumstances of the father."

It was further held that section 203 and kindred sections of the Civil Code are part of the substantive law of the state establishing and declaring a legal duty of the parent to maintain and support his children who are within such provisions, and establishing the right in such children to have such maintenance and support and to enforce against the parent such obligation and duty upon the latter's part; that as the duty runs to the children, the latter are the persons to whom the right imposed by the duty accrues; and that they are the proper parties to an action to enforce such right and compel the performance of such duty; that the court having jurisdiction to enforce the provisions of section 203 of the Civil Code, it had the power to make all orders necessary for that purpose, including the order for counsel fees.

[1] Our attention has not been called to any statute that makes the guardian of the person personally liable for the support and maintenance of a ward or any provision of the law whereby a minor can legally compel a guardian to support her from the guardian's own funds. A parent of a minor child is primarily liable for the support of the child. It is only reasonable that a parent should be compelled to support his minor children, unless legally excused from that burden. Otherwise they may become public charges. If it were otherwise, designing parents might wittingly induce some third person to be appointed guardian of their children and free themselves from the moral and legal liability to support their own children.

[2, 3] In view of the trend of the more recent decisions, we are impelled to hold that an impoverished and indigent minor child may maintain an action to declare herself free from the dominion of the parent for abuse of parental authority, and for support and education, even though her custody has been previously awarded to a guardian of her person. We are unable to conclude that the mere nomination of a guardian, by a child sixteen years old, which nomination is subject to the approval of the court, constitutes a waiver of her claim to future support from her father who has abandoned her.

For the reasons expressed the judgment is reversed with instructions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer and allow the filing of the second amended complaint as proposed, with the right, within a reasonable time, to move to strike and to plead.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 120

BELMONT v. MILTON.

Civ. 2536.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 17, 1941.

1. Factors ⇐45

Evidence supported judgment for consignee under an agreement for marketing of crops against owner for the difference between advances made by consignee to owner and expenses incurred, and the returns from sale of crops.

2. Factors ⇐11

Where agreement for marketing of crops provided that consignee agreed to pick and market all or part of crop or crops in such manner and at such time or place as would in his judgment yield maximum return therefor, consignee's failure to pick and market 400 boxes of oranges before frozen did not constitute a breach of contract entitling owner to recover damages therefor, since, by terms of agreement, consignee was not required to pick and sell all of the crop.

3. Contracts ⇐143

The court cannot make a new and different contract for the parties. Code Civ. Proc. § 1858.

4. Factors ⇐6

Where agreement for marketing of crops covered year from August 17, 1936, to August 17, 1937, provision in agreement that it would be "binding" upon both parties until advances and payments made by consignee to owner had been fully paid would not be construed to extend contract to include crops of following year upon advances not being fully paid, so as to entitle consignee to recover damages for owner's alleged breach regarding the 1937–1938 crop. Code Civ.Proc. § 1858.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Binding".

5. Factors ⇐45

Under agreement for marketing of crops by terms of which consignee made advances to owner before crops were picked and marketed, where it appeared that agreement was one of consignment and not of sale, advances would be construed as "loans" for which consignee would be entitled to interest. Civ.Code, § 1914.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Loan".

6. Factors ⇐45

A factor, who is not a del credere factor, is entitled to interest on advances made.

7. Appeal and error ⇐1172(5)

In action by consignee against owner for advances made under a crop marketing agreement, error in refusing to permit consignee interest on advances did not require a reversal of entire judgment for consignee, but judgment would be affirmed except as to that part disallowing interest on advances, and such portion would be reversed and new trial ordered, with instructions to ascertain amount of interest due consignee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; Frank Lamberson, Judge.

Action by Frank Belmont against E. F. Milton, for advances made and for damages under a contract labeled "Citrus Marketing Agreement", wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. From an insufficient judgment, the plaintiff appeals.

Modified and affirmed in part, and reversed in part with directions.

Henry O. Wackerbarth, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

LeRoy G. Smith, of Dinuba, for respondent.

KLETTE, Justice pro tem.

This is an action by Frank Belmont, plaintiff and appellant, against E. F. Milton, defendant and respondent, for advances made, and for damages, under a contract, labeled "Citrus Marketing Agreement". The following are the essential parts of said contract, necessary for our consideration here:

"This agreement, made this 17 day of August, 1936, and ending the 17 day of August, 1937, between Frank Belmont hereinafter called the consignee, and E. F. Milton of Dinuba, Calif. hereinafter called the owner.

"Witnesseth: That the Owner, in consideration of one dollar and the promises herein on the part of the Consignee, employs said Consignee to pick, haul, pack, ship and market Oranges now growing on his land and that during the term of this agreement may be grown upon his land and premises consisting of 55 acres * * * The undersigned represents and guarantees to the Consignee * * * that there is no encumbrance, lien or adverse claim of any kind upon or against said crops or any part thereof except whatever Frank Belmont advance.

"The Consignee accepts said employment and agrees to pick, haul, pack, ship and market all or part of said crop or crops in such manner, at such time or place as will in his judgment yield the maximum returns therefor, * * *

"The Consignee is given full power and authority to enter the said acreage at any time to pick the said fruit and to sell, or offer for sale, or contract for the sale of any or all of the said fruit belonging to the Owner, and either before or after delivery to make collection therefor, in his own name or otherwise; * * * provided, however, that the said Consignee will make a full and complete accounting to the Owner of all financial transactions with regard to the respective fruit.

"Before payment of his net proceeds is made to the owner the Consignee may first deduct therefrom the actual cost of picking and hauling the said fruit.

"A flat charge of $.65 per packed box will be made for packing oranges, $.65 per packed box for grapefruit; * * *

"That the Consignee will pack, load, ship and market said fruit in such manner, at such time and place, and upon such terms and conditions, subject to the provisions hereof, * * * as will in his judgment yield the maximum return therefor, and will pay to the undersigned the total amount received from sale of said fruit, after deducting therefrom an amount equal to the total sum paid or advanced hereunder, * * *

"In consideration of the promises contained herein the Owner agrees that if he should at any time dispose of any merchantable fruit above agreed to be shipped through the Consignee during the life of this contract, he shall and will pay to the Consignee, as liquidated damages for such breach, the sum of fifteen cents (15 cts) for each and every commercial package or box, known in the trade as 'field box', or the equivalent thereof, which may be so disposed of, sold, marketed or consigned by said Owner, it being specifically agreed that it is impracticable and extremely difficult to fix the actual damage which would thereby be suffered by the Consignee.

"Should the net return from sales of fruit during the life of this agreement fail to equal the total amounts advanced by the Consignee hereunder including all payments on owner's account other than guarantees, then this contract shall be binding upon both parties until such advances and payments have been fully paid * * *

"The said Consignee hereby guarantees a minimum net return of $ cost per * * * box to the said Owner." (Italics ours.)

The complaint is in three counts, the first seeking recovery of the difference between the advances made, expenses incurred, with interest, and the returns from the sale of the crops, including certain grapefruit, which was shipped and sold. The second count seeks recovery of 15 cents per box, under the liquidated damage clause of the contract, for 4000 boxes of oranges sold by respondent, from the crop of 1937–1938, under the theory that the contract remained in force, and covered the future crops, until all advances and expenses had been fully paid. The third count is for damages, in the amount of the profit, which it is alleged appellant would have made, on the 4000 boxes of oranges of the 1937–1938 crop, had they been delivered to him.

An amended answer and cross-complaint, was filed by respondent, which admitted appellant had made advances to respondent in the sum of $2,412.80, and alleged that the contract was void for want of consideration and mutuality, and that the contract was breached by appellant, because of his failing to pick 4000 boxes of oranges growing in said orchard, which on January 7, 1937, were frozen, asking damages therefor.

The court found for appellant in the sum of $1,038.44, under the first count in the complaint, denied him interest, and found against him under the second and third counts. It also found for respondent under the cross-complaint, in the sum of $200, the same to be offset against appellant's judgment, leaving the same at $838.44. Judgment was entered accordingly.

From this judgment plaintiff and appellant has taken this appeal.

[1] Many specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings are set forth by appellant. We believe the evidence sufficient to support all of the findings referring to the first cause of action. The finding of the trial court, that appellant could not recover for the losses sustained on the grapefruit shipments, is correct. The contract contemplated the shipping of grapefruit, for it provided for a charge of $.65 per box for packing grapefruit, and the conversations as to the shipping of the grapefruit, do not indicate any arrangement different than provided by the contract. The provisions of the contract that, "The said consignee hereby guarantees a minimum net return of $ cost per box to the owner," was explained by appellant as meaning that the owner would not receive red ink, and the court properly held that this applied to each of the several sales, and not to the season's average sales. We believe that the judgment in favor of appellant, in the sum of $1,038.44 under the first cause of action in the complaint, is supported by the evidence and the findings, and should be sustained.

[2] For the reasons hereafter set forth, in dealing with the second and third causes of action, we hold that the contract was not breached by appellant failing to pick all of the oranges of the 1936–1937 crop, before frozen. Therefore, there can be no recovery by respondent, of the $200 damages allowed under the cross-complaint, for the 400 boxes of oranges found to be remaining on the trees when the freeze came.

While we agree with the conclusions of law, and the judgment of the court, denying appellant relief under the second and third causes of action set forth in his complaint, we cannot agree with the findings under which these conclusions and judgment were reached. We arrive at the same conclusion, but for different reasons. The court found that appellant breached the contract by failing to pick and market the 400 boxes of oranges remaining on respondent's trees, after December 5, 1936, and which were frozen January 7, 1937. With this finding we do not agree. The contract did not require appellant to pick and market all of the oranges growing on said premises. The contract says, that the owner "employs said consignee to pick * * * and market oranges now growing on his land". It does not say "all oranges". Again it says, that the consignee accepts said employment, "and agrees to pick * * and market all or part of said crop or crops in such manner, at such time or place as will in his judgment yield the maximum return therefor", and, that consignee is given full power and authority to enter the property, and pick and sell "any or all" of said fruit. Under these provisions of the contract, appellant not only was not required to pick and sell all of the crop, but was given a discretion as to the time he might pick and sell the part he did pick. We therefore conclude that he did not breach the contract in this particular.

[3, 4] The second and third causes of action are based upon the claim that the contract was extended to include the crops for the season of 1937–1938, under the provisions of the contract, that it would be "binding" upon both parties until the advances and payments had been fully paid. We do not construe this as meaning that the contract was extended to include the crops of the following year. The contract covered the year from August 17, 1936, to August 17, 1937. At no place does it say that it shall be extended to include the crops of the following year, but merely says that it will be "binding" upon the parties until the advances are paid. To hold that the word "binding" would extend the contract indefinitely, to include future crops, would be doing violence to the rule of law, that in construing an instrument, the office of the judge is, "simply to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained thereon, not to insert what has been omitted, or to omit what has been inserted". Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1858. To construe the word "binding", as extending the contract, as claimed by appellant, would have the effect of the court making a new and different contract for the parties which, of course, cannot be done. Wells v. Union Oil Co., 25 Cal.App. 2d 165, 76 P.2d 696; Grey v. Tubbs, 43 Cal. 359; Greene v. Vargas, 7 Cal.App.2d 127, 45 P.2d 347; Hill v. General Petroleum Corp., 128 Cal.App. 284, 16 P.2d 1035.

We therefore conclude that appellant cannot recover under the second and third causes of action, which seek recovery of liquidated and special damages, respectively, for the 1937–1938 crop, for the reason that they were not covered by the contract.

[5, 6] The court should have allowed interest on the advances made by appellant to respondent. We can only construe these advances as a loan, which, under the provisions of section 1914 of the Civil Code, bears interest. All of these advances, excepting $500, were made between August 17, 1936, the date of the contract, and November 30, 1936. On November 30, 1936, the first returns from the sale of oranges were received and credited by appellant. The contract was not one of sale, but of consignment. Nor was appellant a del credere factor. Therefore there was no money due respondent from appellant, until the first returns were received from the sale of oranges, and any advances made were in the nature of a loan, and in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, would bear legal interest. A factor, who is not a del credere factor, is entitled to interest on advances made. 25 Cor.Jur. p. 384, § 83; Imperial Valley, etc., Ass'n v. Davidson, 58 Cal.App. 551, 209 P. 58.

[7] This, however, does not call for a reversal of the entire judgment. Smith v. Sharp, 70 Cal.App. 336, 233 P. 374. The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the item of $200 allowed respondent under the cross-complaint, leaving the judgment in favor of appellant stand in the amount of $1,038.44, and costs in the trial court, and as so modified the judgment is affirmed as to all matters except interest on advances made by appellant. As to this portion of the judgment, it is reversed and a new trial is ordered, with instructions to proceed to ascertain the amount of interest due appellant on the advances made by him to respondent, and add said sum to the $1,038.44 which plaintiff is entitled to recover, and to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff for the total amount of principal and interest found due him. Each party to pay his own costs on appeal.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 181

WRIGHT et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CALAVERAS COUNTY et al.

Civ. 6555.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 21, 1941.

1. Courts ⇐475(1)

Where Superior Court for City and County of San Francisco had acquired and exercised jurisdiction over action for dissolution of a partnership and distribution of its assets, Superior Court for Calaveras County did not have jurisdiction to entertain a subsequent action by a member of partnership to enjoin sale of partnership assets under directions of Superior Court for San Francisco, since jurisdiction of latter court over liquidation and distribution of assets was exclusive. Code Civ.Proc. § 692.

2. Prohibition ⇐10(1)

Prohibition will lie to restrain one court from assuming jurisdiction over a matter which another tribunal having concurrent jurisdiction has already assumed and is exercising.

3. Execution ⇐172(1)

Proceedings to enjoin execution of an order or judgment of a court cannot be brought in a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, but relief must be sought in court whose order or command is involved.

4. Courts ⇐480(1)

If member of partnership was aggrieved at action of a superior court which had acquired and exercised jurisdiction over an action for dissolution of partnership and distribution of its assets, district court of appeal, rather than another superior court of concurrent jurisdiction, was proper forum to consider member's complaint.

Original proceedings by Allen J. Wright and others against the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Calaveras, and others, for a writ of prohibition to restrain the Superior Court from taking proceedings in an action pending in such court.

Writ of prohibition issued.

J. Jos. Sullivan, Morgan J. Doyle, Clarence A. Shuey, D. Bianco, L. Ferrari, and L. Ferrari, Jr., all of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Jos. H. Huberty and Virgil M. Airola, both of San Andreas, for respondents.

PULLEN, Presiding Justice.

By this writ of prohibition petitioners seek to restrain the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Calaveras, from taking any proceedings in an action numbered therein as No. 2826, and now pending in said court.

From the pleadings and exhibits before us it appears that in 1939, petitioners herein, together with L. A. Morrison, with the exception of Bank of America, formed a limited partnership for the purpose of engaging in the business of gold dredging under the name of "San Andreas Gold Dredging Company".

In May 1940, Allen J. Wright commenced an action in the superior court in San Francisco for the dissolution of the partnership and for the sale and distribution of its assets. All of the other members of the partnership, including L. A. Morrison, answered and joined in the relief sought.

Thereafter, plaintiff therein asked for judgment on the pleadings, and the motion was set for hearing for October 25th. On the day of the hearing of the motion for judgment on the pleadings Morrison asked for and was granted leave to file an amended answer. The allegations of the amended answer were identical with his original answer, except as to the prayer, the amended answer asking that plaintiff take nothing by reason of his complaint. After a hearing, a judgment on the pleadings was granted, and a dissolution of the partnership was ordered, and the assets directed to be sold, the debts and liabilities paid, and the surplus, if any, distributed. It was also provided that the two general partners Allen J. Wright and Charles H. Thurman should proceed to sell the assets to the highest and best bidder, and that notice thereof be given as for the sale of property on execution as provided by section 692 of the Code of Civil Procedure. By proper pleadings it appeared that Morrison had assigned or encumbered a part of his interest to the Bank of America and M. H. Manuel, and to them were to have distributed out of any share belonging to Morrison, such amounts as their interests appeared at the time of distribution.

Thereafter, Wright and Thurman proceeded to advertise the property for sale for December 12, 1940. On December 11, 1940, Morrison filed a notice of appeal to the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, and on the same day applied to the trial judge of the superior court in San Francisco for a stay of the sale. The judge refused to consider the matter ex parte, and continued the application for a stay until two o'clock in the afternoon of that day. At that time certain of the parties being then present, the application was renewed, but by the court refused.

On the following day, December 12th, L. A. Morrison filed an action in the county of Calaveras against petitioners herein, seeking to enjoin the sale which the superior court in San Francisco had directed to be held that morning, and asked that a receiver be appointed. A temporary restraining order and order to show cause was thereupon issued by respondent herein, the superior court in Calaveras county, and the order served upon petitioners shortly before the time for the sale of the property. An ex parte application was made to respondents herein to vacate the temporary restraining order upon the ground that court was without jurisdiction, but the application was refused and the matter set for a hearing upon its merits.

This petition is now filed here to prevent respondents' proceeding in that matter, on the ground of lack of jurisdiction, and that the exclusive jurisdiction over the matter and over the liquidation and distribution of the assets of the partnership is vested in the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

[1] With this contention we must agree. The superior court in San Francisco having assumed and exercised jurisdiction over the dissolution of the partnership, and the liquidation and distribution of its assets, that court thereby acquired and has exclusive jurisdiction over said matters.

[2] That prohibition will lie to restrain one court from assuming jurisdiction over a matter which another tribunal having concurrent jurisdiction has already assumed, and is exercising, is directly held in such cases as Lee v. Superior Court, 191 Cal. 46, 214 P. 972; Dungan v. Superior Court, 149 Cal. 98, 84 P. 767, 117 Am.St.Rep. 119, and De Brincat v. Mogan, 1 Cal.App.2d 7, 36 P.2d 245.

[3] There can be no question that the superior court of San Francisco had already acquired jurisdiction over the matter in dispute and was qualified to afford all the relief sought, Crowley v. Davis et al., 37 Cal. 268, and no proceeding to enjoin the execution of an order or judgment of one court may be brought in a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, but any relief must be sought in the court whose order or command is involved. Gorham v. Toomey, 9 Cal. 77; Rickett v. Johnson, 8 Cal. 34, 37; Revalk v. Kraemer, 8 Cal. 66, 68 Am.Dec. 304, and cases cited above.

[4] If Mr. Morrison felt aggrieved at the action of the superior court in San Francisco the District Court of Appeal to which he had directed his appeal was the proper forum to consider his complaint.

Let the writ of prohibition issue.

We concur: THOMPSON, J.; TUTTLE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 200

GAMBLE v. CITY OF SACRAMENTO.

Civ. 6446.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 24, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 24, 1941.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐162(8), 165

A municipality's payment of salaries is a cash transaction and not a "book account" or "credit account", and mutual unsettled salary accounts do not exist between officer and municipality, and payment is in full, and if a mistake arises, a cause of action accrues immediately.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Book Account" and "Credit Account".

2. Municipal corporations ⇐79

The provision in City of Sacramento Charter that all claims against city shall be presented within six months supersedes provision of Code of Civil Procedure relating to limitation of actions. St.1935, p. 2522, § 70.

3. Municipal corporations ⇐1005

A policeman's claim which was presented to City of Sacramento in February, 1937, for deductions from salary for the years 1932–1935, was barred under charter provision that claims must be presented within six months, as against contention that limitations did not begin to run until three years after last deduction in December, 1935, on theory that payment of salary was an open "book account" instead of cash transaction. St.1935, p. 2522, § 70.

4. Contracts ⇐125

An agreement by which policeman agreed with city to accept less than amount of his legal salary as fixed by ordinance was not void as against "public policy."

Appeal from the Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by Perry C. Gamble against the City of Sacramento to require payment of deductions from petitioner's salary as a member of the police department of the City of Sacramento. From a judgment denying the petition for writ of mandate, the petitioner appeals.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

James F. Gaffney and Peter Mannino, both of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Hugh B. Bradford, City Atty., and Joseph L. Knowles, Deputy City Atty., both of Sacramento, for respondent.

PULLEN, Presiding Justice.

Petitioner at all of the times herein referred to was a member of the police department of the city of Sacramento and in receipt of a salary fixed by an initiative ordinance adopted by the people of that city.

In January, 1932, the city of Sacramento found it necessary, due to the financial and business depression, to drastically cut its expenses, and was faced with the problem of either reducing the personnel of the police department or obtaining contributions from the salaries of all its members. This matter was submitted to the members of that department, and it was unanimously agreed in writing by each officer that he would donate a designated number of days of service without pay to the city of Sacramento for the years 1932–33–34 and 1935, and each authorized the city to make up its payrolls accordingly. On each salary warrant appeared an endorsement that the same was received as full payment for the services shown therein. It is for the recovery of $514 so deducted from his salary this petition for a writ of mandate was brought and from a judgment against petitioner this appeal was taken.

The first point urged against the petition is that it is barred by the provisions of section 70 of the charter, the last deduction in salary being in December 1935, and a claim was presented to the city for the amount withheld in February 1937.

[1-3] The petition is based upon the theory of an open book account which evidences the amount here sought as unpaid salary, and claims the statutes of limitation did not begin to run against the account until three years after the date of the last item. It seems clear however, that payment of salaries by a municipality is not a book or credit account, but a cash transaction. There are no mutual unsettled salary accounts between an officer and the city; the payment is in full, and if any mistake arises, a cause of action accrues immediately. The compensation of a public officer is not in the nature of an account. Griffin v. County of Clay, 63 Iowa 413, 19 N.W. 327. As to the period of limitation the charter of Sacramento, Sec. 70, Stat.1935, p. 2522, provides that all claims or demands shall be presented within six months, and that provision supersedes the provision of the Code of Civil Procedure upon that subject. Dryden v. Board of Pension Commissioners, 6 Cal.2d 575, 59 P.2d 104; Crescent Wharf, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles, 207 Cal. 430, 278 P. 1028.

[4] Petitioner also claims an agreement, wherein an officer of a city agrees with the city to accept less than the amount of his legal salary as fixed by ordinance is void as against public policy. This contention has, in several cases, been determined adversely to the contention of appellant. In Huntsman v. Board of State Harbor Commissioners, 17 Cal.App.2d 749, 62 P.2d 771, the facts were quite similar to the facts here. There all the employees of the state harbor board voluntarily and with full knowledge of the facts entered into a contract for reduced employment in order that the expenditures of that board might be kept within the available revenues and the employment spread as widely as possible among the employees, rather than cause a layoff of many such employees, and it was there held such employees were estopped from asserting there was no waiver by them of their rights.

In Bloom v. Hazzard, 104 Cal. 310, 37 P. 1037, 1038, a constable agreed with an execution creditor to charge less than his usual fees for levying the writ and conducting a sale. It was claimed this agreement was against public policy. The court, in refusing to so hold, said: "The agreement was not intended to work any fraud or wrong upon any party; and, so far as appears, it cannot be classed as malum in se or malum prohibitum."

Appellant cites Lukens v. Nye, 156 Cal. 498, 105 P. 593, 36 L.R.A.,N.S., 244, 20 Ann.Cas. 158, and Francis v. Leavy, 131 Cal.App. 620, 21 P.2d 979, as supporting his position, but in a case decided in the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Los Angeles, and entitled W. W. Fuller et al. v. City of Compton et al., No. 385609, Judge Emmet H. Wilson of that court, in sustaining a demurrer to a petition wherein certain public officers sought to recover money withheld by agreement, differentiated the cases of Lukens v. Nye and Francis v. Leavy, pointing out that in the Lukens case an appropriation had been made by the legislature for the purpose of satisfying a claim against the state, and in order to induce the governor to sign the bill, the claimant agreed to accept a smaller amount than appropriated. This, Judge Wilson held, was void as against public policy and unenforceable, citing People v. Board of Police, 75 N.Y. 38; Hobbs v. City of Yonkers, 102 N.Y. 13, 5 N.E. 778; De Boest v. Gambell, 35 Or. 368, 58 P.72, 353. There the agreement had not become executed and lacked the element of acceptance as here.

In the Francis case, plaintiff endorsed a warrant which recited that endorsement constituted an acknowledgment that the amount thereof was accepted in payment of the services mentioned therein, but in fact the salary of plaintiff, after having been fixed by the board, had never been reduced by the board, and plaintiff had never entered into any contract to accept a less compensation than that originally set. The endorsement of the warrant, therefore, did not constitute a waiver of his claim for the full amount of his salary.

In City of Cleveland v. Phillips, 19 Ohio Law Abstract, page 71, certain municipal judges agreed to accept a reduction in salary for the benefit of the municipality. It was there said: "It is conceded that neither Judge Phillips nor any other judge could have been compelled to accept during his term of office a compensation less than that fixed at the time he entered upon his term, but it does not follow that he could not voluntarily relinquish a part of it. We fail to see how such an arrangement is parallel to a preelection promise to accept less than the authorized compensation, because the ulterior motive of such a promise is readily understood. Here the agreement to accept less than the statutory compensation was not only not against public policy but was commendable and patriotic."

In the State ex rel. Hess v. City of Akron et al., 132 Ohio St. 305, 7 N.E.2d 411, a somewhat similar condition prevailed, and the court reached a like conclusion.

Support for the conclusions here reached is found in Barfield v. City of Atlanta, 53 Ga.App. 861, 187 S.E. 407; Steele v. City of Chattanooga, 19 Tenn.App. 192, 84 S.W. 2d 590; Schuh v. Waukesha, 220 Wis. 600, 265 N.W. 699; Taylor v. Philadelphia, 328 Pa. 383, 196 A. 64; Lehman v. City of Toledo, 48 Ohio App. 121, 192 N.E. 537; see, also, Myers v. Calipatria, 140 Cal.App. 295, 35 P.2d 377.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: THOMPSON, J.; TUTTLE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 161

BOYD v. LANCASTER.

Civ. 2598.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 20, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 20, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 17, 1941.

1. Judgment ⇐216

Though no formal interlocutory judgment or decree in action to set aside deed and in cross-action to quiet title was ever entered, an order for that purpose would be as effective.

2. Cancellation of Instruments ⇐55

Where interlocutory order, in action to set aside a deed and in cross-action to quiet title, provided that realty should be reconveyed to plaintiff on payment of certain sum by certain time, but that otherwise title would be quieted in defendant, right given by such order partook of nature of a "right of redemption" rather than of an "option", so that, in general, rules governing forfeitures applied, and court had power to enlarge time of payment called for, in absence of evidence that defendant was substantially prejudiced by delay.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Option" and "Right of Redemption".

3. Cancellation of instruments ⇐55

Where court, in action to set aside deed and in cross-action to quiet title, found that grantor was of unsound mind and that consideration was grossly inadequate and ordered grantee to reconvey if grantee should be paid certain sum by August 15, and thereafter time was extended on August 16 to August 30, and on August 30 court ordered hearing on application for extension of time to be continued to September 20, and during the meantime the grantor died, suspending court's authority, and administrator was appointed on November 15, and the next day an appeal was taken, again suspending the court's power to act until the coming down of the remittitur, and before coming down of remittitur required sum of money had been tendered, there was a substantial and actual compliance with terms of interlocutory order.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Robert B. Lambert, Judge.

Action by C. M. Grove, guardian ad litem of Henry O. Boyd, against J. M. Lancaster to set aside a deed, wherein the defendant filed a cross-complaint to quiet title. Henry O. Boyd died, and Joseph L. Boyd, as administrator, was substituted as plaintiff. From an adverse judgment, Joseph L. Boyd, administrator, appeals.

Judgment reversed with directions to enter judgment for plaintiff.

Edgar T. Fee, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. O. Reavis, of Bakersfield, and Chapman & Chapman, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action, originally filed through a guardian ad litem, to set aside a deed by which Henry O. Boyd had conveyed certain property to J. M. Lancaster. The deed recited a consideration of $10. Among other things, the complaint alleged that at the date of the deed Boyd was of unsound mind and physically and mentally incapable of handling his business affairs. In his answer the defendant Lancaster alleged, among other things, that the deed had been given and accepted in full satisfaction of certain debts theretofore owed to him by the grantor. In a cross-complaint, he sought to have his own title quieted. An amendment to the complaint was later filed, in which the plaintiff offered to pay any amounts due to the defendant, with interest thereon.

On June 29, 1937, the court signed and filed findings of fact and conclusions of law, in which it was found that at the date of the deed Boyd was "a person of unsound mind, but not entirely without understanding"; that the consideration for the conveyance was grossly inadequate; that by reason of those facts the conveyance was voidable; that Lancaster had made certain advancements to Boyd; and that there was "now due and unpaid" certain sums which with interest thereon amounted to $5,300. As conclusions of law it was found that the property should be reconveyed to Boyd by Lancaster upon the payment of $5,300 within sixty days from and after July 1, 1937, and that if it was not paid title was to be quieted in Lancaster. No interlocutory judgment appears in the record, although a purported "order modifying interlocutory judgment" was filed on July 26, 1937, purporting to grant an extension of time to August 15, 1937, in which to comply with "the interlocutory order" filed "on the 29th day of May 1937, designated 'An Interlocutory Judgment.'" No such an interlocutory order appears in the record.

On August 16, 1937, an order was entered "that a stay of proceedings to comply with the order heretofore made by the court be granted to and including August 30, 1937." On August 26, 1937, the plaintiff filed an application for an extension of time within which to deposit the funds, noticing the same for hearing on August 30, 1937. On August 30, 1937, the court entered an order on its own motion and for good cause, continuing the hearing of this matter to September 20, 1937. Sometime during the night of August 30-31, 1937, Henry O. Boyd died. In the meantime, on August 27, 1937, the plaintiff had caused an oil company to deposit $5,300 with a title company, which amount, however, was deposited conditionally in accordance with certain escrow instructions.

On September 21, 1937, the court entered an order reciting that the plaintiff had failed to comply "with the interlocutory judgment of June 29, 1937", and the orders of July 26, 1937 and August 16, 1937, and ordering that title to the property be quieted in the defendant "as provided in the interlocutory decree of June 29, 1937" and, after reciting that the time fixed for paying the money had expired, ordering that judgment be entered nunc pro tunc as of August 17, 1937. On September 22, 1937, a judgment was entered quieting title in the defendant and further ordering that the same be entered nunc pro tunc as of August 31, 1937.

On November 10, 1937, letters of administration in the estate of Henry O. Boyd were issued to Joseph L. Boyd and on November 15, 1937, on motion, said administrator was substituted as the party plaintiff. On November 16, 1937, he filed notice of appeal from the judgment which had been entered. That judgment was reversed by this court on the ground that the authority of the guardian ad litem had ended with the death of the ward, and that the judgment entered after the death of the real party in interest was void since no substitution of parties had been made. Boyd v. Lancaster, 32 Cal.App.2d 574, 90 P.2d 317. The remittitur was issued on July 8, 1939, but in the meantime and on June 14, 1939, the substituted plaintiff had deposited $5,300 with the clerk of the trial court, tendering the same in compliance with the interlocutory judgment and giving notice thereof. It is stated in appellant's brief, and not denied, that said sum of money has at all times since and now remains on deposit with said clerk.

On July 24, 1939, the court heard motions made by the respective parties, each asking for the entry of judgment in his favor, and on August 2, 1939, the plaintiff's motion was denied and the defendant's motion granted. On August 17, 1939, a judgment was entered adjudging and decreeing that the time limited by the respective court orders within which the plaintiff might deposit $5,300 with the clerk as a condition to obtaining the relief sought by him expired on August 30, 1937, that no extension of time beyond that date had ever been made, and that by reason of the plaintiff's failure to comply with the court orders any right he might have to recover the property had terminated. The judgment contained further provisions quieting the title to the property in the defendant. From this judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

[1, 2] So far as the record shows, no formal interlocutory judgment or decree was ever entered, but an order for this purpose may be just as effective. Thompson v. White, 63 Cal. 505. Insofar as the instant case is concerned, it seems fully to have been understood by all parties that an opportunity was given to the appellant, pending the entry of a final judgment, to pay $5,300 and thereby avoid the entry of a judgment quieting title in the defendant. In Leslie v. Federal Finance Co., Inc., 14 Cal.2d 73, 92 P.2d 906, the court held that the right given by such an interlocutory order partakes of the nature of a right of redemption rather than that of an option and that, in general, the rules governing forfeitures apply. In that case, which involved an offer of performance of the requirements of an interlocutory judgment, the offer being made some eight days after the required time had elapsed, it was not only held that the trial court had power to enlarge the time of payment called for in the interlocutory decree, but it was stated that under the circumstances and in the absence of evidence that the other party had been substantially prejudiced by the delay it was the duty of the court to grant relief from the forfeiture.

[3] In the instant case the equities are in favor of the appellant. If it be conceded that the conditional deposit of $5,300 with a title company on August 27, 1937, was not a substantial compliance with the terms of the interlocutory order the fact remains that the required amount was deposited with the clerk of the court in compliance with the order before the judgment appealed from was entered. The court's adjudication or finding that the time within which the appellant might deposit the $5,300 with the clerk of the court expired on August 30, 1937, and that no extension of time beyond that date had ever been made, is not supported by the record. On August 26, 1937, an application for an extension of time was filed and noticed for August 30, 1937. On that day, the court ordered the hearing on the same continued to September 20, 1937. It can hardly be questioned that the effect of that order, in such a case as this, was to extend the time within which the money might be deposited to September 20, 1937. Before the matter was heard the real party plaintiff died and the court's authority to pass upon the matter was suspended, as held on the former appeal, until an administrator was appointed and a substitution made. This was completed on November 15, 1937, and the next day an appeal was taken which again suspended the power of the court to act until the appeal was determined. Nothing was done on November 15, 1937, with respect to passing upon the application for an extension of time which was then pending, and nothing could be done thereafter until the remittitur was issued on July 8, 1939. In the meantime, and before any action could be taken by the court, the required amount was deposited with the clerk. We think it must be held that the time within which the deposit could be made was extended beyond August 30, 1937, and that the death of the party and the former appeal, which successively suspended the power of the court to act in the meantime, extended the time until the coming down of the remittitur, at which time the required amount had been deposited. We conclude, therefore, that there was a substantial and actual compliance on the part of the appellant with the terms of the interlocutory order within the time allowed under the law, and that the court erred in holding to the contrary.

The judgment is reversed with directions to enter judgment in favor of the appellant, with an appropriate order turning over the money deposited to the respondent.

We concur: MARKS, J.; GRIFFIN, J.

RUST v. HILL et al.

L. A. 17646.

Supreme Court of California.

March 3, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 31, 1941.

1. Limitation of actions ⇐112

Where a debtor has resorted to the beneficial provisions of a moratorium act, but ineffectively, the provisions of the act do not grant to his creditor an extension of time for commencing an action for balance due after the exercise of power of sale. St. 1935, p. 1214, § 19, as amended by St.1937, p. 60; p. 466.

2. Limitation of actions ⇐112

A mortgage creditor is not entitled to an extension of time for bringing an action for a deficiency where debtor has had no opportunity to invoke the beneficial provisions of the moratorium act for reason that the power of sale was exercised before the moratorium act became effective. Code Civ.Proc. § 337, subd. 1, § 580a; St.1935, pp. 56, 60, § 1 et seq., § 8; p. 1214, § 19, as amended by St.1937, p. 60; p. 1216, § 31; p. 466.

3. Mortgages ⇐338

The primary purpose of the moratorium act was to afford relief to debtors by postponement of sales and forfeitures of their interests in real property which were bound as security for the discharge of their obligations and the extensions thereby made available to creditors were granted to protect their interests which otherwise might be jeopardized by the delays invoked by debtors pursuant to the act. St.1935, p. 1216, § 31.

4. Limitation of actions ⇐112

Where pursuant to power contained in trust deed securing note executed in January, 1931, property was sold on April 24, 1935, action instituted on April 1, 1938, was barred by statutes requiring action for deficiency to be brought within three months after foreclosure sale, since debtor was never in a position to avail himself of benefit of moratorium act which did not become effective until after the creditor had sold the property. Code Civ.Proc. § 337, subd. 1; § 580a; St.1935, p. 1214, § 19, as amended by St.1937, p. 60; p. 466.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Robert W. Kenny, Judge.

Action on a note by Richmond A. Rust against Frank P. Hill and others. From a judgment entered upon an order sustaining defendants' demurrer to the complaint with leave to amend, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Prior opinion, 103 P.2d 578.

Elmer P. Bromley and H. E. Lindersmith, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Marcus Muskat, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

J. H. Nutt and Henry F. Walker, both of Los Angeles, amici curiae for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment entered upon an order sustaining the defendants' demurrer to the complaint with leave to amend, and the plaintiff's election to stand upon the complaint as filed.

The plaintiff sued to recover the balance due on a promissory note for $7,600, dated January 1, 1931, and due in three years. The note was secured by a deed of trust on real property of the defendants. Upon default in payment, the real property was sold pursuant to the power of sale in the deed of trust for the sum of $1,000. After application of the proceeds of the sale the deficiency, or balance due on the note, and for which suit was brought, was $8,522.29. The complaint was filed April 1, 1938, and showed that it was filed more than four years after the maturity of the note and more than three months after the sale under the deed of trust.

By their demurrer the defendants pleaded the bar of subdivision 1, section 337, of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provided for a four-year limitation of actions on "any contract, obligation or liability founded upon an instrument in writing", and which also provided that the time within which an action for a deficiency may be brought shall not extend beyond three months after the time of sale under a deed of trust or mortgage. The defendants also pleaded in bar the provisions of section 580a of the Code of Civil Procedure, which likewise limited the time to three months within which an action for a deficiency may be commenced following the exercise of the power of sale in a deed of trust or mortgage. The plaintiff contends that the limitation under both statutes was tolled by the provisions of the Mortgage and Trust Deed Moratorium Acts of 1935, St.1935, p. 1208, 1214, and 1937, St.1937, p. 57, 60; St.1937, p. 460, 466.

The defendants contend that the moratorium acts had no application to the facts of this case wherein it is disclosed that the plaintiff foreclosed his trust deed and sold the property pursuant to the power of sale before the act of 1935 went into effect. The complaint shows that the real property described in the deed of trust was sold on April 24, 1935. The moratorium act went into effect on June 21, 1935, or about two months after the sale. The defendants insist that it was the purpose of the moratorium acts to provide, as an economic necessity, for the postponement of foreclosures under mortgages, deeds of trusts and contracts of purchase affecting real property upon a proper showing for such postponement on the part of the debtor, at the same time safeguarding the rights of the creditor in the event of such postponement; that there is nothing in those acts relating to any necessity for the postponement of the time within which actions may be brought independent of and apart from the postponements authorized by the acts, and that where, as here, the creditor has sold the property and thus irrecoverably foreclosed all interest of the debtor therein before the effective date of the Moratorium Act of 1935, the debtor was never in position to avail himself of its benefits.

The plaintiff relies on the cases of Bakersfield Home Building Company v. J. K. McAlpine Land & Development Company, 26 Cal.App.2d 444, 79 P.2d 410, and Everts v. Newhouse, Inc., 28 Cal.App.2d 407, 82 P.2d 703, wherein it was held that the action for a deficiency judgment after exercise of the power of sale under a deed of trust was an action founded upon a written instrument secured by a deed of trust and that the moratorium statutes applied to extend the time within which the creditor could commence such action.

[1] In each of those cases it appeared that the power of sale was exercised after the effective date of the applicable moratorium act, and it must be assumed that in such cases the debtor had an opportunity to obtain a postponement of the sale by invoking the appropriate procedure under the act. Whether the cases relied on by the plaintiff have been correctly decided is not a question which concerns us at this time. For present purposes it is sufficient to note the factual distinction between this case and the cases relied on by the plaintiff, and particularly the fact that the debtor in the present case never had an opportunity to obtain a postponement of the sale pursuant to the act which is here invoked by the creditor. The courts have recognized that where the debtor has resorted to the beneficial provisions of a moratorium act, but ineffectively, the provisions of the act do not grant to his creditor an extension of the time for commencing an action for the balance due after the exercise of the power of sale. In Christina v. McLoughlin, 18 Cal.App.2d 410, 63 P.2d 1174, after the effective date of the act of January 31, 1935, St.1935, p. 60, the power of sale was exercised under a deed of trust and the creditor brought an action for a deficiency more than four years after the note became due and more than three months after the sale. In that case the debtor had applied for relief, but the proceeding to stay the sale was ineffective, and postponement was denied for the reason that the application was filed too late. The court held that the extension to the creditor did not apply. That distinction was recognized in Harris v. Fitting, 9 Cal.2d 117, 121, 69 P.2d 833.

[2] It is observed that section 8 of the act of January 31, 1935, involved in Christina v. McLoughlin, provided that when the time within which an action might be commenced upon any obligation founded upon a written instrument secured by mortgage, deed of trust, or contract of purchase of real property, would have expired by virtue of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure during the period of postponement ordered pursuant to the provisions of the act, such time was extended for the period of postponement; and that the court placed its conclusion on the ground that there had been no postponement. It is also observed that the provisions of section 19 of the acts invoked by the plaintiff herein do not contain any similar limitation. Nevertheless, considering the express objects to be attained by the moratorium acts, it unquestionably follows that the creditor is not entitled to an extension of the time for bringing an action for a deficiency where the debtor has had no opportunity to invoke the beneficial provisions of the act for the reason that the power of sale was exercised before the act became effective.

[3, 4] The provisions of the acts under consideration demonstrate that their primary purpose was to afford relief to debtors by postponement of sales and forfeitures of their interests in real property which were bound as security for the discharge of their obligations. The extensions thereby made available to creditors were complementary and co-ordinate and were granted to them to protect their interests, which otherwise might be jeopardized by the delays invoked by debtors pursuant to the terms of the acts. Sec. 31, Trust Deed and Moratorium Act of 1935, St.1935, p. 1216; Bennett v. California Trust Co., 6 Cal.2d 381, 57 P.2d 914; Harris v. Fitting, supra.

It follows from the foregoing that the demurrer was properly sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

DAVIS v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA.*

L. A. 17656.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 28, 1941.

Rehearing Granted March 28, 1941.

1. Attorney and client ⇐53(1)

In a disbarment proceeding, intendments are in favor of the accused attorney.

2. Attorney and client ⇐57

In disbarment proceeding, findings of local administrative committee in favor of attorney supported by evidence were followed by the reviewing court in preference to findings of Board of Governors on same evidence, since local committee had an opportunity to hear witnesses and was in a better position to determine truth concerning disputed facts than reviewing board or court.

3. Attorney and client ⇐58

Where attorney signed a verification in blank which was thereafter used in connection with a cross-complaint filed in a replevin action against the attorney, attorney was suspended from the practice of law for a period of three months from and after the date on which decision of the Supreme Court should become final.

CARTER, J., dissenting.

Proceeding by Harold L. Davis to review the recommendations of the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California that petitioner be disbarred from the practice of law.

Petitioner suspended from the practice of law for a period of three months.

Morris Lavine, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Claude Minard, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This proceeding was brought to review the recommendations of the board of governors of The State Bar that the petitioner be disbarred from the practice of law.

The petitioner's difficulties arose out of his dealings with Mrs. Marie Monast, who was arrested and placed in jail on a charge of possessing narcotics. Through a man named Evans, a self-styled "bouncer" in a Hollywood night club, she employed the petitioner and another lawyer, G. Bentley Ryan, to represent her. To secure the payment of their fee of $2,000 she pledged with Davis two diamond rings having a value in excess of that sum. The petitioner signed a typewritten receipt for them which, as originally written, recited that they were deposited as security for attorneys' fees "and bond". When the receipt was offered in evidence, a line had been drawn through the words "and bond".

Davis procured a bail bond from a surety company and Mrs. Monast was released from jail. She paid the premium on the bond. The attorneys' fee was paid in three instalments, the last of which was made on May 26, 1937. On July 19, 1937, when she failed to appear for trial in the superior court, the bond was forfeited. Later, upon representations of Davis that she was ill, the matter was continued one week. At that time there was a trial by the court, a jury having been waived, and judgment of conviction. She immediately filed an application for probation, which was granted the same day. A condition of probation was that she should leave California and not return. A few days later she sailed for Honolulu and has not returned. Upon this disposition of the case her bond was exonerated.

On July 17, 1937, Irene Davidson and Catherine Wall were arrested and jailed in Los Angeles on charges of grand theft. They, too, through Tom Evans, retained Davis and Ryan as counsel. Shortly after their arrest, Davis filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus and secured their release on bail by posting a bond of $1,000 for each one of them. These bonds were secured by Davis from the same surety company which had posted bail for Marie Monast. When arraigned in municipal court, the bail of each defendant was increased to $3,500. This they were unable to furnish, and in consequence they were remanded to the county jail, where they remained until sentenced. At the preliminary hearing, Ryan appeared for them on behalf of Davis and himself, but neither had any further connection with the case.

* Subsequent opinion 118 P.2d 818.

When these two women were arrested, Marie Monast had paid the premium on her bond and all of her attorneys' fees in her case. On the day after she was to appear for trial, the petitioner pawned for $350 the two diamond rings pledged with him by her. Approximately two months after Mrs. Monast left for Honolulu, Davis sold the pawn ticket for $200, and the purchaser subsequently redeemed the rings from the pawnbroker. Thereafter Mrs. Monast brought a replevin action against Davis to secure possession of the rings. Davis then repurchased the rings and after the institution of the disciplinary proceedings against him, returned them to her.

All of the facts which have been stated stand undisputed. But there is a direct conflict between the petitioner and Mrs. Monast concerning the agreement under which she pledged the rings with him. He testified that when he signed the receipt for the rings the words "and bond" had not been crossed out. Mrs. Monast testified positively that she refused to accept it until this was done.

In further explanation of his action in disposing of the jewelry the petitioner testified that "they were to be returned to her when the bond was either exonerated or otherwise had been disposed of and the fee had been paid". He also testified that he represented Catherine Wall and Irene Davidson upon the representation of Evans "that he had talked to Mrs. Monast and that she was willing to take care of their case and for me to come and get them out [of jail]". Later, he said, he talked with Mrs. Monast and told her Tom Evans had called him in connection with the case of these women. "And did she indicate", he was asked, "in anywise whatsoever that she was not going to be responsible for their bond and attorneys fees?" "No", was his reply. "If she had, I wouldn't have gone ahead with them." According to his testimony, he told Mrs. Monast "in the beginning" that his fee would be $250 for each woman and that he was going to keep the jewelry. But he also related a conversation he had with Mrs. Monast at the county jail when "she apparently was highly dissatisfied and said that these two girls were dissatisfied the way the preliminary hearing had been handled; said they were going to get other counsel and that she didn't intend to pay for their fee or bond".

The testimony of Mrs. Monast, taken by deposition, is in direct contradiction to that of petitioner. She said: "I never talked to Mr. Davis concerning Katherine Davidson and Irene Wall. * * * I am positive that I never told Harold L. Davis, or anyone else, that I would pay the fees for [them] * * *, or either of them, as I had no reason for assisting these women. * * * I never told [them] * * * that I would be responsible for their bonds or attorney's fees at any time in the county jail in Los Angeles, or any place else."

The charges made against the petitioner are that he improperly disposed of the diamond rings pledged with him, that he filed a false and improper cross-complaint in the replevin action, and that he gave false testimony in a deposition taken in connection with that litigation. The local administrative committee of The State Bar before whom the issues were tried found in petitioner's favor on all charges with the exception of that concerning the allegations of the cross-complaint. On that issue it found that such allegations were due to the error of Davis' associate in preparing the cross-complaint and through the careless conduct of the petitioner in signing a verification of it in blank. Upon these findings the committee recommended that Davis be given a private reprimand. When the matter came before the board of governors, it held a hearing in which Davis was sworn and testified, adopted findings of fact contrary to those of the committee and recommended the disbarment of the petitioner.

The conclusion of the board of governors that the petitioner violated his oath as an attorney at law and is guilty of conduct involving moral turpitude rests upon its findings that although the agreement of Mrs. Monast, to secure the performance of which she had pledged the rings, had been fully performed, Davis sold them as his own property; that he testified falsely upon the taking of his deposition concerning the transaction; and that he swore to certain allegations in a cross-complaint which were false and untrue. In reaching its decision, the board of governors considered not only the record of the proceeding before the local administrative committee, but also the testimony of the petitioner given when this record was under review. But as presented to this court, the case is one in which the board of governors, upon substantially the same evidence as that before the local committee, concluded that the petitioner had violated his oath as an attorney at law although the committee absolved him.

To state with certainty the agreement which was made between two persons in a series of conversations many months before is a difficult task under any circumstances. In an opinion filed by the local administrative committee in connection with its findings and recommendation, it recognized this difficulty and stated the problem before it as follows: "The determination of most of the issues in this proceeding depends upon whether respondent or Marie Monast is to be believed with respect to these matters. We state frankly that the evidence was far from satisfactory. However, considering the proof made available several items of testimony corroborate respondent's story rather than that of Marie Monast. * * * Respondent appeared before us personally and while his testimony was not as precise as some others might give it, it is obvious, both from his testimony before us and on depositions, that often his statements were conclusions which as an attorney he reached and stated as facts rather than the facts themselves. We did not have the benefit of the personal appearance of Marie Monast and her deposition was far from satisfactory. Under these circumstances we have resolved the conflict in favor of respondent. We conclude that respondent was authorized to hold the rings as security for the Marie Monast bond and for the bond and fee of the Wall and Davidson women."

[1] The State Bar recognizes the rule that in a disbarment proceeding the intendment should be in favor of the accused attorney. But it insists that in this case there is only one reasonable inference which can be drawn from the facts in evidence. This reasonable inference, says The State Bar, points to the petitioner's guilt because it "appears unlikely" that a woman who had insisted upon receiving the receipt signed by him "would have been satisfied to permit rings of value in excess of $2,000 to be retained for a fee of $500, with no more explicit instructions than that if she was not able to pay the money he could use the rings as he saw fit". "Such conduct", it continues, "would not be reasonable in the light of all the circumstances."

However, the local administrative committee weighed the same evidence considered by the board of governors and decided that Mrs. Monast delivered the rings to him as security for the payment of a balance of the fee and also as security for the bond pursuant to which she was released from custody. It also found that at the time Davis pawned the rings, he had been authorized by her to dispose of them "to take care of other obligations which she had incurred" to him in connection with the cases of Catherine Wall and Irene Davidson. Undoubtedly the evidence supports these findings as well as those of the board of governors, and the contrary conclusion drawn from it results from two different opinions concerning the credibility of the witnesses.

[2] The rule which will be followed by this court under such circumstances has been stated in a number of cases. In re Werner, 13 Cal.2d 666, 91 P.2d 881; Egan v. State Bar, 10 Cal.2d 458, 75 P.2d 67; Mauer v. State Bar, 219 Cal. 271, 26 P.2d 14. The local administrative committee which had an opportunity to hear the witnesses is in a much better position to determine the truth concerning disputed facts than a reviewing board or an appellate court, and, ordinarily, its findings will be followed. That rule is applicable to the present case.

[3] But the committee found that the act of petitioner in signing a verification in blank which was thereafter used in connection with a pleading "was reprehensible conduct which should severely be condemned". When this finding is considered in connection with the fact that the verification was used with a cross-complaint in the action brought by Mrs. Monast to recover her jewelry, and that this cross-complaint alleged that Mrs. Monast was indebted to the petitioner for professional services, it would seem that the discipline to be administered should be greater than a private reprimand. Accordingly, it is ordered that the petitioner be and he is hereby suspended from the practice of law for a period of three months from and after the date this decision becomes final.

CARTER, Justice (dissenting).

I find myself unable to agree with the conclusion reached by the majority of the court that petitioner should be suspended from the practice of the law for a period of three months. The majority opinion purports to accept the determination of the local administrative committee that the only conduct for which petitioner could be disciplined was the signing of a verification in blank which was thereafter used in connection with a pleading filed on behalf of petitioner in an action brought against him by the complaining witness. While in my opinion, the signing of such verification did not constitute unprofessional conduct, if it could possibly be held that it did, certainly the discipline of a public reprimand recommended by the local administrative committee is of sufficient severity to satisfy even those who may be classified as "strict disciplinarians".

While it is true that the signing of a verification in blank for use in connection with a pleading to be subsequently prepared, is a dangerous practice, and is very apt to involve the signer thereof in difficulty, it is impossible for me to understand how this act alone can be held to constitute moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption, or a violation of any of the rules of professional conduct promulgated by The State Bar of California. However, if the purpose of the signing of such a verification was to permit either the signer thereof or someone else to accomplish some fraudulent purpose or design, then, of course, such act would constitute unprofessional conduct and would subject the signer thereof to discipline if he were a member of the bar.

On the other hand, if there was no thought or intention on the part of the person signing the verification to have the same made use of to accomplish some fraudulent purpose or design, but the verification was thereafter used for this purpose without his knowledge or consent, even though the signer of such verification might be subjected to civil liability for his negligence, his act should not subject him to a disciplinary proceeding by The State Bar of California.

In my opinion a public reprimand is ample discipline to be administered for the alleged misconduct committed by petitioner in this case.

17 Cal.2d 521

LYNCH et al. v. BENCINI et al.

L. A. 17699.

Supreme Court of California.

March 5, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐347(1)

A judgment entered after default does not relate back to the time when default was entered so as to cut off the right of appeal where entry of judgment is delayed until time for appeal has expired.

2. Appeal and error ⇐347(1)

A judgment reciting that it was entered upon application of plaintiff who at the time judgment was entered was dead and at time when statute imposed duty on court to dismiss the action, which judgment included large amount of interest accruing between entry of default and date that judgment was entered, did not relate back to the time when default was entered so as to defeat right of appeal. Code Civ.Proc. § 581a.

3. Judgment ⇐126(1), 131

Under statute authorizing clerk to enter default judgment in action arising upon contract for the recovery of money or damages only, clerk has right to enter default judgment only where the proper amount appeared from terms of contract as alleged in complaint or follows therefrom by mere mathematical computation, and he has no power to enter such judgment where the exercise of discretion, and taking of evidence, is necessary to determine amount of damages. Code Civ.Proc. § 585 sub. 1, 2.

4. Judgment ⇐131

In action to recover price of stock which defendants under contract agreed to buy from plaintiff, whether clerk was authorized to enter a default judgment against one of defendants was not dependent on whether complaint stated a cause of action but whether the complaint stated a cause of action within statute authorizing the court to enter default judgment in an action arising upon contract for the recovery of money or damages only. Code Civ.Proc. § 585 sub. 1.

5. Judgment ⇐131

Where creditor agreed to take stock of corporation in payment of debt as soon as permit was issued by corporation commissioner and directors agreed to buy certain part of stock at a future time on certain contingencies and it was agreed that dividends were to be applied on purchase price and there was no stipulation as to amount of damages in event of breach, in creditor's action to recover from directors purchase price of the stock agreed to be purchased, clerk was not authorized to enter default judgment since taking of evidence was necessary to determine amount of damages. Code Civ.Proc. § 585 sub. 1.

6. Judgment ⇐131

In determining whether an action is one arising upon contract for the recovery of money or damages only so as to authorize the clerk to enter default judgment, allegations of complaint and the terms of the contract are to be considered notwithstanding that the prayer is for the certain amount. Code Civ.Proc. § 585 sub. 1.

7. Appeal and error ⇐105
Dismissal and nonsuit ⇐53(1)

Under statute providing that all actions must be dismissed by the court in which the same are pending on court's own motion if summons has been served and no answer has been filed and plaintiff fails to have judgment entered within three years after service of summons, duty is imposed on court to dismiss action if plaintiff fails to perform duty upon him, and, where defendant has not taken steps for his own protection, court's error in failing to perform duty is one which may be corrected on appeal if taken within statutory time. Code Civ.Proc. § 581a.

8. Appeal and error ⇐127

Where clerk after death of plaintiff entered default judgment against a defendant more than three years after he was served with summons in action arising out of contract for the purchase of certain stock, and defendant made timely motion after judgment to dismiss the action, and court did not perform duty imposed by statute providing for dismissal of action if plaintiff fails to have judgment entered within three years after service of summons, default judgment was not immune from direct attack on appeal. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 579, 581a, 585.

9. Appeal and error ⇐934(1)

There is no presumption in favor of a judgment entered by a clerk. Code Civ.Proc. § 585 sub. 1.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. J. Kelly, Judge.

Action by Frank Lynch against C. H. Bencini and others for the price of certain stock which defendants under a contract agreed to buy from plaintiff, wherein Georgia A. Lynch and F. C. Lynch, as executrix and executor respectively of the last will and testament of Frank Lynch, deceased, were substituted as plaintiffs on the death of Frank Lynch. From a default judgment entered by the clerk and from orders denying a motion to vacate the judgment and to dismiss the action, Leroy A. Wright appeals.

Judgment and orders reversed with directions. For prior report see 104 P.2d 823.

J. A. Donnelley and C. M. Monroe, both of San Diego, for appellant.

Dempster McKee, of San Diego, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

A petition for hearing in this case was granted to the end that further consideration be given to the contentions of the plaintiffs. On such consideration, we agree with the disposition of the appeal by the District Court of Appeal of the Fourth Appellate District and adopt, with a slight deletion, the opinion of that Court, prepared by Presiding Justice Barnard, as the opinion of this Court. It is as follows:

"On August 23, 1929, a written agreement was prepared which purports to be between Frank Lynch on the one hand and six named persons on the other hand. However, only five of the latter signed the agreement. The agreement provides that whereas a named corporation is indebted to Lynch in the sum of $275,000, Lynch agrees to cancel this debt and accept in lieu thereof enough shares of stock in said corporation which at 4/5ths of their par value would amount to $275,000, the same to be delivered as soon as a permit was issued by the corporation commissioner. It further provides that in consideration of this cancellation of the debt of the other six persons, as directors of the corporation, jointly and several agree to purchase from Lynch within seven months after delivery of the stock to him, so much of said stock as at 4/5ths of its par value would represent $175,000. Lynch then agrees to sell to the others 'any portion or all of said stock' at a named price if all or any part of said stock is purchased within thirty days after he acquires the stock, and at slightly increasing prices if said stock is purchased in succeeding months up to the seventh. The contract then provides: 'Should dividends be paid on the above stock during the life of this contract, such dividends are to be credited on the purchase price hereinbefore set forth.'

"In this action, which was filed on February 8, 1934, by Frank Lynch, only four of the other parties who signed the contract were named as defendants. The contract of August 23, 1929, was attached to the complaint and made a part thereof. The complaint alleges that on September 29, 1929, the plaintiff canceled the note for $275,000 and as consideration therefor accepted 13,750 shares of the stock of this corporation which were issued to him on that day; that the plaintiff has duly done and performed all things which were to be done by him under the terms of said contract; that the defendants have not, nor has any one of them, purchased from the plaintiff the said stock or any part thereof which they agreed to purchase under the terms of the contract; that the whole of the purchase price, to-wit, $190,312.50, together with interest from April 29, 1930, is due and unpaid from the defendants and from each of them; and that demand has been made. The prayer is for judgment against each of the defendants for $190,312.50, with interest at 7 per cent from April 29, 1930.

"Two of the four defendants were never served, so far as the record shows. The defendant Wright was not served until January 10, 1936, and the return of this service was not filed until August 4, 1936, on which date this default was entered. The defendant Gray filed a demurrer on July 30, 1936, and filed an answer on September 15, 1936, with an amended answer on February 5, 1937. He alleged that he had signed the agreement on the express condition that it was not to be effective as to him until the signature of the sixth other party had been obtained, and that this had not been done. Nothing further was done until June 29, 1939, when the clerk entered a default judgment against the defendant Wright for $312,429.64, being the full amount prayed for in the complaint with interest at 7 per cent from April 29, 1930, to June 29, 1939. On April 22, 1939, and before this judgment was entered, Frank Lynch died, and the present plaintiffs were appointed executrix and executor of his will on May 12, 1939. On July 11, 1939, they applied for and obtained an order of court substituting them as plaintiffs in this action. On July 21, 1939, there was filed a dismissal of the action with prejudice, as to the defendant Gray only, the dismissal being dated June 3, 1937.

"On July 12, 1939, the defendant Wright served and filed notice of motion for an order vacating this judgment and dismissing the action, which motion was later made and denied. Subsequently, a motion to reopen and reconsider was made and denied. Within the statutory time, the defendant Wright appealed from the judgment and from the orders denying his motions.

"The questions presented involve the powers of the clerk under section 585 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the effect of sections 579 and 581a of that code under the circumstances here appearing. The respondent contends that these other sections have no application here since under section 585 it was the duty of the clerk to enter judgment immediately upon entering the appellant's default and that, in contemplation of law, it must be deemed that this judgment was entered on August 4, 1936, within three years after the summons were served, and that no discretion remained to be exercised by the court.

[1, 2] "While it has been stated in some cases, as sufficient under the circumstances and for the purposes therein, that the judgment entered by the clerk might be regarded as relating back to the time when default was entered this is not necessarily always true and would not be true where a timely appeal from the judgment is taken. If an appeal otherwise possesses merit, it could hardly be held that this legal fiction applied and cut off the right of appeal. See De Leonis v. Walsh, 140 Cal. 175, 73 P.

813. If this were true, the plaintiff could prevent an appeal from a default judgment by having the clerk, after entering the default, delay the entry of judgment until the time for appeal has expired. Moreover, the judgment here entered by the clerk discloses on its face reasons why it should not be considered as having been entered at the date of the default. The judgment recites that it is 'hereby' entered 'upon the application of said plaintiff'. Not only was this judgment entered at a time when the plaintiff was dead, and at a time when the statute made it the duty of the court to dismiss the action, but it is for an amount which includes more than $38,000 interest accruing between the entry of the default and the date judgment was entered.

"The first question that should be considered is whether this action is one of the kind in which a clerk has power to enter judgment. In other words, whether this is 'an action arising upon contract for the recovery of money or damages only', within the meaning of that provision in subdivision 1 of section 585.

[3] "It has been held in a number of cases that a clerk has the power to enter judgment only where the proper amount appears from the terms of the contract as alleged in the complaint or follows therefrom by mere mathematical computation. For this reason it has been held that in an action involving any sort of accounting the clerk cannot enter a judgment. Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 136 Cal. 571, 69 P. 220. It is clear that the clerk has no such power where the taking of any evidence is necessary and it has been held that he has no such power where the reasonable value of services or goods must be determined. In Landwehr v. Gillette, 174 Cal. 654, 163 P. 1018, 1019, the meaning of this provision of section 585 is given more thorough consideration than in any other case to which our attention has been called. The court there said:

" 'While it is true that the language used in subdivision 1 of the section is quite broad and authorizes the clerk after default to enter up judgment in all actions "arising upon contract for the recovery of money or damages only," still what is meant by that language is that the contract to warrant the exercise of such authority by the clerk alone in entering judgment must by its terms as set forth in the complaint call for the payment of some fixed and definite sum in money or damages. In the nature of things this provision of the Code must be construed to apply to contracts which provide for some definite fixed amount of damages ascertainable from the contract sued on or from the terms of which a certain computation or calculation may be made by the clerk. As the duty of the clerk is purely ministerial, his power could only be exercised and properly apply in the case of such a contract, and must be limited thereto. If the contract declared on is indefinite and uncertain in the amount of damages which plaintiff is entitled to recover on it, and in the nature of things must be ascertained and fixed, the matter then is necessarily one for judicial determination by the court, and not for ministerial action by the clerk. Hence it must appear from the contract sued on, either from its terms as set forth in the complaint or from the allegations in the latter respecting it, that a definite or liquidated sum of money is to be paid as damages; an amount which is definitely fixed by the contract sued on or which from the allegations of the complaint may be ascertained by mere computation or mathematical computation of the clerk.'

"The court then pointed out that under any other circumstances the default of the defendant merely admits that something is due but does not admit that the amount prayed for constitutes that amount.

"We think this interpretation of this statutory provision is eminently correct and should not be departed from. The language used in section 585 indicates an intention to provide, in subdivision 1, for the entry of judgment by the clerk where no evidence is necessary to disclose the correct amount, and by subdivision 2 for judgment by the court when the taking of evidence or the exercise of discretion is necessary. Evidence is as necessary in order to fix the amount of damages for breach of contract as it is in tort actions, unless this is fixed by the agreement. Subdivision 1 of section 585 seems to refer more to actions based upon contract than to those based upon a breach of contract, although it would include an action for breach of contract in which the amount of the damages had also been agreed upon. But, as pointed out in Landwehr v. Gillette, supra, it must appear from the terms of the contract that a definite sum was thereby fixed, to be paid as damages.

[4] "The respondents mainly contend, with respect to this question, that their complaint stated a cause of action. The question, however, is not whether the complaint states a cause of action but whether it states one that falls within subdivision 1 of section 585. The respondents rely on Christerson v. French, 180 Cal. 523, 182 P. 27, in which the plaintiff was allowed to recover under a default judgment for the breach of a contract. Very few facts are given in the opinion, although the court does say that the action is 'based on contract for the recovery of damage'. It may be that the contract there in question fixed the amount of damages for the breach in question. However that may be, it does appear that the court gave little consideration to the point now before us. Apparently the court assumed that the action was one coming within the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 585 since that question was not raised, and since the defendant was relying upon the contentions that the filing of a demurrer and motion to strike raised questions which must be decided by the court and that the complaint failed to state a cause of action. If it be assumed that this case in any way conflicts with the views expressed in Landwehr v. Gillette, supra, we prefer to follow the latter case.

"In the instant case it is difficult to tell upon what the plaintiff based his demand. The contract did not provide for a present sale of the stock. In fact, the plaintiff did not then have the stock and it was not known whether or not the commissioner of corporations would ever permit the stock to be sold and delivered to him. The other parties merely agreed to buy the stock at a future time, contingent upon certain other things. The plaintiff affirmatively alleges that the defendants have not, nor has any one of them, purchased from the plaintiff said stock or any part thereof. It could hardly be an action for the purchase price of stock which was never purchased and, if it was, there are no allegations showing a delivery or tender of the stock or of facts which would justify a judgment for the full purchase price while leaving the plaintiff in full possession of stock which was supposedly worth $190,000. Moreover, the contract specifically provides that if any dividends are paid on the stock such amounts are to be credited on the named purchase price. It is not alleged that no dividends were ever received, although the plaintiff held the stock for ten years, and there is no allegation that it is or ever was worthless. While the plaintiff alleges that he had done everything to be performed on his part under the terms of the contract this would still be true if he had received very substantial dividends on the stock.

[5, 6] "It seems quite clear that this is an action for damages for breach of the contract to purchase the stock and the contract makes no provision, definite or otherwise, for the amount of damages in case of its breach. The complaint contains no allegations even purporting to show the amount of damage sustained, or as to the value of the stock or what has become of it. As a matter of common justice, if the stock has a value, the plaintiff should not be allowed to keep it and also recover the full purchase price. If it has some value but less than the amount the others agreed to pay he might be entitled to damages in some amount but no attempt was made to allege anything as to this, definitely or otherwise. While the prayer is for a certain amount, the allegations of the complaint and the terms of the contract are to be considered in determining whether or not the action is one coming within the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 585, under the authorities above cited. The allegations of the complaint are so indefinite, incomplete and uncertain as to fairly and clearly require, in any court of justice, that evidence should be taken to determine the amount to which the plaintiff was entitled. If we assume that the complaint is sufficient in the sense that, in the absence of a demurrer, it will permit a recovery in some amount, this is not sufficient for the purposes now under consideration. The amount to which the plaintiff was entitled under the allegations of the complaint is not ascertainable from any mere ministerial computation that could be made by the clerk. The allegations of the complaint are such as, at best, called for the taking of evidence and the exercise of judicial action.

"The respondents contend that objections based upon the absence from the complaint of allegations as to the delivery of this stock, the passing of title, the value of the stock and like matters, are completely answered by the case of Mason v. Lievre, 145 Cal. 514, 78 P. 1040, 1043, from which they quote:

" 'The intention to sell and the intention to buy are both clear and unmistakable from the written expressions of the parties, and whatever significance might attach to the acts of payment and delivery would be in the nature of evidence, and not as of the essence of the contract.'

"In that case the sale was complete, and the language quoted has no application here, although the latter part thereof is suggestive. The very fact that such things are evidentiary matters emphasizes their absence and indicates the impropriety of allowing a clerk to enter a judgment before they have been presented and considered by a court.

"The next question suggested is as to whether, assuming that the clerk otherwise had power under section 585 to enter this judgment, he had such power in view of section 579, which provides that in an action against several defendants the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one and leave the action to proceed against the others whenever a several judgment is proper. To the extent that that section requires a court to exercise judicial discretion and decide whether a several judgment is proper before entering judgment against one defendant and allowing the action to proceed against others, that section seems to conflict with subdivision 1 of section 585, which seems to permit the clerk to enter a judgment against one of several defendants without regard to whether or not a several judgment is proper. This would seem to give the clerk more power in such a case than has the court and by exercising it the clerk would seem to be depriving the court of the opportunity of exercising the discretion imposed upon it by section 579. This case is an illustration of the good reasons that might exist for not depriving the court of the discretion mentioned in section 579. While all of the signers of this contract were severally liable they were also equally liable one with another. At the time the appellant defaulted, the defendant Gray had appeared and the action was still pending against him in what is, in a very real sense, the same obligation. It was, in fact, a case in which the matter should have been held in abeyance until it was also decided against Gray, although the judgment, when finally determined upon, would be equally applicable against both of these defendants. The injustice of the action taken particularly appears in view of the fact that a dismissal with prejudice was later, and before judgment was entered against the appellant, given to the defendant Gray. If, as is probable, something was paid by Gray for this great benefit, whatever he paid should have been applied as a reduction of the judgment against the appellant.

"In this connection the appellant relies upon the case of Trans-Pacific T. Co. v. Patsy F. & R. Co., 189 Cal. 509, 209 P. 357, 359. The respondent contends that this case has no bearing here because the 1933 amendment to section 585 struck out the reference therein to section 414 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it being argued that this amendment was adopted for the purpose of nullifying the effect of the opinion in the case cited. That case has no direct bearing here as it involved a situation where all of the defendants had been served. The 1933 amendment to section 585 does not affect our present problem for since then, as well as before, section 585 purports to permit the clerk to enter a judgment when some but not all of the defendants are served. However, in the case last cited, the court did say:

" 'The liability of the defendants and appellant as stockholders being several (Brown v. Merrill, 107 Cal. 446, 40 P. 557, 48 Am.St.Rep., 145), the case falls under section 579 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides: "In an action against several defendants, the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment is proper." Under this section the discretion vested is a judicial one, to be exercised by the court, and not the clerk. The court erred in refusing to exercise this discretion and vacate the judgment entered by the clerk against appellant.'

"While this is suggestive here and while the apparent conflict between these sections raises an interesting question, it is not necessary to further consider the same under the view we take upon the other points raised.

"If it be assumed that the clerk had power to enter judgment in this case under section 585 and irrespective of section 579, the next question is whether a judgment thus entered is not only good upon its face but conclusive and immune from a direct attack on appeal. This question involves the effect of the last paragraph of section 581a, which was added by amendment in 1933. This paragraph reads:

"'All actions, heretofore or hereafter commenced, must be dismissed by the court in which the same may be pending, on its own motion, or on the motion of any party interested therein, if summons has been served, and no answer has been filed, if plaintiff fails, or has failed, to have judgment entered within three years after service of summons.'

"The precise question seems never to have been determined. The respondents rely on certain cases as controlling on this point, but we do not so regard them. In Cook v. Justice's Court, 16 Cal.App.2d 745, 61 P.2d 357, a judgment had not been entered and the effect of section 581a under an appeal from the judgment was not considered. While there is some dicta in the opinion the holding is merely that prohibition will not lie against the performance of a ministerial act. In Merner Lumber Co. v. Silvey, 29 Cal.App.2d 426, 84 P.2d 1062, a motion was made more than a year and a half after the judgment was entered, and after it had become final, to set it aside and dismiss the action. It was there held that the court had jurisdiction in spite of section 581a, so the judgment was not void upon its face. However, the clerk in entering a default judgment, is acting for the court and to hold that a court has jurisdiction in such a case is far from holding that such an act, if taken in disregard of another statute, is free from error and that a judgment so entered may not be directly attacked on appeal. * * * The respondents also rely upon several other cases, including Christerson v. French, supra. These cases were all decided long before the last paragraph was added to section 581a and at a time when no further duty rested upon the plaintiff. In several of these cases it is stated that the failure of the clerk to do his duty cannot prejudice the rights of the plaintiff or confer any rights upon the defendant whose default has been entered. While this may have been true at that time, a statute can impose a duty upon a plaintiff with a resulting benefit to a defendant, and this has been done by the last paragraph of section 581a where a specific penalty is provided when the plaintiff fails to perform a further duty which is imposed upon him.

"The respondents contend that the word 'must' in section 581a does not indicate any curtailment of jurisdiction to enter judgment under subdivision 1 of section 585. While this may be true, the last paragraph of section 581a, taken as a whole, imposes a duty upon the plaintiff and imposes a duty on the court to dismiss the action if the plaintiff fails to perform that duty. While formerly the only duty in such a case was one resting upon the clerk, with no penalty for his delay, it is now made the duty of the plaintiff to 'have judgment entered' within the prescribed time, in other words to take affirmative steps to that end.

[7, 8] "When the plaintiff fails to perform that duty his rights are affected and a benefit is conferred upon the defendant by the provision that the court must dismiss the action. The duty thus imposed on the court, however, is not confined to where such action is requested by the defendant but is one which the court is required to exercise 'on its own motion.' This statutory provision is clearly intended to apply to cases where the defendant is not yet taking any steps for his own protection. Clearly, under the statute, it is error for the court to fail to perform this duty directly imposed upon it. While a judgment so entered may not be void for lack of jurisdiction the court's error in failing to perform that duty is one which may be corrected on appeal from the judgment, if taken within the statutory time. The duties and rights of the parties are still affected by the last paragraph of section 581a and the judgment itself is still subject to review on a direct and timely appeal. Assuming that the clerk had here a duty to perform in his ministerial capacity, and that he had no power to pass upon the effect of the last paragraph of section 581a, the court had both the power and the duty to do so, the matter was directly presented to it on timely motions after judgment, and the matter is now properly here for review. Under such circumstances the error may be corrected and the judgment, entered and allowed to stand in disregard of the provisions of section 581a, should be reversed.

"The provision of section 581a which we have been considering would be largely meaningless if, where such a judgment is applied for in the absence of the defendant, the judgment is to be taken as conclusive and immune from direct attack. To so construe this provision would be not only to disregard that part thereof which provides that the action must be dismissed by the court 'on its own motion', but would be to write in a provision that the amendment was to apply only when the defendant objected at the time the judgment was applied for. No such provision was included by the legislature and should not be added by judicial decision to the plain language of the statute. This statutory provision was plainly intended to apply in just such a case as this where the defendant did not appear. The direct requirement of the statute would be rendered nugatory if the disregard thereof may not be corrected on a timely appeal.

"A further consideration is that at the time this judgment was entered the plaintiff was dead. No substitution of parties had been made and there was no party plaintiff before the court. Under somewhat similar circumstances the entry of a judgment has been held improper. Maxon v. Avery, 32 Cal.App.2d 300, 89 P.2d 684; Boyd v. Lancaster, 32 Cal.App.2d 574, 90 P.2d 317; Scoville v. Keglor, 27 Cal.App. 2d 17, 80 P.2d 162, 167. In the last named case, where it was contended that a judgment could be entered nunc pro tunc as of a date before the death of the plaintiff, this court said:

" 'We are unable, in view of the Supreme Court's language in De Leonis v. Walsh [supra] to avoid the conclusion that the trial court erred in undertaking to file its findings of fact and conclusions of law and to enter its judgment before making an order of substitution of the administratrix of the estate of J. M. Scoville for that plaintiff. In so far as the interest of the decedent was concerned there was at the date when the findings of fact and conclusions of law were actually filed and the judgment entered no plaintiff before the court. To be sure, after the findings of fact and conclusions of law should be properly filed and the judgment properly entered they would be treated by the law for the purpose of avoiding the lapsing of the cause of action as having been made as of the date to which it was provided that, nunc pro tunc, they should relate. But if when they were respectively filed and entered in fact there was as to the decedent's interest no plaintiff before the court the defect would appear to us to go to the jurisdiction to file and enter them.'

[9] "It is well settled that there are no presumptions in favor of a judgment entered by a clerk. It is peculiarly appropriate that we are required to indulge in no presumptions in favor of this judgment. The strange and unusual facts, including the many and long delays on the part of the plaintiff, the singling out of certain persons as against others, the dismissal as to the only one who appeared and the entry of judgment against this appellant alone, the ignoring of all such matters as the value of the stock still retained and whether or not dividends had been received thereon, and the taking of judgment by other parties shortly after the death of the plaintiff, all suggest that the true facts and actual situation are not disclosed by the record here. While these matters are not, in themselves, controlling, they illustrate the wisdom of the statutes and rules we have held applicable, and strongly indicate that their application here will result in no injustice."

The judgment and orders are reversed with directions to the trial court to dismiss the action as to the appellant.

HOUSER, J., took no part in the decision of this case.

17 Cal.2d 506

HUME v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

L. A. 17610.

Supreme Court of California.

Feb. 27, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 28, 1941.

1. Contempt ⇐67

Payment of fine imposed against petitioner on a charge of contempt did not render question of propriety of contempt proceedings a "moot question" so as to preclude petitioner from having such proceedings reviewed by certiorari, where payment was made under protest.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Moot Question".

2. Contempt ⇐67

On certiorari to review judgment convicting petitioner of contempt, sole question before Supreme Court was whether trial court had jurisdiction to render judgment, and if trial court acted within its jurisdiction inquiry ended and judgment would be affirmed, but if trial court was without jurisdiction to pronounce judgment or exceeded its jurisdiction in doing so, contempt proceedings would be annulled.

3. Contempt ⇐54(4)

An accusatory affidavit alleging that statements contained in documents filed by attorney in federal District Court during pendency of proceedings before Superior Court involving attorney's clients were impertinent, and reflected upon integrity of Superior Court and judge thereof, and that statements were false and known to be false by attorney when made was sufficient to give Superior Court jurisdiction of contempt proceedings against attorney.

4. Contempt ⇐54(4)

An accusatory affidavit in contempt proceedings against an attorney was not insufficient for failure to allege intention of attorney to commit contempt, where affidavit charged that contemptuous statements made by attorney were false and were known by attorney to be false when made.

5. Contempt ⇐28(1)

That allegedly contemptuous statements were contained in pleadings or other papers filed in court was not a defense to a charge of contempt.

6. Contempt ⇐8

"Contempt" may be committed by incorporating impertinent, scandalous, insulting or contemptuous language reflecting on integrity of the court in pleadings, motions, notice of motions, affidavits and other papers filed in court.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Contempt".

7. Contempt ⇐29

In contempt proceedings against an attorney, fact that some of the contemptuous statements were contained in a third party's affidavit which attorney caused to be filed in court proceedings was not a defense to attorney, since by procuring filing of affidavit containing contemptuous statements attorney became equally guilty with affiant.

8. Judges ⇐49(1), 51(3)

Under statute, any party to an action may object to a judge upon ground that judge is so prejudiced as to be incapable of trying cause fairly and impartially, and such party may support his objection by affidavit showing bias, but allegations in affidavit must be pertinent and material and must set forth specifically the facts upon which charge of bias is based. Code Civ.Proc. § 170, subd. 4.

9. Contempt ⇐28(1)

Where defendants' attorney, during pendency of proceedings before Superior Court wherein defendants were charged with conspiracy to promote pool selling and bookmaking on results of horse races, commenced proceedings in federal District Court to enjoin Superior Court proceedings as to defendant which was a resident of Mexico and such defendant's agents in California, and documents which attorney caused to be filed in District Court contained no allegations of fact as basis for contemptuous statements therein charging prejudice by Superior Court, attorney could not avoid liability for contempt on ground that contemptuous statements were privileged because made in effort to secure removal of case to District Court on ground of diversity of citizenship. Pen.Code, § 337a; Code Civ.Proc. § 170, subd. 4; Jud.Code § 28, 28 U.S.C.A. § 71.

10. Contempt ⇐8

Where defendants' attorney, during pendency of proceedings before Superior Court wherein defendants were charged with conspiracy to promote pool selling and bookmaking on results of horse races, commenced proceedings in federal District Court to enjoin Superior Court proceedings as to defendant which was a resident of Mexico and such defendant's agents in California, and documents which attorney caused to be filed in District Court contained no allegations of fact as basis for contemptuous statements therein charging prejudice by Superior Court and judge thereof, an order of Superior Court finding that attorney was guilty of "contempt" was proper. Pen.Code, § 337a; Code Civ.Proc. § 170, subd. 4.

11. Contempt ⇐61(6)

Where complaint, amended complaint and supporting affidavit filed by an attorney in federal District Court contained contemptuous statements respecting Superior Court, and accusatory affidavit filed in contempt proceedings before Superior Court contained four counts, the first three of which were based upon matters contained in complaint, amended complaint and supporting affidavit, it was proper to find that attorney was guilty of contempt upon the first three counts, as against contention that attorney was subjected to plural punishment for a single act.

12. Contempt ⇐54(2)

An accusatory affidavit charging contempt of court with respect to matters contained in an affidavit which an attorney caused to be filed in court proceedings should not have set up separate allegations in affidavit as separate counts in charge of contempt, but all charges of contempt with respect to affidavit should have been set forth in one count under accusatory affidavit.

EDMONDS, J., dissenting.

Certiorari proceedings by David E. Hume against the Superior Court of the state of California in and for the County of Los Angeles and others to review an order of the Superior Court convicting petitioner of contempt of court.

Judgment finding petitioner in contempt upon the first three counts of the accusatory affidavit affirmed, and proceeding in which petitioner was found guilty of contempt under the fourth count dismissed.

Rehearing denied; EDMONDS, J., dissenting.

David E. Hume in pro. per., and Wyman G. Reynolds, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., Herbert E. Wenig and Lewis Drucker, Deputies Atty. Gen., and J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, and Ned Marr, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, Justice.

This is a proceeding by certiorari to review an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County convicting the petitioner, David E. Hume, of contempt of court. The proceedings against petitioner were commenced by the filing of an affidavit by Warren Olney, deputy attorney general of the state of California, setting forth in four separate counts the conduct of petitioner which was alleged to be contemptuous.

The circumstances leading up to the contempt proceedings may be briefly stated as follows: On May 7, 1940, a complaint was filed in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County by the attorney general of the state of California to abate a public nuisance, in which the Piedras Negras Broadcasting Company of Tia Juana, Mexico, was named as one of several defendants. The substance of said complaint was that the several defendants named therein were acting in furtherance of a conspiracy to foster and promote the business of making and accepting bets and wagers and pool selling and bookmaking on the results of horse races in violation of section 337a of the Penal Code of this state. The complaint alleged that the defendants were conspiring with one another and with a large number of owners and operators of pool selling and bookmaking establishments and with patrons of said establishments within the state to the end that the defendants should sell and supply "scratch sheets" and rapid, up-to-the-minute horse racing news and information to said establishments and to their patrons, thereby encouraging, inducing and facilitating unlawful gambling on horse races in the said establishments. The modus operandi, so the complaint alleged, was as follows: Certain of the defendants would print and publish in the county of Los Angeles a daily supply of "scratch sheets" which consist of small pieces of paper having printed thereon the date and the names of all race tracks at which races are held in the United States, Republic of Cuba, and Dominion of Canada, followed by a list of the names and post positions of all horses and jockeys entered in each race, the betting odds, and other information concerning such races, including "tips" as to the probable winners. There was also printed on each "scratch sheet" a number opposite the name of each horse, said number being used to designate the horses, so as to make more rapid, reliable, convenient and secret the transmission of horse racing information. The Piedras Negras Broadcasting Company, owned by certain individual defendants and operating radio station XELO, located just over the state line in Tia Juana, Mexico, would throughout the day furnish to the buyers of said "scratch sheets," rapid, last-minute horse racing news and information by means of a radio broadcast given in code. In said radio broadcast none of the horses was referred to by name, but the horses were designated by numbers, the number used being identical with the number printed opposite the respective names of the horses on the "scratch sheets". These broadcasts were given in the English language and were obviously intended to be received and understood in the state of California, since the other radio broadcasts from the same station were in Spanish, the official language of the Republic of Mexico. The complaint alleged that the sole use of said "scratch sheets" was to encourage, induce and facilitate unlawful gambling on horse races in said pool selling and bookmaking establishments, and that the promotion of said unlawful business by defendants was contrary to the established public policy of the state of California and should be abated. The Piedras Negras Broadcasting Company was never served in said action. It was apparently the theory of the attorney general that although radio station XELO was outside the jurisdiction of the state of California, nevertheless the individual defendants might possibly be served with summons within the state and that if a court of equity obtained jurisdiction of the parties, it could compel them to abate said nuisance notwithstanding the fact that one of the links to the project, the radio station, was situated outside of the physical jurisdiction of the court. California Development Company v. New Liverpool Salt Co. [Salton Sea Cases] 9 Cir., 172 F. 792, certiorari denied 215 U.S. 603, 30 S.Ct. 405, 54 L.Ed. 345.

Upon the verified complaint and points and authorities, Judge Emmet H. Wilson issued a temporary restraining order and an order to show cause returnable before him on May 13, 1940. At the hearing of the order to show cause David E. Hume, a member of the bar of Texas, but not admitted in California, was granted leave to appear as attorney for certain defendants. He proceeded to represent them by filing a "Special Appearance on the Matter of the Order to Show Cause and Temporary Restraining Order." Upon his motion, the order to show cause was continued to May 20, 1940. On said date David E. Hume appeared before said court, and argued in opposition to the order to show cause, but presented no evidence, although an opportunity was afforded him to do so. Thereupon the matter was submitted. Pending the determination of the issues raised by the order to show cause, David E. Hume caused to be filed on June 5, 1940, in the United States District Court, Southern District of California, Central Division, a complaint signed and sworn to by him seeking to enjoin the prosecution of the injunction proceedings against the Piedras Negras Broadcasting Company and its agents in the state court. Subsequently on June 8, 1940, he filed an amended complaint. An order to show cause was issued out of the federal court directed to Emmet H. Wilson, as Judge of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, and to the other defendants, including Earl Warren, attorney general of the state of California, and Warren Olney, deputy attorney general.

Before the hearing in the federal court on June 12, 1940, the Superior Court of Los Angeles County made its rulings on all matters in the action pending before it and granted a preliminary injunction against those defendants who had been served with process, but did not grant any preliminary injunction or take any action with respect to Piedras Negras Broadcasting Company and one of the defendants in said action who had not been served with any process. The trial of said action was then set for August 16, 1940, at the request of David E. Hume. On June 20, 1940, David E. Hume caused to be filed in the Federal District Court, in support of his amended complaint, an affidavit of Phillip Tapper. Subsequently upon motion of the defendants, said action in the Federal District Court was dismissed. Thereafter the accusatory affidavit charging the petitioner with contempt was filed by Warren Olney in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. The basis of said charge of contempt against the petitioner was the filing of the complaint, the filing of the amended complaint and causing the affidavit of Phillip Tapper to be filed in the Federal District Court. The accusatory affidavit alleged that the allegations contained in said documents were "impertinent, scandalous, insulting, contumacious, imputing partiality and improper motives and reflecting upon the integrity of the court and the judge thereof", and were false in fact and were known to petitioner to be false in fact at the time they were made.

The complaint, upon which the first count of the accusatory affidavit was based, contained the allegations that upon the hearing to show cause in the respondent court, the respondent court refused to hear any proof offered by petitioner; that petitioner feared the respondent court contemplated rendering a decision which would prevent the said company from proving the falsity of the allegations of the complaint; that upon securing jurisdiction the respondent court and the attorney general and his deputy intended to postpone the actual hearing of the action until the Piedras Negras Company would be forced to go out of business because of its inability to broadcast news of race track events; and that because of the prejudice and local influence the petitioner would be unable to obtain justice in said court or any court in California. The amended complaint, the basis of count 2, contained almost identical allegations, with the added averment that the respondent court would contrive to continue to keep the matter under advisement without decision for a period of ninety days to prevent trial, and thereafter to secure other postponements, until the end of the racing season, with the result that the business of the broadcasting company would be destroyed. While the causing of the filing of the affidavit of Phillip Tapper constituted but one act, this affidavit was made the basis of two separate counts for contempt based upon the different character of two of the allegations contained therein. The first of these allegations which was the basis of count 3 of the accusatory affidavit was to the effect that while the respondent court knew that the acts alleged in the complaint to state a public nuisance did not constitute a nuisance under the laws of the state of California, nevertheless, said court pretended to believe that they did constitute a nuisance, and had entered into an agreement with counsel for plaintiff to make it appear that a conspiracy and confederation existed between the parties defendant, and said respondent court and attorney for plaintiff intended to acquire jurisdiction of the Piedras Negras Broadcasting Company as if for the violation of the statutes defining nuisances, and intended to hold all officers of said corporation if apprehended for conspiracy to commit a nuisance, although there was no legal justification for such action. The other allegation of said affidavit of Phillip Tapper, which was the basis of count four, was to the effect that upon the hearing said court would decline to notice or take into consideration any evidence except allegations of the complaint filed by the attorneys for the plaintiff, and would issue an injunction against the Piedras Negras Broadcasting Company, and its officers, if served with summons, without hearing any evidence they might desire to present and without taking into consideration anything except the bare allegations of the complaint.

[1] Upon the filing of the accusatory affidavit, the respondent court issued its order to show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt, directed to petitioner. After a hearing, the respondent court on July 1, 1940, found petitioner guilty of contempt on all four counts, and fined him the sum of $250 upon each of said counts with the alternative provision of imprisonment in the county jail of one day's imprisonment for each $2 of said fine. The court also vacated and set aside its order theretofore made permitting petitioner to appear as an attorney in the action and precluded him from appearing at any time in the future as an attorney in any other action before said court. Petitioner served three days' imprisonment and on July 3 paid his fine under protest. As the fine was paid under protest, the question has not become moot by virtue of said payment. Dreher v. Superior Court, 124 Cal.App. 469, 477, 12 P.2d 671. After application to the District Court of Appeal, Second Division, Second District, for a writ of prohibition and for a writ of habeas corpus, both of which were denied without opinion, application by petitioner for a writ of certiorari was made to this court.

[2] The sole question here before us is one of jurisdiction of the trial court to render the judgment under review. If the trial court in the rendition of said judgment acted within its jurisdiction, the inquiry ends, and the judgment of the trial court must be affirmed. If, however, the trial court either had no jurisdiction to pronounce said judgment or exceeded its jurisdiction in doing so, then the proceedings should be annulled. Bridges v. Superior Court, 14 Cal.2d 464, 94 P.2d 983; Otis v. Superior Court, 148 Cal. 129, 82 P. 853; People v. Latimer, 160 Cal. 716, 117 P. 1051.

[3] We are satisfied that the accusatory affidavit filed by Warren Olney instituting said proceedings was sufficient to give the respondent court jurisdiction to hear the matter of petitioner's contempt, and the facts found by respondent court to be true were adequate to sustain the respondent court's judgment of contempt.

[4] There is no merit in petitioner's contention that the accusatory affidavit was insufficient in that it failed to allege the intention of petitioner to commit contempt. The accusatory affidavit contains allegations with respect to each of the contemptuous statements covered by each of the four counts that said contemptuous allegations were false in fact and were known by David E. Hume to be false in fact at the time he uttered them. This was a sufficient averment of the intent of petitioner. In re Jarvis, 57 Cal.App. 533, 538, 207 P. 494.

An examination of the allegations of the complaint, the amended complaint and the affidavit filed by petitioner clearly confirms the conclusion that said statements were contemptuous in that they reflected upon the integrity of the trial court and the judge thereof, imputing collusion of the judge with the attorney-general to postpone improperly the hearing in said matter, and to delay the decision therein, and to decide deliberately the matter regardless of the law. To charge the trial judge with such improper motives and conduct was to charge him with being wholly lacking in the fundamental basic attributes of a judicial officer. Petitioner has made some slight attempt to explain said allegations in such a way as to give them a meaning different from that which plainly appears on their face. But we are not inclined to give much credence to said explanation.

[5-7] The chief defense to said charge of contempt relied upon by petitioner is in the nature of a claim that said allegations were privileged because they were made by petitioner in an effort to secure a removal of the cause from the state court to the federal court, which claim for removal to the federal court was based primarily upon the diversity of citizenship. However, the fact that the alleged contemptuous statements were contained in pleadings or other papers filed in court does not furnish any excuse or defense against the charge of contempt. It is well settled that contempt may be committed by incorporating impertinent, scandalous, insulting or contemptuous language reflecting on the integrity of the court in pleadings, motions, notice of motions, affidavits, and other papers filed in court. 13 Corpus Juris., pp. 31, 32; 17 C.J.S., Contempt, § 28; Lamberson v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 458, 91 P. 100, 11 L.R.A.,N.S., 619; In re Lapique, 26 Cal.App. 258, 146 P. 690; Hallinan v. Superior Court, 27 Cal.App.2d 433, 81 P.2d 254. Neither does the fact that some of the contemptuous statements were contained in an affidavit of a third party caused to be filed by the attorney afford any defense to the attorney. By procuring the filing of an affidavit containing contemptuous statements, he became equally guilty with the affiant. Lamberson v. Superior Court, supra.

[8-9] It is true that, based upon the statutory right conferred by subdivision 4 of section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure, any party to an action may object to a judge upon the ground that he is so prejudiced and biased as to be incapable of trying the cause fairly and impartially, and it has been held that such party may support his objection by affidavit showing bias. Works v. Superior Court, 130 Cal. 304, 62 P. 507; Webb v. Superior Court, 28 Cal. App. 391, 152 P. 957. Prior to the amendment to said code section no such right existed. In re Jones, 103 Cal. 397, 37 P. 385. But it is also true that the allegations made therein must be pertinent and material and must set forth specifically the facts upon which the charge of bias and prejudice is based. Works v. Superior Court, supra; Lamberson v. Superior Court, supra. The contemptuous allegations contained in the pleadings filed by the petitioner and the affidavit procured to be filed by him do not come within the scope of the claimed privilege. In the first place, the Piedras Negras Broadcasting Company, being an alien, is not within the provisions of the removal statute, sec. 71, title 28, U.S. C.A., as there is no provision therein that where an alien is a party, a removal is authorized on the ground of prejudice or local influence. See note 617, sec. 71, title 28, U.S.C.A. Not being entitled to a removal on this ground, the allegations with reference thereto were neither pertinent nor material. Fleming v. United States, 9 Cir., 279 F. 613, 615. An examination of the documents filed in the federal court also clearly shows that no facts are set forth giving any basis or foundation for the charges made in said documents against the respondent judge. Petitioner at the hearing testified that he had been informed by certain persons that the situation was that set up by him in the documents filed in the Federal District Court, but gave no information as to the identity of such persons, and utterly failed to state any fact which would substantiate the truth of the charges filed by him on information and belief. The language employed in Lamberson v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 458, 463, 91 P. 100, 102, 11 L.R.A.,N.S., 619, which involved an affidavit of prejudice filed against a state trial judge under section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is, we think, singularly appropriate to the instant case, as the cases are in this regard strikingly similar:

"* * * It [the affidavit] states the mere belief of Bashore, without any supporting fact, * * * the whole declaration is but the purported belief of this aged invalid, with no attempt to state even the source of his information or origin of that belief. It cannot impress the unprejudiced mind as being other than a deliberate intent to insult and defame the judge. Let it be understood that we are not here declaring that if a judge has in fact indulged in corrupt practices, or has in fact given a ruling or decision through a corrupt motive, that those facts may not be stated. They may be. And they would be prepotent evidence of bias and prejudice. But it may not for one moment be countenanced that, without supporting facts, lawyer or litigant may wantonly charge a judge with corrupt and improper motives, and seek protection from the just consequences of such outrage under the shield of the Code provision. [Citing cases.] So, while it is true that matters which are pertinent to the consideration and which are charged as facts are admissible without reference to their effect upon the reputation of the judge, or of any one else, it is equally true that neither attorney nor litigant has any right to present such degrading accusations under the guise of mere belief, without the aid of a single supporting fact. [Citing case.]"

[10] The filing of said documents in the instant case wholly unsupported by any facts to sustain them, was entirely unwarranted, and the trial court was clearly justified upon the showing made to adjudge petitioner in contempt therefor.

[11, 12] Petitioner argues that "dividing the judicial proceedings into four parts constitutes plural punishment for a single act". But we are satisfied upon the authority of Lindsley v. Superior Court, 76 Cal.App. 419, 245 P. 212, Blodgett v. Superior Court, 210 Cal. 1, 290 P. 293, 72 A.L.R. 482, and In re Shuler, 210 Cal. 377, 292 P. 481, wherein the court held that separate publications of contemptuous matters constituted distinct and separate offenses, that the trial court was justified in finding petitioner guilty of contempt upon each of the first three counts. But inasmuch as only one affidavit by Phillip Tapper was procured to be filed by petitioner, we are somewhat doubtful as to the propriety of dividing the charge of contempt with reference to the filing of this affidavit into separate counts and the court's finding the petitioner guilty of contempt upon each of said counts. We are cited to no authority supporting the practice of setting up in an accusatory affidavit separate allegations in the same document as separate counts, and since the filing of said affidavit constituted but a single act, we are of the opinion that the proper practice would have been to combine count three and count four in the accusatory affidavit.

The judgment of the trial court finding petitioner in contempt upon the first three counts is affirmed. The proceeding in which petitioner was found guilty of contempt under the fourth count is dismissed.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; TRAYNOR, J.; SHENK, J.; CARTER, J.

EDMONDS, Justice (dissenting).

The record of this proceeding shows, to my satisfaction, that the petitioner's actions in connection with the proceeding initiated by him in the federal court went far beyond the limits of professional ethics and cannot be justified as being either necessary or desirable for the protection of his client's interests. However, the legislature has, by statute, declared that no speech or publication reflecting upon a judge shall be punished as a contempt of court unless made in the immediate presence of the court while in session and in such manner as to actually interfere with judicial proceedings. Sec. 1209, Code Civ.Proc. As I have heretofore pointed out, in my opinion, the legislature may, within constitutional guarantees, take from judicial officers the authority to punish persons for acts not committed in the presence of the court which might otherwise amount to a constructive contempt, and I can find no basis for striking down the code provision as a limitation upon inherent judicial power. Times-Mirror Co. v. Superior Court, 15 Cal.2d 99, 98 P.2d 1029.

For these reasons, I believe that each of the judgments of contempt should be annulled.

43 Cal.App.2d 292

ASSOCIATED INDEMNITY CORPORATION v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 6551.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 1, 1941.

1. Workmen's compensation ⇐51

Workmen's Compensation Act should be liberally construed.

2. Workmen's compensation ⇐702

Where ranch laborer, who was operating a tractor, went to ranch house to get some planks to extricate tractor, and when starting back in a truck on a private lane on ranch was struck in the neck by a bullet from a rifle fired by a boy who was shooting at a bird, and the boy was not a member of rancher's household and was not in the habit of shooting or hunting on the ranch or in close proximity to ranch employees, ranch laborer did not sustain compensable injuries "arising out of employment". St.1937, p. 269, § 3600; St.1917, p. 877, § 69.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Arising Out of Employment".

3. Workmen's compensation ⇐609

To give rise to liability for compensation under the compensation act, there must be some causal connection between the injury and the employment. St.1937, p. 269, § 3600.

Proceeding by the Associated Indemnity Corporation against the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California for writ of review to review a compensation award of the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of Fred Zurbuchen.

Award annulled.

Purvis, Jakobsen & Kennedy, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PULLEN, Presiding Justice.

This is a petition to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission.

The facts are brief. Fred Zurbuchen, the applicant, was employed as a laborer on the ranch of John W. Flint. On the day in question Mr. Zurbuchen, who was operating a tractor, went to the ranch house to get some planks to extricate the tractor from some soft ground. He then started back to the tractor, riding in the truck with the planks by way of a private lane on the land of his employer, when he was struck in the neck by a bullet from a rifle fired by a boy, who was shooting at a bird, just as the truck came around the corner of the barn. The boy did not see the truck, and the incident was purely accidental. The boy was not a member of the household of the rancher but lived on a neighboring place, and was not in the habit of shooting or hunting on the Flint ranch or in proximity to the employees of the ranch.

It is conceded that Mr. Zurbuchen was in the course of his employment at the time of the accident, but the question here is whether or not the accident was one that arose out of his employment. This element is important, for section 6(a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, Statutes of 1917, as amended, now found in 3600 of the Labor Code, Stat.1937, c. 90, p. 269, provides: "Liability for the compensation provided by this act, in lieu of any other liability whatsoever to any person, shall, without regard to negligence, exist against an employer for any injury sustained by his employees arising out of and in the course of the employment and for the death of any such employee if the injury shall proximately cause death, * * *."

The Industrial Accident Commission have found that the injury of the applicant did arise out of his employment, and able counsel have appeared before us in support of that finding.

[1, 2] We are familiar with, and are in full accord with the admonition of the act that courts, in interpreting its provisions, shall liberally construe the same that its benefits may be extended for the protection of persons injured in the course of their employment, (sec. 69, Workmen's Compensation Act) but we cannot find in the record before us facts that will support the conclusion of the commission.

[3] That there must be some causal connection between the injury and the employment is essential. In California Casualty Indemnity Exchange v. Industrial Accident Commission, 190 Cal. 433, 213 P. 257, 258, it was said:

"It was not intended by the Compensation Act that the employer who comes within its provisions shall be the insurer of his employee at all times during the period of his employment.

"The employer is liable for compensation only when an injury occurs to the employee while performing some act for the employer in the course of his employment, or incidental to it. Fairbank Co. v. Ind. Comm., 285 Ill. 11, 13, 120 N.E. 457. There must be some connection between the injury and the employment other than the mere fact that the employment brought the injured party to the place of injury. There must be some causal connection between the employment and the injury in the sense that, by reason of the employment, there was an unusual or additional exposure of the injured party to the kind or character of hazard and danger (in this case an ordinary street risk) which caused the injury. The injury must have its origin in a risk connected with the employment, and must have flowed from that source as a rational and natural course."

In at least four cases the commission has, itself, on facts quite similar to the present case, held the injury did not arise out of the employment.

In Matsusaka v. Shearer & White, et al., 12 I.A.C. 222, the employee, a farm laborer, was fatally wounded by a stray bullet while at work on a ranch. There was evidence that on several previous occasions the owner of a neighboring ranch had used a rifle to shoot squirrels on her place. A death benefit was denied on the ground that the risk of being struck by bullets due to shooting at squirrels or targets on neighboring premises is not a hazard of employment as a farmhand and therefore death from being struck by a stray bullet does not arise out of the employment.

In Travelers Ins. Co. v. Moon Chin, 12 I.A.C. 150, the employee, employed as a cook in a restaurant, was struck by a bullet fired by a third person in the restaurant. It was held that the employee's occupation did not expose him to the risk of being struck by bullets at the hands of customers, and the risk, if any, was a risk common to all and the injury therefore did not arise out of the employment.

In Hicks v. White, et al., 18 I.A.C. 80, the employee was struck by a stray bullet while he was picking oranges in the employer's grove. The bullet came from an unknown source. It was held that the injury did not arise out of the employment.

Also in Gayton v. State Compensation Ins. Fund, 9 I.A.C. 215, a truck driver, while in the course of his duties, was traveling upon a public highway, and was struck by a stone thrown by some unknown person who was throwing stones across the highway at some birds. The injury was purely accidental. It was held that notwithstanding the applicant was present at the time and place of his injury only because of his performance of the duties of his employment, he nevertheless was not exposed by his employment to any risk of such injury in excess of that of the commonalty, and therefore the injury did not arise out of the employment and was not compensable.

The respondents strongly rely upon the case of Frigidaire Corp. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 1929, 103 Cal.App. 27, 283 P. 974, 975. There an award of compensation to the dependents of an employee, who was killed by a stray bullet from the gun of a police officer who was pursuing a suspected criminal, was upheld. At the time of the accident, the employee, a zone manager of the Frigidaire Corporation, had completed his business in Reno for his employer and was standing on the railroad station platform awaiting the arrival of a train which would return him to his home in San Francisco. The award was upheld on the ground that the injury arose from a risk incident to the employment, in that case a "street risk". The court there said: "The danger must result from the place to make it a street risk, but that is enough if the workman is in the place by reason of his employment, and in the discharge of his duty to his employer. The street becomes a dangerous place when street brawlers, highwaymen, escaping criminals, or violent madmen are afoot therein as they sometimes are. The danger of being struck by them by accident is a street risk because it is incident to passing through or being on the street when dangerous characters are abroad. Particularly on the crowded streets of a great city, not only do vehicles collide, pavements become out of repair, and crowds jostle, but mad or biting dogs may run wild, gunmen may discharge their weapons, police officers may shoot at fugitives fleeing from justice, or other things may happen from which accidental injuries result to people on the streets which are peculiar to the use of the streets and do not commonly happen indoors."

However, the court, after reviewing many other cases, also there said: "The theory upon which compensation is awarded in the class of accidents above mentioned is that the causal connection between the employment and the injury, which is essential to make it compensable, consists in the fact that the employment requires the presence of the employee upon the street and the fact that the injury was caused by some human or mechanical instrumentality incidental to the use of the street."

From this it is apparent the court has differentiated that case from the instant case. Mr. Zurbuchen was a farm laborer and was not subjected to the so-called "street risks".

The respondent commission also cites the case of Larson v. Industrial Accident Commission, 193 Cal. 406, 224 P. 744. There an employee on a large grain ranch was injured when a choreman, to revive a fire burning in a wood stove in the bunkhouse, poured oil into the stove, which exploded, injuring several. The commission made an award, and in upholding such an award the court pointed out the employees were compelled by their employer to lodge in the bunkhouse, and in accordance with the general rule that where employees, under their contract of employment, are required to sleep upon the premises of their employer, the employee is considered as performing services for his employer during all the time he is on the premises. The employee was rightfully in the bunkhouse, and the choreman was performing his regular duties in attending the fire in the bunkhouse; there was thus a causal connection between the employee and his duties.

In Paulsen v. Industrial Accident Commission, 6 Cal.App.2d 570, 45 P.2d 285, also cited by respondent, an employee, in sandpapering a wall, injured his finger upon a hidden nail and suffered an infection. The respondent compares the coming in contact with the nail to one who comes in contact with a stray bullet. However, the situations are not similar—the man sandpapering the wall was exposed to the risk of accidental injury coming from that wall. There was not such causal connection between the farm employee and a bullet from a rifle, in the absence of some special exposure on the employer's premises.

North Carolina has a provision in her compensation laws similar to ours (Pub. Laws 1929, c. 120 part of para. 4) that injury must arise out of as well as in the course of employment, and has held that an employee accidentally shot by a third person other than a fellow employee cannot recover from his employer.

In Whitley v. North Carolina State Highway Commission, 201 N.C. 539, 160 S.E. 827, an employee, working on a truck, was accidentally shot by a hunter, the truck being located in the employer's shop. It was held the injury did not arise out of the employment.

In Lebeda v. Pongracz, 230 App.Div. 606, 246 N.Y.S. 293, a nightwatchman, while on the sixth floor of a building, was shot by a stray bullet from New Year's revelers. An award by the Industrial Accident Commission was reversed, the court holding the injury was not an accidental one arising out of the employment within the meaning of the statute; citing McCarter v. La Rock, 240 N.Y. 282, 148 N.E. 523, 526. In the McCarter case, supra, an artillery shell exploded, injuring an employee working on an adjoining building. Among other things the court said in denying relief: "* * * however strong may be the economic and sociological arguments in favor of a compensation statute which practically insures the employee against everything except his own misconduct, we think that this court is thoroughly and justifiably committed to an interpretation of our present statute, which requires as the basis for an award a causal connection, apparent to a reasonable mind upon consideration of all the circumstances, between the conditions under which the work is required to be performed and the resulting injury; injury from an accident which need not have been foreseen or expected, but which after the event must appear to have had its origin in a risk incidental to the employment and to have flowed from that source as a rational consequence, and that there must be more than a mere location of the employee in the pathway of an accident entirely disconnected from his employment."

We are unable to find that the injury to Mr. Zurbuchen arose out of his employment. The award is annulled.

We concur: THOMPSON, J.; TUTTLE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 149

SOUTHERN COUNTIES THRIFT CO. v. RAIRDON et al.

Civ. 2911.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 18, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐800

Where motion to dismiss appeal for failure of appellant to file opening brief within time prescribed by court rule was set for hearing February 13, 1941, and on February 10, 1941, appellant filed its opening brief, the motion was denied. Rules for the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 1, § 4.

2. Appeal and error ⇐800

Where appellant files opening brief before motion to dismiss appeal for failure to file such brief within time prescribed by court rule comes on for hearing, the appellant has sufficiently complied with the rule to justify denial of the motion. Rules for the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule 1, § 4.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Harry C. Westover, Judge.

Action by the Southern Counties Thrift Company against C. W. Rairdon and others. From an adverse judgment, the plaintiff appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal.

Motion denied.

Frank T. O'Neill, of San Francisco, and Brooke Mohun, of Pasadena, for appellant.

Forgy, Reinhaus & Forgy and C. E. Sprague, all of Santa Ana, for respondents.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

[1, 2] This is an appeal from a judgment against appellant Southern Counties Thrift Co., a corporation, and in favor of respondent C. W. Rairdon. Respondent Rairdon, on January 10, 1941, filed a motion to dismiss the appeal under rule 1, section 4 of the rules for the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, for the reason that appellant failed to file its opening brief within the time prescribed in said rule. The motion was duly set down for hearing for February 13, 1941. On February 10, 1941, appellant filed its opening brief. Where the brief is filed before the motion comes on for hearing appellant has sufficiently complied with the rule to justify a denial of the motion. Hall v. Wolford, 22 Cal.App.2d 537, 71 P.2d 596; Graybiel v. Consolidated Associations, Ltd., 14 Cal.App.2d 547, 58 P.2d 665.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

I concur: BARNARD, P. J.

43 Cal.App.2d 310

TWISSELMAN v. REED et al.

Civ. 11565.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 3, 1941.

Estoppel ⇐83(5)

Where, upon death of landlord, his administrator entered into negotiation for sale of premises, and both administrator and purchasers consulted with tenant as to nature of his lease, and tenant represented that he held only under an oral lease, when in fact he was holding under a concealed written lease, tenant was "estopped" from claiming right to possession under the written lease. Code Civ.Proc. § 1962, subd. 3.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estopped".

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by T. F. Twisselman against Chancy O. Reed and another to quiet title to a leasehold interest in land. From a judgment for defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Alex Webster, of Paso Robles, for appellant.

Andrew Renetzky, of San Luis Obispo, for respondents.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff sued in equity for a judgment quieting his title to a leasehold interest in certain farming land, and admitting him to possession of the premises. The defendants had judgment. The issue on the appeal is whether the plaintiff is estopped from claiming the right to possession as a tenant because of his representations to defendants that he held as a tenant under an oral lease from the defendants' grantor when in fact he was holding under a concealed written lease.

On March 15, 1933, Phelps as owner in fee entered into a written lease of the premises with plaintiff, the lease to run from October 1, 1933, for a period of three years and thereafter "until the said party of the first part shall notify the said second party in writing, thirty (30) days previous to October 1st of any year thereafter".

The lessor died December 17, 1936, and his administrator entered into negotiations with defendants for the sale of the premises to them. The plaintiff was consulted by the administrator and by all the defendants to all of whom he represented that he was holding under an oral lease only. At all these times the written lease was kept concealed by plaintiff, and the defendants made the purchase without any knowledge of its existence.

The trial court concluded that plaintiff was estopped to deny that the lease under which he held was an oral lease and to deny that notice of termination was given as required. The findings of fact upon which these conclusions of law are based read: "That it is true that defendants before they purchased said real estate asked plaintiff what his interest in said property was and that plaintiff informed defendants on or about the month of August, 1937, that he was holding said property and had been holding said property under an oral agreement of lease for several years last past.

"That it is true that said statements of plaintiff were false, that plaintiff knew they were false and intended defendants to rely upon them, and that defendants believed and relied upon said statements of plaintiff and thereafter purchased said property. That had said plaintiff truthfully informed defendants of the written lease under which said plaintiff held said property, defendants would not have purchased said property and that the possession of defendants would be delayed for at least one year under said written contract.

"That it is true that said plaintiff knew said written lease provided 'that this lease shall continue, after the said term of three years has expired, and until the said party of the first part shall notify the said second party in writing, thirty (30) days previous to October 1st of any year thereafter', and that plaintiff falsely informed defendants that he was relying on an oral agreement, and willfully concealed from defendants said written lease and particularly said clause thereof.

"That said defendants or either of them had no knowledge of said written lease or any part thereof, and were misinformed by plaintiff as to the existence thereof and the contents thereof; and thereby prevented by said plaintiff from giving the notice of termination as provided therein until the time had elapsed within which said notice was required to be given, and thereby would continue plaintiff's possession for at least a year thereafter, to the exclusion of defendants from said property."

Throughout the hearing in the trial court, and upon this appeal, the plaintiff has admitted his fraud and misrepresentations as found by the trial court, but he seeks to excuse his conduct by the assertion that he was in fact holding under an oral modification of the written lease. This asserted modification related only to the manner and time of making payments of the rent reserved. It had no relation to the term of occupancy. Plaintiff made no effort to prove that he was holding under an oral lease with a tenancy running from year to year and, as such terminable upon notice. And since he at no time informed the defendants that his oral lease was a modification of a written lease which he had in his possession, he is estopped to deny that notice of termination was given as required.

The case in all its features is a typical one for the application of the principles found in subdivision 3 of section 1962 of the Code of Civil Procedure which reads: "Whenever a party has, by his own declaration, act, or omission, intentionally and deliberately led another to believe a particular thing true, and to act upon such belief, he cannot, in any litigation arising out of such declaration, act, or omission, be permitted to falsify it."

The negotiations for the purchase of the premises and the representations of the plaintiff regarding the nature of his tenancy ran from March, 1937, until November, 1937, the time when the sale to defendants was made. If the parties had known of the existence of the written lease, notice of termination could have been given prior to October 1st of that year. The injury to the defendants caused by the misrepresentations is obvious.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; SPENCE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 328

STATE COMPENSATION INSURANCE FUND v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 12839

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 4, 1941.

1. Workmen's compensation ⇐1359

To enable an applicant to obtain an award for compensation, he must show that the service he was rendering at the time of the injury grew out of and was incidental to the employment.

2. Workmen's compensation ⇐670

Where it appeared that city bill collector and inspector of signs was driving automobile towards city's garage, that he noticed two men for whom he had summons and complaint, that he endeavored to make service, that when he returned to his automobile he slipped on mud at curbing and fell, that employee occasionally served papers for private parties and that at time of accident the papers were being served for a personal friend, who paid employee $5, the employee was not entitled to compensation since the injuries did not grow "out of" and were not "incidental to the employment", even if employee had been granted permission to serve legal papers occasionally.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Out of" and "Incidental to the Employment".

Proceeding by the State Compensation Insurance Fund, insurance carrier for the City of Beverly Hills, against the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California and others to annul an award made by Commission on behalf of John W. Ruffner.

Award annulled.

Donald Gallagher, of San Francisco, W. C. Flynn, of Los Angeles, and Edmund J. Thomas, Jr., of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten and Dan Murphy, Jr., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

WOOD, Justice.

The petitioner, insurance carrier for the city of Beverly Hills, seeks to annul an award made by respondent Commission on behalf of John W. Ruffner, who had performed services for the city as a bill collector and as an inspector of signs.

Ruffner was driving an automobile owned by the city to the city's garage at approximately 4:45 p.m. on May 3, 1940. His working hours were from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., but at times he collected bills for the city earlier in the morning or later in the evening when he could find the debtors in their homes. On the occasion of the accident as Ruffner was driving on Roxbury drive towards the garage he noticed two men coming from a building to enter a parked automobile. Ruffner had in his pocket a summons and complaint in a court action which he had carried for some time for the purpose of making service. The men who entered the automobile were the parties he desired to serve. He stopped his car and went across the street in an endeavor to make the service. When he returned to his own car he slipped on some mud at the curbing and fell, receiving the injuries for which he sought compensation from the city.

Ruffner occasionally served papers for private parties and received compensation for these activities. At the time of the accident the papers were being served for a personal friend, who paid him the sum of $5. The service of the papers had nothing whatever to do with Ruffner's employment with the city.

[1, 2] To enable an applicant to obtain an award for compensation he must show that the service he was rendering at the time of the injury grew out of and was incidental to the employment. California C. I. Exchange v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 190 Cal. 433, 213 P. 257. It is manifest that Ruffner was rendering no service whatever to the city of Beverly Hills when he walked across the street to serve legal papers in a matter in which the employing city was not interested. The respondent Commission, however, takes the position that "the serving of private papers really became a part of his work" because of consent which it is claimed was given to Ruffner to serve legal papers occasionally. Ruffner testified that he spoke to the city attorney of Beverly Hills concerning the matter, who said that "he didn't think there was any objection to it". The city attorney had no authority to extend the liability of the city beyond the scope of Ruffner's employment by the city. When Ruffner left his work to serve the summons he was performing an act for the benefit of himself and a person other than his employer. Mere permission to perform such an act, even if it be conceded that the city attorney did grant such permission, would not make the city liable to compensate for injuries arising from its performance. Campbell on Workmen's Compensation, Vol. 1, p. 202, par. 209; Kadow v. City of Los Angeles, 31 Cal.App.2d 324, 87 P.2d 906; Brindamour v. Murray, 7 Cal.2d 73, 59 P.2d 1009.

The award is annulled.

We concur: MOORE, P. J.; McCOMB, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 238

PEOPLE v. CRANDALL.

Cr. 3417.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 26, 1941.

1. False pretenses ⇐49(1)

Evidence held to authorize conviction of grand theft, committed by procuring money from elderly woman without intention of repaying, on false representations that money was to be used in business venture, as against contention that defendant was given money by the woman.

2. Criminal law ⇐539(1)

In prosecution for grand theft, where victim's testimony at preliminary hearing was not objected to on ground of mental incompetency, and clearly indicated that victim then had sufficient understanding to apprehend obligation of oath and to give correct account of matters involved, competency of such testimony at final trial was a matter addressed to judgment of the trial judge, and admission of such testimony was not error, though victim had been adjudged insane and confined in state hospital shortly after preliminary hearing. Code Civ.Proc. § 1880.

3. Witnesses ⇐78

The fact that witness has been recently found of unsound mind and is inmate of insane asylum, is prima facie evidence that he is of unsound mind, imposing burden of showing his competency on party offering him, but such rule should not be applied in retrospect and is applicable only where witness has been adjudged insane a short time before he is produced.

4. Witnesses ⇐78

An adjudication of insanity is not conclusive upon the question of competency of witness, since whether person is so insane as to be incapable of taking care of his person or property, or criminally irresponsible, does not determine whether he is so insane as to be incapable of testifying. Code Civ. Proc. § 1880.

5. Witnesses ⇐78

In prosecution for grand theft, statement in psychopathic report, based upon interview with victim's attorney, that onset of victim's insanity was of specified duration, was pure "hearsay" except for impeachment purposes, and could be of no significance in determining admissibility of testimony given by victim at preliminary hearing shortly before she was adjudged insane.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Hearsay".

6. False pretenses ⇐42

In prosecution for grand theft, committed by procuring money from elderly woman without intention to repay, upon false representation that it would be used in a business venture or the like, evidence of expenditures and gifts made by defendant for merely personal purposes was admissible to show defendant's intent in obtaining money from victim.

7. Criminal law ⇐1159(5)

In prosecution for grand theft, committed by procuring money from elderly woman without intention to repay, on false representation that money was to be used in business venture or the like, bare statement by defendant that he and victim were partners could be of no avail on appeal.

8. Criminal law ⇐371(3)

In prosecution for grand theft committed by obtaining money from elderly woman without intention to return it, on false representations that money was to be used in business venture or the like, checks, check stubs, and ledger sheet of victim's brokerage account were admissible to show that amounts charged in information were but part of total amount obtained, and hence to show intent of defendant in procuring the money.

9. Criminal law ⇐829(1)

Refusal of requested instructions was not error where points raised thereby were fully covered in instructions given.

10. Criminal law ⇐782(1), 785(3)

Instructions on credibility of witnesses, opinions of experts, and weight of evidence were sufficient to guide jury in weighing testimony of detectives and such persons.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank M. Smith, Judge.

Benjamin F. Crandall was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Spencer L. Halverson and Harold L. Davis, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Gilbert F. Nelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

Appellant, charged by information with ten counts of grand theft, with a prior conviction of grand theft and of issuing checks without sufficient funds, was found guilty on each of the ten counts by separate verdicts of the jury returned after trial. Appellant admitted the prior conviction, but appeals from the present judgments and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The record reveals the following facts. Appellant was released on parole from San Quentin state prison on or about August 5, 1939. A few days later, while stopping at the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel, he chanced to meet Mrs. Nellie B. Lantz, a widow past sixty years of age. After her husband's death Mrs. Lantz had been under the guardianship of her attorney from 1932 to 1937, and was then restored to competency by court order in June, 1937, at which time there was turned over to her property and money to the extent of approximately seventy to eighty thousand dollars. Appellant's acquaintance with Mrs. Lantz appears to have rapidly ripened into a friendship and about September of 1939 Mrs. Lantz began advancing sums of money to appellant. The money appears to have been advanced largely for investment in various business ventures. According to appellant's testimony, he and Mrs. Lantz had decided to become partners and she would furnish the money while he would do the work. According to Mrs. Lantz' testimony, given at the preliminary hearing and read into evidence at the trial, she advanced the money because of representations made to her by appellant, chief of which appears to be his claim to ownership of a large estate in Connecticut, and because appellant seemed to know a number of people she knew and one, whom Mrs. Lantz regarded as a reputable business man, commended appellant to her. Appellant also appears to have played somewhat on Mrs. Lantz' sympathy. From September, 1939, to about June, 1940, Mrs. Lantz advanced to appellant a total sum in excess of $65,000, of which about $10,000 seems to have been placed by appellant in business ventures. There is evidence that during the same period appellant made various personal expenditures, including purchases of jewelry, mostly feminine, in the sum of $10,918.47. One witness, an actress, testified to receiving from appellant during that period, among other things, gifts of jewelry, a fur coat and a Buick car. The evidence further reveals appellant to have been otherwise liberal and his assumed social standard to have been somewhat expensive.

[1] Appellant's principal business ventures were concerned with the publication of certain magazines or periodicals having to do with life in Hollywood and the affairs of the motion picture and radio world. The record as a whole, however, scarcely furnishes a reasonable basis for any inference that appellant's expenditures and some of his activities noted above formed a necessary part of his business career. In any event, the evidence in this respect clearly presented a question of fact for the jury.

The record clearly supports the evident conclusion of the jury that Mrs. Lantz did not intend to make appellant a gift of the money. She held his note or notes to cover the same. The record is also replete with evidence from which the jury might reasonably infer that at the time appellant received the money he had no intention of ever paying it back and in fact intended at the time to appropriate it as his own. The entire picture presented by the evidence is one of an apparently unscrupulous man taking advantage of an elderly woman plainly incapable of looking after her own affairs. Mrs. Lantz never received her money back from appellant or any value therefor.

[2] By the time of appellant's preliminary hearing before the magistrate on the charges herein Mrs. Lantz had suffered a collapse and was confined to the Rosemead Sanitarium. She was brought in from the sanitarium to testify at the preliminary hearing, which was held on June 24, 1940. On July 9, 1940, she was adjudged insane and ordered confined in the Camarillo State Hospital. No objection was made as to her mental competence to testify at the preliminary hearing and her testimony there given clearly indicates that at the time she was possessed of a sufficient understanding to apprehend the obligation of an oath and to be capable of giving a correct account of the matters in reference to the charges against appellant. At the trial the prosecution introduced evidence of the then existing mental condition of Mrs. Lantz, her confinement in the state hospital, and asked permission to read into the record her testimony given at the preliminary hearing in lieu of calling her to the stand in person. The offer met with objection by appellant on the ground that the prosecution had established by its own evidence that Mrs. Lantz was incompetent to testify at the time of the preliminary hearing, under section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The objection was overruled and the prosecution was permitted to read the testimony into the record, which ruling appellant assigns as prejudicial error.

[3-5] Under a statute such as section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it has been held that a person who can apprehend the obligation of an oath and is capable of giving a fairly correct account of the things he has seen or heard is competent as a witness, although he may be afflicted with some form of insanity. See 28 R.C.L. 452, sec. 38. Appellant, however, contends that the burden was upon the prosecution to show that Mrs. Lantz was competent to testify since the prosecution had proven the witness insane at the time of her production, and relies for support of his contention upon the rule that the fact that a person has been recently found of unsound mind by a court of competent jurisdiction and that he is an inmate of an asylum for the insane is prima facie evidence that he is of unsound mind and imposes the burden on the party offering him to show his competency. It should be pointed out that here the adjudication of insanity was made subsequent to the time the witness gave her testimony. Manifestly, the rule relied on is applicable only in situations where the witness has been adjudged insane a short time before he is produced. Owing to the nature of insanity, its many forms, varying effects and attendant uncertainties, it would be obviously unjust to apply such a rule in retrospect. Moreover, the character of Mrs. Lantz' testimony given at the preliminary hearing was of itself proof of her competency as a witness at the time; and an adjudication of insanity is not to be taken as conclusive upon the question of the competency of a witness. "The question whether a person is so insane as to be incapable of taking care of his person or property, or criminally irresponsible, does not determine the question whether he is so insane as to be incapable of testifying. Hence, an inquisition of lunacy does not conclusively render the subject incompetent as a witness." 28 R.C.L. 453, sec. 40. A statement contained in a psychopathic report, based upon an interview with Mrs. Lantz' attorney, that the "onset" of Mrs. Lantz' condition was "approximately six weeks" could be of no significance or importance, under the circumstances, in view of what has already been said here. Indeed such a report except for impeachment purposes, is pure hearsay. In any event, the question of the admissibility of the testimony of the witness as given at the preliminary, and the competency of the witness as well, was in the first instance addressed to the judgment of the trial judge. There is nothing in the record indicating that the trial judge erred either in judgment or as to the law.

[6, 7] Appellant's contention that the court erred in admitting evidence of expenditures and gifts made by appellant, during the period in question, is without merit. Money had been obtained from Mrs. Lantz upon the representation that it would be used or invested in a business venture or in relation thereto, or upon some similar representation. Evidence of the use appellant made of money during that period was clearly pertinent as to the question of the intent with which he had obtained such a large sum of money from Mrs. Lantz. People v. Stone, 16 Cal. 369; People v. Eastman, 77 Cal. 171, 19 P. 266. Appellant's bare statement that he and Mrs. Lantz were partners has no support in the evidence. Moreover, it can be of no avail on appeal.

[8] Nor is there merit in the contention that the court committed prejudicial error in admitting into evidence a large number of checks, check stubs and the ledger sheet of a brokerage account of Mrs. Lantz. Appellant claims they have no bearing on the case. Respondent contends that these records showed that the amounts in the ten counts charged in the information were but a part of the total amount of $65,407.55 which the appellant obtained from Mrs. Lantz and that they went to show the commission of offenses similar to those charged, and hence the intent with which appellant committed the acts charged. Respondent's position is well taken and the matter objected to was properly admitted to that end. People v. Hennessey, 201 Cal. 568, 582, 258 P. 49; People v. Eley, 121 Cal.App. 53, 59, 8 P.2d 885.

[9, 10] In regard to the assignments of error on the part of the court in refusing to give certain instructions requested by appellant, it is sufficient to state that as to the matter of insanity of a witness the requested instruction did not correctly state the applicable rule; and as to all of the said instructions so requested, the points attempted to be raised thereby were fully covered in the instructions given by the court. As to the manner of weighing the testimony of detectives and other such persons, respondent properly points out that in view of the instructions given on the credibility of witnesses, the opinions of experts and the weight of the evidence, ample instructions were given to guide the jury in weighing the testimony of all the witnesses.

The facts presented to the jury were amply sufficient to justify an inference of appellant's guilt and the verdicts rendered may not be disturbed on appeal. People v. Hennessey, supra, 201 Cal. at page 571, 258 P. 49. Appellant's motion for a new trial was properly denied.

The judgments of conviction are affirmed and the order denying the motion for a new trial is also affirmed.

We concur: YORK, P. J.; WHITE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 316

PEOPLE v. BURKE.

Cr. 2160.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 3, 1941.

1. Criminal law ⇐308
Death ⇐1, 2(1)

In bigamy prosecution where evidence disclosed that defendant had married three separate women, that first wife left defendant about a month after the marriage and that defendant had not seen or heard of her since, the jury was permitted to presume or infer, either that the first wife was living at the time of the third marriage, or that she was dead at the time of the second.

2. Criminal law ⇐308

In bigamy prosecution where evidence disclosed that defendant had married three separate women, that first wife left defendant about a month after the marriage and that defendant had not seen or heard of her since, in face of positive evidence that the second wife was living at the time of the third marriage there was no room for presumption of innocence in relation to the third marriage.

3. Criminal law ⇐1144(13)

The District Court of Appeal was under duty to assume that the jury accepted whatever presumption or inference was necessary to sustain its verdict.

4. Criminal law ⇐371(9)

Where evidence disclosed that defendant had married three separate women, that first wife left defendant about a month after the marriage and that defendant had not seen or heard of her since, evidence relating to the second marriage was admissible in bigamy prosecution based on the third marriage as part of the state's case in chief as well as evidence of intent and was not objectionable as being evidence of a distinct crime.

5. Criminal law ⇐1130(2)

Appellant's brief stating that several instructions were objectionable and erroneous but not presenting further citation or comment did not present a debatable question on appeal.

6. Criminal law ⇐778(4)

In bigamy prosecution based on third marriage, defendant's requested instructions to the general purport that jury must presume that wife number one was alive at time of second marriage and dead three months later when third marriage was contracted and that jury must presume that defendant was guilty of crime in the second marriage but innocent in the third were properly rejected as confusing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; R. R. Syer, Judge.

Boyd Burke was convicted of bigamy, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

John W. Montgomery and Francis E. Zingheim, both of San Jose, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and William F. Cleary and James A. Arnerich, Deputies Atty. Gen., for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

The defendant was convicted of the crime of bigamy upon an information charging a marriage on October 4, 1938, he then "having a wife living". The state proved, and the defendant admitted, that he had married three separate women—one on July 30, 1936; another on July 16, 1938, and another on October 4, 1938. The first and third marriages were contracted under assumed names. Upon arraignment the defendant first pleaded guilty, then withdrew his plea and entered a plea of not guilty and admitted a prior conviction of petty theft.

The first wife was twenty-one years of age at the time of her marriage in July, 1936. She left defendant about a month after the marriage and defendant had not seen or heard of her since. The second wife appeared at the trial and testified. Competent proof of all three ceremonies was made. The main ground of appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to prove that the defendant had a "wife living" at the time of the third marriage.

[1-3] Appellant's argument rests wholly upon a confusion of the weight of presumptions as evidence. It is that, since he is presumed innocent of crime at the time of his third marriage, then the presumption of "continued life" running to the first wife is dispelled. But, upon the same theory, the presumption of innocence running to the second marriage would dispel the same presumption. Hence, the second marriage would have been valid, and the wife of that marriage appearing in court was sufficient proof that appellant had "a wife living" at the time he contracted the third marriage. Thus the two presumptions of innocence running to the second and third marriages conflict with each other, and the jury was permitted to presume, or infer, either that the first wife was living at the time of the third marriage, or that she was dead at the time of the second. It might have rejected both of these presumptions of law and inferred, from the evidence and physical condition of the first wife, and other facts proved, that she was alive at the time of the third marriage, or it might have rejected all these presumptions and inferences and inferred that she was dead at the time of the second marriage. In the face of the positive evidence that the second wife was living at the time of the third marriage there is no room for the presumption of innocence in relation to the third marriage. But the circle ends with the duty of this court to assume that the jury accepted whatever presumption or inference may be necessary to sustain its verdict.

[4] The evidence relating to the second marriage is objected to as being evidence of a distinct crime. It was clearly admissible as a part of the state's case in chief. as well as evidence of intent.

[5, 6] The appellant's brief states that several instructions were objectionable and erroneous, but without further citation or comment. This manner of presentation does not present a debatable question on appeal. We have examined the proposed instructions and find that they were properly rejected as they would have served only to confuse the jury. They were to the general purport that the jury must presume that wife number one was alive at the time of the second marriage, and dead three months later when the third marriage was contracted; that the jury must presume that the defendant was guilty of crime in the second marriage but innocent in the third.

There is no error in the record.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; SPENCE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 263

SAN FRANCISCO BANK v. LANGER et al.

Civ. 6266.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 28, 1941.

1. Waters and water courses ⇐107(3)

In action to quiet title to water flowing from springs on plaintiff's land and to enjoin and recover damages for diversion of portion thereof, evidence held sufficient to support trial court's findings that water flowed in natural channels on plaintiff's land, that defendant wrongfully and deliberately diverted part of water by constructing ditch and obstructing flow of water in natural channel, and that plaintiff was owner and entitled to entire flow of water from such springs.

2. Waters and water courses ⇐101

Water flowing from spring into water course is part of natural flow thereof, and its use is governed by riparian rights doctrine, so that owner of land on which arises a spring, from which a stream flows, has no absolute ownership of waters in spring, but is entitled only to reciprocal share thereof as riparian owner in common with other such owners farther down stream, but where natural flow from spring does not pass beyond boundary of land on which it is located, landowner may use all of it.

3. Waters and water courses ⇐127

Adverse use of water, to mature prescriptive right thereto, must be accompanied by actual, open, notorious control and use, be adverse and hostile to title of owner of land over which it flows, be under claim of exclusive right, and be continuous and uninterrupted for over five years.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)

The trial court's fact finding on conflicting evidence is controlling on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; C. J. Luttrell, Judge.

Action by the San Francisco Bank against Albert Langer and others to quiet title to water, enjoin defendants from diverting flow thereof, and recover damages for such diversion, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint to quiet title to and recover possession of part of such water. From a judgment for plaintiff and cross-defendant, defendants and cross-complainants appeal.

Affirmed.

Johnson & Brawman, of Yreka, for appellants.

Tapscott & Tapscott, of Yreka, and Orrick, Dahlquist, Neff & Harrington, of San Francisco, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice.

The defendants and cross-complainants have appealed from a judgment quieting title in plaintiff and cross-defendant to all the water flowing from springs located on its property through natural channels on the same land. The defendants were restrained from interfering with the flow of water in those channels and damages in the sum of $150 were assessed against them for diverting the water by means of a ditch which they constructed. The defendants claimed title to the water flowing in the ditch as owners of the land riparian thereto.

The respective parties to this action are owners of adjoining farms in Siskiyou county which are separated by a fence called the "Langer fence" extending north and south between the property of plaintiff in Section 12, Township 47 North, Range 1 East, M.D.B. & M., and the property of defendants in Sections 7 and 18, Township 47 North, Range 2 East, M.D.B. & M. The defendants' land is situated east of the fence and the plaintiff's property is west of that fence.

The amended complaint alleges that plaintiff is the owner of the particularly-described land adjacent to the fence on the western side thereof, upon which land there is located certain springs called "Jack Springs"; that the water of those springs flows in considerable quantity northerly upon plaintiff's land in natural channels emptying into a slough; that the water first flows through one channel for a distance of 160 feet from the springs, and then separates into two channels, both of which extend northerly upon plaintiff's land to the slough; that the defendants wrongfully obstructed the water in the easterly channel and diverted it to their own land east of the fence by means of a ditch which they constructed, to plaintiff's damage in a specified sum.

It is not contended the defendants obtained title to the water by adverse possession. Adverse possession of the water in question was neither pleaded by the defendants nor proved at the trial.

The defendants filed an answer and cross-complaint denying the material allegations of the complaint, except that it was admitted "Jack Springs" were located on the property described in the complaint and that the water flowed in natural channels northerly therefrom a short distance and then divided into two channels, the easterly one of which, it is asserted, carried the bulk of the water and extends over and across the property of defendants, upon which land they have used the water for many years for agricultural and irrigation purposes, and that they are the owners and entitled to the possession of all the water flowing in that branch of the channel.

In an answer to the cross-complaint the plaintiff denied the affirmative allegations thereof. The cause was tried by the court sitting without a jury. Findings were adopted favorable to the plaintiff and cross-defendant in every material respect. A judgment was thereupon rendered quieting title in plaintiff and cross-defendant to all of the water from the springs flowing in both branches of the channel, enjoining the defendants from claiming title thereto and from diverting the water therefrom. Damages were awarded plaintiff in the sum of $150. From that judgment the defendants have appealed.

[1] The appellants contend that the findings and judgment are not supported by the evidence. It is asserted the evidence shows, without substantial dispute, that a portion of the water from the springs flows in a natural channel easterly upon defendants' land, entitling them, as riparian owners of the land adjacent thereto, to the use of that water. In support of the foregoing claim, it is maintained the topography and elevations, shown upon maps which were received in evidence, prove that the water from the springs would naturally flow easterly upon the land of the defendants.

We are of the opinion the findings and judgment are adequately supported by the evidence. The court specifically determined that the springs were located on plaintiff's land; that the water from the springs flowed northerly therefrom in natural channels which are also located on plaintiff's land, and empties into a slough; that none of the water from the springs naturally flows in a channel upon the land of the defendants; that defendants wrongfully obstructed the flow of water in the easterly channel and diverted it therefrom to their land by means of "ditches, obstructions and other works", constructed by them, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $150, and that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the use and possession of all of the water from "Jack Springs".

It would be an idle task to attempt to recite the evidence in support of the findings and judgment. There is a conflict of testimony. There is, however, substantial evidence that until some time between 1919 and 1926 the water from the springs flowed northerly in two natural channels located entirely upon the plaintiff's land west of the Langer fence, at which time one of the channels was obstructed by placing rocks and earth therein, and that the water was diverted to defendants' land east of the fence by means of a ditch which was constructed by them. Four witnesses, Archie McDonald, James D. Fairchild, J. W. Churchill and Frank Howell, testified to those facts. The first witness mentioned said he moved to that vicinity in 1919, at which time the water from "Jack Springs" flowed northerly in two natural channels which extended west of the fence. He definitely said no water then flowed east of the fence which divided the property of these litigants, but that, "A channel was dug in there [east of the fence], I would say about 1923". He also testified that even after the construction of the diverting ditch the water would not flow from its original channel until it was first filled up and dammed by rocks and other obstructions. He asserted that the natural channel was obstructed several times and that he repeatedly removed the rocks and debris after which the water would continue to flow northerly therein upon plaintiff's land. Mr. Fairchild became a resident in that vicinity as early as 1893. He testified that the water from the springs then flowed northerly upon plaintiff's land in natural channels. Mr. Churchill testified that for many years prior to 1926 the water from Jack Springs flowed northerly in natural channels until someone dug a ditch from the east channel to and upon the land of defendants, thereby diverting the water from its natural course. He said, "Some one had a dam laid of rocks into the north [the east] channel, and turned the water into this ditch", which caused it to flow easterly beyond the fence to the land of the defendants. He testified that he removed the obstructions from the channel several times, and that he repeatedly filled the artificial ditch.

The testimony of Mr. Zumwalt, upon which the defendants rely, merely results in a conflict of evidence. The defendant, Albert Langer, admitted that he dug the ditch and placed rocks and sod in the east channel. He claimed that the water overflowed the channel at times and spread out upon his land east of the fence, and that his son dug the ditch to drain his land. He testified in that regard:

"It [the water from the springs] went through the fence in here into that low place and it just spread itself every place. * * *

"Q. And you and your son dug out this so called ditch? A. Yes. * * *

"Q. Did you put any gates across the canal at that time in 1919? A. I did right away when I had the ditch dug. * * *

"Q. You are sure those gates weren't constructed in 1929? A. Well, why would I dig a ditch for water and turn that waste water into the canal.

"Q. Now, why did you dig a ditch across here to take that water, when you already had a ditch going right to the north? * * * A. Because I wanted to get that water on my land. * * *

"Q. Are you sure you didn't do anything over there besides putting this one flat rock in the north branch about that time? A. Well, once in a while, a fellow put in a sod or something like that.

"Q. What did you put that in there for? A. Because I wanted to get all the water I can out of the spring."

The evidence sufficiently supports the findings and judgment to the effect that the water from Jack Springs flows in natural channels upon the land of plaintiff; that it was wrongfully and deliberately diverted by the defendants by means of an artificial ditch constructed by them, and by obstructing the flow of water in its natural channel, to the damage of plaintiff, and that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the entire flow of water from those springs.

[2] There is little dispute regarding the principles of law with respect to the title to water which flows from springs in natural channels, or the riparian rights incident thereto. The only controversy in this case arises in attempting to apply those principles to the facts adduced by the evidence. It is true that the owner of land upon which there is located springs, the water from which flows in natural channels across his land and thence upon or through the lands belonging to other individuals, does not necessarily own the exclusive title to all of the water. On the contrary, under such circumstances the doctrine of riparian water rights is applicable. It follows that if the defendants in this case were the owners of land actually riparian to a natural channel in which the water from plaintiff's springs was accustomed to flow, they might be entitled to a portion of the water from Jack Springs. But the court determined that their land was not riparian to a natural channel connected with those springs, and that they were therefore not entitled to any of the water therefrom. The principle of law which is controlling in this case under the facts determined by the trial court is concisely stated in 25 California Jurisprudence, p. 1106, § 113, as follows: "Irrespective of its source, water from a spring flowing into a watercourse is part of its natural flow and its use is governed by the doctrine of riparian rights. It follows that the owner of land upon which a spring arises and from which a stream flows has no absolute ownership of the waters in the spring, but is entitled only to a reciprocal share, as a riparian owner, in common with other owners farther down on the stream. But where the natural flow from a spring does not pass beyond the boundary of the land on which it is located, the owner may use all of it; he owns it as completely as he owns the soil."

The preceding text is supported by numerous California authorities, including Stepp v. Williams, 52 Cal.App. 237, 242, 198 P. 661, and Simons v. Inyo Cerro Gordo Mining & Power Co., 48 Cal.App. 524, 192 P. 144.

[3] Title by adverse possession to the water diverted by the defendants from the natural channel and used by them is not involved on this appeal. Prescriptive use of the water was neither pleaded nor proved by the defendants. Adverse use of water which will mature a prescriptive right thereto must be accompanied by actual, open, notorious control and use; it must be adverse and hostile to the plaintiff's title; it must be under a claim of exclusive right, and it must be continuous and uninterrupted for more than five years. Ketcham v. Modesto Irrigation District, 135 Cal.App. 180, 191, 26 P.2d 876; Galbreath v. Hopkins, 159 Cal. 297, 113 P. 174; 2 Kinney on Irrigation, 2d Ed., p. 1875, § 1048; 27 R.C.L. p. 1290, § 201; 1 Cal.Jur. 549, §§ 38-41.

[4] Appellants contend that the topography and elevations appearing on the maps received in evidence refute the possibility of the water from the springs running in natural channels northerly on plaintiff's property. There is no merit in that assertion. Our attention is not called to specific elevations on the map which disprove that fact. It is true that the elevations of the surface of defendants' land east of the springs appear to be lower than the immediate vicinity of the springs. It is also true that the elevations north from the springs on the plaintiff's land west of the fence also decrease. It is not disputed that the water actually flowed northerly in the western channel from the springs. There is an abundance of evidence that it also flowed northerly on plaintiff's land in the easterly natural channel, although the record contains conflicting evidence in that regard. The most that may be said regarding the weight of evidence in that respect is that it is conflicting. The finding of the court in that regard is therefore controlling.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PULLEN, P. J.; TUTTLE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 306

SHEARER v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO.

Civ. 11532.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 3, 1941.

Rehearing Denied April 2, 1941.

Hearing Denied May 1, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1002

In action for personal injuries where, although evidence was conflicting, there was substantial evidence to sustain verdict for plaintiff upon issues of defendant's negligence and the amount of damages, such issues were not open to argument on appeal.

2. Negligence ⇐68

One who is himself not negligent is entitled to rely upon presumption that others will exercise due care, and therefore it is not negligence to fail to anticipate danger which can come only from a violation of law or duty upon the part of another.

3. Electricity ⇐16(3), 18(2)

By permitting a charged electric wire to remain upon a public thoroughfare, an electric company maintained a "public nuisance" in violation of law, and as respects contributory negligence of person injured thereby some three hours after reporting to company that wire was down, and being assured that it would be taken care of immediately, such person was entitled to assume that current in wire had been cut off. Pen. Code, §§ 370, 372.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Public Nuisance".

4. Negligence ⇐136(9)

It is only when the facts are clear and indisputable, and when no other inference but that of negligence or contributory negligence can be drawn from the facts, that issue as to negligence or contributory negligence becomes one of law, rather than of fact.

5. Evidence ⇐100

Evidence as to a person's habit of doing a thing as a definite course of action is admissible and of probative value as showing that on a particular occasion the thing was done as usual.

6. Negligence ⇐135

Although evidence as to a person's habit of doing a thing in a certain way is insufficient to raise a presumption of due care on the part of an injured person except in cases where there were no eye witnesses to the accident, such evidence may be sufficient to sustain jury's inference as to due care.

7. Electricity ⇐19(12)

In action for injury to superintendent of sanitary district caused by high-tension wire broken by windstorm and lying across truck, which belonged to district and was parked on public street, whether superintendent was contributorily negligent in attempting, some three hours after notifying electric company of broken wire and being assured it would be attended to immediately and while wire still lay on truck, to open door of truck to examine contents thereof as usual before truck was placed in storage for the night, was for jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Robert McWilliams, Judge.

Action by A. B. Shearer against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Thos. J. Straub, W. H. Spaulding, and John J. Briare, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Julian D. Brewer and O'Connor, Neubarth & Moran, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

[1] Plaintiff sued for damages for personal injuries and had a verdict for $3,000. Three issues were submitted to the jury—the negligence of defendant, the contributory negligence of plaintiff, and the amount of damage suffered by plaintiff. The defendant concedes that the evidence was conflicting on the first and third issues. Substantial evidence was offered to sustain the verdict upon both of those issues, hence the only question open for argument on this appeal is whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

The evidence upon this issue is without substantial conflict. The plaintiff was the superintendent of the sanitary district in the city of San Anselmo. An unusual windstorm throughout the day had caused damage to defendant's power lines maintained in the city. At about 2 o'clock p. m. one of defendant's power lines parted and fell extending through a tree over and upon a truck used by the sanitary district and parked across the street opposite the offices of the district. At about the same hour plaintiff notified the defendant of the fallen wire and was assured that it would be attended to immediately. Defendant failed to send anyone to fix the wire and also failed to shut off the current. Three hours later two of plaintiff's fellow employees came out of the district offices, one with a bamboo rake and one with a wooden cane, for the purpose of removing the wire from the truck so that it could be driven to its place of storage for the night. Plaintiff followed these employees across the street, and, before they were able to remove the wire, he took hold of the door handle with the intention of examining the contents of the truck before its removal. As he seized the handle of the truck he received an electrical shock causing the injuries for which he sued. His explanation of his conduct is that he assumed that the defendant had turned off the power during the three hours intervening between notice to the company and the time of the injury.

[2-4] With this state of the facts two principles of law control the decision: (1) "One who is himself not negligent is entitled to rely upon the presumption that others will exercise due care, so that it is not negligence to fail to anticipate danger which can come only from a violation of law or duty upon the part of another." 19 Cal.Jur. p. 596. In permitting the charged electric wire to remain upon a public thoroughfare to the peril of the entire public the defendant was maintaining a public nuisance in violation of law. Pen. Code, sections 370, 372. The plaintiff was entitled to assume that this violation would not continue. (2) "It is only when the facts are clear and indisputable, and when no other inference than that of negligence or contributory negligence can be drawn from the facts, that the issue becomes one of law and not of fact." McQuigg v. Childs, 213 Cal. 661, 663, 3 P.2d 309, 310.

In denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict the learned trial judge filed a memorandum opinion which is made a part of the clerk's transcript. This we deem a better practice than that of copying the opinion in the briefs of counsel, as here we have a certification that the opinion is a true copy. Though it probably may not be included in a bill of exceptions if the appeal is taken under that method its value in aid of the appeal has long since been recognized. Estate of Felton, 176 Cal. 663, 667, 169 P. 392.

The pertinent portions of the opinion which we approve and adopt as reasons for an affirmance of the judgment read:

[5] "It appears without contradiction that the custom at closing time was for Shearer to examine the truck before it was taken home to determine whether or not there were any articles in it that should be removed. From the fact that such was his custom, the jury might infer, if it saw fit to do so, that that was his purpose at the time he was injured. Wigmore on Evidence, sec. 92, cited in American Can Co. v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 27 Cal.App. 647, 150 P. 996. In the case of Wallis v. Southern Pac. Co., 184 Cal. 662, 195 P. 408, 15 A.L.R. 117 the court quotes with approval from Greenleaf on Evidence as follows: 'A habit of doing a thing is naturally the probative value, as indicating that on a particular occasion the thing was done as usual, and if clearly shown as a definite course of action, is constantly admitted in evidence.' The court also quotes from Wigmore on Evidence as follows: 'Of the probative value of a person's habit or custom as showing the doing on a specific occasion of the act which is the subject of habit or custom there can be no doubt. Every-day experience and reason make it clear enough.'

[6] "Although this principle is no longer held to be sufficient to raise a presumption of due care on the part of an injured person except in cases where there were no eyewitnesses to the accident (White v. Shepardson, 116 Cal.App. 716, 3 P.2d 346), the principle is applicable to a situation such as here involved, where we are not considering presumptions which must be drawn from certain facts but instead are considering possible inferences which the jury might draw.

[7] "The jury might also properly have drawn one of two additional inferences from the evidence. The first of such inferences would be that, an adequate time having elapsed within which the defendant company could have attended to the broken wire, as it had said it would do, as a result of the lapse of such time Shearer believed that it had made the necessary repair. If such were the view taken by the jury, it can not be said, in my opinion, that as a matter of law such view was an unreasonable one. In the Kentucky case cited by defendant (Kentucky Wagon Mfg. Co. v. Gossett, 142 Ky. 842, 135 S.W. 394) the court held that the plaintiff had attempted to extend the assurance made by the defendant 'beyond the fair import' of the words used. In the instant case we have no such situation presented."

Here the undisputed evidence is that the defendant was given ample notice and ample opportunity to remove the danger by the simple process of turning off the electric current; that the plaintiff did not know, and had no reason to have known, that the wire was charged with between 2,300 and 4,000 volts instead of the usual voltage of 110 to 220. Hence whether he was reasonable in assuming that defendant would not permit a wire charged with such high voltage to remain upon the throughfare was a question of fact for the jury. From the verdict in favor of plaintiff we must assume that the jury drew the inference that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, and there is no basis upon which an appellate court could rule that such an inference was not reasonable under the facts shown.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; SPENCE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 244

FISCHER v. KEEN.

Civ. 12268.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 27, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐989

When judgment on jury's verdict is attacked as unsupported by evidence, appellate court has power only to determine whether there is any substantial evidence supporting verdict.

2. Appeal and error ⇐930(1)

On appeal from judgment for defendant in action to recover damages for negligence, all conflicts in evidence must be resolved in defendant's favor and all legitimate and reasonable inferences indulged in to uphold judgment, if possible.

3. Appeal and error ⇐930(1)

On appeal, all intendments are in favor of judgment arrived at on conflicting testimony.

4. Appeal and error ⇐996

Where contradictory inferences can reasonably be drawn from facts in evidence, appellate court will not substitute its deductions or inferences for those of jury, though such court might have reached different conclusion.

5. Appeal and error ⇐996

In action for injuries to pedestrian struck by automobile driven by defendant, appellate court may not disturb trial court's judgment on jury's verdict for defendant, unless no inference of plaintiff's contributory negligence can be drawn from clear and undisputed facts.

6. Automobiles ⇐245(72)

In action for injuries to pedestrian, struck by automobile driven by defendant, plaintiff's contributory negligence in failing to look toward approaching automobile from time when he first saw it 300 feet away and started across street until he arrived at position only four feet in front of it past center of street was fact question for jury.

7. Automobiles ⇐160(4)

An automobile driver was not excused from performing statutory duty to yield right of way to pedestrian, walking within unmarked crosswalk at street intersection, by fact that misty condition of windshield prevented driver from seeing to his left or fact that he was blinded by headlights of approaching automobiles. Vehicle Code, § 560, St.1935, p. 188.

8. Automobiles ⇐168(6)

When automobile driver, proceeding at 25 miles per hour, found that he could not see to his left and ascertain whether any one was within unmarked crosswalk at street intersection because of mist on windshield and headlights of approaching automobiles, it was his duty to slacken speed and place his automobile under such control that he could stop within time and distance intervening between time when he was able to see crosswalk and his arrival thereat. Vehicle Code, § 560, St.1935, p. 188.

9. Automobiles ⇐160(4)

It was duty of automobile driver, approaching unmarked crosswalk at street intersection, to know whether pedestrians were using crosswalk. Vehicle Code, § 560, St. 1935, p. 188.

10. Automobiles ⇐160(4)

An automobile driver, failing to yield right of way to pedestrian walking within unmarked crosswalk at street intersection, violated statute and was negligent per se. Vehicle Code, § 560, St.1935, p. 188.

11. Automobiles ⇐217(5)

A pedestrian owes duty, as ordinarily prudent man, to look in direction from which danger is to be anticipated from approach of automobile before placing himself in position of danger by starting across street, and to continue to look, not one way only, but in direction or directions of anticipated danger, and to be alert to safeguard himself against injury.

12. Automobiles ⇐244(50)

In action for injuries to pedestrian, crossing street in unmarked crosswalk at intersection when struck by automobile driven by defendant, evidence held sufficient to sustain jury's implied finding of plaintiff's contributory negligence in failing to look in direction from which automobile was approaching until he passed center of street and arrived practically at point of impact.

13. Automobiles ⇐246(50)

In action for injuries to pedestrian, struck by automobile driven by defendant at street intersection, where defendant alleged and testified that he was suddenly confronted with perilous situation without fault on his part when plaintiff suddenly appeared out of darkness directly in path of automobile, defendant was entitled to instruction on doctrine of sudden peril.

14. Appeal and error ⇐1064(1)

In action for injuries to pedestrian, struck by automobile driven by defendant, plaintiff was not prejudiced by giving of instruction on sudden peril doctrine, relating solely to defendant's acts and not directed to question of plaintiff's contributory negligence, even if unsupported by evidence.

15. Automobiles ⇐246(31)

In action for injuries to pedestrian, struck by automobile driven by defendant while walking in unmarked crosswalk at street intersection, instruction that pedestrian cannot proceed blindly and in reckless disregard of obvious danger, even though he has right of way, but must exercise ordinary care to avoid collision with automobile, if avoidable by exercise of such care, was not erroneous. Vehicle Code, § 560, St.1935, p. 188.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Henry M. Willis, Judge.

Action by Lewis W. Fischer against Charles Edward Keen for personal injuries. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Edgar T. Fee and Chas. X. Arnold, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Parker & Stanbury, Harry D. Parker, and Vernon W. Hunt, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

This action was instituted to recover damages on account of personal injuries sustained by plaintiff in an automobile accident. At the time of the accident, which occurred between 5:30 and 6 o'clock on the evening of January 14, 1938, plaintiff, a man 75 years of age, was on his way home from the business section of the city of Alhambra, carrying some purchases. When he arrived at the intersection of Chapel and Park streets, it was nearing darkness and the lights on the automobile operated by defendant were turned on. Plaintiff was walking on the south side of Park street and was crossing Chapel street from the west to the east on what is known as an "unmarked crosswalk" at the intersection.

Trial was had before a jury, resulting in a verdict for defendant. A motion for a new trial having been denied, this appeal is prosecuted by plaintiff from the judgment entered upon the verdict in favor of defendant.

Plaintiff testified that as he approached Chapel street he looked both ways and saw a car coming from the south; that he saw no automobile approaching from the north as he entered Chapel street. The one automobile which he testified he saw was approaching from his right about 300 feet away. He started to cross the street. His eyesight was good. He then testified further: "After I started to cross I looked to the left again and I was pretty near to the intersection before I looked, and I looked and saw the car coming, and I thought I could get across before he came, but before I got across he struck me. I had one or two steps to cross. The fender or bumper hit me. I was between 5 and 10 feet from the east curb line when I was hit. One or two steps and I would have been across."

The defendant testified that the illumination at the intersection was poor, consisting solely of a single light of an obsolete type suspended directly over the center of the intersection; that this light shines directly in the center of the intersection rather than upon the four corners thereof, and that there are low-hanging trees which cast shadows and darkness in the immediate vicinity of the accident; that plaintiff was dressed in dark clothing; that it was raining and the pavement was wet. Defendant further testified that he was operating his car at a speed of about 25 miles per hour, with its headlights lighted and its windshield wiper working; that he was operating his car with its left side about 3 or 4 feet from the center line of Chapel street and its right side about 8 or 10 feet from the east curb of said street; that as his car drew near Park street he noted a series of cars coming south on Chapel street with their headlights on and traveling 8 or 10 feet out from the west curb; that while those cars were approaching him he could not distinguish any object on his left; that he was about 250 feet south of Park street when he first saw this group of cars; that they were rather close together, and that their lights "perhaps blinded me slightly". Defendant further testified that it had been a misty day, raining off and on, and "I believe that it was raining at the time of the impact, but I am not certain. It had been raining on the way home, off and on, and there was a natural accumulation of moisture that accumulates on any windshield from a rain. This possibly obscured my vision of the intersection after I passed the last headlights."

The defendant further testified that he was driving 25 miles per hour at the time of the accident; that he had not removed his foot from the accelerator or applied any brakes at any time prior to the accident; that after he had passed the last car that was approaching him from the opposite direction there was nothing to obscure his vision. That the first time he saw the plaintiff the latter was on the left-hand side of defendant's automobile and moving in the general direction of the front of the left side of the automobile. That when he passed the last automobile which approached from the north he was about 15 or 18 feet south of the south edge of the sidewalk on Park street; that at the time he first saw the plaintiff the latter was about 4 feet directly in front of the automobile. The right front headlight on defendant's automobile was bent back about 1 inch, indicating that the same came in contact with plaintiff. The defendant further testified that when he first saw the plaintiff the latter "seemed to be moving more rapidly than an ordinary walk; he seemed to be taking long steps and moving beyond an ordinary walk".

The complaint filed by plaintiff contained the usual allegations of negligence and carelessness on the part of defendant, while the latter's answer, after denying most of the allegations contained in the complaint and in particular those alleging carelessness or negligence, also set up affirmative defenses of contributory negligence and unavoidable accident.

[1-4] Appellant first challenges the judgment on the ground that the record is barren of any substantial evidence to support the verdict and judgment in favor of respondent. In such a situation the powers and duties of an appellate tribunal were thus defined by this court in Arundel v. Turk, 16 Cal.App.2d 293, 295, 60 P.2d 486, 487: "When a judgment is attacked as being unsupported by the evidence, the power of the appellate court in passing on this question begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the verdict rendered by the jury; and, on appeal from a judgment for defendant in an action for damages for negligence, all conflicts in the evidence must be resolved in favor of the defendant, and all legitimate and reasonable inferences indulged in to uphold the judgment, if possible; and, when two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the jury. Crawford v. Southern Pac. Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 45 P.2d 183. * * * All intendments are in favor of the judgment arrived at upon conflicting testimony. Where the facts are such that contradictory inferences can reasonably be drawn from them, an appellate court will not substitute other inferences for those adopted by the trial jury. [Citing cases.] This is the rule even where the reviewing court might have reached a different conclusion. * * *" See, also, Raggio v. Mallory, 10 Cal.2d 723, 725, 76 P.2d 660.

[5-10] Therefore, even though we conclude that as a matter of law respondent driver was negligent, we may not disturb the judgment unless we can say that from clear and undisputed facts no inference of contributory negligence on the part of appellant can be drawn therefrom, because the question of contributory negligence, like that of negligence, is a question of fact for the jury. Appellant was walking within an unmarked crosswalk. It was therefore the duty of respondent to yield the right of way to the former. Vehicle Code, sec. 560, subd. a, St.1935, p. 188. In the performance of this duty respondent was not excused by the fact that the misty condition of his windshield prevented him from seeing to his left or that he was blinded by the headlights of approaching automobiles. When he found that he could not see to his left and thereby ascertain whether any one was within the crosswalk, it was his duty to slacken his admitted speed of 25 miles per hour and place his car under such control that he could stop within the time and distance intervening between his ability to see the crosswalk and his arrival thereat. It was respondent's duty to know whether pedestrians were using the crosswalk. The obligation rested upon him to yield the right of way to appellant, and this he did not do. He therefore violated the hereinbefore mentioned section of the Vehicle Code, and his act in so doing was negligence per se. Nicholas v. Leslie, 7 Cal.App.2d 590, 594, 46 P. 2d 761.

[11] Coming now to a consideration of appellant's conduct, it appears to us that the only possible theory upon which contributory negligence might be charged against him would be that after he first saw respondent's automobile 300 feet away and started across the street, he never again looked in the direction of the approaching car until he had traveled past the center of the street and had arrived at a position only 4 feet in front of the oncoming automobile, at which time he again saw it about the same instant it struck him. There devolved upon appellant, as the act of an ordinarily prudent man, the duty, before placing himself in a position of danger, to look in the direction from which danger was to be anticipated, and certainly an ordinarily prudent person would anticipate an existent danger from the approach of an automobile only 300 feet away at the time such person started to cross an intersection. Further, this was a continuing duty, and was not met by plaintiff's looking once and then looking away. That this is the law has been the holding without disagreement in many cases, including Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 479, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493; Wright v. Foreman, 86 Cal.App. 595, 603, 261 P. 481; Bullock v. Western Wholesale Drug Co., 91 Cal.App. 369, 266 P. 978; Wing v. Kishi, 92 Cal.App. 495, 498, 268 P. 483; Chase v. Thomas, 7 Cal.App.2d 440, 46 P. 2d 200; Deike v. East Bay St. Rys., Ltd., 7 Cal.App.2d 544, 550, 46 P.2d 812; Finkle v. Tait, 55 Cal.App. 425, 203 P. 1031; Horton v. Stoll, 3 Cal.App.2d 687, 690, 40 P.2d 603; Koeppel v. Daluiso, 118 Cal.App. 442, 448, 5 P.2d 457. By the foregoing statement we do not mean to say that there is a duty to look one way and to continue so to look, but rather to look in the direction or directions of anticipated danger and to continue to be alert to safeguard against injury. Lavin v. Fereira, 10 Cal.App.2d 710, 52 P.2d 518.

[12] In the instant case appellant testified that he saw no cars coming from his left, while respondent testified that several cars were approaching from the left, the headlights of which more or less blinded him. The jury may have disbelieved appellant's testimony that there were no cars approaching from his left, and may have accepted as true respondent's testimony to the contrary, and may have determined that appellant as he crossed the street continued to watch the machines approaching from his left and neglected to look in the direction from which respondent's automobile was approaching until appellant had passed the center of the street and had arrived practically at the point of impact with respondent's car. That such a deduction would be reasonable cannot be denied, and even though other inferences could reasonably be drawn from the facts, this court is without power to substitute its conclusions for those of the trial jury. Crawford v. Southern Pac. Co., supra. The jury in the case now before us impliedly found that appellant was guilty of contributory negligence and therefore could not recover in this action, and as there is substantial evidence in the record to sustain the verdict of the jury in that regard, the judgment based upon their verdict cannot be disturbed on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to support it.

Appellant contends that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain this verdict because the evidence for respondent is inherently improbable and because the so-called physical facts, supported by mathematical calculations, clearly demonstrate that the accident occurred because of the negligence of respondent. We are not impressed with this argument because, as was said in Nagamatsu v. Roher, 10 Cal.App.2d 752, 755, 756, 53 P.2d 174, 175, "there is no possibility of mathematical exactness in such testimony as to the position and speed of another car. As is well known, such estimates of speed and distance are only approximations and in the nature of things could not be exact. * * * As has been frequently pointed out in cases of this nature, such arguments are unreliable because they fail to take into account the human element * * *. 'Perhaps there is nothing more certain about an automobile accident than the fact that the visible results afterward are not an infallible guide in determining what occurred.'"

[13, 14] We come now to a consideration of appellant's contention that the court erred in the giving of certain instructions. The instruction first challenged reads as follows: "You are instructed that if a driver is operating an automobile with ordinary care, and if you further find from the evidence that suddenly a confusing emergency arises without fault on his part which would naturally overpower the normal judgment of the ordinary prudent driver, such driver is not required to exercise the same degree of care as that which would be required of him under normal circumstances; but under such circumstances, the driver is required only to use that degree of care which would be used by a careful and prudent driver under the same circumstances. Therefore, if you find that at, and prior to the happening of the accident in question, Mr. Keen was operating his automobile with ordinary care under all the circumstances, and that the plaintiff, Mr. Fischer, appeared in the roadway at such a time and in such a manner as to constitute a confusing emergency as I have just defined it to you, then Mr. Keen was not required to exercise the highest degree of care, but only that degree of care which would be used by a person of ordinary prudence under such circumstances, and would not be required to exercise the same calm judgment as would be required of him under normal circumstances, and would not be negligent in so acting if he used such care, even if you do find that he made some error of judgment or that some other course of conduct on his part might have avoided the accident."

It was respondent's theory, both in his answer and by his testimony, that without fault upon his part he was suddenly confronted with a perilous situation when appellant suddenly appeared out of the darkness directly in the path of his machine and only 4 feet ahead of it. In this state of the pleadings and the evidence, an instruction on the doctrine of sudden peril was a proper one. Raymond v. Hill, 168 Cal. 473, 143 P. 743; Kohlhauer v. Bronstein, 21 Cal.App.2d 4, 6, 67 P.2d 1078; Graham v. Consolidated M. T. Co., 112 Cal.App. 648, 297 P. 617; Nitta v. Haslam, 138 Cal.App. 736, 33 P.2d 678. Respondent was entitled to have this theory presented to the jury. Appellant earnestly contends that there was no evidence in the case supporting such instruction. Even though we concede this to be true, the instruction related solely to the acts of the driver of the car, and the claim of appellant that it was negligently operated. The challenged instruction was not in any way directed to the question of contributory negligence of appellant, and he was not, therefore, prejudiced by the giving of the same, even if it was unsupported by the evidence, a fact which we do not believe is borne out by the record.

[15] We find no error in the giving of instruction No. 35. By it the jury was advised that even though a pedestrian has the right of way, he cannot proceed blindly and in reckless disregard of obvious danger, but must exercise ordinary care to avoid a collision if the same could be avoided by the exercise of such care. The two other instructions, numbered 20 and 21, respectively, of which appellant complains, were manifestly correct statements of the law and were applicable to the issue of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff as presented by the pleadings and raised by the evidence.

For the reasons herein stated, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: YORK, P. J.; DORAN, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 330

GALBREATH et al. v. DINGLEY et al.

Civ. 2605.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 4, 1941.

Rehearing Denied April 1, 1941.

Hearing Denied May 1, 1941.

1. Taxation ⇐614

Proceedings on tax sales are in invitum, and every essential step leading to the execution of a tax deed must be strictly followed or the deed executed pursuant thereto will be void. Pol.Code, §§ 3764, 3771a, 3897.

2. Statutes ⇐225
Taxation ⇐676

The statute relating to tax sales made in June of each year under addenda to delinquent tax list, the statute stating that no bid for property sold for taxes will be accepted for less than amount of all taxes, penalties, and costs due, and the statute relating to tax sales of property deeded to the state for nonpayment of taxes, must be read and considered together, and a sale made under the latter statute must be made in accordance with the provisions of the two former statutes, and hence no bid could be received for one-half of amount due and a second bid for the other half. Pol.Code, §§ 3764, 3771a, 3897.

3. Taxation ⇐761

Under statutes relating to the sale of land for taxes and stating that no bid for land will be accepted for less than amount of all taxes, penalties, and costs due, where certain land was assessed as a whole, two deeds reciting sale in undivided one-half interests to each of two purchasers were void, and purchasers acquired no title thereunder. Pol.Code, §§ 3764, 3771a, 3897.

4. Taxation ⇐684(4)

Entries in tax collector's books that certain land was sold by him for taxes in undivided interests to two persons were "prima facie evidence" that sale was made in that manner. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1920, 1926; Pol.Code, §§ 3764, 3771a, 3897.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Prima Facie Evidence".

5. Taxation ⇐817

Where entries in tax collector's books stated that land was sold for taxes by him in undivided interests to two persons, and collector testified that he sold land to one of those persons, that testimony at best raised a conflict for the trial court to determine. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1920, 1926; Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3771a, 3897.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; W. L. Bradshaw, Judge.

Action to quiet title to realty by J. W. Galbreath and another against W. E. Dingley and others, wherein defendants filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Wagy & Hulsy, of Bakersfield, for appellants.

Clark Clement, of Lemoore, for respondents.

KLETTE, Justice pro tem.

This is an action by J. W. Galbreath and L. J. Wyseur, plaintiffs and Appellants, to quiet title to certain real property. The complaint was in the usual form of a quiet title action. The answer and cross-complaint of defendants and respondents denied the allegations of the complaint, alleged that on March 11, 1938, the tax collector of Kern county sold an undivided one-half interest in the real property to each of the appellants, and executed and delivered to them two deeds conveying to each an undivided one-half interest to the real property; that the real property was never assessed nor sold to the state, in undivided interests; that they were the owners of the property; that they tendered and offered to pay appellants all sums paid by them, with interest; and prayed that title be quieted in them.

At the trial, May 26, 1939, appellants produced and placed in evidence a tax deed from the tax collector, bearing date, March 7, 1938, bearing acknowledgment the day before the trial, and delivered and recorded on the morning of the trial, which deed purported to convey all of said real property to J. W. Galbreath, one of the appellants. It was stipulated in open court that the property in question had not been assessed, or sold to the state, in undivided interests, and that the notice advertising the property for sale described it as a whole; that the two deeds issued to appellants conveyed an undivided one-half interest to each. The tax collector testified that he made the sale on March 7, 1938, to J. W. Galbreath, for $375; that L. J. Wyseur did not bid on the property; that he made two deeds conveying a half interest to each of the appellants; that on the advice of the district attorney he executed the third deed to Galbreath conveying the entire property to him; that neither of the appellants had reconveyed to him any interest received by them under the first two deeds. The book of the tax collector, in which he kept the official record of lands sold to the state, and then resold to individuals, was produced in court, and recited that an undivided one-half interest had been sold to each of the appellants.

The trial court found in favor of respondents and rendered judgment quieting title in them, and requiring that they repay appellants the $375.00 paid out by them, with interest. From this judgment plaintiffs and appellants have appealed.

[1] The rule is firmly established that the proceedings on tax sales are in invitum, and that every essential step leading to the execution of a tax deed must be strictly followed or the deed executed pursuant thereto will be void. Numitor Gold Mining Co. v. Katzer, 83 Cal.App. 161, 256 P. 464;

Russell v. Mann, 22 Cal. 131; Holland v. Hotchkiss, 162 Cal. 366, 123 P. 258, L.R.A. 1915C, 492; Dougery v. Bettencourt, 214 Cal. 455, 6 P.2d 499.

[2] In section 3771a, Political Code, which relates to tax sales made in June of each year, under the addenda to the delinquent tax list, it is provided as follows: "On the day and hour fixed for the sale in accordance with subdivision two of section three thousand seven hundred sixty-four of this code, all property which has not been redeemed from the sale to the state or the sale thereon canceled, shall be sold by the tax collector at public auction to the highest bidder for cash in lawful money of the United States; but no bid shall be accepted at such sale for a sum less than the amount of all taxes, penalties and costs due as shown in the advertised list; * * *."

The notice of sale provided for in section 3764, Political Code, above referred to, provides that the tax collector will: "Sell or offer for sale at public auction to the highest bidder, for cash, in lawful money of the United States, the several parcels and lots of property hereinafter described upon which date five years will have elapsed from the date of the sale of said property to the state. No bid for said property will be accepted for less than the amount of all taxes, penalties and costs due on said property for the year the same was sold to the state * * *."

Section 3897, Political Code, which relates to tax sales under authorization of the board of supervisors and the state controller, of property deeded to the state for nonpayment of tax, provides that the tax collector shall "sell at private sale or public auction to the highest bidder for cash in lawful money of the United States, or by the contract of sale", etc. It is silent as to the manner of conducting the sale, as provided in section 3764 and 3771a, Political Code, above referred to. We believe, therefore, that these several sections of the Political Code must be read and considered together, and that the sale made under section 3897, Political Code, must be made in accordance with the provisions of sections 3764 and 3771a of the Political Code. Or to state it more directly: "No bid for said property will be accepted for less than the amount of all taxes, penalties and costs due on said property for the year the same was sold to the state", "as shown in the advertised list". Since no bid could be received for "less than the amount of all taxes, penalties and costs due", it naturally follows that no bid could be received for one-half of the amount, and a second bid for the other one-half thereof.

In an early California case (Roberts v. Chan Tin Pen, 23 Cal. 259) it was held that when the assessment is not of an undivided interest, but of an entire tract or parcel of land, the tax collector has no power or authority to sell an undivided interest therein for the nonpayment of tax. While a number of cases from other jurisdictions have been called to our attention, which hold that where land has been assessed as an entirety it cannot be sold in undivided interests, our attention has not been called to any California case so holding. We do find cases, however, which in passing upon sections 3764 and 3897, supra, said: "When the law speaks of the sale of 'the property,' it means all of the land, and, when it says that the land shall be sold to the 'highest bidder,' it means him who will make the highest cash bid for all the property." Fox v. Wright, 152 Cal. 59, 91 P. 1005, 1006; see, also, Merchants' Trust Co. v. Wright, 161 Cal. 149, 118 P. 517.

[3] Since the land in question was assessed as a whole, and the two deeds issued to appellants on March 11, 1938, recite the sale thereof in undivided one-half interests to each, said deeds were void, and appellants acquired no title thereunder.

[4, 5] We come now to a consideration of the deed which was issued by the tax collector on May 25, 1939, and delivered on the day of the trial to J. W. Galbreath, one of the appellants. We are at once confronted with the inconsistency in the evidence of the tax collector. His oral testimony was that he sold the property to J. W. Galbreath for $375. The record book of his office, which he was required by law to keep, showed that an undivided one-half of the property was sold to J. W. Galbreath, and an undivided one-half to L. J. Wyseur.

If he sold the property to Galbreath, then this deed might be good to convey title to him, unless there were other valid legal objections thereto. If he sold an undivided one-half to each of the parties, then the deed of the entire property to Galbreath would be void. Which shall prevail, the written records of the office, or the oral testimony of the tax collector?

Entries in public or other official books or records, made in the performance of his duty by a public officer of this state, or by another person in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by law, are prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein. Secs. 1920, 1926, Code Civ.Proc. The entries in the books of the tax collector that the property was sold by him in undivided interests to two persons, are prima facie evidence that the sale was made in that manner. Was this overcome by the testimony of the tax collector that he sold to Galbreath alone? We think not. At best it raised a conflict in the evidence, which the trial court resolved in favor of respondents. There being a conflict in the evidence, we cannot disturb the finding of the court that appellants had no interest in the property.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 302

McCRACKEN v. HUMMEL et al.

Civ. 2609.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 1, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 26, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐110

An order denying a motion for new trial is not an "appealable order". Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Appealable Order".

2. Mines and minerals ⇐73

An oil lease for an indefinite period creates in lessee an "estate in realty".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estate in Realty".

3. Mines and minerals ⇐73

Under an oil lease for an indefinite period, the relation between landowner and his lessee is similar to that between tenants in a tenancy in common.

4. Taxation ⇐338

An estate of lessee created by oil lease for indefinite period may be assessed for taxation separately from balance of the fee. Political Code, §§ 3628, 3629.

5. Taxation ⇐317(1), 414

The county assessor had duty of assessing all taxable property in county and hence was required to assess whatever interest grantor owned in oil rights in lands conveyed, and a mistake in name of person to whom oil rights were assessed would not invalidate their assessment. Political Code, §§ 3628, 3629.

6. Evidence ⇐83(1)

A public official is presumed to have performed his duty.

7. Taxation ⇐776

Where grantor in deeds conveying lands reserved the oil and gas rights and there was no separate tax assessment of such oil rights, and assessment for balance of fee showed no reduction in assessment because of separate ownership of the oil rights, the assessed valuation placed on lands by assessor included the assessed valuation of oil rights, and hence person who deraigned his title to lands through tax deeds also owned the oil rights as against contention that grantor's successors in interest owned such oil rights. Political Code, §§ 3628, 3629.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; Frank Lamberson, Judge.

Action by Courtney McCracken against Edna Daniels Hummel, etc., and others to quiet title to land. From an adverse judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants appeal.

Judgment affirmed, and attempted appeal from order dismissed.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

Hugo McKinley, of Delano (Vernon F. Gant, of Modesto, of counsel), for appellants.

Bradley & Bradley and Leroy McCormick, all of Visalia, for respondent.

MARKS, Justice.

[1] Plaintiff brought this action to quiet his title to two parcels of land in Tulare county. He had judgment and this appeal followed. Defendants have attempted to appeal from the order denying their motion for new trial which is not an appealable order. Sec. 963, Code Civ.Proc.

Plaintiff deraigns his title through tax deeds. No question is raised as to their validity, but only as to the quantity of the estate they conveyed. Defendants claim they are the owners of "the oil and gas rights" in the land in controversy. We will assume that by the expression "the oil and gas rights" is meant the oil and gas in place, if any, together with the right to enter upon the land, drill for those substances and remove them, if found.

In January, 1915, J. S. Daniels, now deceased, acquired the fee title to the half section of land here in question. On October 9, 1923, he conveyed half of the property to Edna Hummel and the other half to Ruth G. Daniels. In each deed he reserved to himself "the oil and gas rights" in the properties. The defendants are (1) the personal representative; (2) the heir at law; and (3) the personal representative of a deceased heir at law of Daniels.

The properties were respectively assessed to Edna Hummel and Ruth G. Daniels. No deductions for the oil and gas rights which had been reserved by Daniels were made in these assessments. These oil and gas rights were never separately assessed. The taxes were not paid and became delinquent. Plaintiff, through a deed to himself and mesne conveyances from others, became the owner of the tax title.

The sole question presented is whether plaintiff, through his tax title, or defendants as successors to any interest owned by J. S. Daniels, are the owners of the oil rights in the property. We are cited to no California case deciding the question. Defendants rely principally on Merchants' Trust Co. v. Hopkins, 103 Cal.App. 473, 284 P. 1072, where the assessor had assessed mineral rights as personal property, which was held to be erroneous. We get little assistance from this case.

[2, 3] It is now settled that an oil lease for an indefinite period creates in the lessee an estate in real property. Callahan v. Martin, 3 Cal.2d 110, 43 P.2d 788, 101 A.L.R. 871; Pimentel v. Hall-Baker Co., 32 Cal.App.2d 697, 90 P.2d 588; Andrews v. W. K. Co., 35 Cal.App.2d 41, 94 P.2d 605. Under such a lease the relation between the landowner and his lessee is similar to that between the tenants in a tenancy in common. Payne v. Callahan, 37 Cal.App.2d 503, 99 P.2d 1050.

[4] It is also well settled that the estate of the lessee created by such an oil lease may and perhaps should be assessed separately from the balance of the fee. Central Mfg. Dist., Inc. v. State Board of Equalization, 214 Cal. 288, 5 P.2d 424; Texas Co. v. Moynier, 129 Cal.App. 738, 19 P.2d 280; Barnsdall Oil Co. of California v. Merriam, D.C., 8 F.Supp. 185. While this rule is recognized, we are cited to no case holding an assessment void if the assessor assesses the total value of the two estates in the land to the owners of the fee as distinguished from the owner of the oil rights.

As all proceedings in connection with the various assessments and sales of the properties occurred prior to the adoption of the Revenue and Taxation Code, our citations will be to sections of the Political Code.

Subject to exceptions not important here, section 3628 of the Political Code makes it the duty of a county assessor to assess all taxable real property in the county "to the persons by whom it was owned or claimed, or in whose possession or control it was", at noon on the first Monday in March of each year. It also provides that no mistake in the name of an owner or supposed owner shall render an assessment invalid and that nothing in the section shall release an owner from his duty to file a statement of his taxable property with the assessor.

Section 3629 of the same code places on each owner of taxable property the duty of filing with the county assessor a statement disclosing all of his property which is subject to taxation.

In Webster v. Somer, 159 Cal. 459, 114 P. 575, it was held that the fact that the assessor made a mistake in the name of an owner to whom he assessed property would not invalidate an assessment. See Palomares Land Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 146 Cal. 530, 80 P. 931; Hanson v. Goldsmith, 170 Cal. 512, 150 P. 364.

In Traverso v. Tate, 82 Cal. 170, 22 P. 1082, it was said that it was proper to assess the full value of property to one of two tenants in common who was in possession.

By analogy, the cases of Spring Valley Water Co. v. County of Alameda, 24 Cal. App. 278, 141 P. 38, and Spring Valley Water Co. v. County of Alameda, 88 Cal. App. 157, 263 P. 318, are helpful. The Spring Valley Water Company had purchased certain water rights from riparian land owners and had diverted the water for use elsewhere. The assessor assessed the lands to the owners of the fees without any deduction for the riparian water rights that had been severed. He also assessed the value of the riparian rights to the Spring Valley Water Company. That company paid the taxes under protest and brought suit to recover the sums so paid. Judgments in its favor were affirmed on the ground that the riparian lands having been assessed without any deduction for the water rights that had been sold, established that the assessments included the value of the water rights and that when the taxes on the lands, levied pursuant to those assessments, had been paid, the taxing power had been exhausted; that the assessment of the same water rights to the Spring Valley Water Company constituted double taxation which was prohibited by law. In the last case (88 Cal.App. 157, 263 P. 318) assessments levied on the riparian rights for certain districts in Alameda county were held void for additional reasons.

[5-7] It was the duty of the assessor of Tulare county to assess all taxable property in that county. Thus it was his duty to assess whatever interest J. S. Daniels owned in the oil rights in the lands in question. A mistake in the name of the person to whom those oil rights were assessed would not invalidate their assessment. The presumption that a public official has performed his duty is too well established to need the citation of supporting authorities. As there was no separate assessment of those oil rights, and as the assessments of the balance of the fee showed no reduction in the assessments because of the separate ownership of those oil rights, we must conclude that the assessed valuation placed on the properties by the assessor included the assessed valuation of the oil rights. Any other conclusion would have to be based on the assumption, without supporting evidence, that the assessor failed to perform his duty and failed to assess taxable property situated within his county. This we are not permitted to do without evidence showing such a breach of duty.

As the oil rights were assessed by including their valuation in the assessed valuation placed on the properties, it follows that plaintiff became the owner of them through the tax deeds which he and his predecessors in interest received.

The judgment is affirmed. The attempted appeal from the order denying the motion for new trial is dismissed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, J.

In re FRAZER'S ESTATE.
FRAZER et al. v. TRACY.
Civ. 12956.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 4, 1941.

1. Executors and administrators ⇐400

Where legatee, to whom testator specifically willed his house provided funeral expenses were paid, agreed to sale of house because of fraudulent representations of administrator with will annexed that sale was necessary to pay expenses of estate, proceeds of sale were properly ordered distributed to legatee, rather than testator's heirs at law. Probate Code, § 300.

2. Courts ⇐202(5)

An order of probate court denying a motion for new trial is not appealable. Code Civ.Proc. § 963, subd. 3; Probate Code, §§ 1233, 1240.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thurmond Clarke, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of C. O. Frazer, deceased, wherein Alice A. Tracy filed a contest to final account of Edwin F. Frazer, as administrator with the will annexed. From a decree, entered upon settling of a final account, by which probate court distributed to contestant all property remaining in decedent's estate, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, Edwin F. Frazer and another appeal.

Order settling final account and decreeing distribution affirmed; attempted appeal from order denying motion for new dismissed.

Charles M. Johnson, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Lucile Conrey, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DESMOND, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a decree, entered upon the settling of a final account, by which the probate court distributed to respondent all property remaining in decedent's estate. It is filed by two brothers Jacob M. and Edwin F. Frazer, the only heirs at law of the decedent, C. O. Frazer, also known as Charles O. Frazer. Two days before his death, Charles had signed his will in the presence of his brothers, in the following form:

"To whoever it may concern I hereby Thursday Sep. 11 1937 I give one Alice A. Tracy my House and lot 4 Block, G. Grider and Hamilton's Vernon park in City of Los Angeles Cal as per map Recorded in Book 4 Page 79-80 For Services Rendered in my late Illness Providing my Funeral expenses are Paid

"C. O. Frazer

"Witness: J. M. Frazer

"Edwin F. Frazer"

Shortly thereafter, on September 23, 1937, Edwin offered this will for probate, was appointed administrator with the will annexed, and has acted as such ever since. In fact, he appears in that capacity upon this appeal. On May 17, 1939, said administrator petitioned the court for an order confirming sale of the real estate mentioned in the will of Charles, reciting "That the main assets of said estate consist of the real property hereinafter described, and that there is not money sufficient to pay the expenses of administration, and that money is necessary for such purposes." The order confirming the sale was made on June 5, 1939. The selling price was $700 and various expenses arising from the sale and amounting to $77.75 brought a net return to the estate of $622.25. The amount distributed to respondent was $25.70 more than that, namely, $647.95. It appears from this that prior to the sale there was on hand for distribution, or should have been, $25.70, with all bills paid. In other words, the effect of the sale was to divest respondent of any possibility of securing possession of this real estate which had been willed to her, and to incur charges in connection with the sale amounting to $77.75. The court, in passing upon a claim for extraordinary services performed in connection with the sale, disallowed fees of $50 each to the administrator and his attorney. We note also that the trial judge found, "that ever since the first day of May, 1938, the said administrator with the will annexed has represented to Alice A. Tracy that the estate needed from $100 to $300 in addition to assets of the estate other than the said real estate in order to pay the expenses of the estate and represented to this court and to Alice A. Tracy that the estate could not be closed unless the said real estate specifically devised to Alice A. Tracy was sold and a part of the proceeds thereof applied to estate expenses; that the said administrator * * * has never accounted to Alice A. Tracy for the money and property received and spent; that relying upon the said representation Alice A. Tracy agreed to the sale of the said real estate and made no objection to the sale thereof in the court herein; that the said representation was false and untrue in that the said estate had sufficient assets which when added to the rental from the said real estate was sufficient to pay all of the proper debts and expenses of the estate; that as a result of said false representations and the said needless sale unnecessary items of expense were incurred and the said sale and the services of said attorney and the administrator of the will herein in connection with the said sale were a disservice to the said estate and that the said extraordinary fees claimed therefor are not proper items of credit."

[1] This terse summary by the court presents a picture which is supported by the evidence. It disposes satisfactorily of all objections raised by the appellants, and explains why the order, instead of passing to respondent the real estate devised by the will, distributed cash to her.

As provided in section 300 of the Probate Code, title to the real estate involved in this case passed to respondent as specific devisee, and since the trial court found "that Alice A. Tracy is not personally obligated to pay the funeral expenses of decedent as a condition of her right to receive the said property, but that she is entitled to receive it or such part of the proceeds thereof as remains after the administrator with the will annexed has paid the funeral expenses from other assets of the estate, * * *" we feel under the circumstances appellants are in no way aggrieved by this decision which bars them from taking such proceeds as heirs at law of decedent to the total exclusion of testator's beneficiary.

[2] A purported appeal was taken in this cause from the order of the trial court denying appellants' motion for a new trial. There is no provision under our law for an appeal from such an order. It is not appealable under section 963, Code of Civil Procedure ("Cases in which appeal may be taken from superior court"), which provides in subdivision 3 that appeals may be taken "From such probate orders and decrees as are made appealable by the provisions of the Probate Code." Section

1240 of the latter code lists the instances in which an appeal may be taken from an order of the probate court and an order denying motion for a new trial is dismissed. tioned therein. By section 1233, Probate Code, the provisions of Part II of the Code of Civil Procedure are applicable to all probate matters relating to new trials except as otherwise provided in the Probate Code. In considering the appeal which was taken in this case from the order settling final account and decreeing distribution we have felt at liberty under section 956 of the Code of Civil Procedure to review and sustain the order by which the motion for a new trial was denied, although in our opinion the trial court would have been justified in dismissing that motion as unauthorized by section 1231 of the Probate Code. On the question of an attempted appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, we refer to Gray v. Cotton, 174 Cal. 256, 162 P. 1019, where almost twenty-five years ago the court held such an appeal unauthorized. (See, also, cases cited in McKinney's New Calif.Digest, Appeal and Error, section 74.)

The attempted appeal from the order denying a motion for new trial is not men- The order settling final account and decreeing distribution is affirmed.

We concur: YORK, P. J.; DORAN, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 298

PEOPLE v. CHATHAM.

Cr. 1745.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 1, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 15, 1941.

Hearing Denied March 31, 1941.

1. Automobiles ⇐315

The Legislature may do all it can to discourage menace resulting from one driving under influence of intoxicating liquor, and may entirely forbid use of highway to intoxicated person, and to enforce such prohibition may penalize such person, even to the extent of increasing punishment for unlawful act upon the highway committed by intoxicated driver over one not in such condition. Vehicle Code, § 501, St.1935, p. 174; Const. art. 1, §§ 11, 21.

2. Automobiles ⇐316
Constitutional law ⇐205(1), 235, 292
Statutes ⇐72

The statute making it a felony to drive vehicle while under influence of intoxicating liquor so that his act or neglect proximately causes bodily injury to another, though same act by sober operator would constitute a misdemeanor only, does not deny "equal protection of the law" or "due process of law", nor violate constitutional provisions requiring uniform operation of general laws and prohibiting grant of special privileges or immunities. Vehicle Code, § 501, St.1935, p. 174; Const.Cal. art. 1, §§ 11, 21; U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law" and "Equal Protection of the Law".

3. Automobiles ⇐316
Constitutional law ⇐205(1)
Statutes ⇐72

An automobile is a "dangerous instrumentality" and in the hands of a drunken man is likely to become a "deadly weapon", as affecting constitutionality of statutes penalizing driving while intoxicated. Vehicle Code, § 501, St.1935, p. 174; Const. art. 1, §§ 11, 21.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Dangerous Instrumentality" and "Deadly Weapon".

4. Criminal law ⇐829(1)

An instruction that each side was entitled to independent judgment of every juror, and that no juror is required to surrender his honest convictions for sole purpose of agreeing upon a verdict, sufficiently covered principles contained in refused instructions upon juror's right to adhere to honest convictions and to refuse to surrender conviction for mere purpose of agreeing upon conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; W. D. L. Held, Judge.

Robert Chatham was convicted of driving a vehicle while under influence of intoxicating liquor and causing bodily harm to another, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Preston & Gibson, of Ukiah, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Q. Brown, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PULLEN, Presiding Justice.

Appellant was convicted of a violation of section 501 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 174 (driving a vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor and causing bodily harm to another), and now prosecutes this appeal.

The facts are not in dispute. As appellant was driving his automobile around a curve in the highway he crossed the center of the highway, marked by a white line, over on to the left side thereof and struck a motorcycle rider coming in the opposite direction, inflicting severe injury. It is not disputed upon this appeal that appellant was intoxicated.

The principal point relied upon for reversal is that section 501 of the Vehicle Code is unconstitutional, being violative of article I, section 11 of the state Constitution, which requires all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation, and also of section 21 of the same article, which prohibits any citizen or class of citizens being granted privileges or immunities not accorded all citizens, and of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, Amend. 14, granting to everyone the equal protection of and due process of the law.

Section 501 of the Vehicle Code reads in part as follows:

"Any person who, while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, drives a vehicle and when so driving does any act forbidden by law or neglects any duty imposed by law in the driving of such vehicle, which act or neglect proximately causes bodily injury to any person, is guilty of a felony * *."

It seems to be the contention of appellant that to punish, as a felon, an intoxicated driver of an automobile for doing an act forbidden by law, whereby bodily injury is caused to another, while for the same act by a sober operator the penalty would have been a misdemeanor only, is violative of the several constitutional inhibitions above referred to. As an illustration appellant compares two men, one intoxicated, one sober, committing exactly the same act, each causing identical injury to another. What reasonable ground is there, he asks, to find one guilty of a misdemeanor, and the other guilty of a felony? He also contends that the intoxication of the driver need not have anything to do with the injury in order to establish the offense, and therefore contends the distinction which the legislature has endeavored to make results from no natural or constitutional distinction, but is arbitrary and unreasonable.

As pointed out in the dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Houser in People v. Smith, 14 Cal.App.2d 548, 58 P.2d 684, before section 501 of Vehicle Code may furnish the basis for a valid judgment of conviction it must appear in evidence that the defendant was (1) driving an automobile (2) while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, (3) and while in that condition he committed some act forbidden by law, and (4) that such act or neglect proximately caused bodily injury to some one.

In People v. Levens, 28 Cal.App.2d 455, 82 P.2d 698, it is again indicated that to sustain a conviction under section 501 of the Vehicle Code, a defendant, while driving an automobile and being under the influence of intoxicating liquor, must have committed some forbidden act, which proximately caused bodily injury to another. This offense is distinct from that of driving while intoxicated (sec. 502, Vehicle Code) and is a more serious offense in that so driving in an intoxicated condition proximately caused bodily injury to another.

[1] It is a well-recognized fact that one under the influence of intoxicating liquor is dangerous to others upon the highways, and the legislature is within its rights in doing all it can to discourage such a menace. It may entirely forbid, to one in an intoxicated condition, the use of the highway, and to enforce such prohibition may penalize one, even to the extent of increasing the punishment for an unlawful act upon the highway committed by an intoxicated driver over one not in such a condition.

[2] There is no reason why the state may not add a further penalty where an intoxicated driver, insisting upon driving an automobile in the face of statutes prohibiting such conduct, commits an unlawful act, or neglects to perform some duty imposed by law, and as a result some innocent traveler is injured by such wilful violation of the law. We have a law imposing a greater punishment upon an ex-convict for possessing a concealed weapon than is imposed upon another; drug addicts are classified as such and greater punishment imposed upon them in certain instances. The theory of the legislature in imposing additional penalties upon intoxicated persons or drug addicts might well be that such condition sets in motion other causes concurring in the injury to the other person.

Appellant argues it makes no difference to the person injured whether he was hurt by a sober man or an intoxicated man, and contends that the receiving of bodily injuries is the gist of the offense. In this, however, appellant is in error—it is not the receiving of the injury that concerns the state, but the causing of such injuries which the state seeks to minimize.

As said in People v. Ekstromer, 71 Cal. App. 239, 235 P. 69, 71, in discussing section 112 of the California Vehicle Act, the predecessor of the present section 502 of the Vehicle Code: "Section 112 of the California Vehicle Act was designed to protect the public from the menace of automobiles operated upon the public highway with inadequate or no efficient control, in a world of traffic difficult of management under normal conditions, and should be liberally construed to effect its purpose. We think that such legislation is well in line with, and motivated by, the same impulses that inspired the enactment of statutes prohibiting railroad employees from drinking intoxicants while on duty; * * *".

[3] An automobile is a dangerous instrumentality, and in the hands of a drunken man is likely to become a deadly weapon.

[4] Appellant also claims the court should have given two proffered instructions, upon the right of a juror to adhere to his honest convictions, and to refuse to surrender such conviction for the mere purpose of agreeing upon a conviction. The court gave the following instruction which fully covered the principles contained in the refused instructions:

"I charge you, members of the jury, that it is your duty to reason together and to try honestly and conscientiously to agree upon a verdict. Each side is entitled to the independent judgment of every juror. No juror is required by law to surrender his or her honest convictions for the sole purpose of agreeing upon a verdict. It is the duty of every juror to carefully consider all the evidence in the case and to attempt to arrive at a true and just verdict based upon the evidence and the instructions of the court, and in arriving at your verdict you and each of you have the right to stand by your own independent judgment as to the weight, sufficiency, and effect of the evidence in the case."

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: THOMPSON, J.; TUTTLE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 270

MAURICE v. STATE.

Civ. No. 6512.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 28, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 26, 1941.

1. Master and servant ⇐107(8)

A violation of the Federal Safety Appliance Act constitutes "negligence per se" under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1 et seq., 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; Federal Safety Appliance Act § 1 et seq., 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Negligence Per Se".

2. Commerce ⇐27(2)

State, operating "belt railroad" which received and transported cars and freight offered it by interstate rail carriers, steamship companies, and industrial plants along water front of San Francisco Harbor, with wharf and track connections and direct service to industrial plants, was engaged in "interstate commerce" by rail within Federal Safety Appliance Act, though state maintained no freight stations, issued no bills of lading, and was engaged only in moving cars at flat rate. Federal Safety Appliance Act § 1 et seq., 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; U.S.C.A. Const. art. 1, § 8.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Interstate Commerce".

3. Master and servant ⇐107(8)

Federal Safety Appliance Act was applicable to state operating railroad as common carrier in interstate commerce, notwithstanding failure of statute specifically to mention state-owned railroad. Federal Safety Appliance Act § 1 et seq., 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.

4. Statutes ⇐185, 233

Intention of Congress to make regulatory act applicable to states, if fairly inferred from act, should not be disregarded because not explicitly stated, notwithstanding rule of construction that sovereign is presumptively not intended to be bound by its own statutes unless named therein.

5. States ⇐191(1)

State by engaging in interstate commerce by rail thereby waived any right it may have had as a sovereign state to freedom from suit with respect thereto without its consent, and was liable in civil action for injury to employee resulting from violation of Safety Appliance Act, where injured employee had complied with statute requiring presentment of claim to the State Board of Control. Pol. Code, § 688; Federal Employers' Liability Act § 1 et seq. and § 51, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq. and § 51; Federal Safety Appliance Act § 1 et seq., and § 9, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq., and § 9; U.S.C.A.Const. art. 1, § 8.

6. Master and servant ⇐111(1)

In determining whether the movement of freight cars constitutes a "train movement" rather than a "switching operation" within provisions of Safety Appliance Act requiring train to be equipped with a certain percentage of power brakes under engineer's control, the decision turns upon the particular facts of the case and the controlling test of statute's application lies in the essential nature of the work being done. Federal Safety Appliance Act § 1 et seq., and § 9, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq., and § 9.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Train Movement".

7. Appeal and error ⇐1012(1)

The District Court of Appeal may not set aside a finding of trial court which is supported by substantial evidence, even though the court believes there is more weight to the evidence adduced by opposing party.

8. Master and servant ⇐111(1)

Within provisions of Safety Appliance Act requiring train to be equipped with certain percentage of power brakes under engineer's control, a moving locomotive with cars attached is a "train" except when its operations are those of switching, classifying, and assembling cars within railroad yards for the purpose of making up train. Federal Safety Appliance Act § 1 et seq., and § 9, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq. and § 9.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Train".

9. Master and servant ⇐111(1)

Application of Safety Appliance Act requiring trains to be equipped with certain percentage of power brakes under engineer's control, is not limited to operations on main line tracks but applies to all trains used on any railroad engaged in interstate commerce. Federal Safety Appliance Act § 1 et seq., and § 9, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq., and § 9.

10. Master and servant ⇐278(6)

In action by employee of terminal railroad for injuries sustained while engaged in moving a string of 45 cars drawn by a locomotive across several city streets from one switching yard of terminal railroad to another to be delivered to transcontinental railroad line, evidence was sufficient to sustain trial court's finding that such movement of cars was a regular "train movement", rather than a switching operation, within meaning of the Safety Appliance Act requiring train to be equipped with certain percentage of power brakes under engineer's control. Federal Safety Appliance Act § 1 et seq., and § 9, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq., and § 9.

11. Master and servant ⇐280

In action by railroad employee for injuries resulting from operation of train in violation of Safety Appliance Act requiring certain percentage of cars to be equipped with power brakes under engineer's control, evidence, that when employee complained of defective condition of air brakes yardmaster directed him to move train regardless of defective condition, sustained trial court's finding that employee did not "assume the risk" of injury. Federal Safety Appliance Act § 1 et seq. and § 9, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq. and § 9.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Assumption of Risk".

12. Master and servant ⇐222(1)

The rule of "assumption of risk" has no application where employee is acting under the orders of his employer.

13. Master and servant ⇐228(1)

In action against railroad company for injuries sustained by employee due to operation of train with defective brakes in violation of Safety Appliance Act, under the express provisions of Federal Employers' Liability Act, contributory negligence of employee, if any, would not defeat recovery. Federal Employers' Liability Act § 3, 45 U.S.C.A. § 53, and Federal Safety Appliance Act § 9, 45 U.S.C.A. § 9.

14. Courts ⇐489(9½)

Under express provisions of Federal Employers' Liability Act, state court had jurisdiction of action against state for injuries sustained by employee of "belt railroad" owned and operated by state, and which was engaged in interstate commerce by rail. Federal Employers' Liability Act §§ 6, 51, 45 U.S.C.A. §§ 51, 56.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by Thomas W. Maurice against the State of California for personal injuries allegedly sustained by plaintiff while in the employ of defendant. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Clifton Hildebrand and Charles C. McLeod, both of Oakland, Goodman & Brownstone, of San Francisco, and Sheridan Downey, Jr., of Sacramento, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Lucas E. Kilkenny, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

TUTTLE, Justice.

This action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries received by respondent while in the employ of defendant. A trial was had before the court. Findings were made in favor of respondent, and judgment in the sum of $15,525 was entered. The appeal is from the judgment.

The complaint sets forth two causes of action. The first is based upon ordinary negligence, while the second is based upon negligence arising out of a failure of appellant to comply with the provisions of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. chapter 2, § 51 et seq., Federal Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A., chapter 1, § 1 et seq., and orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission promulgated thereunder. The facts alleged are substantially the same as those appearing in the summary which is given later.

The act first above mentioned is hereafter referred to as the "F.E.L.A.", while the second is referred to as the "F.S.A.A." Under the former, section 51, an employee is entitled to recover from the railroad "for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment."

[1] The second act, section 9, provides that "whenever, as provided in this chapter, any train is operated with power or train brakes not less than 50 per centum of the cars in such train shall have their brakes used and operated by the engineer of the locomotive drawing such train * * *." The Interstate Commerce Commission is given power to increase the minimum percentage of cars to be operated by such brakes. This was done by an order raising the percentage to 85 per centum. A violation of the F.S.A.A. is negligence under the provisions of F.E.L.A. San Antonio & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Wagner, 241 U.S. 476, 36 S.Ct. 626, 60 L.Ed. 1110, affirming, Tex.Civ.App., 166 S.W. 24. Such violation is negligence per se. See numerous authorities under note 331, page 213, 45 U.S.C.A. It is an undisputed fact here that less than 85 per centum of the cars in question were so equipped and operated as to comply with the terms of the F.S.A.A. We thus start with the premise that a cause of action for damages under the second count was made out against appellant, assuming that the court had jurisdiction and that the operation was a train movement.

The facts may be summarized as follows:

The State Belt Railroad is owned and operated by the state of California. It parallels the waterfront of San Francisco harbor and extends onto some forty-five state-owned wharves. It serves directly about 175 industrial plants, has track connection with one interstate railroad, and, by wharf connections with freight car ferries, links that and three other interstate rail carriers with freight yards in San Francisco leased to them by the state. It receives and transports from the one to the other, by its own engines, all freight cars, loaded and empty, and the freight they contain, offered to it by railroads, steamship companies and industrial plants. The larger part of this traffic has its origin or destination in states other than California. For the transportation service it makes a flat charge per car. It issues no bills of lading and is not a party to through rates. It moves the cars on instructions contained in "switch lists" made out by the delivering or receiving carrier, which pays the charge and absorbs it in its rate. The charge on cars not delivered to or received from another carrier is paid by the industry concerned. The Belt Railroad is thus a terminal railroad for the industries and carriers with which it connects, and it serves as a link in the through transportation of interstate freight shipped to or from points in San Francisco over the connecting carriers. Its service is of a public character, for hire. Excepting for rare occasions when the Southern Pacific Railroad enters upon the Belt Line tracks for the purpose of spotting cars at the southern extremity of the Belt Line tracks, no other railroad ever brings its cars upon the tracks of the Belt Line Railroad; that throughout the extent of the Belt Line tracks the said tracks are crossed at many points by public highways carrying heavy vehicular traffic; that the said tracks are likewise crossed by heavy pedestrian traffic at many points on the said Belt Line system. North of the Ferry building, at the foot of Market street, and south of the Ferry building are numbers of switching tracks upon and over which the Belt Railroad switches and delivers cars that it receives from other railroads. For approximately 2,000 feet along the frontage of the Ferry building, the Belt Railroad consists of a single track, running in front of, and closely paralleling the Ferry building. Operations north of the Ferry building are under the control of a yardmaster, and all movements are made under his orders. Operations south of the Ferry building are under the control of an assistant yardmaster, and he directs all operations south of the Ferry building. Nominally his superior is the yardmaster; but as an operating practice, the assistant yardmaster controls the work done south of the Ferry building. Switching engines located south of the Ferry building handle the switching and make the movements required south of the Ferry building. Switching engines north of the Ferry building do the switching needed north of the Ferry building, and make the required movements at that point. The Belt Line connection with the Southern Pacific is on the south side near Townsend street. At or about 7:25 on every evening, cars which were ready for delivery to the Southern Pacific and which had been switched to the north of the Ferry building, were assembled north of the Ferry building. After these cars had been so assembled, and at or about 7:30, it was the uniform practice for a switch engine to take these cars across and in front of the Ferry building and down to the Southern Pacific transfer tracks at and around Townsend street, south of the Ferry building. When the cars are thus assembled they are known in railroad parlance as a "drag".

The accident happened on October 16, 1937. During the day various cars had been picked up by different engines from the various industries and piers north of the Ferry building and connected to the Belt Railroad by switch tracks; these cars had been assembled in three separate cuts of cars, just north of the Ferry building; and by a series of movements, these cars were finally assembled into one cut, the train consisting of forty-five cars. After these cars had been assembled it was the duty of the crew, of which respondent was a member, to take these cars across town and deliver them to the Southern Pacific transfer tracks. This particular drag, which ran every night, was known as the "Southern Pacific drag", or "the cross town drag". While the Southern Pacific drag was being made up, it was found that the air connection on the twenty-eighth car from the engine of the drag was broken, and that it was impossible, therefore, to connect up the air brakes on the rear seventeen cars, so that they could be controlled by the engineer from the engine. This fact was known to the members of the crew, and the car inspector, whose duty it was to inspect these cars. The testimony shows without dispute that in spite of the fact that the rear seventeen cars could not be connected up, the yardmaster and the foreman, nevertheless, ordered the drag to proceed as it was made up. The air was connected in the first twenty-eight cars behind the engine, but was not connected in the rear seventeen cars. It appears without dispute that it was the uniform custom and practice of the Belt Line to connect the air brakes on all cross-town drags and that the only reason the air brakes were not connected on this drag was because of the defect in the twenty-eighth car. After the drag started up, respondent, who had been standing by the twenty-seventh car, walked to the rear of the drag, and, as was required by his duties, started to climb upon the rear ladder of the last car. As the locomotive proceeded in front of the Ferry building, at a speed taken by the trial court in its opinion at five miles per hour, and estimated by the witnesses at from two to ten miles per hour, a woman suddenly stepped out on the track with her back to the locomotive. The engine foreman, who was riding on the step of the locomotive, gave an emergency stop signal, the engineer applied the air brakes, and the engine came to an immediate stop. When the engine stopped, the application of the air brakes by the engineer set the brakes on the first twenty-eight cars. By reason of the fact that the brakes on the last seventeen cars were not operated by the engineer, as a result of the stopping, a very violent slack action took place. As the slack ran in, one of respondent's hands was torn loose from the ladder on the side of the rear car, and when it rebounded and ran out, the grip of his other hand was torn loose, and he was thrown to the ground between the forty-fourth and forty-fifth cars. The slack action dislocated his shoulder and he fell head first between the cars, falling a distance of approximately eight feet. As a result of the fall, his right knee cap was completely shattered.

It is contended by appellant that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint, for the reason that there is no general liability on the part of the State for negligence of its officers and employees, and for the further reason that the State cannot be sued without its express consent. We are of the opinion that under the acts mentioned above, and the facts alleged, the State is liable, upon the theory that, by engaging in interstate commerce by rail, it has subjected itself to the commerce power of the federal government.

Respondent alleged and proved full compliance with the first paragraph of section 688 of the Political Code, which reads as follows: "Any person who has, or shall hereafter have, a claim on express contract or for negligence against the State must present the claim to the State Board of Control in accordance with the provisions of section 667 of this code. Should the claim not be allowed by the State Board of Control, the person having the claim is hereby authorized, subject to the conditions contained in this section, to bring suit against the State on such claim and to prosecute such suit to final judgment."

[2-4] In the case of United States v. California, 297 U.S. 175, 56 S.Ct. 421, 423, 80 L.Ed. 567, an action arising out of the collection of a penalty for failure upon the part of the state to comply with F. S. A. A. in the operation of the railroad here involved, it was definitely held that California, by engaging in interstate commerce by rail, subjected itself to the commerce power, Const.U.S., art. I, sec. 8, and was liable for a violation of the act last mentioned. The opinion states the question before the court, and disposes of it as follows:

"The state urges that it is not subject to the Federal Safety Appliance Act. It is not denied that the omission charged would be a violation if by a privately-owned rail carrier in interstate commerce. But it is said that as the state is operating the railroad without profit, for the purpose of facilitating the commerce of the port, and is using the net proceeds of operation for harbor improvement, see Sherman v. United States, [282 U.S. 25, 51 S. Ct. 41, 75 L.Ed. 143], supra, Denning v. State, 123 Cal. 316, 55 P. 1000, it is engaged in performing a public function in its sovereign capacity and for that reason cannot constitutionally be subjected to the provisions of the federal act. * * * The danger to be apprehended is as great and commerce may be equally impeded whether the defective appliance is used on a railroad which is state-owned or privately-owned. No convincing reason is advanced why interstate commerce and persons and property concerned in it should not receive the protection of the act whenever a state, as well as a privately-owned carrier, brings itself within the sweep of the statute, or why its all-embracing language should not be deemed to afford that protection. * * * Respondent invokes the canon of construction that a sovereign is presumptively not intended to be bound by its own statute unless named in it. * * * We can perceive no reason for extending it so as to exempt a business carried on by a state from the otherwise applicable provisions of an Act of Congress, all-embracing in scope and national in its purpose, which is as capable of being obstructed by state as by individual action. Language and objectives so plain are not to be thwarted by resort to a rule of construction whose purpose is but to resolve doubts, and whose application in the circumstances would be highly artificial."

Referring to the plenary power of the national government to regulate interstate commerce, the court says: "The state can no more deny the power if its exercise has been authorized by Congress than can an individual."

[5] It would be a strange situation, indeed, if the state could be held subject to the F. S. A. A. and liable for a violation thereof, and yet could not be sued without its express consent. The state, by engaging in interstate commerce, and thereby subjecting itself to the act, must be held to have waived any right it may have had arising out of the general rule that a sovereign state may not be sued without its consent. The last-mentioned case so holds, and is a complete answer to the contention. The demurrer was properly overruled.

[6, 7] The Safety Appliance Act provides that any "train" must be provided with a certain percentage of power brakes operated by the engineer of the locomotive. The word "train" is not defined in the statute. Appellant contends that it was not operating a train at the time of the accident, but was merely engaged in a switching operation. The trial court found that the movement of the cars was a regular train movement, and not a switching operation. It is contended by appellant that the evidence is insufficient to sustain that finding. There are numerous decisions upon this question in the federal courts. As stated in Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. United States, 8 Cir., 14 F.2d 747, 748, "the decisions turn upon the particular facts of each case." And in United States v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. Co., 237 U.S. 410, 35 S.Ct. 634, 636, 59 L.Ed. 1023, it is said: "The controlling test of the statute's application lies in the essential nature of the work done." The foregoing general rule should be borne in mind in disposing of this issue. We are also governed by the general rule that if there is any substantial evidence to support a finding of the trial court, we are not at liberty to set it aside, even though we may believe that there is more weight to the evidence adduced by the losing party.

Perhaps the most succinct definition of a train within the purview of the F. S. A. A. is found in United States v. Northern Pacific Co., 254 U.S. 251, 41 S.Ct. 101, 102, 65 L.Ed. 249. There, two strings of forty and forty-eight cars respectively were moved over a connecting switch track, for a distance of approximately four miles. The movement for approximately two, out of the four, miles was over a single connecting track; and the remainder of the movement was over switch tracks. The speed of the movement was from three to eight miles per hour. No cars were taken out or set out on the trip and the movement was not a main line movement. The company contended that this was a mere switching movement for the reason that no movement over a main line track was included. The movement was not made under time table or train orders, but was made under the yardmaster's orders and no block signals were used. In holding that the movement was a train movement, subject to the provisions of the act, the Supreme Court said:

[8] "The company contended that the provision of the Safety Appliance Act did not control the operation, because this terminal road was not part of a main line; that neither passenger nor freight trains, through or local, moved on it; * * * It is admitted that this railroad is engaged in interstate commerce; and the cases cited show that transfer trains, like those here involved, are 'trains' within the meaning of the act. A moving locomotive with cars attached is without the provision of the act only when it is not a train; as where the operation is that of switching, classifying and assembling cars within railroad yards for the purpose of making up trains."

[9] We are of the opinion that the evidence shows that this action does not come within the exception mentioned. The operation was not that of "switching, classifying and assembling cars within railroad yards for the purpose of making up trains." These acts had all been performed. Forty-five cars, with locomotive attached, were on their way to be delivered to the Southern Pacific yards at the south end of the Belt Line Railroad, over a single tract connecting the two switching areas of said line. There is nothing in F. S. A. A. which limits its application to operations on main line tracts. (So held in case last cited.) In the case of Louisville & J. Bridge Co. v. United States, 249 U.S. 534, 39 S.Ct. 355, 356, 63 L.Ed. 757, an engine and twenty-six cars moved from the terminal of the Chicago & Ohio to the Ill. Central Company under the control of the defendant company, a terminal railroad. The movement was made over a zigzag course for a distance of 3,700 feet and a portion of the movement was over the main line tracks of the railroad companies. In holding that the movement was a train movement and not a mere switching movement, the court said:

"The work done with the cars, as described, was not a sorting, or selecting, or classifying of them, involving coupling and uncoupling and the movement of one or a few at a time for short distances, but was a transfer of the 26 cars as a unit from one terminal into that of another company for delivery, without uncoupling or switching out a single car, and it cannot therefore with propriety be called a switching movement."

In Great Northern R. R. Co. v. United States, 8 Cir., 288 F. 190, 191, it is said: "The mere fact that the railroad company designates a large stretch or tract as yard does not make every operation therein a switching operation."

[10] We have examined the cases relied upon by appellant. Several of them are discussed above. It is true that the factual structure in each of the cases we have mentioned is not identical with the one here, and a somewhat plausible attempt can be made to distinguish them upon such differences. We believe, however, that the fundamental principles to be adduced from such authorities lead to the conclusion that the evidence is sufficient to support the finding that the operation here was not a switching one, but a train movement within the meaning of the F. S. A. A. The finding, therefore, had sufficient evidentiary support.

[11, 12] It is contended by appellant that respondent assumed the risk of the injury. The trial court found otherwise, and we believe that there is sufficient evidence to support such finding. Respondent testified that when he complained to the yardmaster that the defective car was in the train, the latter told him to take the cars across just as they were. The rule of assumption of risk has no application when the employee is acting under the orders of his employer. Paulsen v. McDuffie, 4 Cal.2d 111-117, 47 P.2d 709.

[13] Appellant pleaded contributory negligence as a defense to the action. While such defense might be set up with reference to the first cause of action, it is expressly provided in the F. E. L. A., 45 U.S.C.A. § 53, that it is not a defense "where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee."

[14] Finally, it is contended that the state court had no jurisdiction. F. E. L. A. expressly provides: "The jurisdiction of the courts of the United States under this chapter shall be concurrent with that of the courts of the several States, and no case arising under this chapter and brought in any State court of competent jurisdiction shall be removed to any court of the United States." 45 U.S.C.A., § 56.

The contention is without merit.

We do not deem it necessary to pass upon the question as to whether the judgment can be supported by findings based upon the first cause of action.

The record is free from error, and the findings have ample support. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: PULLEN, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 252

KELLIHER v. RAY.

Civ. 6426.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Feb. 27, 1941.

1. Witnesses ⇐216, 256

In motorist's action for injuries sustained in automobile collision at intersection, wherein a state highway patrol officer, refreshing his memory from memoranda, testified concerning length of skidmarks left on pavement by motorist's automobile, trial court erred in refusing to require officer to produce memoranda for inspection by motorist's attorney on the ground that they were confidential reports of motor vehicle department.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1047(5)

In motorist's action for injuries sustained in collision at intersection with truck driven by defendant, wherein truck driver admitted negligence, but alleged motorist was contributorily negligent in that he was driving at an excessive rate of speed, court's error in refusing to permit motorist's attorney to examine memoranda from which highway patrolman, called as a witness by truck driver, testified as to length of skidmarks made by motorist's automobile was reversible error where there was sharp conflict as to length of skidmarks which was a fact relied upon to establish speed as bearing on question of motorist's contributory negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; M. G. Woodward, Judge.

Action by A. E. Kelliher against Paul Ray for injuries sustained in an automobile collision. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed.

Lafayette J. Smallpage and Forrest E. Macomber, both of Stockton, for appellant.

Honey & Mayall and Len H. Honey, all of Stockton, for respondent.

PULLEN, Presiding Justice.

This litigation grew out of a collision which occurred about 11 o'clock on the night of May 11, 1939, between a Packard coupe, being driven by plaintiff, in an easterly direction, on the Farmington road, and a Chevrolet truck, operated by defendant, in a southerly direction, on the Jack Tone road at the intersection of these two thoroughfares in San Joaquin county.

The Farmington road is a through highway running east and west and is protected on both sides from traffic entering from the Jack Tone road, which crosses the Farmington road at right angles. In the collision between the two vehicles, plaintiff was injured and brought this action against defendant. Defendant admits negligence in that he failed to stop at the intersection as required by the established stop signs, but alleges plaintiff was contributorily negligent in that he failed to properly observe the approach of cross traffic and was, immediately prior to the collision, traveling at an excessive speed.

The evidence of speed is based largely upon the length and characteristics of skid marks on the pavement and the damage to the two vehicles.

A witness, called by plaintiff testified as to measurements taken by him of the skid marks a few hours after the accident. He also took photographs of the surroundings at the intersection, and he testified, which testimony seems to be supported by his photographs, that the skid marks were 44 feet to a point where a second skid mark appeared, which extended 31 feet 5 inches to the point of impact, or a total of 75 feet 5 inches.

A state highway patrol officer was called by the defendant, who testified he paced off the length of the skid marks and found them approximately 38 paces or 114 feet in length. He stated he made his measurements and observations shortly after the accident and reduced them to writing.

In testifying he referred to his notes, stating he based his testimony upon such notes, and that without them he could not recall what measurements he had taken as he had investigated many accidents between the date of that accident and his appearance in court.

When counsel for plaintiff asked permission to examine the notes and demanded that they be placed in evidence the witness refused to produce them upon the ground they were confidential reports of the motor vehicle department. The contention of the witness was upheld by the trial court, and it is because of the refusal of the court to direct the witness to produce these notes that reversible error is here claimed.

In Inouye v. McCall, 35 Cal.App.2d 634, 96 P.2d 386, this point was directly involved, and it was there held to be error to refuse to permit such memoranda to be examined by opposing counsel.

[1, 2] In that case the refusal to produce the notes was held to be error but not prejudicial, for the entire evidence there given by the officer was cumulative and could have been stricken out and the result would have been the same. We cannot find that to be true here. In the instant case there was a clear conflict as to the length of the skid marks, which was a fact relied upon to establish speed, and was therefore an important issue in the case.

Out of fairness to the very able trial judge who presided, it should be noted this case was tried before the opinion in the case of Inouye v. McCall, supra, was written.

The judgment must be reversed. It is so ordered.

We concur: TUTTLE, J.; THOMPSON, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 254

NAUGHTON v. RETIREMENT BOARD OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

Civ. 11118.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 28, 1941.

Rehearing Denied March 29, 1941.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐187

Under San Francisco charter provisions relating to police pensions, where police officer dies as result of pre-existing disease of heart and it is established that disease has been aggravated and death accelerated by exertion in performing duties of office, widow is entitled to pension.

2. Mandamus ⇐105

Mandamus was available where it was alleged and shown that retirement board acted arbitrarily and clearly in abuse of discretion in denying application of widow of police officer for pension.

3. Mandamus ⇐105

Where evidence showed without contradiction that death of police officer from progressive type of heart disease was accelerated by amount of walking officer was required to do on foot patrol duty after being transferred from an office position, court, in mandamus proceeding, was justified in finding that retirement board of city in denying application to widow for pension acted arbitrarily and abused discretion.

4. Municipal corporations ⇐187

In proceeding by police officer's widow for pension, negative finding of retirement board denying pension that heart failure was precipitated by some strain other than that occasioned by walking beat must be based on something more than mere conjecture.

5. Evidence ⇐574

That death certificate covering death of police officer contained recital "Death due to natural causes" was not sufficient to sustain retirement board's decision denying officer's widow a pension where physician who made entry testified that the walking decedent was required to do in performing foot patrol duties hastened his death.

6. Mandamus ⇐168(4)

In mandamus proceeding to require retirement board to award police officer's widow a pension on ground officer's death from heart disease was accelerated by walking required by foot patrol duty, evidence did not justify denial of relief on ground that death resulted from intoxication.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Elmer E. Robinson, Judge.

Petition by Hattie Naughton against Retirement Board of San Francisco and others for writ of mandate directing defendant named to award petitioner a pension as the wife of a retired officer. The petition was granted, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Reynald J. Bianchi, Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco, for appellants.

James C. Purcell and William E. Ferriter, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

Thomas Naughton, a member of the San Francisco Police Department for twenty-nine years, died June 7, 1937. At the time of his death he held the rank of sergeant. He was survived by his wife, Hattie Naughton, to whom he had been married nearly thirty years. She filed application with the retirement board of San Francisco, city employees' retirement system, for a pension; and after hearing the evidence the board denied her application. Thereafter she petitioned the superior court for and was granted a peremptory writ of mandate directing the board to award the pension. From the judgment entered therein the board has appealed.

[1] Subdivision (c) of section 166 of the present city charter relating to police pensions is a re-enactment of section 4, chapter X, article VIII of the preceding charter, and in construing the latter it has been held in effect that where an officer dies as a result of a pre-existing disease of the heart and it is established that the disease has been aggravated and death accelerated or precipitated by exertion in performing the duties of his office, the case falls within the scope of said charter provision, and his widow is entitled to the benefits granted thereby. Buckley v. Roche, 214 Cal. 241, 4 P.2d 929.

Naughton died from a progressive type of heart disease known as coronary sclerosis and myocardial infarcation, with which he had been afflicted for several years; and because of his impaired state of health and at his request he had been for more than two and a half years prior to May 24, 1937, assigned to inside duties at district station headquarters. On the date mentioned, however, which it will be noted was two weeks prior to his death, as a result of police reorganization he was transferred to another station and assigned to patrol duty, most of which he was required to do on foot; and he continued to fill that assignment up to the time of his death. After reporting off duty at the station at midnight on June 6, he visited the home of an old friend, where he died; and Mrs. Naughton's application for pension was based upon the claim that the disease from which her husband died was aggravated and that his death was accelerated by over-exertion in attempting to perform the foot patrol duties to which he had been assigned two weeks prior to his death.

[2] The evidence before the board consisted entirely of that produced by Mrs. Naughton, no testimony having been introduced in opposition thereto by the board; and in her petition for the writ she alleged that such evidence was free from conflict. In its answer to the petition the board expressly admitted the truth of that allegation; and at the opening of the trial counsel for the board stated to the court that the question to be determined was whether the denial of the pension by the board constituted an abuse of discretion. Therefore the proceeding was heard and determined on a transcript of the evidence taken before the board; and the court found therefrom that in denying the application for the pension the board acted arbitrarily and clearly in abuse of its discretion. In a supplemental brief the board has raised the point that mandamus is not the proper remedy, and that certiorari only will lie. The following cases are authority for holding, however, that the remedy of mandamus is available where it is alleged and shown that the local board has acted arbitrarily and clearly in abuse of its discretion: Buckley v. Roche, supra; Peters v. Sacramento City E. R. System, 27 Cal.App.2d 10, 80 P.2d 179; McColgan v. Police Commissioners, 130 Cal.App. 66, 19 P.2d 815; Mogan v. Board of Police Commissioners, 100 Cal.App. 270, 279 P. 1080. Appellants cite the case of Nider v. City Commission, 36 Cal.App.2d 14, 97 P.2d 293; however, no reference whatever is made therein to the cases above cited, and it would seem, therefore, that in deciding that particular case the court did not intend to establish any doctrine contrary to that adhered to in the preceding cases.

[3, 4] In the present case the principal facts established before the board, as they are disclosed by the transcript, may be stated as follows: In 1934, after completing an assignment to "strike" duty on the waterfront, Naughton complained of illness. He was short of breath, complained of pains in the chest, and he was subject to violent coughing spells during which he would choke and turn blue in the face. In October, 1934, at his request and on account of his condition of health he was assigned to desk work at the Western Addition station, and later at the Stanyan street station. While filling those assignments his impaired physical condition was clearly noticeable to some of his fellow officers. On May 24, 1937, a police reorganization took place, and he was transferred from inside work to patrol duty, with headquarters at the Golden Gate Park station at Thirty-seventh avenue and Fulton street. The district covered a large area, with many steep hills. With the exception of a small part of the Sunset district, it embraced those portions of the city from the Golden Gate on the north to the south boundary line of the city, lying west from Twenty-ninth avenue to the ocean, including all of Golden Gate Park, the Legion of Honor, the Veterans' Hospital, Fleishhacker Pool and Playground, and all of the beach. As sergeant of the district he was required, during an eight-hour watch, to visit officers patrolling the district, and to ring in from police boxes located in various parts of the district. Eight of the fourteen days he was attached to the Golden Gate Park station he was assigned to the radio car or acted as lieutenant inside the station, but the other six days he served on foot patrol. That is to say, on May 25, 27 and June 6 he served on foot patrol from 4 o'clock in the afternoon until midnight, and on May 31, June 1 and 2 from midnight to 8 a. m. On the 4 o'clock to midnight watches he reported at the station for duty at 4 o'clock, then rang in from six different boxes in the district, located on both sides of and in the park. He rang in from the first box at 5:30, and every hour thereafter from a different box, the last being at 10:30, and at 12 he reported back to the station and went off duty. On the midnight to 8 a. m. watches he followed the same procedure, reporting on duty at the station at 12, and off duty at 8, and ringing in from various boxes hourly from 1:30 to 6:30, inclusive. It was demonstrated by the location of these various boxes, and the court found, that he crossed the park four times and walked a distance of four to six miles each of the times he was on foot patrol, except the last, June 6, when he crossed the park twice. The rules of the department permitted him to use street cars, but all the evidence was to the effect that because of the poor transportation facilities available to him he made the beat on foot. In this regard it appears that the street car service was inextensive and the cars ran infrequently; that the only means of transportation across the park was a bus line at Tenth avenue which stopped at 12:30 a. m.; furthermore, that there were no transportation facilities along the beach. According to the testimony given by his widow, he made the beat on foot, and testimony was given by other officers that whenever they saw him on the beat he was on foot.

During the two weeks he was stationed at the Golden Gate Park station he complained to his wife and others that his beat was too hard for him—that he could not stand the walking; and in this connection Mrs. Naughton testified that his general health was not at all good during that time; that he was tired all the time, "very bluish in the face whenever he had coughing spells", and was unable to sleep on account of pains in his chest. On June 5 he reported for work at 11 p. m. and worked until 7 a. m. on June 6, as acting lieutenant in the station. At about 3 a. m. he had a violent attack of coughing while walking across the floor of the assembly room. It was witnessed by other officers, one of whom testified that Naughton choked and gasped for breath for nearly a minute. Later that morning (Sunday, June 6) at his home he rubbed his chest with some medication, and he complained to his wife of severe pains in his chest, around his heart, stating he had nearly "passed out" while on duty. She asked him if he wanted a doctor, but he said he thought he would be all right. She also suggested that he ask to be assigned to inside work, but he said he was going on his vacation soon and would do so when he came back. He went to bed and remained there until about 1 o'clock in the afternoon, when he got up, had a little tea, and was driven back to the station at 4 o'clock by his brother-in-law, to report for foot patrol duty. On his arrival at the station he complained to several officers about not feeling well, and about 5 o'clock two of the officers, who had witnessed the coughing seizure the night before, drove him in a radio car to a drug store, where the druggist gave him some medicine to relieve the pain in his chest. He then continued on foot patrol duty, and at 5:30 rang in from the box at the Museum in the Park—about Tenth avenue; at 6:30 he rang in from Thirtieth avenue and Balboa; at 7:30 from Balboa and La Playa (the beach); at 8:30 he was at the police station; at 9:30 he rang in from Thirty-seventh avenue and Geary; at 10:30 from Forty-eighth avenue and Judah (across the park); and about 11:15 he went back to the station. One of the officers asked him if he felt any better, but he said not very much; that the medicine he had taken at the drug store had relieved him somewhat, but not to any great extent. At midnight he reported off duty, and went to the home of a friend named Lansfield, on Eddy street between Buchanan and Webster, as he had done before on frequent occasions after having reported off duty at midnight. He had known Lansfield for some twenty-five years; and when he arrived at Lansfield's home he complained of distress from gas. To relieve him Lansfield and his wife gave him some soda, and a hot "toddy" consisting of lemon, whiskey and water. Soon afterwards Lansfield went to bed, leaving Naughton sitting in a chair near the radio. Mrs. Lansfield remained up to see that Naughton caught a street car at 2:10 to go home, but she went into another room to lie down on the couch and fell asleep. The next morning when Lansfield arose he found Naughton lying on the floor, dead.

An autopsy was performed by Dr. Sherman Leland, the chief surgeon to the coroner, and the death certificate signed by him gave the cause of death as "coronary sclerosis, myocardial infarcation and failure"; and the only medical testimony given before the board was that of Dr. Leland, to the effect that the decedent's heart had been in bad condition for some time—that it was "just enough to carry him along", and that the extra load put on it by the walking he was required to do when put on foot patrol after having done inside work for some time was obviously harmful; and when asked the question as to whether that would result in shortening a man's life, he answered "Certainly".

We are of the opinion that in view of the foregoing uncontradicted evidence, the case was brought within the doctrine of such cases as Buckley v. Roche, supra, and Peters v. Sacramento City E. R. System, supra, and that therefore the trial court was justified in finding that the board in denying the application for pension acted arbitrarily and clearly in an abuse of its discretion. Two of the principal cases upon which the court rested its decision in the Buckley case arose under the Workmen's Compensation Act. One was George L. Eastman Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 186 Cal. 587, 200 P. 17, and the other Fogarty v. Dept. of Industrial Relations, 206 Cal. 102, 273 P. 791, which in turn stresses the case of Singlaub v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 87 Cal.App. 324, 262 P. 411, 412. In the Singlaub case the court said: "It is unquestioned law that, where the death of an employee may be traced to two causes, first, to that of a primary disease and, secondly, to overexertion in the work in behalf of his employer in which the employee is engaged, at the time of his death, the employer or his insurer is liable. In other words, notwithstanding the previous diseased condition of the employee and in the natural consequence of which the inevitable death of the employee will ensue, if satisfactorily established that the demise of the employee, though primarily caused by his idiopathic condition, nevertheless was superinduced by overexertion of the employee arising out of his employment, the liability of the employer is fixed." And in the Eastman case the language of the court was [186 Cal. 587, 200 P. 20]: "If the disability, although arising from a chronic heart trouble, was brought on by any strain or excitement incident to the employment, the industrial liability still exists. Acceleration or aggravation of a pre-existing disease is an injury in the occupation causing such acceleration." Another case holding to the same effect, and which is also emphasized by the court in the Buckley case, is Knock v. Industrial Acc.Comm., 200 Cal. 456, 253 P. 712.

The board contends that in the exercise of its discretion it was warranted in finding that the heart failure was precipitated by some strain other than that occasioned by walking the beat. But there is no evidence upon which such a finding could be based. To the contrary, it shows without contradiction that death was accelerated by the amount of walking the decedent was required to do on foot patrol duty, after being transferred to the Golden Gate Park station. As held in Peters v. Sacramento City E. R. System, supra [27 Cal.App.2d 10, 80 P.2d 182], in dealing with a similar situation, wherein the same contention was made, "* * * there being no substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached by the retirement board, it had no facts upon which to base the conclusion reached, hence it exercised no discretion, and having acted contrary to the undisputed facts its act is treated and considered as arbitrary." See, also Buckley v. Roche, supra. Stated another way, the board's negative finding must be based on something more than mere conjecture.

[5] The board points out that the death certificate contains the recital: "Death due to natural causes"; and it contends that therefore the certificate alone is sufficient to sustain its decision, citing Bennett v. Brady, 17 Cal.App.2d 114, 61 P.2d 530. But in the light of the testimony given by Dr. Leland, by whom the entry was made, from which it appears that the walking the decedent was required to do in performing his foot patrol duties hastened his death, the only significance that can be attached to the recital above quoted is that the decedent's demise was not brought about by violence or accidental means. The case of Bennett v. Brady, supra, is not in point, for there a sharp conflict was presented between the testimony of two medical experts as to whether the exertion to which the officer had been subjected hastened his death; whereas here there was but one medical expert, from whose uncontradicted testimony it appears that the officer's life was shortened by over-exertion in performing his duties. Nor can it be successfully maintained that the doctor was misled by or that any prejudice resulted from any inaccuracies in the hypothetical question put to him. Before he answered the question he asked, "* * * that is of course considering all the facts I have brought out here", showing that he had well in mind all the circumstances when he gave his answer.

[6] In the board's reply brief, much is said about the circumstances under which the decedent died. In this connection our attention has been called to the admission of Lansfield that he "used to bootleg", and while so engaged assumed the name of Baker; also to the fact that an analysis was made of the decedent's stomach which disclosed the presence of "two-tenths of one per cent" ethyl alcohol; and it is intimated, although there is no testimony whatever so showing, that when Lansfield retired he left a bottle of whiskey at the decedent's disposal; and it seems to be contended that those were the factors which precipitated Naughton's death, rather than overexertion in the performance of his duties. It is obvious, however, that Lansfield's former activities can have no bearing on the question at issue; nor can it be said that there was anything unusual about Naughton's visit that night, because, as the evidence shows, they had been friends for many years, and frequently, after reporting off police duty, he visited Lansfield before going home. With respect to the presence of alcohol in the decedent's stomach, Dr. Leland testified that "You certainly would not be intoxicated" by the amount there found. In fact there is no testimony whatever from which it may be inferred that the decedent indulged freely in liquor, or even that he was an habitual user thereof. It will be seen, therefore, that there is nothing in the circumstances surrounding the death of Naughton which can serve as ground for denying his widow's claim for pension.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: WARD, J.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

I concur in the judgment.

So far as the question of remedy is concerned, I believe that either mandamus or certiorari will lie to "review" for determinations of local boards exercising judicial or quasi judicial powers. If certiorari is used, the extent of the review would be to inquire into the "jurisdiction" of the local board. So far as the evidence is concerned, that would mean that the superior court's power is limited to determining whether there is any substantial evidence to support the findings of the board. If mandamus is used, the extent of the "review" is to determine, as pointed out in the main opinion, whether "the local board has acted arbitrarily and clearly in abuse of its discretion". So far as the evidence is concerned, that means the superior court's power is limited to determining whether there is any substantial evidence to support the findings of the board. There is no doubt that the cases hold, as stated in the main opinion, that mandamus may be used by the aggrieved party. Whichever remedy is used, so far as the evidence is concerned, the extent of the "review" is exactly the same. The only practical difference between the two remedies is that in certiorari the court may annul the order of the board, while in mandamus the court issues a peremptory writ. Whichever remedy is used, the superior court should be limited to the record produced before the board.

It is my opinion that under the cases the aggrieved party has an election of remedies—he may proceed either by mandamus or certiorari, but, so far as the evidence is concerned, whichever remedy is used the power of the superior court is exactly the same—to determine whether there is any substantial evidence to support the order of the local board, if that board exercises judicial or quasi judicial power.

43 Cal.App.2d 319

In re RUSSELL'S ESTATE.

SEARS v. RUSSELL et al.

Civ. 12958.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 3, 1941.

1. Executors and administrators ⇐14
Wills ⇐195

A testator marrying after execution of will, thereby revoking it as to wife, did not die intestate, so that probate court should have issued letters testamentary to executor named in will, instead of granting letters of administration with will annexed to nominee of testator's widow, in absence of valid objection to such executor's appointment. Probate Code, §§ 70, 72, 407, 422, 443.

2. Executors and administrators ⇐14

It is broad general policy of law to give effect to testator's desires and see that his intentions are carried out so far as ascertainable, as by issuing letters testamentary to executor named in will. Probate Code, § 407.

3. Executors and administrators ⇐14

In naming of executor, testator's desire will be respected, though not expressed directly, if reasonably deducible from language of will. Probate Code, §§ 402, 407.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Florence M. Bischoff, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Norman Russell, deceased. From an order, denying a petition by George M. Sears, named as executor in deceased's will, for letters testamentary, and granting letters of administration with the will annexed to Leslie B. Hanson, the nominee of Lillian S. Russell, deceased's widow, the named executor appeals.

Reversed and remanded.

Philip Storer Thacher, of El Cajon, Lester J. Penry, of San Diego, and Wright & Millikan and Hershel B. Green, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank G. Falloon, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DESMOND, Justice pro tem.

In the case before us, the probate court made an order admitting the will of the deceased to probate, but revoking it as to his surviving spouse, respondent herein.

Section 70 of the Probate Code reads as follows: "If a person marries after making a will, and the spouse survives the maker, the will is revoked as to the spouse, unless provision has been made for the spouse by marriage contract, or unless the spouse is provided for in the will, or in such way mentioned therein as to show an intention not to make such provision; and no other evidence to rebut the presumption of revocation can be received."

The record indicates that decedent's will was executed on May 1, 1934; that he married Mrs. Russell on October 7, 1937; that he died on January 5, 1940. The will was offered for probate by appellant, George M. Sears, who asked that letters testamentary be issued to him, as executor named in the will. The court, however, at the time the will was admitted made its further order denying appellant's petition for letters and ordering letters of administration with the will annexed to issue to Leslie B. Hanson, the widow's nominee.

From this further order the named executor appeals, contending that no objection was made to his appointment, and that therefore he should have received letters testamentary under section 407 of the Probate Code, which provides, "If no objection is made, the court when admitting a will to probate must direct the issuance of letters thereon to the persons named therein as executors who are competent to discharge the trust, unless they or either of them have renounced their right."

Prior to 1931 the effect of marriage upon a will previously executed by a man was governed by section 1299 of the Civil Code, which provided for the revocation of a will in its entirety if a testator married after execution of the will without making some provision for the woman he married, either by will, by contract, or by mentioning in the will his intention not to make provision for her. Section 1300 of the Civil Code made the same provision for total revocation in the case of a woman marrying after the execution of her will. Section 70 of the Probate Code, enacted when sections 1299 and 1300 of the Civil Code were repealed, includes husband and wife in the one section, and provides that "the will is revoked as to the spouse". There is nothing in this language, of course, to indicate that the balance of the will is ineffective, and as a matter of fact, in the instant case the will has been admitted to probate, subject to the widow's share, as we have seen, but the nomination by the deceased of his executor has not been given effect. It does not appear that objections were filed to the appointment of appellant, but respondent in her brief presents her reasons why, nevertheless, the action of the probate court in deciding in her favor between the two conflicting claims for letters should not be disturbed. Appellant's contention that section 407 of the Probate Code makes it mandatory upon the court to appoint the executor named in the will, respondent answers by saying: "Section 422 is just as mandatory in its terms. It provides that 'administration of the estate of a person dying intestate must be granted to one or more of the following persons * * * in the following order * * * (1) The surviving spouse, or some competent person, whom he or she may request to have appointed'." She then argues that the revocation is total as to the wife, and that the paragraph of the will naming the executor cannot in any particular "detract from the surviving wife's legal rights—in this case, the right to have her nominee administer the estate which she has inherited."

For this argument respondent relies upon In re Estate of Haselbud, 26 Cal.App. 2d 375, 79 P.2d 443, a case decided in 1938, in which a revocation in behalf of the widow was declared. The court in its opinion was considering the question as to how estate charges were to be borne as between the widow on the one hand, and the beneficiaries under the will on the other, and in its discussion of this question used the following language (page 379 of 26 Cal.App.2d, page 446 of 79 P.2d): "In so far as it affects Mrs. Haselbud's property rights the decedent's will is, by the express provision of section 70 of the Probate Code, no will at all, but is as to her revoked and eliminated from the situation."

In that case there was no claim by the widow that the right to administer was a property right; and the executor named in the will acted as such. To us the quoted excerpt from the opinion merely means that the surviving wife shall be entitled to her share of her deceased husband's estate as fully and completely as though he had died intestate. The quotation is appropriate as to property rights of the widow in the instant case, but we are still confronted with a situation where factually this is only a partial revocation, the will has been admitted to probate and except for the widow's share is otherwise valid as to its dispositions. Is the naming of an executor in such a case to be given effect? Apparently this appeal propounds that question for the first time in the courts of California. In considering it we have examined statutes, decisions and declared policies in regard to wills both within and without the state of California.

New York has a statute, section 35, Decedent Estate Law, Consol.Laws N.Y. c. 13, similar to section 70 of our Probate Code, providing for partial revocation in favor of a surviving spouse, and any issue of the marriage, as well. Prior to the enactment of section 35 in 1919 a will was revoked in toto by a subsequent marriage. Mr. Surrogate Foley, in commenting on the new section, says, "Previously the revocation of the will was complete. Thereafter it became partial only to permit the surviving spouse to participate. The terms of the will stand except as modified by the withdrawal of the intestate share." In re Bent's Estate, 1932, 142 Misc. 811, 255 N.Y. S. 538, 543.

In 1930 the same Surrogate had said "* * * under the provisions of section 35 of the Decedent Estate Law (since the amendment of 1919), where a marriage of a testator takes place after the execution of a will, unless provision is made in the will for the widow, she is entitled to her intestate share, but the remaining terms of the will, including the appointment of the executors, otherwise remain effective. * * * The courts have always respected the right which a testator enjoys to determine who is most suitable to settle his testamentary affairs, and his solemn selection should not lightly be disregarded. After the admission of a will to probate, the courts will not name a better executor for the testator nor disqualify, by a judicial veto, the widow or friend or other person selected in the will, except upon strict proof of the statutory grounds of incompetency." In re Erlanger's Estate. 136 Misc. 793, 242 N.Y.S. 249, at pages 252 and 254; see, also, Schultz v. Schultz, 10 Grat., Va., 358, 60 Am.Dec. 335, 344.

[1-3] The reasoning under this New York statute seems sound and applicable to cases falling within section 70 of our Probate Code. Section 72 of the same code reads as follows: "A prior will is not revoked by a subsequent will, unless the latter contains an express revocation, or provisions wholly inconsistent with the terms of the prior will. In other cases the prior will remains effectual so far as consistent with the provisions of the subsequent will; but the mere naming of an executor in the prior will need not be given effect by the court when the subsequent will is otherwise wholly inconsistent with the terms of the prior will, the intention of the testator in this respect being left to the determination of the court." (Emphasis added.) This is a re-enactment of section 1296 of the Civil Code (repealed in 1931), with the italicized language added by the legislature. A mere reading of this section governing a partial revocation, as it does, and applying it so far as that may be done to the facts of the instant case, would indicate, in our opinion, that naming of this executor should be given effect, for in this case the result after the partial revocation in behalf of the widow is not wholly inconsistent with the terms of the will as drawn. The clear implication is that in such a case the nominee of the testator should be appointed.

Section 443 of the Probate Code, relating to issuance of letters of administration, provides: "Before letters are granted, the fact of death and that the decedent died intestate * * * must be proved * * *." Letters of administration with the will annexed, however, are issued, as the title of the office indicates, only when decedent died intestate; that is, leaving a will. Originally, in this case, respondent applied for letters of administration, but in her petition mentioned the will which has now been probated. In his contest of that petition appellant called attention to the fact that it did not state that decedent died intestate. Later respondent filed her opposition to the probate of the will, praying that it be denied admission to probate, and still later nominated Mr. Hanson as administrator and special administrator. The court, however, did not appoint him to either office, but named him as administrator with the will annexed. Under these circumstances, we cannot accept the view that decedent died intestate, notwithstanding respondent's reliance upon the quotation from the Haselbud case, and since no valid objection to appellant's appointment as executor was filed, it is our opinion that letters testamentary should have been issued to him. Such action would accord with the broad and general policy of the law which gives effect to the desires of a testator and sees that his intentions are carried out so far as they may be ascertained. In regard to the naming of an executor, a testator's desire will be respected, even though not expressed with directness, but reasonably deducible from the language of the will. In re Estate of Henderson, 196 Cal. 623, 639, 238 P. 938; and also section 402, Probate Code.

Under the reasoning of the authorities cited, we believe those portions of the order and decree appealed from should be reversed, and the cause remanded to the lower court for appropriate action in accordance with the views herein expressed. So ordered.

We concur: YORK, P. J.; DORAN, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 313

In re McCOLLUM'S ESTATE.

McCOLLUM v. SARLES.
Civ. 11640.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 3, 1941.

Hearing Denied May 1, 1941.

1. Perpetuities ⇐6(1)

Under statute, phrased in the alternative, prohibiting suspension of power of alienation for longer period than continuance of lives in being or a period not to exceed 25 years from time of creation of the suspension, the period of years is applicable only when power of alienation is suspended as to one not in being at time of its creation, not if the suspension runs only during life of a person in being at time of creation of the limitation. Civ.Code, §§ 715, 716.

2. Perpetuities ⇐6(1)

A will leaving all property of testatrix to grandmother of testatrix, if grandmother should survive testatrix and live on to receive the property on distribution, but otherwise providing for specific bequests, was not invalid as suspending power of alienation for a longer time than continuance of lives in being or a period not to exceed 25 years from time of creation of the suspension, since contingency was expressly tied into life of devisee, and if devisee were alive at time of death of testatrix she took a contingent interest dependent upon her living until distribution. Civ.Code, §§ 715, 716.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; H. G. Jorgensen, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Wilma Sarles McCollum, deceased, to determine heirship under section 1080 of the Probate Code. From an adverse decree, Floyd A. McCollum appeals, opposed by Jane Sarles.

Affirmed.

Bardin, Harrington & Bardin, of Salinas (Hubert Wyckoff, Jr., of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

John Milton Thompson, of Monterey, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

An appeal is taken from a decree determining heirship under section 1080 of the Probate Code. Wilma Sarles McCollum died testate February 22, 1939. The portions of her will pertinent to this inquiry read:

"First: Provided Jane Sarles, my Grandmother by reason of the adoption of her and William Sarles, her husband, the latter now deceased, of my Mother, Myrtle Sarles McCollum, now deceased, survives me and lives on to receive on distribution of my estate the property hereby bequeathed and devised to her, I give, devise, and bequeath to the said Jane Sarles all property of every kind and nature whatsoever and wheresoever situate of which I may die possessed.

"Second: In the event that the said Jane Sarles predeceases me or does not live on to receive on distribution the property herein bequeathed and devised to her, I direct my Executor hereinafter named to convert so much of my property except as herein otherwise provided as may be necessary to pay my funeral expenses, the expenses of my last illness, all just debts which may be proved against my estate, and all legacies herein bequeathed, into cash as soon as the same can be done without unreasonable sacrifice of any of said property, and out of the proceeds thereof after my funeral expenses, the expenses of my last illness, all just debts which may have been proven against my estate, and the expenses of administration thereon have been paid, I give and bequeath as follows:" (Here follow five specific bequests and the declaration that the testatrix expressly refrains from leaving anything to her father because the entire estate had come to her through inheritance from her grandfather because of an error in the latter's will.) The decedent left no heir other than her father, the appellant herein, and her grandmother, to whom the estate was devised.

The question raised on this appeal is correctly stated by respondent as follows: "Is the rule against perpetuities violated by a provision in a will which suspends the vesting of title not possibly longer than the period of a life in being at the date of death of the testratrix?"

The pertinent provisions of the statutes controlling read: (Civil Code, sections 715 and 716) "Restraints upon alienation. Except in the single case mentioned in section seven hundred seventy-two, the absolute power of alienation cannot be suspended, by any limitation or condition whatever, for a longer period than as follows:

"1. During the continuance of the lives of persons in being at the creation of the limitation or condition; or

"2. For a period not to exceed twenty-five years from the time of the creation of the suspension."

"Future interests void, which suspend power of alienation. Every future interest is void in its creation which, by any possibility, may suspend the absolute power of alienation for a longer period than is prescribed in this chapter. Such power of alienation is suspended when there are no persons in being by whom an absolute interest in possession can be conveyed."

[1] Appellant argues that the provisions of the will quoted are void because they attempt to create a future interest contrary to the limitations of these code sections. If this is so it would be because the future interest suspended the absolute power of alienation "for a longer period than is prescribed in this chapter." But the limit of the period prescribed in the chapter is found in section 715 as either during the continuance of the lives of persons in being, or for a period not to exceed twenty-five years. It will be noted that these limitations are in the alternative. The period of years has no application if the suspension runs only during the life of a person in being at the time of the creation of the limitation. It is only when the power of alienation is suspended as to one not in being at the time of its creation that the period of years comes into play.

[2] Here the devisee under the will was eighty-two years of age when the interest was created. She survived the testatrix and would have taken the full estate under the decree of distribution which was ordered. Her rights have been suspended only by this appeal. The intention of the testatrix is plain, and her attempt to dispose of her estate is fully within the law.

Appellant places much stress upon In re Estate of Campbell, 28 Cal.App.2d 102, 82 P.2d 22. In that matter the will attempted to leave the residue of the estate "to the four chair officers of San Diego Lodge No. 168 Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, being the four chair officers in office at the time of distribution of my estate." It was there held that because distribution might not take place for more than twenty-five years after the testator's death, this provision of the will was void under the code sections. The distinction between the two wills is plain. In the Campbell will there was no tie of the time within which the contingency must occur to any life in being at the testator's death. This being so the second alternative in section 715 became applicable. Here the contingency was expressly tied into the life of the devisee. If she were alive at the time of the death of the testatrix then she took a contingent interest dependent upon her living until distribution. If she had died before the death of the testatrix the whole clause fell by its own terms, and no questions of future interests or suspension would arise to defeat the special bequests under the will.

The decree is affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; SPENCE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 280

BLACKMORE et al. v. BRENNAN et al.

Civ. 6467.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 1, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 26, 1941.

1. Automobiles ⇐245(80)

In action for death of motorist killed in intersectional collision, the jury had the sole right to determine the credibility of witnesses and the weight and sufficiency of the evidence on motorist's contributory negligence to overcome the presumption of due care on his part for his own safety. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 4.

2. Trial ⇐296(4)

In action for death of motorist killed in intersectional collision, the giving of an instruction that, if the presumption that motorist exercised due care for his own safety was not overcome by evidence, it must be assumed that motorist exercised ordinary care in operating automobile, under which circumstances he would not be guilty of contributory negligence, did not constitute reversible error, particularly where the jury was elsewhere fully instructed on the subject of contributory negligence. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4.

3. Trial ⇐296(4)

In action for death of motorist killed in intersectional collision, instruction that motorist as he drove his automobile into intersection had a right to assume, until the contrary appeared, that he was not exposed to danger which would come to him only by violation of law by another, and that, if he acted on such assumption, he was not contributorily negligent merely because he did so, was not prejudicial as omitting the element of contributory negligence, where it was immediately followed by other instructions supplying that element, nor was instruction inconsistent with others on that subject.

4. Trial ⇐295(1)

The entire charge to the jury should be read as a whole in determining whether the jury was fully and fairly instructed.

5. Trial ⇐296(3, 4)

The omission from an instruction on a certain subject of proper separate conditions or legal principles involved in the issues of a case, such as contributory negligence and proximate cause of injury, does not constitute cause for reversal where the jury is elsewhere adequately instructed in the charge on those omitted principles.

6. Jury ⇐28(5)

Overruling of plaintiffs' motion for a new trial conditioned on defendants' consent in writing to an increase in damages of $1,000 over and above amount awarded by the jury did not result in a denial of defendants' constitutional right to a jury trial where defendants signed and filed a written consent to the increase in manner required by law, since defendants thereby voluntarily "waived" their right to have the case again submitted to jury. Code Civ.Proc. § 631; Const. art. 1, § 7.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waived".

7. New trial ⇐161(1), 162(1)

Trial judges under proper circumstances have authority to modify judgments on motions for new trials by either reducing or increasing the judgments to conform to the evidence conditioned on the written consent of the parties unfavorably affected thereby. Code Civ.Proc. § 631.

8. New trial ⇐75(1)

A new trial may be granted in the sound discretion of a trial judge for insufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict or because it appears to have been rendered through passion or prejudice when the amount of damages awarded is inadequate as well as when it is excessive.

9. New trial ⇐161(1), 162(1)

The trial court has no power to compel a party to consent to an increase of the amount of damages awarded by a jury, but the trial court may grant or deny a motion for new trial on grounds otherwise warranted by the record conditioned on the written consent of the party unfavorably affected to an acceptance of a specified increase or reduction of amount of damages awarded by the jury. Code Civ.Proc. § 631.

10. Jury ⇐28(5)

New trial ⇐161(1)

The trial court is authorized to prescribe an alternative condition on which the granting or denial of a motion for new trial may depend, provided the judgment which is rendered is supported by the evidence, and the acceptance of the condition constitutes a "waiver" by the aggrieved party of his constitutional right to resubmit his cause to a jury. Code Civ.Proc. § 631; Const. art. 1, § 7.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waiver".

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; M. G. Woodward, Judge.

Action by B. L. Blackmore and another against Mervyn Brennan and others, for the death of Harold Blackmore, plaintiffs' son. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; EDMONDS, J., dissenting.

Honey & Mayall, of Stockton, for appellants.

Gumpert & Mazzera, of Stockton, for respondents.

THOMPSON, Justice.

The defendants have appealed from a judgment of $3,500 damages for the death of Harold Blackmore, son of the plaintiffs, which occurred as the result of an automobile casualty.

At six o'clock on the evening of July 15, 1938, Mervyn Brennan, who was then 19 years of age, was driving his father's automobile southerly along Van Allen road near Escalon in San Joaquin county, toward his home three miles south of the intersection of that road with Lone Tree road. The last-mentioned highway extends east and west, intersecting Van Allen road at a right angle. Each of these roadways, which are about fifty feet in width, is paved along the central portion for a width of only about twelve feet. A fence encloses a ranch at the northwest corner of the intersection of those roads. On that corner there is a large barn which extends southerly to a point within about thirty feet of the northerly line of Lone Tree road.

At the time mentioned, Harold Blackmore, the son of plaintiffs who was 27 years of age, was engaged in driving his cut-down Chevrolet roadster easterly along Lone Tree road. As he reached a point about 135 feet westerly from the intersection of the two roads, Mr. Gottleib Mayer, the owner of the ranch on the north side of the road, opened a gate and drove a band of some thirty cows out upon the highway on the way to a corral. The cattle separated and scattered along the highway in the vicinity of the gate. Mr. Mayer said that when Harold Blackmore approached the cattle he reduced the speed of his car to about ten or fifteen miles an hour, and slowly made his way along the extreme southerly side of the road. It is evident that he did not greatly accelerate the speed of his machine before reaching the intersection of the roads, for the distance was short and he was hindered by the presence of the cattle. At that point his view of the Van Allen road was obstructed by the intervening barn.

As Mervyn Brennan approached the intersection of the roads, traveling south, he was driving his machine at a rate of forty miles an hour. He claimed to have reduced his speed, before reaching the intersection, to a rate of twenty or twenty-five miles an hour. His view of Lone Tree road, westerly of the intersection, was obscured by the barn until he reached a point about twenty-five or thirty feet from the northern line of that roadway. He asserted that he did not see the machine of Harold Blackmore until the Chevrolet car entered the intersection running at about the rate of forty miles an hour. He claimed to have immediately applied his brakes with full force. He admitted that he could stop his machine within a distance of twelve or fifteen feet when it was running twenty or twenty-five miles an hour. His automobile struck the Chevrolet roadster at the southeasterly portion of the intersection, overturning it and killing Harold Blackmore. It is evident that the defendant, Mervyn Brennan, must have been driving his machine faster than twenty-five miles an hour, for he applied his brakes with full force and failed to stop. The Chevrolet car was violently shoved a considerable distance and practically demolished. A highway patrolman who arrived at the scene within two hours after the accident occurred, observed and measured skid-marks made by the defendants' machine, extending northerly thirty-nine feet from the place of the accident. The appellants do not contend that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of negligence or the amount of the judgment.

The cause was tried by the court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $2,500. The defendants moved for a new trial on all statutory grounds. The court made an order that a new trial would be granted on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence, and inadequacy of the judgment, unless the defendants consented in writing within ten days therefrom to increasing the judgment to the sum of $3,500. The defendants consented in writing to that increase of judgment. The motion for new trial was thereupon formally denied. From the judgment as modified and increased the defendants appealed.

The appellants contend that the court committed reversible error in giving to the jury and refusing to give certain instructions, and that the court was without authority to determine the motion for new trial conditioned upon the defendants consenting to an increase of the amount of damages awarded by the jury, since that procedure amounted to a denial of their constitutional right to a trial by jury as provided in article I, section 7, of the Constitution of California.

The appellants assert that the court erred in giving to the jury plaintiffs' instruction number 2, which appears to be a fair statement of the principle that it may be presumed "a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns", as the statute declares in subdivision 4 of section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That challenged instruction stated that the law presumes Harold Blackmore, in driving his automobile at the time of the accident, exercised due care for his own safety, and unless that presumption was overcome by competent evidence it should be considered in determining whether the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence. The instruction concluded with the further statement that if the presumption was not overcome by evidence it must be assumed the deceased exercised ordinary care in his operation of the machine at that time, under which circumstances he would not be guilty of contributory negligence.

[1] It is true that Mervyn Brennan testified that the deceased drove into the intersection at a rate of forty miles an hour. That is substantially the only evidence of contributory negligence adduced at the trial to overcome the presumption of due care on the part of the deceased for his own safety. Evidently the jury did not believe that statement. The testimony of Mr. Mayer, and other circumstances, seem to refute that statement. But the jury had the sole right to determine the credibility of witnesses and the weight and sufficiency of the evidence on that subject. It is said in 10 California Jurisprudence, at page 747, regarding the determination of a disputable presumption that: "Where, however, it is undertaken to prove the fact against the presumption, it still remains with the jury to say whether or not the fact has been proven."

[2] The jury was not told in this case that it must assume from the presumption of due care that the deceased was free from contributory negligence. All that the court said in that instruction was that in the absence of evidence overcoming the presumption, it should prevail and the deceased, in that event, would be deemed to be free from contributory negligence. In other words, the jury was told, in effect, that it must determine whether sufficient evidence had been adduced to overcome that presumption. That is a correct statement of the law as we understand it. Numerous cases sustain that construction of section 1963, subdivision 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Hatzakorzian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., 197 Cal. 82, 91, 239 P. 709, 41 A.L.R. 1027; Barrett v. Harman, 115 Cal.App. 283, 286, 1 P.2d 458; Woodman v. Hemet Union High School Dist., 136 Cal.App. 544, 29 P.2d 257; Killough v

Lee, 4 Cal.App.2d 309, 40 P.2d 897; Lahey v. Southern Pac. Co., 16 Cal.App.2d 652, 61 P.2d 461.

The jury was elsewhere fully instructed on the subject of contributory negligence. It was emphatically told that if the deceased was guilty of negligence which contributed in the slightest degree to the accident, the plaintiffs could not recover judgment regardless of how serious the negligence of the defendant Mervyn Brennan might be. In plaintiffs' instruction number 1, the term "contributory negligence" was defined. In defendants' instruction number 3, the jury was told that the same duties, responsibilities and necessity of exercising ordinary care in operating their machines at the time of the accident were imposed by the law equally upon both parties involved in the casualty. The terms "negligence", "ordinary care" and "proximate cause of injury" were explicitly defined. In connection with the foregoing challenged instruction the court also charged the jury that: "Contributory negligence is a defense. If such negligence is proved to have proximately contributed to plaintiff's injuries in the slightest degree, it will defeat a recovery on the part of plaintiff. Contributory negligence presupposes that the plaintiff did not exercise ordinary care for his own safety, and that his failure so to do proximately contributed to his own injuries. It is an affirmative defense and must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence, unless it can be shown or inferred from the evidence given in support of plaintiff's case."

We are of the opinion the foregoing "due care" instruction was neither erroneous nor prejudicial. Certainly it does not constitute reversible error.

[3] The following instruction which was given to the jury at the request of the plaintiff is assigned as error for the reason that it fails to include the condition that the rule announced therein depends on the plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence. That challenged instruction reads: "You are instructed that the deceased, Harold Blackmore, as he drove his automobile into the intersection where the accident occurred, had a right under the law to assume until the contrary appeared, that he was not exposed to danger which could come to him only by and through the violation of law on the part of another, and if he acted upon such assumption, he was not guilty of contributory negligence merely by reason of the fact that he did so."

The jury was also charged in the very next instruction that: "It was the duty of Harold Blackmore, while driving on Lone Tree Road, to keep a vigilant lookout ahead so as to avoid, if reasonably possible, a collision with any other vehicle or person lawfully upon such highway. Failure to keep such a lookout, or failure to see what may be readily seen if the driver is looking, would constitute negligence as a matter of law."

The jury was further instructed, as we have previously said, that proof of negligence of the deceased which "contributed to plaintiff's injuries in the slightest degree" would defeat his right to recover damages. In that same instruction it was further said that contributory negligence consisted of any failure on the part of the deceased to exercise ordinary care for his own safety.

We are of the opinion the instruction previously criticised is not prejudicial because it omits the element of contributory negligence on the part of the deceased. It was immediately followed by other instructions which supply that element. The jury could, therefore, not have been misled in that regard. The instruction is not inconsistent with others on that subject. It is entirely consistent with them. It should be read in connection with the other instructions on that subject. It clearly informed the jury that the deceased had a right to assume he could cross that intersection without anticipating danger caused solely by violation of the law on the part of some other motorist. Certainly, if the death of Harold Blackmore was caused solely and only as a result of the violation of law by Mervyn Brennan, it absolutely excludes the possibility of any negligence of the deceased contributing to his death. That instruction is therefore not inconsistent with the other ones which were given on that subject. We are of the opinion the jury could not have been misled thereby.

In the case of Schatte v. Maurice, 116 Cal.App. 161, 2 P.2d 489, it was held that the use of the word "sole" with relation to the cause of injuries which were sustained by the plaintiff was clear and explicit enough so that it could not be misunderstood to refer to something else not included in the charge. The court there said that the use of the term "sole * * * cause of injury" necessarily excluded the possibility of the presence of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff.

The instruction merely states that the deceased had a right to assume that the defendant would not place him in danger by violating the law of the highway, and that the deceased would not be guilty of contributory negligence solely because he assumed the defendant would obey the law. Clearly that instruction does not infer that the deceased might not be guilty of contributory negligence for some other reason which might appear in evidence. All that the case of McPherson v. Walling, 58 Cal. App. 563, 209 P. 209, relied upon by appellant herein, determines is found at page 568 of the opinion in 58 Cal.App., at page 211 of 209 P., to the effect that an instruction is erroneous which infers that "conduct of the plaintiff which amounts to contributory negligence may become free from negligence because of any act of neglect on the part of defendant". Applying that statement to the present case, it may not be said that one is guilty of negligence merely because he assumes, as every man has a right to assume, that others will obey the law. It is true that in spite of that particular assumption one might nevertheless be guilty of contributory negligence in doing or failing to perform other acts which a reasonably prudent person would do or omit under similar circumstances. But the jury was elsewhere fully instructed on that phase of the case. It was not necessary for the plaintiffs to include in that particular instruction all of the conditions under which the deceased might rely on the assumption that the defendant would obey the law. The condition of his freedom from negligence was properly included in other instructions. That declaration was elsewhere fully covered.

[4, 5] It is a well-established principle that the entire charge to a jury is to be read as a whole in determining whether the jury has been fully and fairly instructed. A myriad of authorities support that doctrine. It has been frequently held that the omission from an instruction on a certain subject of proper separate conditions or legal principles involved in the issues of a case, such as contributory negligence, proximate cause of injury, etc., does not constitute cause for reversal of the judgment, where the jury is elsewhere adequately instructed in the charge upon those omitted principles. Douglas v. Southern Pac. Co., 203 Cal. 390, 264 P. 237; American Marine Paint Co. v. Nyno Line, Inc., 70 Cal.App. 415, 233 P. 366; Burr v. Damarel, 24 Cal.App.2d 622, 75 P.2d 621; 24 Cal. Jur. 857, sec. 113; 10 Cal.Jur. Ten-Year Supp. 710, sec. 113.

The cases of White v. Davis, 103 Cal. App. 531, 284 P. 1086, and Watkins v. Nutting, Cal.App., 104 P.2d 413, upon which the appellants rely in support of their foregoing contention, may readily be distinguished from our conclusion that the challenged instruction does not constitute reversible error. In the White case [103 Cal. App. 531, 284 P. 1092], it was said that an instruction containing somewhat similar language to that which is criticised in this case was in accordance with the generally-acknowledged rule of law, but that "under the circumstances of this particular case" it should have contained the further condition that the plaintiff must be found to be free from negligence. In that case it does not appear the jury was elsewhere instructed, as it was in the present case, upon the subject of contributory negligence.

In the Watkins case, supra, it was also held to be error to give to the jury a similar instruction which omitted the element of plaintiff's freedom from negligence. In that case, however, it does not appear the jury was instructed upon the principle of contributory negligence anywhere in the charge. The opinion fails to mention what the general charge to the jury contained upon that subject.

We have carefully examined each of the rejected instructions. We feel confident they were fully covered by other instructions which were given to the jury. There was, therefore, no error in rejecting any of the instructions offered by the appellants.

[6] The appellants contend that the overruling of plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, conditioned on the defendants' consent in writing to an increase in damages of one thousand dollars over and above the amount awarded by the jury resulted in a denial of his constitutional right to a jury trial as provided by article I, section 7, of the Constitution of California. We think not, under the circumstances of this case. The defendants voluntarily waived their right to have the case again submitted to a jury, by signing and filing a written consent, as required by the Constitution and by section 631 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to an increase in the amount of the judgment. They were not compelled to sign that written consent. They had the option of standing on their constitutional right to a jury trial and appealing from the order of the court granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial. They failed to exercise that privilege.

The facts upon which the amount of the judgment was conditionally increased are as follows: The plaintiffs demanded a jury trial. The jury rendered judgment against the defendants and awarded the plaintiffs damages in the sum of $2,500. Plaintiffs moved for a new trial on the ground, among others, that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict or the judgment. The court made an order that the motion for new trial would be granted on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence and inadequacy of the judgment, unless the defendants filed their written consent to a modification of the judgment by increasing the amount thereof to the sum of $3,500 within ten days thereafter. That written consent was duly filed. The motion for new trial was then formally overruled. From the order increasing the amount of the judgment the defendants have appealed.

[7] It is the established rule of the courts of this state and of other jurisdictions to uphold the authority of trial judges, under property circumstances, to modify judgments on motions for new trials by either reducing or increasing the judgments to conform to the evidence, conditioned upon the written consent of the parties unfavorably affected thereby. 95 A.L.R. 1164, note; 53 A.L.R. 779, note. We perceive no essential difference between allowing a trial judge to decrease the amount of damages awarded by a jury, to conform to the evidence, and increasing that amount, even though the case may involve unliquidated damages which appear to have been awarded through passion and prejudice or when it is clearly in conflict with the evidence. In either event the judgment must accord with the evidence adduced. It is true that either party who is prejudiced by such an order, so as to deprive him of the constitutional privilege of submitting his cause to a jury, may object to that procedure. But there are many decisions which hold that, when a person who is unfavorably affected by such a conditional order with respect to a motion for new trial, consents in writing thereto, he is not deprived of his constitutional right to have the amount of damages which are assessed against him submitted to a jury, for he has thereby waived that right. In the present case the appellants consented to the increase of damages in the manner required by law, and they may therefore not complain.

[8] There is no doubt that a new trial may be granted, in the sound discretion of a trial judge, for insufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict or because it appears to have been rendered through passion or prejudice, when the amount of damages awarded is inadequate as well as when it is excessive. Secreto v. Carlander, 35 Cal.App.2d 361, 95 P.2d 476; Reilley v. McIntire, 29 Cal.App.2d 559, 85 P.2d 169; 20 Cal.Jur. 104, sec. 67; 20 R.C.L. 283, sec. 67; 46 C.J. 207, sec. 152. In the Secreto case, supra, which is similar on principle to the present case, a motion granting a new trial was affirmed on appeal. A hearing by Supreme Court was denied. It was there contended the trial court was without authority to grant or deny a new trial conditioned on the defendant accepting an increase by the trial judge of the amount of damages awarded by the jury. The opinion in that case contains the following statement: "The law is established in this state that as a condition for denying a motion for a new trial the trial court has the power to require the opposing party to consent to an increase of the amount of the jury's verdict to bring the amount of the verdict in conformity with the evidence." [35 Cal.App.2d 361, 95 P.2d 477.]

[9, 10] It is true that the trial court has no power to compel a party to consent to an increase of the amount of damages awarded by a jury. That would deny him his constitutional right to a jury trial. But the trial court has a right to grant or deny a motion for new trial upon grounds otherwise warranted by the record, conditioned upon the party unfavorably affected thereby consenting in writing to an acceptance of a specified increase or reduction of the amount of damages awarded by the jury. That is undoubtedly what the court meant by the foregoing language quoted from the Secreto case. The court is authorized to prescribe an alternative condition upon which the granting or denial of a motion for new trial may depend, provided the judgment which is rendered is supported by the evidence. The acceptance of the condition constitutes a waiver by the aggrieved party of his constitutional right to resubmit his cause to a jury. In the present case the appellants accepted in writing the suggested increase of damages and thereby waived their right to a jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: PULLEN, P. J.

TUTTLE, Justice (concurring).

I concur. In respect to the question of the power of the trial court to increase the amount of the verdict upon proceedings for new trial, I am in accord with the conclusions reached thereon, but base my approval upon the sole ground that defendant, by consenting to such increase, waived his right to thereafter raise the question. In the case of Secreto v. Carlander, 35 Cal.App.2d 361, 95 P.2d 476 (cited in the opinion), such a conditional order was made. Defendant failed to file a written consent and the new trial was granted. The latter, upon appeal, attacked the order upon the ground that the trial court was without power to make it. The court, in holding that such power existed, laid down a rule which, in my opinion, is directly opposed to the holding of the United States Supreme Court, in the late (1935) case of Dimick v. Schiedt, 293 U.S. 474, 55 S.Ct. 296, 301, 79 L.Ed. 603, 95 A.L.R. 1150. There, defendant accepted the terms of the conditional order for an increase in the amount of the verdict, but plaintiff did not. The latter then appealed, and attacked the order upon the ground that it infringed upon and violated his constitutional right to trial by jury. The court there said: "Where the verdict returned by a jury is palpably and grossly inadequate or excessive, it should not be permitted to stand; but, in that event, both parties remain entitled, as they were entitled in the first instance, to have a jury properly determine the question of liability and the extent of the injury by an assessment of damages. Both are questions of fact. Where the verdict is excessive, the practice of substituting a remission of the excess for a new trial is not without plausible support in the view that what remains is included in the verdict along with the unlawful excess—in that sense that it has been found by the jury—and that the remittitur has the effect of merely lopping off an excrescence. But, where the verdict is too small, an increase by the court is a bald addition of something which in no sense can be said to be included in the verdict. When, therefore, the trial court here found that the damages awarded by the jury were so inadequate as to entitle plaintiff to a new trial, how can it be held, with any semblance of reason, that that court, with the consent of the defendant only, may, by assessing an additional amount of damages, bring the constitutional right of the plaintiff to a jury trial to an end in respect of a matter of fact which no jury has ever passed upon either explicitly or by implication? To so hold is obviously to compel the plaintiff to forego his constitutional right to the verdict of a jury and accept 'an assessment partly made by a jury which has acted improperly, and partly by a tribunal which has no power to assess.'"

From the wording of the above quotation, I believe that it is fairly susceptible of the construction that if the party who attacks the order has consented thereto, he is thereafter precluded from raising the question. It would seem that in this state we should adhere to the federal rule. It is true that the seventh amendment to the federal Constitution, guaranteeing trial by jury in civil cases, is not a limitation upon the states and does not affect state courts (11 Am. Jur., p. 1107, sec. 317), but our state Constitution contains a similar guarantee. (Art. I, sec. 7).

43 Cal.App.2d Supp. 868

CALIFORNIA EMPLOYMENT COMMISSION v. BLACK-FOXE MILITARY INSTITUTE.

C. A. 4816.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

Feb. 27, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐544(2)

On appeal presented on the judgment roll without bill of exceptions or transcript, the reviewing court cannot consider references made by appellant to testimony or to stipulation of defendant or to other asserted facts of case not appearing in findings or from admissions of pleadings.

2. Master and servant ⇐78

As applied to contributions required to be made by employer to unemployment fund on basis of "wages" of employees of military institute who receive meals and lodging, there is no substantial difference between definition of "wages" in the Unemployment Reserves Act as first enacted in 1935 as being the amount of money received as compensation for services rendered, including commissions and bonuses and the reasonable value of board, rent, housing, lodging, or similar advantage received from employer, and the 1937 amendment to the act defining wages to mean all remuneration payable for personal services, including commissions and bonuses and cash value of all remuneration payable in any medium other than cash. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8780d, §§ 11, 37 et seq., 44; St.1935, p. 1229, § 11.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Wages".

3. Master and servant ⇐78

The Unemployment Reserves Act, though requiring a "contribution" which in itself might be regarded as a tax, is not merely for purpose of raising revenue but sets up a scheme for ameliorating the hardships of unemployment and undertakes, in conjunction with the federal government, to pay unemployment benefits to those who, without fault, are out of work and to impose financial burden of doing this upon both employers and employees, measuring both burdens and benefits by amount of compensation paid to employees when they are working, hence the definition of "wages" should not be as strictly construed as in income tax law, which is a purely revenue measure. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 8780d, §§ 37 et seq., 44, 58.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Contribution".

4. Master and servant ⇐78

In view of the purpose of Unemployment Reserves Act of 1937, to ameliorate the hardships of unemployment, provisions thereof should not be whittled down by narrow construction nor should exceptions not clearly justified by their language be engrafted on them by judicial interpretation. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 8780d, §§ 37 et seq., 44, 58.

5. Master and servant ⇐78

Board, lodging, or other facility furnished to certain employees of a military school who, by their contracts, were required to accept them and who were on duty while eating meals and subject to call while receiving their lodging were a part of their "wages" within law requiring contributions from employers and employees based on amount of "wages" for payment into unemployment fund, no matter how greatly the employer might be convenienced by acceptance of such board and lodging by employee under the so-called "convenience rule". Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8780d, §§ 37 et seq., 44, 58.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Convenience Rule".

6. Master and servant ⇐78

Where certain employees of military school were required under their employment contracts to accept board and lodging and in interests of supervision and discipline were required to eat meals and lodge with cadets, the board and lodging were "wages" within Unemployment Reserves Act for purpose of determining employer's contribution to unemployment fund, notwithstanding these employees received same cash wages as other employees who were not required to dine and lodge with cadets, and fact that employment contracts did not declare that board and lodgings were to be regarded as compensation was immaterial. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8780d, §§ 37 et seq., 44, 58.

7. Master and servant ⇐78

A rule of the Unemployment Reserves Commission that value of living quarters and meals furnished employees for convenience of employer should not be considered a part of "wages" in determining contributions to unemployment fund, and an "interpretive opinion" of the California Employment Commission, the successor to the Reserves Commission, having the same effect, were not inconsistent with action brought by the Employment Commission against employer military school to recover additional contributions from employer on theory that meals and lodging furnished certain employees by school who, for reasons of supervision and discipline, were required to eat meals and lodge with cadets and who were on duty and subject to call during such meals and lodging, in view of trial court's finding that board and lodging were not furnished solely for employer's convenience under the "convenience rule", but were the only compensation employees received for their services during meal and lodging periods. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8780d, §§ 37 et seq., 44, 45, 58.

8. Master and servant ⇐78

Any rules of the California Employment Commission, formerly Unemployment Reserves Commission, which conflict with the clear meaning of the Unemployment Insurance Act, formerly the Unemployment Reserves Act, are void. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8780d, § 37 et seq.

9. Estoppel ⇐62(2)

Even if action brought by California Employment Commission, formerly Unemployment Reserves Commission, against an employer military school to recover contributions to unemployment fund for board and lodging furnished certain employees required to accept them for reasons of supervision and discipline of cadets, and who during meal and lodging periods were on duty and subject to call, was inconsistent with rule of plaintiff's predecessor directing that value of living quarters and meals furnished for convenience of employer should not be considered a part of wages, and to a subsequent interpretive opinion of the commission having same effect, the commission would not thereby be "estopped"; there being no rule of statute or Constitution preventing an administrative board from occupying inconsistent positions, and neither knowledge of nor reliance on previous declaration of commission by defendant nor resulting action taken by it appearing in record to create an "estoppel". Gen.Laws 1937, Act 8780d, §§ 37 et seq., 44, 45, 58.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estoppel".

Appeal from Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles; Oda Faulconer, Judge.

Action by California Employment Commission, formerly Unemployment Reserves Commission, against Black-Foxe Military Institute, a corporation, to recover contributions based on wages paid by defendant to its employees under the Unemployment Reserves Act enacted in 1937 and subsequently amended and renamed "Unemployment Insurance Act". From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

John Marvin Dean, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Samuel L. Gold, of Sacramento, for respondent.

SHAW, Presiding Judge.

[1] This appeal is presented to us upon the judgment roll, without either bill of exceptions or transcript. Hence we cannot consider, in deciding it, the references made by appellant to the testimony or to a "stipulation" of defendant, or to other asserted facts of the case not appearing in the findings or from the admissions of the pleadings. Thus the frequently mentioned fact, if it be a fact, that the employees in question here are instructors is not before us. Statements of the facts of the case in this opinion are taken from the findings.

The case arises under a statute adopted in 1935 (Stats.1935, page 1226). This statute was amended and named "Unemployment Reserves Act" in 1937 (Stats.1937, page 2052 et seq). In 1939 it was renamed "Unemployment Insurance Act" (Stats. 1939, pages, 1967, 1969) and further amended; but as this case arose before the 1939 amendments they do not require consideration here. The act appears in Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937 Ed., and in the 1938 and 1939 supplements to that compilation, as Act 8780d. By the terms of this statute certain "contributions", as they are denominated, are levied upon employers, the amounts of which are based upon the amounts of "wages" paid by such employers (Section 37 et seq.), and similar contributions, likewise computed upon the amount of "wages", are required of employees, which the employers must deduct from wages paid (Sec. 44), and the employers are required to pay all these contributions into an unemployment fund. This fund is under the control of the commission which is plaintiff herein and is to be used to pay to unemployed persons certain "benefits" which are likewise computed upon the amount of "wages" they have received. Section 58. If any employer fails to pay his own contributions, or to deduct and pay those of his employees, this commission may bring action against him therefor. Sec. 45.

This is such an action, and it appears from the findings that the defendant is an educational institution emphasizing military instruction, with 150 cadets ranging in age from 6 to 18 years, and (inferentially, though it is not expressly so stated) that they board and lodge upon defendant's premises. Defendant "requires certain of its employees, for reasons of supervision and discipline", to eat meals and lodge with the cadets, the meals and lodging being furnished by defendant. Some of the board and lodging so furnished during the time covered by the action was not considered or reported by the defendant in deducting and paying contributions under the statute above mentioned. In support of this action the plaintiff now claims that such unreported board and lodging were in fact wages and hence the defendant is liable to make the payments sued for in respect to the value thereof. The trial court found that board and lodging were furnished as above stated during 1937 and parts of 1936 and 1938, that $684.72 became due from defendant thereon and that it had paid all but $491.75, for which judgment was rendered. We hold that this judgment was based on correct legal principles and must be affirmed.

There was no express agreement that the board and lodging were to be a part of the employees' compensation, but these employees were required by their contracts to "accept" them and were "on duty while eating the meals" and "subject to call at all times while receiving the lodging". Defendant had other employees who did not receive board or lodging and the cash wages were the same in both cases "for the same kind and amount of work performed", but these other employees were not on duty or on call for supervision and discipline as were those who did receive board and lodging.

[2] Section 11 of the act above mentioned defines the term "wages". As first enacted in 1935, the definition was: "the amount of money received as compensation for the service rendered, including commissions and bonuses and the reasonable value of board, rent, housing, lodging or similar advantage received from the employer." The 1937 amendment defined "wages" to mean "all remuneration payable for personal services, including commissions and bonuses and the cash value of all remuneration payable in any medium other than cash". We cannot ascertain from the findings when the contributions for which judgment was rendered accrued and hence cannot determine whether both or only one of the above-quoted definitions must be applied to them. This, however, does not affect our decision, for as far as these definitions affect the present case, we see no substantial difference between them. Either is entirely adequate to include without any doubt meals and lodging furnished by the employer to the employee in return for services rendered.

[3, 4] Defendant's claim is that the meals and lodging were furnished and consumed merely for the convenience of the employer and hence are not to be reckoned as part of the wages paid. Judicial decisions and administrative rulings are cited to us by the defendant in which this so-called "convenience rule" is followed in applying income tax laws. In some of these cases the facts are not so far from those here as to indicate any certain ground for distinguishing them; but, nevertheless, we prefer not to follow them. The income tax law is purely a revenue measure, and upon the rule of strict construction applied to such laws, its scope may well be restrained to such matters as are clearly covered by it. Here we have a statute which, while it requires a "contribution" that in itself may possibly be regarded as a tax, has a much broader object than the mere raising of revenue. It sets up a scheme for ameliorating the hardships of unemployment, and undertakes, in conjunction with the United States Government, to pay unemployment benefits to those who, without fault of their own, are out of work, to impose the financial burden of doing this upon both employers and employees, and to measure both burden and benefits by the amount of compensation paid to employees when they are working. It is important to the attainment of the last-mentioned purpose that the real compensation be not minimized or concealed by embodying it in other forms than money payments. Hence the insertion, in the statutory definitions of "wages" above quoted, of words obviously intended to include therein every benefit or advantage which an employee receives from his employer by reason of the service he renders. In view of the purpose of these provisions they should not be whittled down by narrow construction, nor should exceptions not clearly justified by their language be engrafted upon them by judicial interpretation.

More nearly analogous than the income tax laws to the statute now under consideration are the workmen's compensation laws. A similar question has arisen in determining what are wages under the laws last mentioned, and the decisions upon it have, in the main, taken a more liberal view than those upon income tax laws. In Bernstein v. Beth Israel Hospital, 1923, 236 N.Y. 268, 140 N.E. 694, 30 A.L.R. 598, the court had under consideration the New York Workmen's Compensation Law, Consol.Laws, c. 67, which contained a definition of wages substantially the same (except that it did not include the words "commissions and bonuses") as the definition contained in our statute now under consideration when it was first adopted in 1935. Applying this law to an interne in a hospital, who received no pay other than board, lodging and hospital uniforms, and who was under duty to spend his days and nights at the hospital and to render any service exacted by the hospital, within the range prescribed by propriety and custom, the court, speaking through Cardozo, J., held that such interne was an employee and that his right to an award was not defeated by the fact that he received no money for his services, but only lodging, board and uniforms. Since an award under the statute could be made only for a percentage of the compensation (wages, as defined in the statute) received by an employee (a fact not mentioned in the opinion, but appearing on inspection of the statute), this decision necessarily held that the board and lodging there involved were wages, although undoubtedly as clear a case of convenience of the employer from their furnishing appeared as in any decision where the "convenience rule" has been applied.

In O'Callahan v. Dermedy, 1923, 197 Iowa 632, 196 N.W. 10, 13, 197 N.W. 456, where workmen's compensation was to be computed on the basis of the employee's "salary, wages or earnings in the employment", Code Supp.1913, § 2477m15(a), the court held this provision "is sufficiently broad and comprehensive to include board and lodging that are furnished to the employé under the contract of hiring as a part of the compensation", and therefore the cash value of board and lodging furnished to a hotel clerk should be taken into account in making an award to him.

In American Surety Co. v. Underwood, Tex.Civ.App., 1934, 74 S.W.2d 551, the workmen's compensation law defined wages as including the market value of board and lodging which the employee receives as part of his remuneration, and it was held that this included amounts paid to a travelling salesman to reimburse him for his expenditures for board and lodging while travelling, although he maintained a home at which he resided when not travelling.

In Maryland Casualty Co. v. Geary, 1932, 123 Neb. 851, 244 N.W. 797, 798, it appeared that a travelling truck driver received $10 a week plus the cost of his meals and lodging, and the court held that such cost of meals and lodging should be included in his wages in making an award to him under the workmen's compensation law, in the face of a provision in that law that board and lodging should not be included unless the money value thereof was fixed at the time of hiring. The court said: "Were it not for the statutory limitation above quoted, there would be no doubt that the meals and lodging furnished by the employer would constitute a part of the employee's weekly wage", and further held that, on a liberal construction of the law, the same result could be reached notwithstanding the provision referred to.

Other decisions applying the same rule to workmen's compensation cases are reviewed in a note at 84 A.L.R. 188; see also Copeland v. Martin Metal Mfg. Co., 1935, 141 Kan. 725, 42 P.2d 982, 985, to same effect.

Social security laws are so recent that apparently there are no judicial decisions construing them on the point here involved; at least none are cited to us and we have found none. Two administrative rulings which appear to result from the same view of the matter held by us have been called to our attention. Internal Revenue Cumulative Bulletin 1937-1 at page 380 sets forth an opinion that under the Federal Social Security Act, 42 U.S.C.A. § 301 et seq., the value of board and lodging, uniforms and laundry furnished to student nurses in a hospital, who receive no salary, is to be regarded as wages.

Another such opinion, published in Internal Revenue Cumulative Bulletin 1938-2, p. 323, dealt with board and lodging furnished to employees of a sanatorium located in an isolated mountainous region, who were hired with the understanding that they were to remain available for duty on call and were to "accept" the board and lodging provided. The definition of wages in the Federal statute, 42 U.S.C.A. § 1107, was substantially the same (except that it omitted "commissions and bonuses") as that contained in the 1937 version of our statute, above quoted. This opinion held that such board and lodging were wages, for the purposes of the Federal Statute, although there was a regulation excluding from that category "facilities or privileges * * * furnished by the employer merely as a convenience to the employer", saying, of this regulation, that "The provisions do not ordinarily have application to such items as board and lodging." Reference was also made to the fact that many of the employees who did not receive board and lodging received larger cash remuneration than those who did. This, of course, tended to show that the board and lodging were substituted for a part of the money otherwise payable to the employee and were therefore regarded by the parties as compensation.

[5, 6] This suggests, and we think it is true, that the real question arising under the so-called "convenience rule" is whether the board, lodging or other facility furnished to the employee is in fact a part of his compensation for services rendered. If it is, it must be included as a part of his wages, at least under the law now in question, no matter how greatly the employer may be convenienced by the acceptance of such board, lodging or other facility by the employee. Defendant points to the facts found that the employees here who received board and lodging also received the same cash wages as other employees "for the same kind and amount of work performed", and that the furnishing of board and lodging to the employees who received them "was not treated as a part of the compensation" in the contracts of hiring, or held out as such by the defendant. But neither does it appear that there was any agreement that the board and lodging were not compensation, or that they were furnished solely for the defendant's convenience. Since the employees "were compelled by the defendant by virtue of their oral contracts of employment to accept said board and lodging", the contracts must have provided for the board and lodging without declaring whether they were to be regarded as compensation or not. This leaves the question open for consideration by the court, even if we concede that an express contract on the matter would be conclusive. Since the cash pay of those who received board and lodging was for the same kind and amount of services as were performed by the other employees who did not receive board and lodging and those other employees were not on duty or on call for purposes of discipline during meal and lodging times, it is obvious that the employees who did receive board and lodging rendered services not paid for by the cash wages, and that they received no pay at all therefor unless the board and lodging be so regarded. Under such circumstances, the trial court's conclusion that the board and lodging were wages is a reasonable one and must be affirmed.

[7-9] Appellant points to a rule made by the predecessor of plaintiff in 1936 (rescinded in 1937), directing that the value of living quarters and meals furnished for the convenience of the employer be not considered a part of wages, and to a more recent "Interpretive Opinion" of the present commission which, it is claimed, has the same effect, and argues that the plaintiff is in some way barred from abandoning the position thus taken and from now claiming that the board and lodging here in question were wages. We do not find the positions inconsistent, for the finding of the trial court here is, in effect, that the board and lodging were not furnished solely for the convenience of the employer; and they would therefore not be excluded from consideration by either the rule or the "Interpretive Opinion". But even were the plaintiff guilty of occupying inconsistent positions, we know of no rule of statute or constitution which prevents such an administrative board from doing so. Of course if in either position it undertakes to make rules which conflict with the clear meaning of the statute "they are simply void". Hodge v. McCall, 1921, 185 Cal. 330, 334, 197 P. 86, 88. If an estoppel can arise in such matters the ingredients of it are lacking here, for neither knowledge of nor reliance on the previous declarations of the commission by defendant, nor resulting action taken by it, appears in the record.

The judgment is affirmed, respondent to recover its costs of appeal.

BISHOP, J., concurs.

17 Cal.2d 576

CITY OF PASADENA v. CALIFORNIA–MICHIGAN LAND & WATER CO.

L. A. 16759.

Supreme Court of California.

March 8, 1941.

1. Waters and water courses ⇐191

Easements for the purpose of installing and maintaining water mains and connections thereto were not exclusive easements. Civ.Code, § 806.

2. Easements ⇐38

An "exclusive easement" is an unusual interest in land and amounts almost to a conveyance of the fee.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Exclusive Easement".

3. Easements ⇐38

The intention to convey an exclusive easement cannot be imputed to the owner of the servient tenement, in absence of a clear indication of such an intention.

4. Waters and water courses ⇐191

The right to lay underground pipes over the land of another is an "easement" and is governed generally by the rules of law which govern ordinary easements of way.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Easement".

5. Easements ⇐42

Where an easement is founded on a grant, only those interests expressed in the grant and those necessarily incident thereto pass from the owner of the fee.

6. Easements ⇐38

Generally, despite the granting of an easement, the owner of a servient tenement may make any use of the land that does not interfere unreasonably with the easement.

7. Easements ⇐38

The owner of the servient tenement is not required to make any reservation to protect his interests in the land, for what he does not convey, he still retains.

8. Easements ⇐52

Since the owner of a servient tenement retains the right to use land reasonably himself, he retains also the power to transfer those rights to third persons.

9. Waters and water courses ⇐191

Where owners of realty granted an easement to city to install and maintain water mains and connections thereto, and thereafter gave corporation a similar easement, right of corporation, and whether it was a permissive use, were to be determined by whether the owners of the servient tenements could have used the realty in that manner.

10. Easements ⇐38

Whether a particular use of realty by the servient owner or by someone acting under his authority is an unreasonable interference with an easement is a fact question for the jury.

11. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)

Where trial court, in action by city for injunction and for damages based on defendant's alleged past and threatened future invasion of easements owned by city, found that there was no unreasonable interference between defendant's easement and city's prior easement, and the finding was based on conflicting evidence, it would ordinarily be conclusive.

12. Easements ⇐44(2)

A specification of width and location of surface rights of way does not always determine the extent of the burden imposed on the servient land.

13. Waters and water courses ⇐191

The fact that owners of realty granted city easements "five feet in width" for the purpose of installing and maintaining water mains and connections, did not, as a matter of law, make the subsequent granting of similar easement by owners of realty to corporation at same place an interference with the city's easement.

14. Easements ⇐51

The grant of an unrestricted easement, not specifically defined as to the burden imposed on the servient land, entitles the easement holder to a use limited only by the requirement that it be reasonably necessary and consistent with the purposes for which the easement was granted.

15. Waters and water courses ⇐191

The grant by owners of realty to city of easements five feet in width for the purpose of installing and maintaining water mains and connections thereto granted to the city the right to make the fullest necessary use of the five-foot strip for the purpose named. Civ.Code, § 806.

16. Waters and water courses ⇐191

If city which was given first easement for purpose of installing and maintaining water mains and connections thereto should in the reasonable use of its prior easement require space occupied by pipes of water company having subsequent easement, the city's paramount right would prevail.

17. Waters and water courses ⇐191

Until a point of unreconcilable conflict between easement of city for installing and maintaining water mains and connections thereto and easement of a water company was reached, such a concurrent use of the easements for similar purposes should be governed by principles permitting an equitable adjustment of the conflicting interests, since the respective rights of the two parties were not absolute, but were required to be construed to permit a due and reasonable enjoyment of both interests so long as that was possible.

SHENK and CARTER, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collins, Judge.

Action by the City of Pasadena against the California-Michigan Land & Water Company for an injunction and for damages based on the defendant's alleged past and future invasion of certain easements owned by the plaintiff. From a judgment in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Harold P. Huls, City Atty., and Thomas W. LeSage, Deputy City Atty., both of Pasadena, for appellant.

Goodspeed, McGuire, Harris & Pfaff, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

This is an action for injunction and damages based on the defendant's alleged past and threatened future invasion of certain easements owned by the plaintiff. The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury, and from a judgment entered for the defendant the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The parties are competing vendors of water service in an unincorporated area situated between the cities of Arcadia and Pasadena. The defendant, under claim of right and with the admitted permission of the servient owners, installed water mains and service connections in certain five-foot easements theretofore granted to the plaintiff and partly occupied by its water mains and connections. This action was commenced by the plaintiff on the theory that the owners of the servient tenements had no power to grant easements similar to plaintiff's in the same five-foot strip of land to the defendant company, a competing distributor of water service. Plaintiff's contention was that it had a right to occupy the five-foot strip completely if the necessity arose, and that the defendant's installation substantially interfered both with plaintiff's present partial occupation of the land and with its possible future use of the land for its pipes and connections. The trial court found against the plaintiff and for the defendant upon conflicting evidence. In this appeal plaintiff contends primarily that the easement granted to the defendant was an unreasonable interference with its prior easement as a matter of law. It is asserted that there was no need to resort to evidence of the surrounding facts and circumstances, and that the court should have found for the plaintiff upon the ground that the defendant's mains interfere in law with the easement previously granted to the city, entirely apart from the question of physical interference upon which the trial court found against plaintiff. There is also a contention that the findings of the trial court are not supported by the evidence. We find ample evidence, however, to sustain the findings. We shall confine our opinion, therefore, to a consideration of the appellant's primary contention, that the easements granted to the defendant interfered with its prior easements as a matter of law.

[1-3] The easements involved in the present case are described as follows in the instrument creating them: "Easements for the purpose of installing and maintaining water mains and connections thereto * * * all of said easements being five feet in width, to-wit: a. In lots 1 to 12, both inclusive, along the south line thereof. * * *" This language eliminates at once the suggestion that appellant's easement was a so-called "exclusive easement". Under section 806 of the Civil Code "the extent of a servitude is determined by the terms of the grant * * *", and there is no language in this grant which indicates any intention to make the easement held by the City of Pasadena an exclusive one. Indeed, appellant does not make a serious claim that there was an intention to make this an exclusive easement; and any such intention would seem clearly contrary to the admitted facts, since prior easements in the same land were in effect at the time when appellant's easements were granted. Furthermore, an "exclusive easement" is an unusual interest in land; it has been said to amount almost to a conveyance of the fee. 2 Thompson, Real Property, 1939, § 578; Jones, Easements, § 378, p. 302. No intention to convey such a complete interest can be imputed to the owner of the servient tenement in the absence of a clear indication of such an intention. See Reiver v. Voshell, 18 Del.Ch. 260, 264, 158 A. 366; Jones, supra, § 379, p. 303.

[4-9] The determination of this appeal turns upon the rights which the owner of the servient tenement retains in the land over which he has granted an easement for the laying of water pipes. It is established that the right to lay underground pipes over the land of another is an easement and is governed generally by the rules of law which govern ordinary easements of way. Winslow v. City of Vallejo, 148 Cal. 723, 84 P. 191, 5 L.R.A.,N.S., 851, 113 Am. St.Rep. 349, 7 Ann.Cas. 851; Patterson v. Chambers' Power Co., 81 Or. 328, 348, 159 P. 568; Weil, Water Rights in the Western States, 3d Ed., § 458 et seq.; 17 Am.Jur. 983, 1002. Where the easement is founded upon a grant, as here, only those interests expressed in the grant and those necessarily incident thereto pass from the owner of the fee. The general rule is clearly established that, despite the granting of an easement, the owner of the servient tenement may make any use of the land that does not interfere unreasonably with the easement. Hoyt v. Hart, 149 Cal. 722, 87 P. 569; Durfee v. Garvey, 78 Cal. 546, 21 P. 302; Dierssen v. McCormack, 28 Cal. App.2d 164, 82 P.2d 212; Perley v. Cambridge, 220 Mass. 507, 513, 108 N.E. 494, L.R.A. 1915E, 432; 3 Tiffany, Real Property, 3d Ed., 1939, § 811. It is not necessary for him to make any reservation to protect his interests in the land, for what he does not convey, he still retains. Jones, Easements, § 391 et seq., p. 313. Furthermore, since he retains the right to use the land reasonably himself, he retains also the power to transfer these rights to third persons. Galletly v. Bockius, 1 Cal.App. 724, 727, 82 P. 1109; Hoyt v. Hart, supra, 149 Cal. page 728, 87 P. 569; 3 Tiffany, supra, § 811; 17 Am.Jur. 994, 995. Thus, in the instant case, the right of the defendant to use the particular land in controversy is derived from the owner of the servient tenements, and whether it is a permissible use is to be determined by whether the owner of the servient tenements could have used the land in that manner.

[10, 11] Whether a particular use of the land by the servient owner, or by someone acting with his authorization, is an unreasonable interference is a question of fact for the jury. See Frank v. Benesch, 74 Md. 58, 61, 21 A. 550, 28 Am.St.Rep. 237; Rowell v. Doggett, 143 Mass. 483, 488, 10 N.E. 182; Bakeman v. Talbot, 31 N.Y. 366, 370, 88 Am.Dec. 275; Jones, supra, § 394, p. 315; 2 Thompson, supra, § 584; 17 Am.Jur., 994, 995, 1008; Chapman v. Newmarket Mfg. Co., 74 N.H. 424, 68 A. 868, 15 L.R.A.,N.S., 293. In the present case, the trial court found that there was no such unreasonable interference, and this finding based upon conflicting evidence would ordinarily be conclusive.

Appellant urges the application of a different rule to the instant case upon the following grounds: That these easements are created by grant, and the language of the grant is so clear and definite that a court as a matter of law can define the relative rights of the parties from the instrument alone, without resorting to an examination of the surrounding facts and circumstances. This is said to be so because this is an easement of defined width and location, the theory being that where the easement has a defined width, the easement holder has the right to occupy it to the full width if it ever desires to do so. Therefore, it is asserted, any use of the strip of land for laying other water pipes should be held to be unreasonable interference as a matter of law.

[12] Appellant relies upon cases which hold that a surface right of way of defined width gives the easement holder the absolute right to occupy the surface to that width whenever he chooses. These cases depend upon the theory that the easement granted is completely and clearly defined because the width and location of the right of way is specified in the grant. See, for example, Ballard v. Titus, 157 Cal. 673, 110 P. 118; Herman v. Roberts, 119 N.Y. 37, 23 N.E. 442, 7 L.R.A. 226, 16 Am.St.Rep. 800. They do not necessarily require a similar conclusion where the easement is for the limited purpose of laying underground water pipes to serve the surrounding property with water for domestic purposes. There is a clear distinction in purpose between a right of way over the surface of the land to be used by moving vehicles and an easement for the laying of water mains in a relatively fixed and permanent position. In the case of an easement for laying underground water pipes there are important factors to be considered in addition to the width and location of the easement. These include, for example, the number and size of the pipes, the right to shift the pipes around at will, and the depth at which the pipes are to be laid. To state the point more generally, with such an easement the extent of the burden which the parties intend to impose upon the servient tenement is not definitely fixed merely by a specification of width and location. Indeed, even with surface rights of way, a specification of width and location does not always determine the extent of the burden imposed upon the servient land. See Johnson v. Kinnicutt, 2 Cush. 153, 56 Mass. 153, 157; Smith & Sons Carpet Co. v. Ball, 143 App.Div. 83, 127 N.Y.S. 974.

[13] Appellant's position does not take into consideration the difference between the burden which the easement imposes upon the servient land and the location at which the burden is to be imposed. In Winslow v. Vallejo, supra, a case which is strongly relied upon by appellant, the court holds that where the grant is indefinite the court may consider additional factors in determining the extent of the burden intended to be imposed upon the land. At page 725 of 148 Cal., at page 192 of 84 P., 5 L.R.A.,N.S., 851, 113 Am.St. Rep. 349, 7 Ann.Cas. 851, the court says: "But the conveyance is general in its terms and affords no basis for determining the number of pipes, their size, or their exact location." It is here recognized that there are factors other than mere location to be considered, and that the extent of the burden is not determined merely by fixing the location of such an easement. It is, of course, possible to draft an instrument which would fully define both the location and the burden of the easement, or which would make the easement exclusive. But the very general language used in the instrument under consideration here cannot be given any such effect. Considering the fact that these easements were granted for the limited purpose of securing domestic water service for the individual owners in this real estate subdivision and that no indication appears that the parties intended to protect the city against competition, we are unable to find any intent, either expressed or implied, that the owners were never to grant similar easements to anyone else. Hence, the mere granting of the second easement to the defendant did not interfere with appellant's prior easement as a matter of law. Whether the particular use under a second easement amounts to an unreasonable interference is, as we have heretofore pointed out, a question of fact, and the finding, made upon conflicting evidence, that defendant's use of its easement was not such an unreasonable interference is conclusive upon the question so far as this appeal is concerned.

[14, 15] We do not wish to be understood, however, as limiting the rights granted to the City of Pasadena under its easements which were properly found to be prior and paramount to those of the defendant. The rule is established that the grant of an unrestricted easement, not specifically defined as to the burden imposed upon the servient land, entitles the easement holder to a use limited only by the requirement that it be reasonably necessary and consistent with the purposes for which the easement was granted. Murphy Chair Co. v. Radiator Co., 172 Mich. 14, 28, 137 N.W. 791; Chapman v. Newmarket Mfg. Co., 74 N.H. 424, 425, 68 A. 868; Dalton v. Levy, 258 N.Y. 161, 167, 179 N.E. 371; Fendall v. Miller, 99 Or. 610, 615, 196 P. 381; see 15 L.R.A.,N.S., 292; 2 Thompson, supra, § 572, p. 175; 3 Tiffany, supra, § 803, p. 323; 17 Am.Jur. 994, 996. The language of the easements here involved does not sufficiently define the burden intended to be imposed so that defendant's easement can be termed an unreasonable interference as a matter of law, but neither does it restrict the right granted to the City of Pasadena to make the fullest necessary use of the five-foot strip.

[16, 17] It is possible that the city may, at some future time, be faced with the necessity of expanding or changing its present system, and on its behalf it is asserted that the presence of defendant's pipes may seriously hamper the reasonable use of the city's prior easement under such circumstances. But if, in the reasonable use of its prior easement, the city requires the space occupied by the pipes of the defendant, its paramount right must prevail. In Colegrove Water Co. v. Hollywood, 151 Cal. 425, 90 P. 1053, 13 L.R.A., N.S., 904, plaintiff sought to make use of the servient tenement for laying water pipes despite the fact that an easement for highway purposes had already been granted to the defendant municipality. The court permitted this after a finding that the water pipes would not interfere with the use then being made of the highway easement by the city and added (151 Cal. page 429, 90 P. page 1055, 13 L.R.A.,N.S., 904): "* * * but the municipality may, and frequently does, occupy the soil beneath the surface for the accommodation of sewers, gas and water pipes, electric wires, and conduits for railroads. Where the city undertakes to occupy the space above or below the surface of the street for any purpose within the scope of the public uses to which highways may be put, the use by the owner of the fee must yield to the public use." Until a point of unreconcilable conflict is reached, however, such a concurrent use of the land for similar purposes as is illustrated here should be governed by principles permitting an equitable adjustment of the conflicting interests. The respective rights of the two parties are not absolute, but must be construed to permit a due and reasonable enjoyment of both interests so long as that is possible. Murphy Chair Co. v. Radiator Co., supra; Bakeman v. Talbot, 31 N.Y. 366, 369, 88 Am.Dec. 275; Pomeroy v. Salt Co., 37 Ohio St. 520, 524; Minto v. Salem Water, etc., Co., 120 Or. 202, 212, 250 P. 722; 3 Tiffany, supra, § 811, p. 355; 17 Am.Jur. 993.

In Murphy Chair Co. v. Radiator Co., supra, successive rights of way in the same land were involved and the court held that both easements could be used simultaneously under the existing facts, but indicated that the subsequent grant must be considered subordinate if it should ever interfere with the reasonable use of the prior easement. In Pomeroy v. Salt Co., supra, 37 Ohio St. page 524, the court held that the holder of an underground easement for the purpose of mining coal could not object to the placing of a second tunnel which would intersect his and would cross it at the same level. The court was clearly of the opinion that the prior easement was paramount but said that the second tunnel would not interfere substantially with the first easement under the existing facts. The proper rule is indicated by the language of the court in Bakeman v. Talbot, supra, 31 N.Y. page 369, 88 Am.Dec. 275, in which a conflict arose between the use by the holder of the easement and the use by the landowner. The court said: "The defendant [landowner] certainly has no right to preclude the plaintiff [easement holder] from availing himself of the right of passage, or to render the exercise of that right unusually or unreasonably difficult or burthensome. I think he is not shown to have done so. * * * There is nothing inconsistent in holding, that the present arrangements are suitable and sufficient under existing circumstances; and after these circumstances have changed, and the question shall arise as to what shall then be proper, to determine that a passage perpetually open or a system of gates better adapted to such increased use * * * shall be required of the defendant. It would not be right at this time * * * to furnish facilities for a state of affairs which may never arise, or which may not arise until some remote period."

Under the present facts no basis is shown for the relief sought. Whether a different conclusion may be required by changed circumstances in the future cannot now be determined with certainty, and need not therefore be decided.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TRAYNOR, J.; CURTIS, J.; EDMONDS, J.

SHENK, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent.

Plaintiff City of Pasadena and defendant California-Michigan Land & Water Company are rival vendors of water service in an unincorporated area situated between the cities of Arcadia and Pasadena. A controversy arose between them about April, 1937, when defendant, acting under a claim of right, installed water mains and service connections in certain five-foot easements already occupied by the water mains and connections of plaintiff. In the month of June plaintiff filed the present action for injunction and damages, seeking relief from the alleged past and threatened future invasion of its easement rights by defendant. Trial of the cause resulted in entry of a judgment for defendant, from which plaintiff has appealed.

The easements involved are four in number, one paralleling the north side and one the south side of Arcadia avenue, and one the north and one the south side of Fairview avenue. These avenues lie within tract 3747 in the unincorporated territory, and are bounded on the west by Rosemead boulevard and on the east by the Arcadia city limits. The A. B. Chapman estate was the original owner of the entire territory and had its own irrigation system. During the years 1920-1922, it subdivided tract 3747, and put water mains and service connections along the length of Arcadia and Fairview avenues for distances of 1581 and 1666 feet, respectively. On June 30, 1931, it conveyed a number of parcels of property to the city, together with its water system. Easement rights in the area traversed by the water pipes running parallel to the two avenues were expressly granted to the city by language in the deed as follows: "Easements for the purpose of installing and maintaining water mains and connections thereto in the lots hereinafter described in tract No. 3747 * * * and located on such lots as hereinafter set out (the 51 lots bordering the two avenues); all of said easements being five feet in width, to wit: (description of property). * * *"

The deed further recited that the properties were conveyed subject to certain prior easements, one of which was an easement to defendant "for pipe line purposes over the east six feet" of the property adjacent to its junction with the Arcadia city limits.

The city continued, after its purchase, to maintain and use the mains, meters and service connections installed by its grantor, and at the time the present controversy arose it was serving about 24 consumers on Arcadia avenue. Its charter empowered it to engage in this activity without the city limits. Pasadena Charter, Art. I, sec. 2, sub. 20, Stats.1933, p. 2757; see, also, Constitution, Art. XI, sec. 19.

Defendant company was also in the business of selling water and since 1913 had operated under supervision of the railroad commission in the general area of the unincorporated territory wherein the property here involved is located. As a part of its distribution system defendant maintained a water main along Rosemead boulevard and also one bordering the westerly boundary of the Arcadia city limits. The latter main, at points of intersection at right angles with the city's Fairview and Arcadia avenue mains, traversed the six-foot prior easement of defendant described in the city's deed as aforesaid. It is conceded that for many years prior to the city's grant, defendant was in a position to serve consumers along Fairview and Arcadia avenues, but that it made no effort to reach them until about the year 1937, when growth of the area was sufficient to invite competition.

In December, 1936, defendant procured from each lot owner along Arcadia avenue between Rosemead boulevard and the Arcadia city limits a written license or grant for water service which purported to convey to it an easement practically identical with the easement already owned by the city, to wit: "Forever, subject and in subordination to any prior right of any other public utility, the right to lay, maintain, repair, renew and enlarge, as necessary or convenient, such water mains, gates, service connections, meters and water distribution equipment as may hereafter from time to time be found necessary or convenient, in connection with said water utility service, along and across the five feet of the said respective parcels of the undersigned grantors, and each of them, next adjoining any public highway as may exist from time to time. * * *"

During the week of April 13th to 20th, 1937, defendant installed mains in the north and south five-foot strips paralleling Arcadia avenue, together with meter boxes and service pipes. It then commenced to supply water to all of the twenty-four consumers on the avenue except two who continued to use the city's service.

This situation precipitated the filing of the present action. The amended complaint contained three counts. The first count alleged that defendant's installation of mains in the property strips along Arcadia avenue was without right and interfered with the city's present and planned future enjoyment of its easements; and that, if not enjoined, the presence and continued use of said mains by defendant would ripen into a right under the doctrine of intervening public interest, to the city's irreparable injury. The second count alleged similar facts as to the Fairview avenue easements, except that the injury there was of a threatened nature, as defendant had not actually installed mains in those easements. According to the third count, defendant's acts had caused a $3,000 depreciation in the value of the city's easements. The prayer of the pleading was that defendant be enjoined from installing or maintaining water mains and connections in plaintiff's easements, that it be compelled by mandatory order to remove those already installed, and that it pay $3,000 damages, together with costs of suit. Defendant joined issue by answer, denying among other things that the city had ever possessed or enjoyed any right to exclusive use of the easements.

It was undisputed on the trial that at numerous points along Arcadia avenue, defendant's main approached to within about one foot of the city's main, and that such proximity could not fail to inconvenience the city to some degree in its maintenance, use, repair, replacement or future enlargement or relocation of main and pipes. Defendant claimed, however, that its interference was not so substantial or unreasonable as to entitle the city to relief, and there was evidence both for and against this claim. The conflict of proof was resolved by the trial court in favor of defendant. It found that neither the terms of the city's grant, nor the manner of its use, established any exclusive right in the easements; that defendant's installation of mains along Arcadia avenue did not substantially or unreasonably interfere with any present or projected future enjoyment of the easements by the city, nor would the city be injured by a similar use along Fairview avenue; and that it would be inequitable to defendant and detrimental to the public good and welfare to compel it to remove its installation.

The judgment entered on these findings determined that the city is the owner of the easements claimed by it; that said easements are not exclusive but that the city's rights therein (other than to the aforementioned easterly six feet) are prior and paramount to the rights of defendant. It also decreed that defendant has the right, subject to permission of the fee owners of the servient lots, to install and maintain water mains and connections in the portions of the easements in which the city owns superior rights, provided such use does not unreasonably or substantially interfere with the city's proper use; and that defendant's present use of the easements along Arcadia avenue is with permission of the fee owners of the servient lots, and does not unreasonably or substantially interfere with the city's proper superior use thereof.

On this appeal from the judgment, the major contention is that the trial court erred in failing to conclude as a matter of law that defendant's invasion of the city's easements was without right. As the point appears to me to be well taken, it will be unnecessary to discuss the city's secondary contention, that the trial court likewise erred in failing to find as a matter of fact that defendant's acts interfered unreasonably with the city's present and future use and occupancy of the easements.

According to the terms of the grant to the city of June 30, 1931, easements in the property described were conveyed to it "for the purpose of installing and maintaining water mains and connections thereto * * * all of said easements being five feet in width. * * *" The Civil Code, section 806, provides that "the extent of a servitude is determined by the terms of the grant, or the nature of the enjoyment by which it was acquired." This is in accord with the general rule that the extent of an easement by grant is determinable by a true construction of the conveyance. Doubtful language therein is to be construed in favor of the grantee, and the entire instrument is to be considered in the light of surrounding circumstances which have a legitimate tendency to show the intention of the parties. If the grant is specific in its terms, it is decisive of the limits of the easement. 17 Am.Juris. § 97, p. 995; Thompson on Real Property, Perm. Ed., vol. 1, § 368, p. 595; 9 Cal.Jur. p. 950, § 6.

The language of the present grant is specific in conveying to the city easements five feet in width for water mains and connections, but it contains no express statement that the easements are "exclusive". It is defendant's position that the absence of this word from the grant renders it doubtful in meaning, and requires application of the equally well-settled rule that "where a grant of an easement is general as to the extent of the burden to be imposed on the servient tenement, an exercise of the right, with the acquiescence and consent of both parties, in a particular course or manner, fixes the right, and limits it to the particular course or manner in which it has been enjoyed." Winslow v. City of Vallejo, 148 Cal. 723, 84 P. 191, 5 L.R.A., N.S., 851, 113 Am.St.Rep. 349, 7 Ann.Cas. 851, and authorities above cited. Defendant argues that as the easements were conveyed to the city subject to certain prior easements, such as defendant's own prior right to the use of six feet, and as the evidence adduced on the trial showed that the property undoubtedly is also traversed or crossed at right angles by gas pipes, the manner of user by the city has established the nature of its easements as nonexclusive; that therefore the right remained in the city's grantor as fee owner, and passed from it on subdivision of the tract to purchasers of lots therein, to make any use or disposition of the property not inconsistent with interests already conveyed away, including the right to create any number of further easements so long as they were not such as would interfere unreasonably with the enjoyment of the non-exclusive easements already granted to the city and others.

This argument is not convincing. From the fact that it is settled as a general proposition that the owner of a servient estate retains a right to use his property for any purposes consistent with the enjoyment of the easement. (Hoyt v. Hart, 149 Cal. 722, 728, 87 P. 569; Dierssen v. McCormack, 28 Cal.App.2d 164, 82 P.2d 212), it does not follow that where an easement of definite width and specified location has been granted for a particular purpose, the omission of the word "exclusive" from the grant, or the failure of the grantee to presently occupy the property to the full width, will under all circumstances leave the servient owner with the right to create any number of concurrent easements for identical use of the same land. Under some circumstances, as in the case of an easement for a way over the surface of the ground, or for the conveyance of a specified amount of water in an open ditch, a grant may be correctly construed as non-exclusive and permitting concurrent identical uses. Hoyt v. Hart, supra. But even in cases of this type, where the way over the surface of the ground is one of expressly defined width, it is held that the owner of the easement has the right, free of interference by the owner of the servient estate, to use to the limits of the defined width even if the result is to give him a wider way than necessary. Ballard v. Titus, 157 Cal. 673, 681, 110 P. 118. The circumstances which attend the use of an easement for the installation, maintenance, and use of pipes underground are different from those which attend the use of a surface easement, and frequently require a different construction of the grant. In the leading case of Winslow v. City of Vallejo, supra, a grant was made in general terms to defendant city of a right of way over described land "for any water pipes or mains" which it might lay. The city originally installed a 10-inch main, but years later when that main had become inadequate, undertook to lay an additional 14-inch main within three feet of it. Applying the general rule previously quoted herein, this court held that as the grant was general in its terms, the limit and extent of the city's right had become fixed by the manner of its original user and could not be enlarged to include the right to lay additional pipes. But the court also indicated that if the terms of the grant had not been so general, a different result might have followed, saying: "It is, of course, true, that for the purpose of ascertaining the extent and limits of the right granted the entire instrument is to be considered, in view of the circumstances surrounding its execution, and the situation of the parties. Herman v. Roberts, 119 N.Y. 37, 23 N.E. 442, 7 L.R.A. 226, 16 Am.St.Rep. 800. And if the language of the grant in question, viewed in the light of all the conditions existing when it was executed, clearly gave to the defendant a right in excess of the one actually used, such right would still exist, notwithstanding the exercise for a time of a lesser privilege. Quigley v. Baker, 169 Mass. 303, 47 N.E. 1007."

From the rule of construction declared and applied in the above case, to wit: that "where a grant of an easement is general * * * an exercise of the right * * * limits it to the particular course or manner in which it has been enjoyed", it appears that the converse is likewise true, and where a grant of an easement is specific as to the extent of the burden to be imposed on the servient tenement and as to the width of a way to be occupied by pipes or mains, the terms of the grant and not the extent of the user define the rights of the grantee.

The grant of an easement of defined width to be used for pipes and mains will, in the absence of exceptional circumstances, convey a right in excess of a mere general easement of unspecified location such as that considered in the Winslow case; that is, it will convey a right to use the property to the full extent of the width stated in the grant. This is illustrated by the case of Hamaker v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 59 Cal.App. 642, 211 P. 265, 266, which involved an easement acquired by condemnation instead of by grant, but presented a question of application of the same rules of construction. The suit was one to quiet title, brought by plaintiff for the purpose of preventing defendant from enlarging its aqueduct traversing her property. The court upheld defendant's right to proceed with enlargement of the aqueduct, saying: "The principal ground urged for a reversal is that, since the defendant had constructed an aqueduct along the right of way acquired by condemnation, and had used the same for several years, the limit of the land occupied by such aqueduct is the limit of defendant's rights in the plaintiff's land citing Winslow v. City of Vallejo. * * * The right of way given the defendant by the judgment of condemnation, however, was a definitely described parcel of land, with no limit upon the character of improvement to be constructed, except that it was to be an aqueduct for the conveyance of water. * * * In Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Polhemus [3 Cir.], 178 F. 904, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 465, 102 C.C.A. 105, where the trial court had held that the company was without the right to erect additional poles between those originally erected, it is said: 'We are clearly of opinion that the use of such additional poles as from time to time may be required to support the line is an incident to the old easement, and not a new one. It would be intolerable and at variance with salutary principles of law * * If an easement could be taken piecemeal, so to speak, and for a lesser purpose than for the entire use, for the full enjoyment of which the right of condemnation is alone conferred.' * * * It would be idle to condemn lands sufficient for prospective necessities if, when the necessity arose, the land could not be used without an additional condemnation."

By the same reasoning it would be idle to purchase easement rights in definitely described property sufficient to cover prospective necessities if, when the necessity arose, the additional use could be defeated by a lawful occupancy of the property by identical works of one or more subsequent grantees. In construing the present grant, effect must be given to the phrase, "all of said easements being five feet in width". This language is obviously not surplusage but serves to distinguish the grant from one of easements of undefined width, such as that considered in the Winslow case. The terms of the grant must be deemed to have contemplated the city's use of the property to the defined width for the installation, maintenance, repair, replacements, enlargement, or increase in number of water mains and connections, subject only to designated prior rights and consistent uses and free from danger of obstruction by incompatible competing uses. At the time of the grant there existed the possibility that the city might desire in the future to replace the mains with those of a larger size, or to relocate them within the five feet, or to lay additional mains. The language of the grant embraces these factors and indicates that the width of the easements may have been defined for the express purpose of protecting the city in the conduct of its present and future operations. Under the grant the city is entitled to protection not only in the exercise of its primary right but also in the exercise of its so-called "secondary easement" rights. "Secondary easements" are included in every easement and consist of the right, which must be exercised in such reasonable manner as not to increase injuriously the burden upon the servient tenement, to do such things as are necessary for the full enjoyment of the easement. Anderson v. Southern California Edison Co., 77 Cal.App. 328, 246 P. 559; North Fork Water Co. v. Edwards, 121 Cal. 662, 54 P. 69; McKinney's Cal. Digest, Vol. 9, p. 560, § 36.

The emphasis placed by defendant upon the quality of exclusiveness is a false quantity. A grant does not have to be specifically designated as "exclusive" in order to transfer to the grantee the entire right conveyed. The present grant conveyed the entire right to the use of the five feet for water mains and connections and left in the servient owner no right of identical use of the property which could pass through him to subsequent grantees or licensees, including the defendant. There remained in the servient owner, it is true, a right to use the property in any manner and for any purpose consistent and compatible with the city's enjoyment of its easements (Hoyt v. Hart, supra), but it may not be said that a grant to a third party by the servient owner, or his successor, of the identical right given the city would be consistent or compatible with the city's enjoyment. Even if it be conceded that the servient owner himself might have maintained a water main across the property for his own purposes without interfering unreasonably with the city's right, it would not follow that the servient owner could grant a like right to a third party to use the easement for conducting operations in direct competition with the city without unreasonably invading and interfering with the city's right. That such a competing use constitutes an unreasonable interference is brought out by the facts of the present case which show that it enabled the defendant to gain the patronage of 22 of the 24 consumers who had theretofore used the city's water service.

Defendant seeks to classify the easement as one of a particular type which it denominates a "public utility strip", intended to be reserved by the original owner for the common use of all public utilities desiring to traverse the property with their pipes and mains. There is nothing in the wording of the grant to sustain this view nor are we cited to any authority which gives to any interest in real property or easement the legal classification of a "public utility strip." No question is presented on this appeal as to the right of the servient owner, or his grantee or licensee, to make additional use of the easement for purposes not in competition with the city's operations, such as for gas or sewage mains.

The fact that the city has not yet used the easement to the full extent of the right of way and defined width described in the grant is immaterial, for it is well settled that an easement created by grant is not lost by mere nonuser. City of Vallejo v. Scally, 192 Cal. 175, 219 P. 63, and cases cited; Currier v. Howes, 103 Cal. 431, 37 P. 521; Parker v. Swett, 40 Cal.App. 68, 180 P. 351.

The record shows that the commencement of this suit by the city was timely. Defendant's invasion of the Arcadia avenue easement occurred during the week of April 13-20, 1937, and installation of its works was completed in that period. On what date the city first received notice of the trespass, the record does not show, but even if it received immediate notice, the construction was completed too quickly to charge the city with laches or estoppel for failure to attempt to halt its progress by legal proceedings. The city's original complaint herein was seasonably filed on June 22, 1937.

The city is faced with irreparable injury in that continued actual and threatened occupancy of its easements by defendant might result in impairment or loss of its right through operation of the doctrines of prescription, adverse possession, estoppel, or intervention of the public use. The city is therefore entitled, irrespective of the issue of damages, to full protection of its rights. Danielson v. Sykes, 157 Cal. 686, 109 P. 87; Mendelson v. McCabe, 144 Cal. 230, 77 P. 915, 103 Am.St.Rep. 78; Tiffany, Real Property, 3d Ed., vol. 3, p. 364, § 815; 14 Cal.Jur. p. 221, § 34. It is also entitled to recover damages, if any, which it may have suffered by reason of defendant's acts.

The judgment should be reversed.

I concur: CARTER, J.

17 Cal.2d 534

WEBSTER v. BOARD OF DENTAL EXAMINERS OF CALIFORNIA.

L. A. 17634.

Supreme Court of California.

March 6, 1941.

Dissenting Opinion March 11, 1941.

Rehearing Denied April 3, 1941.

1. Physicians and surgeons ⇐11(3)

Where the Legislature has created a professional board such as the Board of Dental Examiners and has conferred on it power to administer the provisions of a general regulatory plan governing the members of the profession, such a board is not required to conduct its proceedings for the revocation of a license in accordance with theories developed in the field of criminal law on matters of evidence. St.1937, pp. 1247-1249, §§ 1670-1680.

2. Appeal and error ⇐989

Where an appellant contends that there was no evidence to support a judgment, the Supreme Court need inquire only whether there was evidence of a substantial nature to support the judgment of the court below.

3. Appeal and error ⇐996

Where reasonable minds might differ on the inferences to be drawn from a particular set of facts, the appellate court will not substitute its own conclusions for those reached by the trial court.

4. Physicians and surgeons ⇐10

The statute prohibiting any advertising to guarantee any dental service does not merely forbid a contractual guarantee of a particular dental service, but it was designed to prohibit advertising inducing the reader to believe that the dentist proposed to guarantee a particular result. St.1937, p. 1249, § 1680(17).

5. Physicians and surgeons ⇐10

Where dentist advertised that new material from which dental plates were made would not change in color and would not stain, shrink, or warp and that plates were faithful reproductions of natural gums and teeth in true color, size, and form and were made to defy detection, the Board of Dental Examiners and the trial court properly found that dentist had violated statute prohibiting any advertising to "guarantee" any dental service. St.1937, p. 1249, § 1680(17).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Guarantee".

6. Physicians and surgeons ⇐10

Where dentist advertised that material used for dental plates was made from a secret formula and referred to his plates as "immediate restoration plates", and he testified that he had no secret material not available to the entire profession and that his methods were no different from those in general use, the Board of Dental Examiners and the trial court properly determined that advertising had a character tending to deceive or mislead the public within statutory prohibition. St.1937, p. 1249, § 1680(11).

7. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐68(1)

The provision of the Business and Professions Code prohibiting the making use of any advertising statements of a character tending to deceive or mislead the public does not prohibit only statements which are untrue. St.1937, p. 1249, § 1680(11).

8. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition ⇐68(1)

Legislation intended to reach the evils of deceptive advertising should not be interpreted to require proof of actual reliance on a false statement knowingly made as in a common-law action in deceit.

9. Physicians and surgeons ⇐10

The statutes regulating the practice of dentistry particularly with respect to advertising should not be accorded a more stringent construction than similar statutes regulating ordinary commercial advertising. St. 1937, p. 1249, § 1680(11, 12, 17).

10. Appeal and error ⇐761

Where a certain point was not developed in the briefs of either party and no cases were cited to sustain appellant's position, the Supreme Court could with propriety affirm the judgment below with respect to that contention without further discussion.

11. Trial ⇐395(1)

General findings in the words of a complaint are a sufficient compliance with the requirement of making findings of fact.

12. Physicians and surgeons ⇐11(3)

The statute stating that a dentist's license may be revoked or suspended for specified causes requires that the Board of Dental Examiners find the existence of at least one of the grounds specified as a basis for its order revoking or suspending a license. St.1937, pp. 1247–1249, §§ 1670–1680.

13. Physicians and surgeons ⇐11(3)

In absence of a statutory requirement, the reviewing court may not imply the necessity of a completely detailed statement of grounds for the determination of the Board of Dental Examiners revoking or suspending a license. St.1937, pp. 1247–1249, §§ 1670–1680.

14. Physicians and surgeons ⇐11(3)

Where the finding of the Board of Dental Examiners, either by a restatement of the charge made or by reference to the language of the accusation, sufficiently points out the specific ground on which it has determined that a cause for suspension or revocation of a license exists, an order so based cannot be said to be void, however much the reviewing court might prefer a more detailed statement of the grounds for the order. St. 1937, pp. 1247–1249, §§ 1670–1680.

CARTER, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Edward J. Kelly, Judge.

Petition by William L. Webster for a writ of mandate to compel the Board of Dental Examiners of California to reinstate petitioner's license to practice dentistry. From a judgment denying the petition, petitioner appeals.

Affirmed.

Prior opinion, 103 P.2d 442.

Rehearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

Charles E. Burch, Jr., and Irwin R. Hazen, both of San Diego, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny and Morris E. Cohn, both of Los Angeles, amici curiæ for appellant; for California Progressive Dentists Ass'n.

H. E. Lindersmith, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Anthony J. Kennedy, of Sacramento, amici curiæ for respondent; for Southern California State Dental Ass'n and California State Dental Ass'n.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

This is an appeal from the decision of the Superior Court of San Diego county which denied appellant's petition for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent Board of Dental Examiners to reinstate his license to practice dentistry. In accordance with the provisions of the Business and Professions Code, secs. 1670–1680, St.1937, pp. 1247–1249, appellant's license was suspended by the Board for a period of six months for unprofessional conduct. Appellant sought to review the Board's order by this proceeding in mandamus. It was alleged in the petition that the statute was unconstitutional; that there was no evidence to support the findings of the Board; that if there was any evidence, it was wholly insufficient because the proceeding was quasi criminal in character; that the Board acted beyond its jurisdiction; that the Board was biased; and that the Board considered matters not properly before it. Each of these allegations was denied in the return to the alternative writ, and after a hearing on the record of the proceedings before the Board, the Superior Court rendered its judgment denying the relief sought. Findings of fact were expressly waived by the parties in open court.

Upon this appeal only three of these asserted errors are urged: (1) that there was no evidence before either the superior court or the Board to justify the order made; (2) that in view of the quasi criminal nature of the proceeding the evidence was insufficient to justify the order made; and (3) that the Board exceeded its jurisdiction by failing to make proper findings upon which to base its order of suspension.

The Board of Dental Examiners is a statutory body, consisting of seven members of the profession and charged with the duty of administering the provisions of the Dental Practice Act. Business and Professions Code, secs. 1600–1752. A similar board has existed in California since 1885 (Stats. 1885, p. 110) for the purpose of examining applicants and granting licenses to practice dentistry to properly qualified persons. Since 1909 the Board has had the power to revoke or suspend licenses for specified causes. Stats. 1909, p. 806. The revocation and suspension of professional licenses to practice dentistry by such an administrative board is sanctioned by long practice in this state and by the decisions of this court. Jacobs v. Board of Dental Examiners, 189 Cal. 709, 209 P. 1006; Homan v. Board of Dental Examiners, 202 Cal. 593, 262 P. 324; Painless Parker v. Board of Dental Examiners, 216 Cal. 285, 14 P.2d 67. In 1937 the legislature revised the Dental Practice Act and sought to specify with more particularity the kind of activity which comprises "unprofessional conduct" and thus constitutes grounds for the revocation or suspension of a license by the Board. Stats. 1937, p. 1248, Business and Professions Code, sec. 1680. In the present case appellant was charged with unprofessional conduct within three of the statutory definitions: (1) "The advertising of professional superiority or the performance of professional services in a superior manner" (sec. 1680 (12); (2) "The making use of any advertising statements of a character tending to deceive or mislead the public" (sec. 1680 (11); and (3) "The advertising to guarantee any dental service * * *" (sec. 1680 (17).

Appellant first challenges the order of suspension on the theory that administrative proceedings to revoke a professional license are quasi criminal in nature. It is suggested that the rules governing burden of proof, and quantum of proof must be those which apply in criminal trials, and that in consequence the Board used an improper standard in weighing the evidence. This analogy between a proceeding to revoke a license and a criminal trial is found in a number of the earlier cases. In some of the decisions, however, language describing the revocation of a license as penal in nature is entirely inapplicable to an administrative proceeding brought for that purpose, because in the particular case the legislature had provided for forfeiture of the professional license as an extra penalty to be added by the criminal court after a conviction for violation of the statute. See Cavassa v. Off, 206 Cal. 307, 312, 274 P. 523. In some states such a criminal proceeding is the ordinary way of accomplishing the revocation of a professional license. See Commonwealth v. Brown, 302 Mass. 523, 20 N. E.2d 478.

[1] Where, on the other hand, the legislature has created a professional board and has conferred upon it power to administer the provisions of a general regulatory plan governing the members of the profession, the overwhelming weight of authority has rejected any analogy which would require such a board to conduct its proceedings for the revocation of a license in accordance with theories developed in the field of criminal law. Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 187 P. 965; Lanterman v. Anderson, 36 Cal.App. 472, 172 P. 625; Ramsey v. Shelton, 329 Ill. 432, 160 N.E. 769; Spurgeon v. Rhodes, 167 Ind. 1, 78 N.E. 228; Meffert v. State Board, 66 Kan. 710, 72 P. 247, 1 L.R.A.,N.S., 811, affirmed per curiam Meffert v. Packer, 195 U.S. 625, 25 S.Ct. 790, 49 L.Ed. 350; In re Smith, 10 Wend., N.Y. 449; State ex rel. Hagen v. Superior Court, 139 Wash. 454, 247 P. 942; State v. Schaeffer, 129 Wis. 459, 109 N.W. 522; Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U.S. 505, 509, 23 S.Ct. 390, 47 L. Ed. 563; Butcher v. Maybury, D.C., 8 F. 2d 155. See 9 Wigmore, Evidence, 3d Ed., sec. 2498, pp. 327, 328; 48 C.J. 1101, sec. 73; 11 Calif.L.Rev. 273, 275. Many California cases have expressly rejected the contention that administrative proceedings for the revocation of a professional license are to be governed by criminal law theories on matters of evidence. Suckow v. Alderson, supra, 182 Cal. page 251, 187 P. 965; In re Vaughn, 189 Cal. 491, 496, 209 P. 353, 24 A.L.R. 858; Lanterman v. Anderson, supra, 36 Cal.App. at page 478, 172 P. 625; Thrasher v. Board of Medical Examiners, 44 Cal.App. 26, 29, 185 P. 1006; Winning v. Board of Dental Examiners, 114 Cal.App. 658, 664, 300 P. 866; Anderson v. Board of Medical Examiners, 117 Cal.App. 113, 117, 3 P.2d 344; Jameson v. Board of Dental Examiners, 118 Cal.App. 105, 5 P.2d 47; Bold v. Board of Medical Examiners, 135 Cal.App. 29, 34, 26 P.2d 707; Traxler v. Board of Medical Examiners, 135 Cal.App. 37, 39, 26 P.2d 710; cf. Gipner v. State Civil Service Comm., 13 Cal.App.2d 100, 106, 56 P.2d 535. The same rule is applied in administrative proceedings preliminary to orders of disbarment or suspension of attorneys. Despite early cases which speak in general terms of the analogy to a criminal prosecution (see Matter of Haymond, 121 Cal. 385, 53 P. 899), the rule that criminal law theories on matters of evidence are inapplicable to such proceedings was established at a time when disciplinary proceedings were still a matter for the courts alone (In re Vaughn, supra), and it has been followed since the adoption of the administrative procedure upon which orders of disbarment or suspension are at present based. In re Winne, 208 Cal. 35, 41, 280 P. 113; McIntosh v. State Bar, 211 Cal. 261, 263, 294 P. 1067; Fish v. State Bar, 214 Cal. 215, 222, 4 P.2d 937; Marsh v. State Bar, 2 Cal.2d 75, 78, 39 P.2d 403; Johnson v. State Bar, 4 Cal.2d 744, 758, 52 P.2d 928; Waterman v. State Bar, 14 Cal.2d 224, 227, 93 P.2d 95; 9 Cal.Jur.Ten Year Supp. 429 et seq.

Some of the cases relied upon by appellant are clearly distinguishable. Thus, Cavassa v. Off, supra, is not in point because there the legislature actually contemplated a criminal prosecution. The statement in Messner v. Board of Dental Examiners, 87 Cal.App. 199, 205, 262 P. 58, that such a proceeding is quasi criminal, is dictum. In that case the court held that a reasonable construction of the statute required that where one was charged with aiding and abetting an unlicensed person to practice dentistry, it must be shown that the unlicensed person had some control over the rendering of professional services. The court said that there was an entire absence of evidence to show any such management of the office by an unlicensed person as the statute contemplated. 87 Cal.App. at page 204, 262 P. 58. This lack of evidence upon a material issue required the annulment of the Board's order. The further statement that the proceedings were quasi criminal in nature is dictum which is contradicted so far as it relates to matters of evidence by the long line of cases cited above. Randall v. Board of Medical Examiners, 110 Cal.App. 61, 64, 293 P. 790, does not apply theories of criminal law to matters of evidence. The few remaining decisions which contain language tending to support petitioner's view are contrary to the great weight of authority in California and elsewhere, as pointed out above.

[2, 3] The second contention of appellant is that there was "no evidence whatsoever" before either the Board or the superior court to support the order of suspension. It should be observed here that this is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court denying relief to the appellant, and upon familiar principles this court need inquire only whether there was evidence of a substantial nature to support the judgment of the court below. Tupman v.

Haberkern, 208 Cal. 256, 262, 280 P. 970; Thom v. Stewart, 162 Cal. 413, 420, 122 P. 1069; 2 Cal.Jur. 912 et seq. Similarly, where reasonable minds might differ on the inferences to be drawn from a particular set of facts, the appellate court will not substitute its own conclusions for those reached by the trial court. Hamilton v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 12 Cal.2d 598, 603, 86 P.2d 829; Mah See v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 190 Cal. 421, 426, 213 P. 42, 26 A.L.R. 123; Hughes v. Quackenbush, 1 Cal.App.2d 349, 354, 37 P.2d 99; Hales v. Snowden, 19 Cal.App.2d 366, 372, 65 P.2d 847.

The evidence in the instant case included the advertisement itself and the testimony of appellant. If either the advertisement or the testimony offers any substantial support for the conclusion of the court below, the judgment must be affirmed. Appellant's argument is, in substance, that the advertising statements admittedly made by him do not constitute a violation of the terms of the statute. The language used by the appellant and the circumstances under which it was used are admitted. The application of the legal standard prescribed by the statute to the admitted facts requires a construction of the statutory provisions upon which both the Board and the court below were in agreement.

[4, 5] We need consider only two of the Board's determinations: first, that the statements in the advertisement constituted "advertising to guarantee" dental service; second, that they were "of a character tending to deceive or mislead the public". As to the first, the advertisement contained the following statements: "This new material * * * will absolutely not change in color. Does not stain from smoking, alcohol or alkaloids, will not shrink or warp", and also, "These new dental plates are so ably designed that Dr. Webster challenges you to detect any false appearance. * * * Each tooth is set so that it appears to be growing there. * * *" It also said, "Dr. Webster's Immediate Restoration Dentures or plates are faithful reproductions of your own natural gums and teeth, in their true color, size and form. These plates are made to defy detection * * * most intimate friends need not know that you are wearing artificial teeth."

Appellant's defense to this part of the charge, as nearly as can be discerned from his brief, is that the statements do not amount to a binding guarantee, and are too general to come within the statutory prohibition. It is plain that if his view were accepted, and the rules of contract thus imported into the statute, the purpose of the law would be defeated. The legislative intention is clearly seen in this and other portions of the statute. It was designed to prohibit advertising which induced the reader to believe that the dentist proposed to guarantee a particular result. The statute does not merely forbid a contractual guarantee of a particular dental service, but instead prohibits any "advertising to guarantee any dental service", that is, advertising which represents that a guarantee may be forthcoming. Under this interpretation, the conclusion of the Board and the trial court that the statements constitute a violation of the statute must be sustained.

[6] The Board further determined that the advertisement had a character tending to deceive or mislead the public. A few statements quoted therefrom will demonstrate the reasonableness of this conclusion. Appellant said, among other things, "Dr. Webster's Immediate Restoration Plate Material Weighs Less Than 1 Oz. This beautiful plate material * * * made from a secret formula, is a development of dental science which many plate wearers have been thankful for." and also, "Have Your Dental Plates Made 'The Webster Way' of Immediate Restoration." The ordinary reader is given the unmistakable impression by this language that appellant used a secret type of plate material not generally available, and that his plates were made according to a unique method called "'The Webster Way' of Immediate Restoration". Appellant testified, however, that he had no secret material not available to the entire profession, and that his methods were no different from those in general use.

[7, 8] On this phase of the case appellant advances the contention that only statements which are untrue are within the prohibition of the statute, and that these particular statements in the advertisement were not proven to be untrue. This contention wholly overlooks both the language and the purpose of the statute. The act refers to statements "of a character tending to deceive or mislead the public". (Business and Professions Code, sec. 1680 (11). It has been recognized in recent years that the evils of deceptive advertising cannot be reached effectively if legislation to that end is interpreted to require proof of actual reliance upon a false statement knowingly made, as in a common-law action in deceit. See Handler, "False and Misleading Advertising," (1929) 39 Yale L. Jour. 22; 53 Harv.L.Rev. 828; 31 Mich.L.Rev. 804. Even in criminal statutes using such words as "false or misleading", some courts have recognized and upheld the intention of the legislature to prohibit something more than merely those advertisements which are untrue. Taylor v. United States, 5 Cir., 80 F.2d 604, 605; People v. Wahl, 39 Cal.App. 2d Supp. 771, 773, 100 P.2d 550; cf. Commonwealth v. Ferris, 305 Mass. 233, 25 N. E.2d 378, 380; Jasnowski v. Judge of Recorder's Court, 192 Mich. 139, 158 N.W. 229; McCreary v. Cohen, 108 Fla. 421, 149 So. 208, 211, 89 A.L.R. 1004. In the field of ordinary commercial advertising, regulatory agencies which are charged with the duty of combatting false or misleading advertising are not required to prove that the particular deceptive statements are actually false. United States v. 95 Barrels of Vinegar, 265 U.S. 438, 442, 44 S.Ct. 529, 68 L.Ed. 1094; Caldwell v. Federal Trade Comm., 7 Cir., 111 F.2d 889, 890; General Motors Corp. v. Federal Trade Comm., 2 Cir., 114 F.2d 33, 36; cf. Belmont Laboratories, Inc., v. Federal Trade Comm., 3 Cir., 103 F.2d 538, 541; 31 Mich.L.Rev. 804, 815.

[9] In view of the conclusion reached under similar statutes regulating ordinary commercial advertising, it would be unthinkable to accord a more stringent construction to a statute regulating one of the learned professions so intimately connected with public health and safety. In discussing an identical statute Chief Justice Hughes said, "The legislature was not dealing with traders in commodities, but with the vital interest of public health, and with a profession treating bodily ills and demanding different standards of conduct from those which are traditional in the competition of the market place. * * * the community is concerned in providing safeguards * * * against practices which would tend to demoralize the profession by forcing its members into an unseemly rivalry which would enlarge the opportunities of the least scrupulous. What is generally called the 'ethics' of the profession is but the consensus of expert opinion as to the necessity of such standards." Semler v. Oregon State Board of Dental Examiners, 294 U.S. 608, 612, 55 S.Ct. 570, 572, 79 L.Ed. 1086. This interpretation finds an abundance of support elsewhere in cases dealing with similar statutes. State Board of Dental Examiners v. Miller, 90 Colo. 193, 8 P.2d 699, appeal dismissed 287 U.S. 563, 53 S.Ct. 6, 77 L. Ed. 496; Commonwealth v. Brown, 302 Mass. 523, 20 N.E.2d 478; cf. Sherman v. State Board of Dental Examiners, Tex. Civ.App. 116 S.W.2d 843, 847, hearing denied 130 Tex. 657; Craven v. Bierring, 222 Iowa 613, 269 N.W. 801; Donahue v. Andrews, 150 Or. 652, 47 P.2d 940; Modern System Dentists, Inc., v. State Board of Dental Examiners, 216 Wis. 190, 256 N.W. 922. See, also, Dr. Bloom Dentist, Inc., v. Cruise, 259 N.Y. 358, 182 N.E. 16; Semler v. Oregon State Board of Dental Examiners, 148 Or. 50, 34 P.2d 311.

[10-14] The third contention of appellant is that the order was void because the Board failed to make proper findings to support it, and that the judgment of the superior court upholding the order was therefore erroneous. This point was not developed in the briefs of either party and no cases are cited to sustain appellant's position. Because of this omission alone we could, with propriety, affirm the judgment below as to this contention without further discussion. Title G. and T. Co. v. Fraternal Finance Co., 220 Cal. 362, 363, 30 P.2d 515; Bradley v. Butchart, 217 Cal. 731, 747, 20 P.2d 693; Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 686, 690, 76 P. 661. But if we consider the proposition on the merits, appellant is in no better position. The Board did make its findings, and what appellant complains of is not that there was an absence of findings, but that they were defective. The actual findings incorporated by reference the language of the accusation which initiated the proceeding against petitioner. It is well settled that general findings in the words of the complaint are a sufficient compliance with the requirement of making findings of fact. Dam v. Zink, 112 Cal. 91, 93, 44 P. 331; Turner v. Turner, 187 Cal. 632, 636, 203 P. 109; California Canning Peach Growers v. Williams, 11 Cal.2d 221, 232, 78 P.2d 1154; Scarborough Co. v. Colver, 73 Cal.App. 435, 439, 238 P. 1102; 24 Cal.Jur. 984 et seq. The findings here were clearly sufficient under this rule, and the statute imposes no additional or more specific requirement as to the form in which the finding of the Board must be put. It states only that a license may be revoked or suspended for specified causes. This is, of course, a requirement that the Board find the existence of at least one of the grounds specified as a basis for its order. Cf. Elite Dairy Prod., Inc., v. Ten Eyck, 271 N.Y. 488, 498, 3 N.E.2d 606; Douglas v. Noble, 261 U.S. 165, 169, 43 S.Ct. 303, 67 L.Ed. 590. Though the reviewing court might prefer to have the grounds for the Board's determination stated in complete detail, including findings as to specific portions of the questioned advertisement, we cannot imply the necessity for such detailed findings in the absence of a statutory requirement. See United States v. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co., 293 U.S. 454, 464, 55 S.Ct. 268, 79 L.Ed. 587; Southern Pac. v. Railroad Comm., 13 Cal.2d 89, 107, 112, 87 P.2d 1055; Cf. Homan v. Board of Dental Examiners, 202 Cal. 593, 594, 595, 262 P. 324; Bold v. Board of Medical Examiners, 135 Cal.App. 29, 32, 26 P.2d 707. Where the finding of the Board, either by a restatement of the charge made or by reference to the language of the accusation, sufficiently points out the specific ground upon which it has determined that a cause for suspension or revocation exists, it cannot be said that an order so based is void, however much the court might prefer a more detailed statement of the grounds for the order. Cf. Elite Dairy Prod., Inc., v. Ten Eyck, supra.

The judgment of the court below denying a peremptory writ of mandate is affirmed.

We concur: SHENK, J; CURTIS, J.; TRAYNOR, J.; EDMONDS, J.

I dissent: CARTER, J.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

The effect of the majority decision is to prohibit members of the dental profession from advertising in any manner whatsoever the character or quality of service performed by them or which they are offering to the public. This is contrary to the legislative enactment upon which the decision is based. The decision however, concedes that it is within the province of the legislature to prescribe the acts which constitute unprofessional conduct by a dentist, including the subject of advertising.

The legislature has not seen fit to prohibit a dentist from advertising except in the following respects:

(1) "The making use of any advertising statements of a character tending to deceive or mislead the public";

(2) "The advertising of professional superiority or the performance of professional services in a superior manner";

(3) "The advertising to guarantee any dental service * * *." Sec. 1680, Dental Practice Act of California, subds. 11, 12 and 17.

By restricting the prohibition against advertising to the above-quoted provisions, it necessarily follows that in all other respects a dentist may advertise the character or quality of service which he offers to the public.

It is a matter of common knowledge that there are many methods employed by members of the various professions to obtain patrons, customers, patients or clients. Probably the most effective method is to publish advertisements in newspapers which are read by thousands of people and to which many people refer for information to guide them in their daily walks of life. No reason has been suggested, and none has occurred to me, why an advertisement in a newspaper depicting in a fair and truthful manner the character or quality of service which a member of a profession offers to the public should be prohibited. In any event, it must be conceded that it is a matter of public policy to be determined by the legislature as to whether or not members of a profession should be prohibited from advertising the character or quality of professional service they offer to the public, and if so, to what extent such advertising may be prohibited.

In the case at bar no attempt was made to prove that any statement contained in the advertisement published by appellant was in any respect untrue, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be assumed that the statements contained therein were true.

The majority opinion devotes much space to a discussion of whether or not a proceeding for the revocation of the license of a member of a profession is quasi criminal. Such discussion is wholly beside the point and immaterial. Matters such as the burden of proof, presumption of innocence, reasonable doubt and the like are of no particular concern here. However, it is well to point out and keep in mind the gravity of the consequences flowing from the revocation of a license of a professional man. He usually spends years of his life and incurs large expense in pursuit of the knowledge requisite to the successful practice of his chosen vocation. If his license is revoked he loses all of that effort and investment. He is deprived of the right to obtain the necessities of life by the only method for which he is qualified. He suffers not only economically but socially as well; his station in life is lowered and the dignity and pride naturally a part of his professional standing is forever gone.

Under these circumstances, I do not think it can be seriously questioned that the administrative board should be required to act strictly within the terms of the statute, and a review of its determination and also of that of the superior court should be made, and the evidence carefully examined to ascertain whether a violation of the law has been perpetrated by the accused. Both the findings of the board and the superior court against the accused must be supported by substantial evidence and the conclusions drawn therefrom must be reasonable. In the case at bar, as pointed out in the majority decision, there is no conflict in the evidence. The only evidence offered was the testimony of appellant and the advertisement itself. That being the case the question presented to this court is purely one of law, and this court is fully as capable of arriving at a conclusion of whether appellant has violated the law as the dental board or the superior court. On questions of law this court is not bound by the findings or conclusions of the board or the trial court; it is legally competent to pass on the issues without regard to such findings or conclusions. It is not a case of determining an issue on conflicting evidence, or of passing on the weight of the evidence, or the credibility of witnesses. San Diego Trust & Savings Bank v. County of San Diego, Cal.Sup., 105 P.2d 94.

A review of the record in this case convinces me that there is no substantial evidence to support the conclusion that appellant was guilty of unprofessional conduct. It must be borne in mind that the statute does not forbid any and all advertising, and for that reason care should be taken to avoid so interpreting it. It is not a question of whether one is in favor of professional men advertising. Indeed, our only concern here is with what the legislature has done in that respect. It is not the function of this court to make the law. This is purely a legislative function.

The advertisement upon which the charge against appellant was based is as follows:

"Dr. Webster offers his finest dental plates. Natural expression. The newest plate material in dentistry. This new material, although having the most delicately shaded natural gum color, will absolutely not change in color. Does not stain from smoking, alcohol or alkaloids, will not shrink or warp. Be sure your new dentures are made of this wonderful new material. Seeing is Believing. Dr. Webster invites you to See and Talk to former patients who will be in his office all of this week to show you These Beautiful Plates. Only by Seeing them can you actually Appreciate their Natural Beauty. Note how they Mold the Features back to that Youthful appearance by adding charm and Beauty to the Profile. Talk to these patients and let them tell you they Eat Corn Off the Cob, Eat Steaks and Taste their foods as well as they ever did. A Natural Expression. These new dental plates are so ably designed that Dr. Webster challenges you to detect any false appearance in either the beautifully shaded porcelain teeth or artistically blended natural looking pink gums. Each tooth is set so that it appears to be growing there, yet these beautiful plates cost you very little money.

"Dr. Webster's Immediate Restoration Plate Material Weighs Less Than 1 oz.

"This beautiful plate material which forms the gums and the main body of Dr. Webster's Natural Appearing Dental Plates has a new natural Gum-Pink color which looks just like real healthy gums. Made from a secret formula, is a development of dental science which many plate wearers have been thankful for. Is particularly adaptable to difficult cases, since it weighs Less Than One Ounce, enabling Dr. Webster to fashion a plate which will fill out the cheeks, and fit properly without being heavy or bulky.

"Have your dental plates made 'The Webster Way' of immediate restoration. You need not be without your teeth for even one hour, or lose a single day's employment. Dr. Webster's immediate restoration dentures or plates are faithful reproductions of your own natural gums and teeth, in their true color, size and form. These plates are made to defy detection—so much so that members of your immediate family or most intimate friends need not know that you are wearing artificial teeth. Why suffer the embarrassment of being without your teeth even one hour.

"Is your mouth difficult to fit? No matter how little you pay for your dental plates at Dr. Webster's an individual study of your case is always made. There is no limit to the care used in fitting difficult cases. Great care is taken not to cause wrinkles, drooping mouth, unnecessary lines, unnatural expression, etc., when making these new beautiful plates. * * * 'See Dr. Webster today' and have your dental needs cared for the 'Webster Way'."

In my opinion there is nothing in the above-quoted advertisement tending to mislead the public. It cannot be doubted that the phrases "Dr. Webster's Immediate Restoration Plate Material Weighs Less Than 1 Oz. This beautiful plate material. * * * Made from a secret formula, is a development of dental science which many plate wearers have been thankful for. * * * Have your dental plates made 'The Webster Way' of immediate restoration", are neither deceptive or misleading or tending to mislead. It is established that it is common practice among dentists to use the same material used by appellant. The material is made by a manufacturer having a secret formula. When one advertises that he uses the same material as other dentists use, and that such material is beautiful and is a development of dental science that people using plates appreciate, and that the material is light, he is not deceiving or misleading the public. To determine that such advertising is misleading would be to condemn the entire dental profession for using such material because if they all use it they are misleading the public by so doing. There is nothing untrue about those statements. There is no reasonable implication that appellant followed a unique procedure or used unique materials for his plates. The contrary inference flows from the statement that it is "a development of dental science". If it is a development of dental science generally the natural inference is that all practitioners of dental science are aware of it and follow it. It is a matter of common knowledge that each dentist has some methods and procedure which are different in varying degrees than those used by other dentists. How can the public be misled even if we assume that there is an intimation that appellant has a certain way of doing things different than other members of his profession? At the most appellant merely advises the public that dental science has available a good plate material and that he is using that material. If anything, the advertisement might be termed generally educational, in that it broadcasts the information that persons requiring plates are able to obtain ones which are satisfactory, light and beautiful.

There is no evidence to support the conclusion that appellant was "advertising to guarantee dental service". The majority opinion refers to the following phrases in this advertisement as containing an advertisement to guarantee dental service: "'This * * * material * * * will absolutely not change in color. Does not stain from smoking, alcohol or alkaloids, will not shrink or warp.' * * * 'These new dental plates are so ably designed that Dr. Webster challenges you to detect any false appearance. * * * Each tooth is set so that it appears to be growing there. * * * 'Dr. Webster's Immediate Restoration Dentures or plates are faithful reproductions of your own natural gums and teeth, in their true color, size and form. These plates are made to defy detection * * * most intimate friends need not know that you are wearing artificial teeth.'" The most that can be said of those statements is that the plates and material are satisfactory. If that is a guarantee, then every advertisement is one. A dentist merely stating that he did good or satisfactory work would be advertising a guarantee of his services. An advertisement consisting of merely the dentist's name and the college from which he graduated or how long he had practiced would carry the implication that if you became his patient you would obtain satisfactory service. This is contrary to the legislative intent. As above stated the legislature carefully refrained from forbidding all advertising. By stating that the material, which is used by the dental profession generally, will not stain, etc., there is no guarantee of "dental service" mentioned in the law. The most that could be said is that such material will not stain. Material is not services. Services are personal, mental or physical acts. The remainder of the phrases are merely expressions of an opinion and could in no sense be considered a guarantee. In order to constitute a guarantee there must be a positive assurance that a definite fact will obtain, or that a definite result will be accomplished.

Although the majority opinion does not discuss the charge of advertising professional superiority, there is likewise no evidence supporting that charge. The board and trial court found appellant guilty of that charge also. In regard to that charge it would appear that the most that could be said of the advertisement is that appellant states that he makes good dental plates. That is clearly not sufficient to support a charge of professional misconduct, for it must be remembered that the legislature carefully refrained from prohibiting a dentist from all manner of advertising. He must, however, restrict his advertising. And to say such advertising as is here involved, is a claim of professional superiority, would amount in practically all instances, to prohibiting all advertising except possibly such as is of a strictly educational nature, and even such advertising would necessarily have to be disassociated with the dentist doing the advertising. That would manifestly be an unwarranted extension of the dental practice act. It is quite clear that it may be plausibly asserted that statements by a dentist in his advertisements, suggesting that he be patronized, that he does certain work, or that his work is of a certain quality and the like, are all pregnant with the inference that he is to be chosen in preference to other dentists, and therefore has professional superiority. When he asks you to patronize him, the inference is that you should not go elsewhere; when he describes the quality of his work, he implies that elsewhere the work will be inferior. There must therefore be a convincing showing of a direct claim of professional superiority of the advertising dentist as compared with other dentists to justify disciplinary action.

The majority opinion makes the following statement:

"The evidence in the instant case included the advertisement itself and the testimony of appellant. If either the advertisement or the testimony offers any substantial support for the conclusion of the court below, the judgment must be affirmed. Appellant's argument is, in substance, that the advertising statements admittedly made by him do not constitute a violation of the terms of the statute. The language used by the appellant and the circumstances under which it was used are admitted. The application of the legal standard prescribed by the statute to the admitted facts requires a construction of the statutory provisions upon which both the Board and the court below were in agreement." I may be obtuse, but it is not clear to my mind what the author of the majority opinion meant by the italicized portion of the above-quoted statement. The fact is, that the majority opinion accepted the conclusion reached by the dental board and the trial court that the above-quoted advertisement violated subdivisions 11 and 17 of section 1680 of the Dental Practice Act prohibiting advertising statements of a character tending to deceive or mislead the public and advertising to guarantee dental service, but the majority opinion apparently does not agree with the conclusion reached by the dental board and the trial court that said advertisement violated subdivision 12 of said section which prohibits advertising of professional superiority or the performance of professional service in a superior manner. It would seem to me that if this court is bound by the conclusion reached by the dental board and the trial court upon any of the issues, it should be bound by their conclusion as to all of the issues. I make this observation merely for the purpose of demonstrating the unsoundness of the premise upon which the conclusion reached in the majority opinion is based.

The appeal of this case was first presented to the District Court of Appeal of the Fourth Appellate District and was decided by that court. 103 P.2d 442. In a very able opinion prepared by Mr. Justice Marks of that court, the same conclusion was reached which I have announced in this opinion, but a hearing was granted by this court for the purpose of giving further consideration to the problems involved. To my mind there can be no doubt of the soundness of the reasoning upon which the conclusion of the District Court of Appeal was based, and for the reason stated therein and in the foregoing opinion, the judgment of the trial court should be reversed with directions that it issue a writ of mandate requiring the respondent Board of Dental Examiners of California to reinstate appellant's license as prayed for in his petition.

PEOPLE v. GAERTNER et al.

Cr. 3369.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 10, 1941.

Hearing Denied April 5, 1941.

1. Conspiracy ⇐47

Evidence that defendants formed corporation for avowed purpose of carrying on campaign of education and publicity with view to betterment of conditions caused by motor traffic, and sold seals bearing a slogan, the suggested use of which was well calculated to create beneficial psychological effect in a campaign to reduce traffic accidents, that defendants represented that proceeds from such sales were to be used in plan of publicity and education relating to traffic problems, and that although the money was so used, the expense entailed proved disproportionate to the amount taken in, failed to show commission of "theft", attempted theft or any overt act in furtherance of a conspiracy, so as to sustain conviction of conspiracy to commit petty thefts. Pen. Code, § 484.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Theft".

2. Criminal law ⇐419(11)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit petty thefts through sale to the public of seals bearing careful driving slogan, which was based on alleged misrepresentations made by defendants' salesmen in soliciting funds and fact that great proportion of such funds was applied to overhead, salaries and commissions, testimony that witness received telephone call from someone who stated that he was a certain judge and who solicited the witness to purchase seals on representation that another judge had suggested that the call be made was not objectionable as "hearsay", regardless of fact that the identity of the person making the call was not established. Pen.Code, § 484.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Hearsay".

3. Conspiracy ⇐45
Criminal law ⇐1169(1)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit petty thefts through sale to the public of seals bearing careful driving slogan, which was based on alleged misrepresentations made by defendants' salesmen in soliciting funds and fact that great proportion of such funds was applied to overhead, salaries and commissions, the only material representations could be those concerning nature and purpose of the organization through which the seals were sold and the use to which the funds obtained would be put, and testimony of judges to the effect that they had not authorized the use of their names in telephone conversations by the defendants' salesmen was inadmissible and its admission was prejudicial. Pen.Code, § 484.

4. Conspiracy ⇐48

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit petty thefts through sale to the public of seals bearing careful driving slogan which was based on alleged misrepresentations made by defendants' salesmen in soliciting funds and fact that great proportion of such funds was applied to overhead, salaries and commissions, wherein some evidence concerning alleged misrepresentations made on telephone by defendants' salesmen was submitted to jury notwithstanding the apparent immateriality thereof, requested instruction to effect that the rule in civil cases of responsibility of a principal for acts of his agent is not applicable to criminal cases might properly have been given. Pen.Code, § 484.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Crum, Judge.

Carl John Gaertner and others were convicted of criminal conspiracy to commit petty thefts and they appeal.

Reversed.

Cantillon & Glover, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Alberta Belford, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

Appellants herein appeal from an order denying their motion for a new trial made after a jury had found each of them guilty of a criminal conspiracy to commit petty thefts as charged in an indictment accusing appellants and other named defendants of the crime. After the verdict appellants applied for probation and the court ordered that proceedings in the case be suspended and granted appellants probation for a period of two years upon condition that appellant Gaertner serve the first six months of his probationary period in the county jail and pay a fine of $500 and that appellants Klavans and Gerde serve the first three months of their probationary periods in the county jail and each pay a fine of $200, and at the same time denied appellants' motion for a new trial as above stated.

Appellants, together with defendants Frank W. Barrett and William Davis, were arraigned on the indictment, and all entered pleas of "Not Guilty". During the course of the People's case the prosecution asked and was granted permission to dismiss as to defendant Barrett for the purpose of calling him as a witness on behalf of the People. The jury found defendant Davis not guilty of the crime charged.

The evidence offered in support of the charge reveals the following facts. Appellants Gaertner, with defendant Barrett and one other, organized and incorporated in California a corporation known as the American Safety First Association, which appears to have had for its general purposes the dissemination of information to the public as to the dangers inherent in the reckless operation of motor vehicles and the disregard of traffic signals and the violation of state, county and city ordinances enacted for the protection of the public, the establishment of classes for safety first education and the production of motion pictures dealing with safety first subjects, as well as dramatic and radio skits of the same nature, radio broadcasts, and such other measures as might from time to time be determined by the association suited to the protection of the public. In short, the corporation was formed for the avowed purpose of carrying on a campaign of education and publicity with a view to betterment of conditions caused by motor traffic. A few local judges became interested in the organization, undoubtedly because of the nature of its proposed work, and some of them permitted the use of their names upon a letterhead of the association, as members of committees or in similar capacities. The funds of the organization were raised through sale to the public of seals, similar in character to those sold at Christmas time by the associations engaged in combating tuberculosis. The seals were sold in sheets of 100 at $1 per sheet and bore the slogan "Drive Carefully and Avoid Accidents". The seals were sold by solicitation over the telephone and the solicitation was made through salesmen hired for the purpose. These salesmen were largely obtained through help wanted advertisements in the newspapers, and worked in crews located in various hotel rooms from which the phone solicitations would be made. The salesmen were given specimen sales talks as a guide to use in soliciting. Seals were delivered and collections made by messengers. Over a period of approximately two years the organization obtained in excess of $19,000 by this method. During the same period a little over $900 was spent for radio broadcasts and in conducting a traffic school. The balance of the funds appears to have been applied to salesmen's and collectors' commissions and commissions of others in the organization, salaries and general overhead. Appellant Gaertner appears to have received the total sum of about $3,492.73 out of the fund during this period. Appellant Gaertner was a salesman by profession and had engaged in selling advertising and tickets for various organizations. It may reasonably be inferred from the evidence that in organizing and carrying on the work of the American Safety First Association appellants were not inspired by purely altruistic motives. Some thought was clearly given to the possibility of personal profit, or at least a means of livelihood.

In carrying on their phone solicitations there is evidence that the salesmen had misrepresented themselves, sometimes posing as judges or prominent citizens; and it appears that occasionally salesmen had represented that their services and the services of others in the association were being donated. The use of his name in such solicitations appears to have caused one of the judges to withdraw from the organization.

The theory of the prosecution was clearly that of obtaining money under false pretenses. It is stated in respondent's brief that the gist of the offenses charged against these three appellants was the conspiracy to take and the taking from the public at large of money in varying small amounts. Evidence was introduced at the trial in an effort to connect the defendants with the improper representations made by phone solicitors. It should be noted, however, that testimony to this end consisted largely of reported conversations had by the witnesses with various defendants and in each case was admitted only against the particular defendant with whom the conversation was had, subject to a motion to strike the testimony in the event the prosecution failed to establish a conspiracy. At the close of the People's case defendants' motion to strike this testimony was denied.

There is no evidence that any of the defendants deliberately pocketed any of the funds of the association and the prosecution appears to have rested the case entirely upon misrepresentations made in soliciting funds and on the fact that so great a proportion of the funds was applied to overhead, salaries and commissions.

As to the representations made by the salesmen in soliciting funds, the only evidence tending to show that the representations were made as the result of any concerted effort on the part of appellants appears in the specimen talks or outlines furnished the salesmen as a guide for their phone conversations, which outlines were received in evidence on behalf of the People. However, the only statement contained in these outlines which could be construed as a misrepresentation of fact is one directing the salesman to state that he was serving on a committee with three superior court judges and the chairman of the American Safety First Association, who was a well-known attorney. While it is true that the judges and the attorney named had all consented to act on committees of the association or to lend their names to such committees, a representation that the person making the phone call was working on such a committee would obviously tend to give the recipient of the call the impression that the person calling was one of some prominence in the organization and not merely a hired salesman working on a commission. From this it might be reasoned that the salesmen impliedly represented themselves to be donating their services to the cause and that by so holding themselves out to the public they in turn represented that all or the greater part of the funds received on the sale of the seals would be applied directly to the work for which the association had been organized, without reduction through payment of commissions. It is readily seen, however, that the evidence allows considerable room for a reasonable doubt that appellants intended to convey such an impression to the public. Moreover, it would be stretching the powers of deduction too far to infer from such evidence that there had been a misrepresentation of the use to which the funds were to be put or a misrepresentation of the nature and purpose of the association; and it should here be pointed out that in order to prove these appellants guilty of the offense charged, under a theory of false pretenses, it would be necessary to show the commission of overt acts tending to misrepresent either the nature and purposes of the association in question or the use to which the funds of the association were to be put. Representations as to the identity of the salesmen and their connections, if any, with committees of the organization do not in themselves have such a tendency and, standing alone, are merely collateral and not material.

It is significant that the evidence most strongly tended to place responsibility for the salesmen's misrepresentations upon defendant Davis since it appears that the outlines in question were given out by him and that some of the improper statements were made by salesmen within his hearing, and the jury might have properly inferred that such statements were made with Davis' tacit consent and approval. Yet the jury exonerated defendant Davis of any complicity in the crime of which the defendants were accused. Appellants' connection, if any, with any such statements was considerably more remote than that of Davis. It should be noted that Davis appears to have been an employee in the organization in charge of telephone salesmen. However, no direct connection was shown between appellants and the misrepresentations made by the salesmen, other than that contained in the outline mentioned above, and no connection whatsoever was shown in this respect as to any representation that salesmen's services were donated.

[1] But it is unnecessary to consider the evidence of a conspiracy in greater detail since the record fails in the first instance to show the commission of a theft, an attempted theft, or any overt act in furtherance of a conspiracy to commit theft. Appellants sold seals to the public at a penny apiece. These seals bore a salutary slogan and their suggested use was well-calculated to create a beneficial psychological effect in a campaign to reduce traffic accidents. Furthermore, appellants represented that the proceeds from such sales were to be used in a plan of publicity and education relating to traffic problems. The money was so used, though the expense entailed proved disproportionate to the amount taken in, a common failing of many charitable and civic enterprises. There is no evidence that appellants made any representation as to the percentage of the funds to be applied to expenses of the undertaking. It should also be pointed out that the persons buying the seals obviously must have intended to part with their money in exchange for the seals and that the price of the seals fairly represented their value in relation to the purpose for which they were sold. The organization appears to have kept a record of receipts and expenditures of funds, to have held meetings and kept minutes thereof. If there were any basis at all for an inference that there was a misappropriation of funds it would have to be found in the evidence of the expenditures made. However, this evidence fails to show that any of appellants received an exorbitant share of the funds from the standpoint of actual services rendered. The only fact established in this connection is that the expenses in general were too high for the amount received. Some $3,000 shown to have been paid to appellant Gaertner could not be held an unreasonable amount of compensation for his services over the period of two to two and a half years covered by the charge. It appears, therefore, that the money received on the sale of the seals was used as represented and that the misstatements and misrepresentations of the salesmen were at the most collateral and immaterial upon the question of a theft or overt acts in furtherance of a theft. There is no basis in the evidence for any inference that appellants were guilty of a theft, or even an attempt at theft of the money, as theft is now defined in the Penal Code [§ 484], nor have appellants been shown to have committed any overt acts leading to the commission of a theft. As contended by appellants on their motion for a new trial, and on appeal herein, the court should have granted the motion of appellants for a new trial upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdicts. People v. Cesena, 18 Cal.App.2d 727, 729, 64 P.2d 732; People v. Bacos, 14 Cal.App.2d 338, 349, 58 P.2d 221. And see People v. Rodriguez, 37 Cal.App.2d 290, 99 P.2d 363.

[2] Appellants also assign as error the admission, over objection that it was hearsay, of testimony of a witness to the effect that on a certain date he received a phone call from a voice which stated that it was a certain judge, and that the witness was thereby solicited to purchase seals of the American Safety First Association upon the representation that another judge, whose name was given, had suggested that the call be made; that the witness in response to the call purchased the seals in question through a messenger who delivered the seals and to whom the witness gave his check in payment. The witness then testified that when the check was later returned it bore the rubber stamp endorsement, "The American Safety First Association". Counsel then stipulated that the endorsement on the check was authentic. The objection in question was directed to the relation by the witness of the conversation had over the phone. From the resumé above given it may be seen that such testimony was not objectionable as hearsay and, if otherwise material, was admissible. Appellants base their argument as to this point on the ground that the identity of the person making the call was not established. However, the witness stated that the voice had represented itself to be that of a certain judge. Under the circumstances, it was no more necessary to establish the actual identity of the voice than it would have been for the witness to have established that of an unknown person who had accosted the witness on the street, held himself out to be a certain individual, and sold the witness the seals. The testimony given by the witness showed the circumstances under which he had purchased seals of the association and such testimony derived its value solely from the credit to be given the witness upon the stand. (See the definition of hearsay, 20 Am.Jur. 400, § 451; idem at page 403, § 454.) It was not claimed that the phone call was made by one of the appellants or any particular individual.

[3] Testimony, admission of which is assigned as error, given by three judges of the superior court to the effect that they had not authorized the use of their names in telephone solicitations, was immaterial and improperly admitted. It has already been pointed out that such representations made by the salesmen in this case had no bearing upon the charge. It should be borne in mind that under the charge the only material representations could be those as to the nature and purpose of the organization and the use to which funds would be put. Whether or not a judge authorized the use of his name could have no possible bearing on the case, and admission of the testimony here complained of was necessarily prejudicial to appellants.

[4] Appellants also complain of the trial court's refusal to give a requested instruction to the effect that the rule in civil cases of the responsibility of a principal for the acts of his agent is not applicable to criminal cases. Some evidence, aside from that connected with defendant Davis, was allowed to stand as to misrepresentations made on the telephone by telephone salesmen. In view of the fact that this evidence was submitted to the jury, notwithstanding the apparent immateriality thereof, an instruction such as that requested might properly have been given (People v. Doble, 203 Cal. 510, 265 P. 184), but since the court gave an instruction to the effect that in determining whether the respective defendants were parties to the conspiracy the jury had no right to consider against a defendant any declarations or acts made or done by any other person in the absence of that defendant, it is doubtful whether the failure to give the requested instruction constituted prejudicial error.

The order denying the motion for a new trial is hereby reversed.

We concur: YORK, P. J., WHITE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 370

CRESCENT CANAL CO. v. KINGS COUNTY DEVELOPMENT CO. et al.

KINGS COUNTY DEVELOPMENT CO. v. CRESCENT CANAL CO.

Civ. 2597.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 7, 1941.

1. Waters and water courses ⇐249

The statute relating to rights of purchasers of land from corporation which furnishes water for irrigation of the land, to use of water for irrigating, was not applicable to canal company which did not sell the land for which it furnished water for irrigating purposes. Civ.Code, § 552.

2. Waters and water courses ⇐252

Where canal company had not complied with the statute relating to mutual water companies, the statute was not applicable in determining right of purchaser of stock in the company to proportionate share of water for irrigating purposes. Civ.Code, § 330.24.

3. Waters and water courses ⇐252

The right to use water may be confined to a particular area by contract mutually entered into by water company and its stockholders when properly expressed through company's articles, by-laws, and certificates.

4. Waters and water courses ⇐252

Water may not be dedicated to land within a certain area, in absence of any contract between water company and its stockholders to that effect and without compliance with any statutory provision.

5. Waters and water courses ⇐252

Fact that stockholders in water company, who are entitled to water, have previously happened to use the water within a certain area, does not in itself establish a "dedication" of the water supply to that particular area.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Dedication".

6. Waters and water courses ⇐252

Although a water company might by appropriate steps dedicate its water for use in a certain area, it could not, in absence of a contract, dedicate one stockholder's beneficial interest, without his agreement or consent, to the use and benefit of other stockholders.

7. Waters and water courses ⇐252

A contractual right of a stockholder in a water company cannot be defeated by custom and usage, regardless of whether the water rights are appurtenant to land.

8. Waters and water courses ⇐252

Where water supplied by canal company had always been used in a particular area, but there was nothing in the articles and by-laws of the company, nor in the stock certificates issued by it restricting the use of the water to such area, there was no "dedication" of the water to the particular area and a purchaser of stock in the company was entitled to use his proportionate share of the water for land located outside the particular area previously served.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Ernest Klette, Judge.

Action by the Crescent Canal Company against Kings County Development Company and others, involving the right of the named defendant to a proportionate share of water distributed by the plaintiff, wherein the named defendant filed a cross-complaint. From an adverse judgment, the plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

H. Scott Jacobs, of Hanford, and Hayhurst & Gibson, of Fresno, for appellant.

Gregory, Hunt & Melvin and Wallace Sheehan, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The plaintiff has appealed from a judgment awarding the corporate defendant and cross-complainant, which will be referred to as the respondent, the right to its proportionate share of the water distributed by the plaintiff.

The appellant was organized under the laws of this state in 1885. Its purposes, as set forth in its articles, are to construct and operate canals; to acquire water rights; and to appropriate and divert water and distribute the same through its canals for agricultural and other purposes. Neither its articles nor its by-laws contain any provision restricting the use of such water to any specified land, nor does the form of stock certificate used contain any such restriction. The company has but one canal, known as the Crescent canal, which takes out of the lower north fork of the Kings river and runs in a northwesterly direction for some twenty miles. While the company had an authorized capital stock of 150 shares its supply of water has always been limited and no more than 40 shares were ever issued. Immediately upon its organization the appellant adopted the policy of distributing its available water to its stockholders in proportion to their holdings of stock. By common consent it was also understood that water should be delivered to stockholders on the basis of one share of stock to each 320 acres desired to be irrigated and owned by the respective stockholders. The water thus furnished has heretofore always been used in a certain general area, the maximum acreage which has been so irrigated being some 13,000 acres, the boundaries of which are not clearly described in the evidence. Of this land, about 1200 acres are on the southerly side of the Crescent canal and the remainder on the northerly side.

Because the available water has been insufficient to meet the needs of its stockholders the appellant has refused to sell additional stock and, by common consent, the company and its stockholders have carried on the practice, where any stockholder did not use his water in a particular year, of redistributing that part of the water among the remaining stockholders. Also, where stock has been sold for delinquent assessments no effort has been made to sell or reissue the stock so retired. By reason of this fact the total issue of stock of the company has been reduced to 33 15/16ths shares. It appears from the evidence that the right of the stockholders to water depends upon their ownership of stock, and that if assessments thereon are not paid the stock is sold to the company and thereafter the appellant is not required to deliver any water represented by that stock until and unless it is redeemed. It further appears that no land outside of the 13,000 acres above mentioned has heretofore been served with water from the Crescent canal.

The respondent is the owner of a section of land on the southerly side of, and approximately one-half mile distant from, the Crescent canal as it cuts through the adjoining section. This land has never been irrigated from the Crescent canal. In the latter part of 1937 the respondent purchased 2¼ shares of the issued and outstanding stock of the appellant and shortly thereafter commenced the construction of a ditch for the purpose of obtaining and receiving its proportionate share of the water distributed by the appellant. This led to the filing of this action.

Among other things, the court found that for more than 50 years the appellant has diverted certain water from the lower north fork of the Kings river whenever said amount was available; that during all of that time the water so appropriated has been supplied by the appellant to a large number of landowners who were and are its stockholders, and who have put said water to beneficial uses; that subject to this beneficial use the appellant is the owner in fee of the right to divert and distribute said water; that the appellant has never engaged in business for profit but has continuously delivered its water at cost through the Crescent canal to its stockholders ratably and in the proportion that their stock bears to the total shares issued and outstanding; that neither the articles of incorporation of the appellant nor the stock certificates issued by it contain any restrictions upon the use of water by its stockholders; that its by-laws contain no requirement that the water delivered to its stockholders shall be used upon any specified or appurtenant land; that said by-laws have never been recorded in the office of the county recorder of Fresno county; that all of the waters so appropriated and distributed are needed for the irrigation of the lands heretofore receiving and applying them; that said lands heretofore receiving and using said water are not entitled to the use thereof unless the owners thereof own and hold shares of stock in the appellant and then only ratably and in proportion to the stock so held; and that for this reason it is not true that the appellant or the landowners heretofore receiving such water will suffer great and irreparable damage if its proportion of said water is taken by the respondent. It was further found that the respondent is the owner of 2¼ shares of the capital stock of the appellant, that by reason thereof it is entitled to 2¼-33 15/16ths of the water flowing and to flow in the Crescent canal, that the described lands owned by the respondent have no other means by which they may be irrigated, and that unless the respondent receives the water to which it is entitled by reason of the ownership of this stock its lands will be and remain unproductive and the respondent will suffer great and irreparable damage. It was further found that these lands had never heretofore received water from the Crescent canal but that the respondent is now entitled to receive its proportion of water, that the respondent does not propose or intend to take more than its proper share of said water, with other findings as to the manner in which the respondent proposes to connect its ditch and obtain its share of the water through a control gate installed at its expense and operated under the supervision and direction of the appellant. Judgment was accordingly entered decreeing that the respondent is entitled to its proportionate share of this water and giving it the right to connect its ditch with the Crescent canal and receive such share through a control gate installed at its expense and to be operated under the supervision and direction of the appellant or of the court. This appeal followed.

The sole issue here presented is whether the appellant may refuse to furnish the respondent with its proportionate share of this water because the land on which it is proposed to use such water is not within the area within which all deliveries of water by the appellant have heretofore been confined. It is conceded "that there are no restrictions whatever contained in the articles of incorporation or the by-laws or the form of stock certificate in use by the Crescent Canal Company as to any particular land upon which the water of the Crescent Canal Company may be used or applied"; that the stock is not appurtenant to any particular piece of land; and that title to such stock passes by mere assignment and transfer. The appellant contends "that since the evidence shows without conflict that ever since the organization of the Crescent Canal Company all of the company's water supply has been continuously used upon a certain well-defined body of land, and since the available water supply of the company is insufficient to adequately serve this body of land heretofore using and applying the same, that the water supply and all thereof has been firmly dedicated to the lands heretofore using the same and cannot now be diverted to other lands even though the owner of such other lands be a stockholder in the Crescent Canal Company".

In support of its contention that its waters have thus been dedicated to the area in which they have been continuously used the appellant cites Riverside Land Co. v. Jarvis, 174 Cal. 316, 163 P. 54; Spurgeon v. Santa Ana, etc., Co., 120 Cal. 71, 52 P. 140, 39 L.R.A. 701, and Palo Verde L. & W. Co. v. Edwards, 82 Cal.App. 52, 254 P. 922. In the first of these cases stock in the water company in question was appurtenant to certain parcels of land and passed with a transfer of the land by virtue of a contractual relationship created by the articles of incorporation, the by-laws and the stock certificates. In the Spurgeon case the water company was organized for the purpose of delivering water to the owners of certain lands with provisions that the company would act as agent in supplying such water to said owners, that it would deliver water to no one else, and restricting transfers of shares of stock except with the lands to which they were attached. In the Palo Verde case the articles of incorporation provided that the purpose was to acquire water and deliver it to stockholders only for use upon lands within a described district and that each share of stock issued should be described in the certificate.

[1-6] It is apparent that the rules applied in these cases have no application under the admitted facts in the instant case. Aside from the formation of irrigation districts, water rights may become appurtenant to certain lands in at least two ways. Section 330.24, formerly section 324, of the Civil Code provides that this may be done by a mutual water company by providing therefor in its articles or by-laws, recording the same in the county where the lands are situated, and describing the particular land in the stock certificate. Section 552 of the Civil Code contains provisions under which a similar end is accomplished, but that section relates only to corporations which not only furnish water but have sold land. The appellant, in arguing that it is not a mutual water company and that section 330.24 has no application to it, points out the fact that it has not complied with that section and insists that it "is still authorized by its articles to sell or dispose of its water in any other manner consistent with the purposes for which it was expressly authorized as disclosed by its articles of incorporation". While arguing that it is thus free from having its water affixed to any particular land it then inconsistently argues, in contending that its water has been dedicated to a defined area, that while it has not sold land to any of the persons served by it it has delivered water to them "and is thereby obligated to continue such service" under section 552 of the Civil Code, and that it would defeat the purpose of that section to permit or oblige it to furnish water outside of that area. The appellant not being a corporation which has furnished water to land it has sold it is not a "such corporation" referred to in section 552 and that section has no application here. It also fully appears that the appellant has not complied with section 330.24, formerly 324, and that section is not applicable. In commenting on the application of that section the court, in Palo Verde L. & W. Co. v. Edwards, supra [82 Cal.App. 52, 254 P. 924], said: "There is no provision in the by-laws to the effect that the water stock shall be appurtenant to the land, and, of course, there being no by-law to that effect, none was or can be recorded." The court then stated that there was no evidence in the record showing that the water company, by its acts or practices, had held the water stock to be appurtenant to any land but, on the contrary, it had transferred stock regardless of the title to land and had allowed the stock to be moved from one location to another when the old certificate had been endorsed and surrendered. A similar situation appears here and it further appears that the appellant is willing, and claims the right, to discontinue serving water to a parcel of land which has always received it and permit the water to be used on other land by the same or a new stockholder, provided the new location is within the same general area. Doubtless the right to use certain water may be confined to a particular area by a contract mutually entered into by a water company and its stockholders when properly expressed through its articles, by-laws and certificates. It has been held that water rights which have become vested before section 324 of the Civil Code was adopted were not affected by that section. Estate of Thomas, 147 Cal. 236, 81 P. 539. It is difficult to see how water may be dedicated, not to particular land but to land within a certain area, in the absence of any contract to that effect and without complying with any statutory provision. In the instant case, apparently, there was not even a resolution of the board of directors purporting to dedicate this water to a particular area. The fact that stockholders entitled to water have heretofore happened to use it within a certain area, does not, in itself, establish a dedication. While a water company might by appropriate steps dedicate its water for use in a certain area it could hardly, in the absence of a contract, dedicate one stockholder's beneficial interest, without his agreement or consent, to the use and benefit of the other stockholders.

[7] In Richey v. East Redlands Water Co., 141 Cal. 221, 74 P. 754, where the water right was appurtenant to the land it was held that the water company could not, either by resolution or by custom, limit a part of the stockholders to water derived from one of two sources since their contract as stockholders gave them equal rights in all of the water; that the water company could not, by usage and custom, allocate the water derived from a particular source to one part of the land only; and that the contractual rights of a stockholder could not be defeated by custom and usage, where the water rights are appurtenant to the lands. This would seem to be equally true where the right to share in the water is not appurtenant to the land or to any land.

In Consolidated Peoples D. Co. v. Foothill D. Co., 205 Cal. 54, 269 P. 915, 920, the appellants owned shares of stock in the respondent water companies, the stock of which was not appurtenant to any lands and was transferable in the ordinary manner with the owners of such stock entitled to their proportionate share of the water acquired and distributed. While it was held in that case that the appellants were required to take their shares of water through the means of distribution supplied by the water companies and that they were not entitled to go to a point higher up the river to help themselves to their proportionate share the court there said: "The stockholders in corporations organized chiefly for the purpose of acquiring and distributing water have, it is true, a definite right to their proportion of the distribution of such water when so acquired, and the cases are uniform to the effect that they may individually enforce that right by appropriate proceedings in the event of its evasion or denial on the part of the officers of the corporation."

In Irrigation District v. Wutchumna W. Co., 111 Cal.App. 688, 296 P. 933, this court held that an irrigation district having purchased stock of the water company and being thereby entitled to receive a proportionate part of the water distributed by the company was entitled to take that water outside of the area previously served by the water company in spite of the fact that the water company, after the irrigation district had purchased some of its stock, passed a resolution reciting that it had been the long established policy of the company that its water should be used only on lands in a certain area and providing that from and after that date none of such water should be used outside of that area, and further providing that it should be applied only to lands which had never theretofore been supplied with such water.

[8] We think the principles of the cases last cited support the judgment and the right of the respondent to receive its share of the water distributed by the appellant and that, under the facts and circumstances here appearing, no such dedication of this water to a particular area has been shown as is sufficient to defeat the rights of the respondent as a stockholder in the appellant corporation.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: MARKS, J.; GRIFFIN, J.

COTTEN et al. v. PERISHABLE AIR CONDITIONERS et al.*

Civ. 12202.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 10, 1941.

Hearing Granted May 8, 1941.

1. Judgment ⇐565

Where motion to vacate default judgment was denied without prejudice to its renewal, an objection to a subsequent motion on ground of "res judicata" could not be properly sustained.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

2. Appeal and error ⇐552

Although there is some question as to sufficiency of record as presented by appellants under statute, appellate court may nevertheless examine the record, and if possible determine the cause upon the full record before it. Code Civ.Proc. § 953c; Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal rule 8.

3. Partnership ⇐296(1)

The service upon one of partners, after dissolution of copartnership, in an action for injuries allegedly sustained in course of employment for copartnership prior to its dissolution, was insufficient to give court jurisdiction to enter judgment against copartnership, where it did not appear that partner served had any authority to wind up affairs of copartnership, and especially where copartnership was in hands of receiver. Civ. Code § 2429(3)(c).

4. Partnership ⇐278, 279

Dissolution has no effect on debts due from partnership, except that partners may not act for each other any further than may joint debtors.

5. Partnership ⇐296(1), 325(1)

Where, upon dissolution of copartnership, a receiver was appointed, proper procedure for bringing an action for injuries allegedly sustained in course of employment for copartnership prior to its dissolution would be either to serve each partner individually, or secure permission of court to bring action against receiver for dissolved partnership. Civ.Code § 2429(3)(c); Code Civ.Proc. §§ 414, 989, 990.

* Subsequent opinion 116 P.2d 603.

6. Judgment ⇐148

Where, upon dissolution of copartnership, a receiver was appointed, and thereafter a default judgment against copartnership was entered upon service of one of partners, receiver's interest in property of former partnership justified him in filing motion to vacate default judgment on ground that service on one of partners was insufficient to give court jurisdiction to enter judgment against copartnership. Civ.Code § 2429(3)(c).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clement D. Nye, Judge.

Action by Charles D. Cotten, etc., and another, against the Perishable Air Conditioners, a copartnership, and others, to recover for injuries sustained by minor plaintiff, while working for defendant copartnership, wherein a default judgment was entered in favor of plaintiffs. From an order granting a motion to vacate a default and default judgment, the plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

August J. O'Connor and George J. Hider, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Monta W. Shirley and R. R. Sleeper, both of Los Angeles, for respondent receiver.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

The facts pertinent to a determination of this appeal are chronologically as follows:

On November 13, 1937, the minor appellant, while working for respondent copartnership as a precooling operator and foreman, received serious personal injuries; it being alleged in the complaint herein that at the time mentioned said respondent copartnership did not carry compensation insurance as required by section 29 of the Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Laws of the State of California, St. 1933, p. 975.

On January 17, 1938, in an action entitled Carroll v. Cross, the Perishable Air Conditioners, a copartnership composed of Dalton E. Cross and Irwin R. Carroll, was dissolved by an interlocutory order of the superior court of Los Angeles county, and R. E. Allen was duly appointed receiver thereof. Preparatory to filing suit to recover damages from said copartnership on account of the injuries sustained by the minor appellant, a motion was made for leave to sue the receiver Allen which was denied on March 18, 1938, on the ground that the minor's right accrued prior to the dissolution of the copartnership and appointment of the receiver, and therefore it was a matter to be litigated between the principal parties.

On March 19, 1938, appellants filed their complaint herein and on March 21st served "Perishable Air Conditioners, a co-partnership composed of Dalton E. Cross and Irwin R. Carroll, and Dalton E. Cross, individually". No answer having been filed in said cause, a default was entered by the court on April 11, 1938. In entering said default the court found: "It appearing to the court from an examination of the records and files in this action that the defendant Perishable Air Conditioners, a co-partnership, composed of Dalton E. Cross and Irwin R. Carroll, and Dalton E. Cross individually having been duly served with summons in the manner required by law, to-wit: personal service upon Dalton E. Cross, and having failed to answer the Plaintiff's Complaint herein, and the time for answering having expired, the default of said Defendant is hereby entered according to law."

On April 14, 1938, at a hearing held for that purpose, Dalton E. Cross being personally present, judgment was rendered for the sum of $3,405 in favor of appellants and against Perishable Air Conditioners, a copartnership composed of Dalton E. Cross and Irwin R. Carroll, and also against Dalton E. Cross. On April 14, 1938, notice of entry of said judgment was duly served upon said Dalton E. Cross.

Although neither motion is shown in the clerk's transcript herein, it is stated by respondent receiver in his points and authorities that appellants on April 20, 1938, filed a notice of motion for leave to levy execution on the assets of the copartnership in the hands of the receiver which motion was heard and denied on April 29, 1938; and it is also stated in appellants' brief that the court denied on April 20, 1938, a motion made by respondent receiver to vacate the default judgment on the ground that since the partnership had been dissolved and was not in existence, the court had no jurisdiction to enter judgment against it. Disregarding these motions purported to have been made and denied, the record discloses that on July 5, 1938, the court denied without prejudice the motion of respondent receiver (theretofore submitted under date of June 24th) to vacate said default judgment; and on December 1, 1938, respondent receiver again filed notice of motion to vacate the said default and default judgment on the ground that said default was not properly entered against the copartnership because it had been dissolved by order of the superior court prior to the date of service of summons and complaint upon Dalton E. Cross, one of the copartners, and therefore the court had jurisdiction to enter judgment against said Cross individually but had no jurisdiction to enter judgment against the copartnership. Appended to said notice of motion was a certified copy of an order of the superior court theretofore made, instructing respondent receiver to file said notice of motion to set aside said default judgment and to take such further steps as might be necessary to protect the estate of the copartnership.

Counsel for appellants filed an affidavit in opposition to said motion to vacate on the ground that by its denial of the prior motion on July 5, 1938, the court had exhausted its power to again pass upon the same motion; that service was properly made upon the copartnership; that the injuries for which redress was sought were sustained by the minor appellant in the course of his employment at a time prior to the dissolution of the copartnership and the appointment of receiver; that the default judgment could not be vacated at the instigation of receiver, who is a stranger to the proceedings; and the affidavit in support of the motion "does not state that the partnership nor Irwin R. Carroll, who is now without the jurisdiction of the Court, has any meritorious defense."

Upon the issues joined by the affidavits in support of and in opposition thereto, said motion to vacate came on for hearing on December 19, 1938, and was granted. From the order which was thereafter entered this appeal is prosecuted.

It was stipulated by counsel herein that this appeal be submitted for decision upon the opening brief of appellants and the points and authorities of respondent filed in connection with a motion to dismiss said appeal which was denied by this court on June 26, 1939.

The questions presented upon this appeal are practically the same as those urged by appellants in their affidavit in opposition to the motion to vacate the default judgment, as hereinbefore recited.

[1] With respect to the first of such questions, "the law is well settled in this state that, if a motion is denied without prejudice to its renewal, an objection to a subsequent motion on the ground of res judicata may not be properly sustained. Bowers v. Cherokee Bob, 46 Cal. 279, 286; Andersen v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 95, 102, 200 P. 963; Tiffany Productions, Inc., v. Superior Court, 131 Cal.App. 729, 22 P.2d 275." City of Los Angeles v. Forrester, 12 Cal.App.2d 146, at page 149, 55 P.2d 277, at page 278.

[2] Although there is some question as to the sufficiency of the record as presented by appellants under section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, nevertheless the Supreme Court has held that it is proper for an appellate court to examine the record, and if possible to determine the cause upon the full record before it. (See rule VIII of the Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal.)

[3] Section 2429, subdivision (3) of the Civil Code provides: "The partnership is in no case bound by any act of a partner after dissolution * * * (c) Where the partner has no authority to wind up partnership affairs; * * *."

There is nothing in the record here which indicates that Dalton E. Cross, the partner served, had any authority to wind up the affairs of the partnership. Therefore, the partnership could not be affected by service upon said Dalton E. Cross. This is especially true where the partnership is in the hands of a receiver, who is an officer of the court. This is not a case where the court has consented to having the receiver sued; as a matter of fact the court herein denied appellants' motion for leave to sue the receiver.

[4] As is very pertinently stated in 20 California Jurisprudence at 804: "Dissolution has no effect on debts due from a partnership, except that the partners may not act for each other any further than may joint debtors." As there is no statutory provision permitting the entry of judgment against all of several joint debtors by service upon only one of them, the only method to pursue is that provided by sections 414, 989 and 990 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[5] After dissolution, service of process upon one partner will not authorize judgment against the other. 20 Cal.Jur. 768, 769. Therefore, a judgment entered against a copartnership upon service of only one of the partners would come within this rule. Since neither partner had authority to wind up the partnership affairs, the proper procedure would be either to serve each partner individually, or secure permission of the court to bring the action against the receiver for the dissolved copartnership.

[6] With respect to appellants' point that respondent receiver is a stranger to the instant action, it is shown by the record herein that prior to filing their complaint appellants "moved the court for an order permitting (them) to join the Receiver as a party defendant", which motion was denied; that they then filed their complaint alleging "that on the 15th day of December, 1937, R. E. Allen was appointed Receiver for Dalton E. Cross and Irwin R. Carroll, said copartners, doing business under the firm name and style of Perishable Air Conditioners, and that on the 15th day of December, 1937, said R. E. Allen qualified by posting bond in the penal sum of $8,000, and from thence hitherto has been and still is the duly and regularly appointed, qualified and acting Receiver for said copartnership."

It is also shown herein that respondent receiver just prior to making his second motion to vacate the default judgment petitioned the court for instructions in the dissolution action between Carroll and Cross, and that the following order instructing receiver was made under date of August 23, 1938:

"Petition for instructions came on regularly for hearing in Department 29 of the above entitled Court on Wednesday, August 17, 1938, Monta W. Shirley, Esq., appearing as attorney for R. E. Allen, Receiver, Earl C. Demoss, Esq., appearing as attorney for defendant (Cross) and no one appearing for plaintiff (Carroll), and it appearing to the Court that it is to the advantage and best interests of the estate that the Receiver present a motion to the Superior Court of this County in the case of Charles D. Cotten v. Perishable Air Conditioners to set aside the judgment against Perishable Air Conditioners,

"It is Hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed: That the Receiver be, and he is hereby, instructed to file notice of motion to set aside the judgment against Perishable Air Conditioners in the said case of Charles D. Cotten v. Perishable Air Conditioners and to take such further steps in said proceedings as may be necessary to protect the estate of Perishable Air Conditioners."

The motion to set aside default and default judgment which was granted on December 19, 1938, was made pursuant to said order of instructions.

The interest of the receiver in the property of the former partnership is such that he is justified in preserving the property from the levy of an illegal judgment, if he is not actually required to do so.

There is no merit in any of the questions raised upon this appeal.

The order granting the motion to vacate the default judgment herein is affirmed.

We concur: DORAN, J.; WHITE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 411

PEOPLE v. ONE 1939 BUICK 8 COUPE, ENGINE NO. 43787923 et al.

Civ. 6488.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 10, 1941.

Rehearing Denied April 8, 1941.

Hearing Denied May 8, 1941.

1. Forfeitures ⇐5

In proceeding for forfeiture of automobile used to conceal or transport drugs, claimant has burden of proving investigation of automobile purchaser's moral responsibility, character, and reputation, of the kind and to the extent required by statute. St. 1939, p. 768, § 11620.

2. Forfeitures ⇐3

Though scope and reasonableness of automobile purchaser's moral responsibility, character, and reputation, required by statute to protect claimant of automobile against forfeiture on ground of use in concealing or transporting drugs, is primarily a question of fact, it must meet certain legal requirements, and should reveal prospect's home address, his employer, either past or present, source of his income, and his family or social connections, and, in case of a stranger, some inquiry as to his prior location and standing in that community. St.1939, p. 768, § 11620.

3. Forfeitures ⇐3

In order to protect claimant of automobile against forfeiture for use to conceal or transport drugs, statute requires inquiry concerning automobile purchaser along two distinct lines, his financial status and his moral responsibility, and a purely financial examination will not necessarily reveal facts necessary to pass upon moral responsibility, character, and reputation. St.1939, p. 768, § 11620.

4. Forfeitures ⇐3

Investigation of proposed purchaser of automobile, in order to protect claimant against forfeiture for use in concealing or transporting drugs, is not alone to protect financial investment of seller or bank, but to protect public, and to keep automobiles out of the possession of those who might use them for an unlawful purpose. St.1939, p. 767, § 11610 et seq.

5. Forfeitures ⇐5

Evidence held not to show sufficient investigation of moral responsibility, character, and reputation of automobile purchaser, so as to protect purchaser of conditional sales contract against forfeiture of automobile for use to conceal or transport drugs. St.1939, p. 768, § 11620.

Appeal from the Superior Court of Merced County; James D. Garibaldi, Judge.

Proceeding by the People of the State of California against one 1939 Buick 8 Coupe, Engine No. 43787923, for forfeiture of automobile used to conceal and transport opium, wherein the Bank of America filed claim. From a judgment for claimant, the People of the State of California appeal.

Reversed.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Albert Hutchinson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

C. Ray Robinson, of Merced, and Louis Ferrari, G. D. Schilling, and D. Bianco, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PULLEN, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by the People of the State of California from a judgment under proceedings provided for in division X, chapter 7, article 1, § 11610 et seq., of the Health and Safety Code (Chap. 60, p. 767, Stats.1939), in which it was held that the 1939 Buick here involved had been unlawfully used for the purpose of concealing and transporting opium, but the forfeiture of the Buick automobile was denied and released to respondent Bank of America, the legal owner thereof.

On September 28, 1939, Charles L. Fink, an automobile dealer in Fresno, sold and delivered respondent Buick to Jimmie H. Fong for $609.55 in cash and the balance payable in monthly installments as provided in a conditional sales contract. On October 2, 1939, the contract was sold to Bank of America, and the certificate of legal ownership was delivered to the bank. On November 13, 1939, Jimmie Fong, while driving the automobile in question, was arrested in Merced county and charged and later convicted of transporting narcotics.

The Division of Narcotic Enforcement took possession of this automobile under the provisions of the Health and Safety Code and commenced this action for the forfeiture of the car.

The Bank of America, as legal owner, filed its answer setting forth that the sale was a bona fide transaction between Fink and Fong; that the bank was the owner of the car, and that approximately $700 was still due the bank. The answer also denied the unlawful use of the automobile for the transportation of narcotics, and alleged the bank had no knowledge of the unlawful use or intention so to use; that the bank had made a reasonable investigation of the moral responsibility, character and reputation of Fong before its right, title or interest in the automobile had been created, and asked that the automobile be returned to the bank or that it be sold and the balance due under the contract be paid it.

After trial the court found in favor of the bank, holding it had made reasonable investigation of the moral responsibility, character and reputation of Fong, and entered judgment in favor of the bank, directing the Buick be released to the bank and not forfeited to the state.

From this judgment the State has appealed, principally upon the ground the evidence did not support the allegations and finding that the seller and the bank had made a reasonable investigation of the moral responsibility, character and reputation of the purchaser, Jimmie Fong.

Section 11620 of the Health and Safety Code provides: "The claimant of any right, title, or interest in the vehicle may prove his lien, mortgage, or conditional sales contract to be bona fide and that his right, title, or interest was created after a reasonable investigation of the moral responsibility, character, and reputation of the purchaser, and without any knowledge that the vehicle was being, or was to be, used for the purpose charged."

Testimony respecting negotiations leading up to the sale of the Buick to Fong is given by Hiram Wong, a Chinese salesman employed by the Fink Company. He testified he first met Fong when he came in to discuss the purchase of a used automobile, about six months prior to the sale of this particular car. No sale was then made. The witness Wong said that after that first meeting he saw Fong from time to time in the Fresno Chinatown, sometimes in a coffee shop operated by Mabel Tom, and sometimes in China alley. He testified he had talked to Mrs. Tom about Jimmie Fong and was asked: "During your conversation with her (Mrs. Tom) what was said with reference to Jimmie Fong? A. Mrs. Tom told me that Fong is a good character, his moral is good, and good reputation too." Asked as to who was present during this conversation, the witness stated there were some customers in the restaurant but he did not know their names, and he was then asked:

"At the time you talked with Mrs. Tom you had discussed the sale of an automobile to Jimmie Fong? A. Yes sir, I asked Mrs. Tom whether he paid his bills and whether he is a good character and she told me he is.

"The Court: You misunderstood the question: Did you ever talk to Fong prior to the time you talked to this lady about him buying a car from you or you selling him a car? A. No, I didn't.

"Question by counsel: It was after you talked with Jimmie Fong concerning the sale of an automobile that you talked with Mrs. Tom? A. After?

"Q. Yes, it was after you talked with Jimmie Fong about selling him an automobile that you talked with Mrs. Tom about his character and reputation, is that so? A. Yes sir."

He also, prior to September 29th, talked on the telephone with one Johnnie Gamble, of whom the witness seemed to know practically nothing. "I asked him how his (referring to Fong) character—and he told me he has a good reputation and morals is all right." The witness testified he told Mr. Fink, his employer, "that boy is all right,—he pay his bills, he is a good character and his morals are O. K."

It was brought out that the address given by Fong was that of a Chinese club, the Bing Kong Tong headquarters, but the Chinese witness seemed to know nothing about the club or the nature of its accommodations, he never having been inside. Although Wong had lived in Fresno since 1917, and the Chinese population of Fresno was only about 700 or 800 people, he talked to no one else about Fong. Upon cross-examination the witness could not recall a conversation with Mr. Creighton, an inspector for the State Narcotic Division, in which Creighton testified Wong had told him he had made no investigation of Fong prior to the sale. The witness admitted Fong was a stranger to him, and the only persons of whom he inquired were the two witnesses we have mentioned, Mrs. Tom and Gamble. He did not ascertain his business nor his residence address, nor make inquiry of any of his countrymen, except Mrs. Tom, nor learn where he had previously lived, or the nature of his work, or the names of any employers.

Mr. Davis, who was in charge of the installment sales department of the Fresno main branch of the Bank of America, the purchaser of the sales contract in question, obtained a financial report from the Fresno Merchants Association, and talked to the sales manager of the Charles Fink Company as to the investigation made by them. He also, upon inquiry of the West Fresno Branch of Bank of America, learned the condition of Fong's bank deposits and balance in that bank. This information was obtained by the bank after the signing of the contract of purchase by Fong, and before the contract was taken over by the bank. The information furnished by the selling agency to the bank was that their investigation showed to their satisfaction the character of Fong, and that, in their opinion, with the down payment the contract was satisfactory.

The report as received by the bank from the merchants association is as follows: "Copy of report from Fresno Merchants Association—Memorandum for Credit Files. 10-16-39. Auto Loan. Jimmie H. Fong, 921 China Alley, Fresno. New to files. Claims to be 27, and single. Employed by self. No information by those at the given address. No one knows about him. Personal Reference reports HC of $10.00, and subject always pays as agreed. Another personal reference cannot be located. West Fresno reports balance of $445.00 in Savings Account."

Mr. Lieu, a Chinese bank teller in the West Side Branch, Bank of America, testified to meeting Fong when he first came into the bank to open an account in January, 1939. At that time Fong told him he was a waiter and had come from Sacramento to Fresno with the intention of opening a restaurant. By September of that year Fong had built up his account from the opening deposit of $50 to $1,055, after which date he made withdrawals from time to time until it was practically closed at the time of his arrest. Whether or not the information possessed by Mr. Lieu was communicated to anyone in the bank or to the Fink Company or the main bank of the Bank of America is rather uncertain, the testimony on that matter being rather vague. Mr. Creighton, the state inspector, testified as to conversations with Mr. Wong, and he disputed the testimony of Wong in that he said Wong told him he had made no investigation before the sale of the car to Fong. He also testified that Mr. Davis of the Bank of America told him he (Davis) had made no investigation of Fong other than the financial report record from the credit association. The bookkeeper for Charles L. Fink also told Creighton they had made no investigation other than financial of Fong.

The foregoing constitutes in substance the evidence as to the investigation made by Fink and the bank as to the financial and moral responsibility of Jimmie Fong.

[1-3] In the recent case of People v. One 1938 Buick, 39 Cal.App.2d 42, 102 P.2d 447, some of the problems here presented were met and considered and we need not again review the cases there collected and analyzed. It is clear, however, that the burden of proving an investigation of the kind and to the extent required by the statute rests upon the claimant, and although the question of the scope and reasonableness of such an investigation is primarily one of fact, is must meet certain legal requirements. It would seem that a bona fide investigation should, among other essentials, reveal the home address of the prospect, his employer, either past or present, the source of his income, his family or social connections, and as in the case here of a stranger, some inquiry as to his prior location and his standing in that community. It is very clear the law requires inquiry along two distinct lines, his financial status and his moral responsibility. These cover two spheres of activity and a purely financial examination will not necessarily, and it did not here reveal the necessary facts to pass upon the moral responsibility, character and reputation of the prospect.

Here we have an investigation by Hiram Wong, who by leading and suggestive questions tells of making inquiry of Mrs. Tom, a restaurant keeper, whose only contact with Fong was that he took some meals at her place of business, and sometimes she gave him credit for a small amount, which he paid. He also inquired of one Gamble, but who Gamble was or what his ideas of moral responsibility may have been, the record is silent. Wong did not inquire of the many respectable and high-principled Chinese undoubtedly to be found in the Chinese quarters of Frenso; he did not attempt to ascertain his home address; he did not know with whom he associated, nor the source of his rather rapidly growing bank deposits, except that he was in business for himself, but he did not inquire what kind of business. The one name furnished by Fong as a relative, was a man living in Sacramento, and he was not contacted.

We also have an investigation by the bank, which is quite obviously a financial investigation. The manager of the installment department called the Fink Company to ascertain the extent of their investigation; he obtained a merchant's report and a bank report from the bank in which Fong carried an account.

[4] It seems the investigation here was no more than would have been done if the subject of the contract had been for the purchase of a piano or a refrigerator. The investigation of a proposed purchaser of an automobile is not alone for the protection of the financial investment of the seller or the bank, but the legislature has, in effect, said the public also has an interest in the character of persons who may acquire automobiles.

The purpose of the law clearly is to keep automobiles out of the possession of those who might use them for an unlawful purpose. It is one method devised to aid in the prevention of crime, and therefore it becomes the duty of the courts to assist in the accomplishment of the purpose of the law.

[5] The investigation here detailed is so slight that to place the stamp of approval upon such a cursory examination of one's moral background and to hold it as sufficient, would be to make this particular law of little value. The facts do not support the findings or the judgment. The judgment is reversed.

We concur: TUTTLE, J.; THOMPSON, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 425

In re SHANNON'S ESTATE.
WALCOTT v. CRAMER.

Civ. 11638.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 11, 1941.

Rehearing Denied April 10, 1941.
Hearing Denied May 8, 1941.

1. Wills ⇐728

Under will devising house and lot to executrix for as long as she lived with remainder over to others, executrix was not required to pay rent for her occupation of the property pending probate proceedings and prior to distribution.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1030

Whether reservation of rulings is ground for reversal in any given case depends on the circumstances.

3. Executors and administrators ⇐507(2)

If trial court was in doubt whether executrix should be allowed credit for payment of taxes and insurance on property devised to and occupied by her, the court should have retired the items and held the question open for determination on rendition of final account.

4. Wills ⇐736

Under will devising house and lot to executrix for life and directing that executrix maintain and pay taxes on the property, where occupation of the property by executrix after death of testator was not as executrix but as life tenant, executrix was personally bound to bear the expense of taxes and fire insurance.

5. Executors and administrators ⇐514

Order settling second annual account over objection that executrix had improperly claimed credit for expenditures for insurance and taxes was not "res judicata" of right to challenge fourth annual account on ground that credits were improperly claimed for similar expenditures made subsequent to rendition of second account.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of John William Shannon, deceased, wherein Anna Walcott, executrix of the last will and testament of Nellie Kelleher, deceased, a devisee, filed written objections to the fourth annual account filed by Lillian Marie Cramer, as executrix of the estate of John William Shannon, deceased. From an order overruling the objections, Anna Walcott, as executrix, appeals.

Reversed.

Tobin & Tobin and Raymond J. Arata, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frank L. Barrett, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order settling the fourth annual account of the executrix of the estate of the decedent. The decedent left an holographic will. It is very long and need not be set forth at length. Among other provisions it contained the following:

"I give, devise and bequeath. to my sister Mrs. Nellie. Kelleher. my House. and Lot. and all improvements. there on. Lot two. Block 4088 on hampshire Street. San Francisco. California. to be hers for Ever.

"Second I give, devise and bequeath to Mrs. Lillian. Marie. Cramer. My. House. and Lot. and all improvements thear on. Lot 8. Block 4. San Rafael. Marin County. California. to be hers as long as she lives. and on and after her Death. then it shall be the property of John William and Helen Margaret. Cramer. share and share a like, to be thears for Ever. Mrs. Lillian M. Cramer shal keep the improvements repaired and all Taxes Paid. for use of the same. it shall not be sold or Mortgaged, during her life."

The will named Mrs. Lillian Marie Cramer as executrix. After the death of the decedent Mrs. Cramer applied for and letters testamentary were issued to her. She duly qualified and since then she has continued to act as executrix. On the 19th of August, 1938, she filed her fourth annual account. It may be noted that at the time of the death of the decedent and ever since then Mrs. Cramer and her family have occupied the house and lot designated as lot 8, block 4 in San Rafael, Marin County, California. In the said account the executrix did not charge herself with interest on the value of said premises nor for rent for the use of said premises. But she did charge the estate with all taxes levied thereon and the cost of fire insurance. Said account covered a period commencing June, 1936, and extended down to August, 1938. Anna Walcott, executrix of the last will and testament of Nellie Kelleher, deceased, appeared and filed written objections to said account. Said objections were as follows:

"1. That said executrix has failed to charge herself with rent for the real property of said estate situate in the County of Marin, State of California, nor has she charged herself with a reasonable value of the use and occupation of said premises.

"2. That said executrix has not charged herself with interest in the legal rate upon the amount due to the estate for the reasonable value of the use and occupation of the Marin County real property of said estate.

"3. That said executrix, without right, has credited herself with disbursements for taxes and insurance upon the Marin County real property of said estate."

After hearing the parties the court made an order overruling objections 1 and 2, and then continued as follows: "3. That objection numbered 3, to said fourth account, so heard as aforesaid, be and the same is, hereby overruled and disallowed, subject, however, to the right to renew the same upon final accounting herein." From that order Anna Walcott has appealed.

[1] Under the clear wording of the will it appears that decedent intended that Mrs. Cramer should have the use of said premises and that she should not be charged rent. That document contains nothing showing any intention on the part of the testator that Mrs. Cramer should vacate the premises after the date of his death, or that the premises should be rented to her or to anyone else pending the probate proceedings and until distribution had. Nor does it show that the right of Mrs. Cramer to occupy the premises free of rent should commence at the date of distribution. No authority has been cited which requires us to place a different interpretation on the language used in the will. Therefore we think the trial court did not err in its rulings on objections 1 and 2 hereinabove set forth.

[2, 3] The appellant does not seriously contend that the court erred in ruling on those two objections. However she earnestly contends the trial court should have ordered the executrix, under the facts hereinabove set forth, to charge herself with the payments of taxes and insurance. In that connection it should be noted that the trial court made no fixed ruling on that contention. In effect, it reserved its ruling until the hearing of the final account. The real question presented on this appeal is whether the trial court erred in failing to make, in the instant proceeding, a direct ruling on the appellant's contention. The latter contends that it did. She calls to our attention these additional facts. At the time of the death of the decedent he owned lot 8 of block 4 which with improvements was valued at $8,000, and lot 2 block 4088 on Hampshire street in San Francisco, with improvements valued at $2,000. He also owned items of personal property in the sum of $675. Whether the personal property has been sold does not appear. From August 4, 1936, to July 27, 1938, all receipts, $587.54, were rent received from the Hampshire street property. Nothing appears showing that in the future there will be receipts of any other kind. The disbursements were $703.80. The deficit as shown on the third annual account was $52.31. As shown on the fourth annual account the deficit had increased and the total then was $116.26. From all of the facts it appears the deficit will increase each succeeding year. It further appears that no claims have been filed against the estate. But the report of the executrix recites: "That said estate is not ready for final distribution, or partial distribution, for the reason that there is not sufficient money on hand or sufficient property (other than the said real property specifically devised to Nellie Kelleher) out of which to pay the debts, expenses of administration, and charges, of said estate, and/or the bequests contained in the last will and testament of said decedent." Under the foregoing circumstances the appellant argues the failure of the trial court to rule on her contention that the executrix should pay the taxes and insurance will result in an indefinite postponement of distribution and perhaps the complete divestitute of appellant's claim as a devisee under the will of the decedent. We see no escape from that contention. It will hardly be contended that in no instance may a trial court reserve its ruling on an objection. But, "Whether the practice of reserving rulings is ground for reversal in any given case depends upon the circumstance." 24 Cal.Jur. 776. If the trial court was in doubt as to whether to allow the executrix credit for the payment of taxes and insurance, the proper order was for it to retire said items and hold the question open for determination on the rendition of the final account. 11b Cal. Jur. 601; In re Estate of Dillon, 149 Cal. 683, 685, 87 P. 379.

[4] In what we have just said we are not intimating that there may be a doubt as to whether the executrix should personally bear the expense of taxes and insurance. Under the facts, ever since the death of the decedent the executrix has been in possession of the San Rafael lot not as executrix but as the life tenant thereof. As such she was, under the terms of the will, bound to pay the taxes and the cost of fire insurance. In re Banfield's Estate, 137 Or. 256, 299 P. 323, 3 P.2d 116; In re Paradis' Estate, 134 Me. 333, 186 A. 672.

[5] The executrix controverts the proposition last stated and claims that the question, in the instant case, is not an open one. She claims it is res judicata. She calls attention to the fact that when she rendered her second account the appellant appeared, made the same objections, and that the objections were overruled and such ruling has become the law of the case. That contention may not be sustained. The charges now complained of occurred since the rendition of the second account. It is not res judicata. In re Estate of Mailhebuau, 218 Cal. 202, 205, 22 P.2d 514. Furthermore said last-mentioned order, as set forth in the record, was based on objections 1 and 2, and not on objection 3 as hereinabove set forth. Objection 3 was by counsel withdrawn without prejudice to the renewal of same. No ruling was had thereon. It follows that the order settling the second annual account is not res judicata on the contention the appellant now makes.

The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; SPENCE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 380

TOWNSEND et al. v. PERRY et al.

Civ. 11562.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 10, 1941.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing April 9, 1941.

Hearing Denied May 8, 1941.

1. Constitutional law ⇨312

In unlawful detainer action, order directing receivers to surrender possession of realty involved to holder of notes secured by trust deed, subject to which defendant held title, and order denying defendant's motion to vacate such previous order, were not erroneous as depriving defendant of his property without due process of law, as such orders were purely ancillary to issues involved and did not attempt to determine title to any property.

2. Receivers ⇨166

In unlawful detainer action, holder of notes secured by trust deed of realty sold on foreclosure to note holders' agent, had right to file petition for order directing receivers, regularly appointed by trial court, to surrender possession of realty to such holder, without intervening in or being made party to action.

3. Receivers ⇨71

Possession of realty by receivers, regularly appointed by trial court in owner's unlawful detainer action against tenant thereof, cannot be disturbed without court's permission.

4. Receivers ⇨166

In unlawful detainer action, where holder of notes, secured by trust deed on property involved, appeared, filed verified petition, gave notice of intention to move for order directing receivers to surrender property to petitioner, recited in such notice that motion would be supported by her verified petition, and made such motion and read petition at time stated in notice, no affidavit in opposition was presented or filed, and defendant's answer alleged no facts showing that he held title to property superior to lien of trust deed, trial court properly granted relief asked in petition, though petitioner did not intervene. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1003, 2009.

5. Appeal and error ⇐1047(5)

In unlawful detainer action, order directing receivers to surrender possession of realty involved to nonintervening petitioner and order denying defendant's motion to vacate previous order will be affirmed on appeal as against contention that trial court had no power to take notice of records, files and documents in other pending actions involving property because they were not formally offered in evidence, in absence of record showing that defendant was prejudiced by contents of any record noticed by trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. Turney Fox, Judge.

Action in unlawful detainer by F. V. L. Townsend and others against Will H. Perry and others, in which receivers were appointed and Anna Baumann filed a petition to direct the receivers to surrender the property involved to her. From an order granting the petition and an order denying defendant Perry's motion to vacate the previous order, defendant Perry appeals.

Orders affirmed.

C. E. Spencer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Thomas F. McCue, of Los Angeles, for petitioner and respondent.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

From an order directing the receiver to deliver the possession of property, both real and personal, and from an order refusing to vacate the former order, the defendant Perry has appealed.

Heretofore H. O. Harrison and Daisy Harrison, his wife, were the owners of lot 23 of tract 2289 in the city and county of Los Angeles, together with the building standing thereon occupied as a hotel and certain business purposes. On May 1, 1930, they executed promissory notes in the sum of $500,000 in favor of Lane Mortgage Company and to secure the payment thereof they executed a trust deed naming the Bank of America as trustee and Lane Mortgage Company as beneficiary. Anna Baumann, hereinafter mentioned as the petitioner, and numerous other persons became the owners of the said promissory notes. Thereafter B. L. Vaughn and Adele J. Vaughn, his wife, became the owners of the real estate above mentioned. On November 1, 1931, the Vaughns executed to Lane Mortgage Company a promissory note in the sum of $5,000 and to secure the payment thereof they executed a trust deed in which they named the Bank of America as the trustee and the Lane Mortgage Company as the beneficiary. The title of one of the tenants was assigned to the defendant and he entered into possession of the property as a tenant. Thereafter under the terms of said deed of trust executed by the Vaughns a sale was had and the property was sold to F. V. L. Townsend, Henry G. Bedford, J. A. Mottashed and Jacob D. Poorman, the plaintiffs in this action. On April 23, 1937, the plaintiffs commenced this action in unlawful detainer against Will H. Perry alleged to be in possession of said property. Before commencing said action the plaintiffs caused to be served a notice as provided in section 1161a of the Code of Civil Procedure. Later Perry filed an answer admitting that he held his title subject to a first trust deed executed to secure $500,000 of notes. On the 28th day of April, 1937, the trial court appointed C. E. Spencer the attorney for the defendant, and Henry O. Wackerbarth the attorney for the plaintiffs, as receivers. Thereafter they duly qualified and entered into the possession of said property.

The Harrisons and their successors in interest defaulted in the payment of interest and on March 18, 1937, Anna Baumann, as a bondholder, in behalf of herself and the holders of other bonds, commenced an action to foreclose the deed of trust theretofore executed by the Harrisons. In due time a decree was awarded to Anna Baumann and the property was sold to the agent of the bondholders on August 25, 1937. From the order of sale in the action last mentioned an appeal was taken and is now pending. The record does not show that a stay was had. Thereafter an action in partition was commenced. It was entitled Anna Baumann v. Henry E. Bedford et al. Still later another action in claim and delivery involving title to the furnishings, etc., in the building was commenced. That action was entitled W. B. Goes v. Will H. Perry et al.

Each and all of said actions were, on August 25, 1937, pending in the same department of the same court. On that date Anna Baumann appeared in the unlawful detainer action, filed a petition and served notice that on the 1st day of September, 1937, she would move the court for an order directing the receivers to surrender to her the property hereinabove described. The defendant Perry filed written objections, a demurrer, and also an answer. The petition came on for hearing on the 3d day of September, 1937. On that date some proceedings were had in said court in each of said actions. In this action no witness was called and examined and no document was formally offered in evidence. On December 10, 1937, the trial court ordered the objections overruled, the demurrer overruled, and that the petition be granted. It also made orders appointing H. F. Metcalf receiver of the real property involved in the action entitled Baumann v. Bedford, and also receiver of the personal property involved in the case of Goes v. Perry. Thereafter, on December 14, 1937, the defendant Will H. Perry served a notice that on December 16, 1937, he would move the court for an order vacating the order directing the receivers to surrender possession of the real estate described in the petition of Anna Baumann. The latter motion was heard and denied on December 16, 1937, and from those orders the defendant Perry has appealed.

[1] Claiming the orders last mentioned were in effect a final decree, the defendant contends they were appealable. Fish v. Fish, 216 Cal. 14, 13 P.2d 375. The petitioner makes no reply. We will assume, without deciding, that the orders were appealable. The defendant earnestly contends the orders deprived him of his property without due process of law. A most cursory examination of the record discloses that the orders were purely ancillary to the issues involved. Neither order attempted to determine title to any property. Therefore we find no merit in that contention. 16 C.J. S. Constitutional Law, § 613, p. 1233; see, also, Pacific Railway v. Wade, 91 Cal. 449, 455-457, 27 P. 768, 13 L.R.A. 754, 25 Am.St. Rep. 201.

[2, 3] In his next point the defendant asserts that as Anna Baumann did not intervene in the unlawful detainer action and was not made a party to it, she could not demand any relief. That point has no merit. The trial court had regularly appointed the receivers. It is settled law that their possession could not be disturbed without permission of the court. 22 Cal.Jur. 499. In filing a petition the petitioner was not in any proper sense asking relief in unlawful detainer, she was merely attempting to protect her own interest. She was asking no determination of title.

In his next point the defendant states the court erred in ordering the surrender of the property to a stranger to the action upon the petition of a nonintervener whose rights, if any, are solely dependent upon contested issues alleged in still other cases. That point is the gist of the grievance of the defendant in this action. Conceding, without deciding, that the petitioner might have intervened in the unlawful detainer action, she was not bound to do so. In certain instances, as a third party claimant, she had the right, after first obtaining permission of the court, to intervene, to maintain a separate action, or to appear in the unlawful detainer action and make a motion for relief. 53 C.J. 122 and 330; I Clark on Receivers, 746, 750. She selected the latter remedy, that is, she appeared and filed a verified petition. That was one proper course to take. 53 C.J. 122; De Forrest v. Coffey, 154 Cal. 444, 450–453, 98 P. 27. She gave notice of her intention to move and in that notice of intention she recited that her motion would be supported by her verified petition, or in other words, her affidavit. That procedure was authorized by the statute. Code Civ.Proc., secs. 1003 and 2009. At the time stated in the notice she made her motion and read her petition. No one presented or filed any affidavit in opposition. The defendant Perry had filed an answer. The record does not disclose that he read it. Assuming that he did, the most that can be said is there was a conflict in the evidence. However, the defendant's answer alleged no facts showing he held any title to the property that was superior to the lien of the $500,000 bond issue, the title held by the petitioner. In the absence of such a showing the trial court would not withhold from the petitioner the relief asked in her petition. Bolich v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 202 N.C. 789, 164 S.E. 335, 337, 82 A.L.R. 974.

[5] In connection with the point discussed last the defendant vigorously contends the trial court had no power to take notice of the records, files and documents on file in its court in the other actions above enumerated because they were not formally offered in evidence. Conceding, without deciding, that it did not have power to take judicial notice of such actions, nevertheless from the record it does not appear the defendant was in any manner prejudiced by the contents of any record noticed by the trial court. Schomer v. R. L. Craig Co., 137 Cal.App. 620, 627, 31 P.2d 396.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; SPENCE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 378

SVOBODA v. LAMBERT et al.

Civ. 2926.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 8, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐800

Where clerk's transcript and opening brief were filed in reviewing court before motion to dismiss appeal was heard, appeal would not be dismissed on ground that transcript was not filed within time allowed by law.

2. Appeal and error ⇐616(1)

On appeal from an order made after judgment, a clerk's transcript is not sufficient unless it bears certificate of the trial judge that it contains documents used at hearing and considered by trial judge in making the questioned decision.

3. Appeal and error ⇐640

Where record on appeal indicated that new trial was granted after trial court had lost jurisdiction to grant new trial, but the only record was a clerk's transcript not disclosing anything which was before trial judge in passing upon the motion for new trial, there was no record upon which to consider any issue in connection with such order, and appeal was dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Warmer, Judge.

Action by Clem V. Svoboda against A. C. Lambert and others for declaratory relief. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and from an order vacating order granting new trial, defendants appeal. On motion to dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Theo. G. Krumm and Grant Holcomb, both of San Bernardino, for appellants.

C. E. Crowley, of Ontario, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that a transcript was not filed within the time allowed by law and on the further ground that the transcript which is now on file was not certified and settled as required by law, with the result that there is no record on which any issue presented by the appeal may be determined.

The action was one for declaratory relief. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff on November 21, 1939. Notice of entry of judgment was served by mailing it in the city of Ontario addressed to attorney for defendant in the city of San Bernardino on November 21, 1939. See § 660, Code Civ. Proc. More than sixty days thereafter and on January 23, 1940, an order was entered granting a motion for a new trial. On October 29, 1940, on motion of the plaintiff, the court entered an order vacating and setting aside the previous order by which a new trial had been granted. On November 9, 1940, the defendants appealed from the order vacating the order which had granted them a new trial.

[1] Before this motion to dismiss the appeal was heard a clerk's transcript and an opening brief were filed in this court. For present purposes, at least, this may be deemed a sufficient answer to the first ground of the motion now before us.

With respect to the second ground, that no sufficient record is before this court, no reporter's transcript or bill of exceptions has been filed. The regular time for filing the same has expired and it appears by affidavit and by the clerk's certificate that no stipulation or order has been filed extending the time for preparing such a reporter's transcript or settling such a bill of exceptions. No record is before us except a clerk's transcript, which was filed on February 27, 1941. It contains the clerk's certificate to the effect that the various documents contained therein are correct copies of the originals of such documents as filed in the clerk's office. It does not purport to contain any record of any affidavits or other matter which may have been before the trial judge in passing upon the issues presented in connection with, and which led to, the order from which this appeal was taken. Nor is there any certificate of the trial judge in connection with any such matters.

[2] It has frequently been held that, on such an appeal from an order made after judgment, a clerk's transcript is not sufficient unless it bears the certificate of the trial judge to the effect that it contains the documents which were used at the hearing and which were considered by him in making the decision which is questioned. Bartholomew v. Cross, 1 Cal.Dec. 385, 108 P.2d 49, and cases there cited.

[3] It would appear from such record as is before us that the former order granting a new trial was made after the court had lost jurisdiction to make such an order. In any event, there is no record before us which discloses anything which was before the trial judge and which was considered by him in making the order appealed from. Under such circumstances, there is no record upon which any issue in connection with the making of that order can be here presented or considered.

The appeal is dismissed.

We concur: MARKS, J.; GRIFFIN, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 347

In re FORREST'S ESTATE.

FORREST v. BENNETT.

Civ. 11641.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 6, 1941.

Hearing Denied May 1, 1941.

1. Executors and administrators ⇐20(9)

An order appointing executrix may incorporate the court's findings of fact on issues presented by objections to the appointment.

2. Executors and administrators ⇐15

Property settlement agreement executed after separation of husband and wife did not preclude wife from serving as executrix under husband's will, in absence of inconsistency, though agreement provided that each party relinquished the right to administer on the estate of the other. Probate Code, § 407.

3. Executors and administrators ⇐20(10)

The rights of legatees to take under will were not matters in issue on appeal from order appointing executrix, except in so far as disqualification of executrix was shown.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; I. L. Harris, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Francis G. Forrest, deceased. From an order appointing Georgina E. Forrest as executrix, Helen F. Bennett appeals.

Affirmed.

Clarence M. Oddie, and Duncan A. McLeod, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Marcel E. Cerf, Robinson & Leland, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order appointing Georgina E. Forrest executrix of the will of Frank G. Forrest, deceased. The decedent and Georgina E. Forrest intermarried on June 29, 1915. They lived together until April, 1922, at which time Mrs. Forrest filed a suit for divorce. Later both an interlocutory decree of divorce and a final decree were entered in favor of Mrs. Forrest. On December 31, 1923, they remarried. They continued to live together until May, 1928, when they separated. Mrs. Forrest again filed a suit for divorce but no interlocutory decree was ever entered. The parties so lived separate and apart until 1932 when they commenced living together again. For about five years they lived together until 1937, when Mrs. Forrest filed a suit for separate maintenance. The complaint was subsequently amended to pray for a divorce and an interlocutory decree was entered on March 4, 1938. A property settlement agreement dated February 28, 1938, was executed prior to the entry of the interlocutory decree. No final decree in that action was entered. On May 29, 1939, Mr. Forrest died.

On August 6, 1921, Mr. Forrest executed an holographic will. On July 14, 1933, he executed an holographic codicil. In the will as executed August 6, 1921, the decedent inserted, "My wife, Georgina E. Forrest to serve as administratrix without bonds." After his death the decedent's wife applied to be appointed executrix. Helen F. Bennett, a sister of the decedent, appeared and filed objections to the petition filed by Mrs. Forrest and also asked to be appointed administratrix with the will annexed. After hearing the petitions and objections the trial court granted the petition of Mrs. Forrest and ordered that she be appointed executrix to serve without bonds. That is the order from which this appeal was taken.

[1] The appellant Helen F. Bennett contends that the trial court erred in failing to make and sign written findings of fact upon the issue presented by the objections contained in her written opposition. The answer to that contention is that the trial court did make findings and did sign the same. The order appealed from as set forth in the transcript consists of more than nine folios. The trial court recites many facts, among others, "* * * that said Georgina E. Forrest is nominated (in the will) as the executrix of said will, to serve without bonds, and consents to act as such executrix * * * that said decedent never in any way altered or revoked said will * * * or her appointment or right to act as such executrix; that said Georgina E. Forrest never by agreement or otherwise waived, relinquished, or surrendered * * any of her rights to letters testamentary or to be appointed or to act as such executrix; that at the time of the death of said decedent said Georgina E. Forrest was the wife of said decedent". We do not note any material fact, pertinent to the issue we are considering, on which the court did not make a finding. The mere fact that the order and the findings are contained in one document constitutes no legal objection to the latter. Shaingold v. Shaingold, 191 Cal. 438, 216 P. 603.

[2] The next point made by the appellant is that the provisions of the property settlement agreement entered into by and between Georgina E. Forrest and F. G. Forrest were inconsistent with the provisions of the will and operated as a revocation thereof. An examination of said agreement discloses nothing inconsistent with the provisions of the will. With reference to the right to act as executrix, in said agreement it is provided, "And the parties hereto and each of them, do hereby expressly waive, relinquish, and surrender * * * the right to administer upon the estate of the other party." That provision it may be conceded would have been pertinent if this were an application for letters of administration but it is an application for letters testamentary. Section 407 of the Probate Code provides: "Objections to appointment. Any person interested in the estate or will may file objections in writing to granting letters testamentary to the persons named as executors, or any of them, and the objections must be heard and determined by the court; a petition may, at the same time, be filed for letters of administration with the will annexed. If no objection is made, the court when admitting a will to probate must direct the issuance of letters thereon to the persons named therein as executors who are competent to discharge the trust, unless they or either of them have renounced their right." There was no claim Mrs. Forrest was incompetent. The property settlement agreement mentioned contains no express renunciation. Nor were its provisions inconsistent with the will. In Re Estate of Maddux, 138 Cal.App. 430, at page 431, 32 P.2d 392, speaking of the provisions of a property settlement agreement, the court said: "By said agreement it was the expressed intention of the parties thereto to forever settle and adjust all mutual and respective rights and obligations arising out of the marriage relation, to determine the respective rights of inheritance, divide all community property between the parties, in full and final settlement of any claim, one upon the other, and to absolve each from future acts of the other affecting property or property rights. The will previously executed was not mentioned therein, nor did the testatrix by her codicil dated thereafter make any change of executor. It is argued, in effect, that the severance of marital property rights and obligations constituted a renunciation of such nomination, but the executed documents do not evidence such intention, nor can it be said that any reason stated for such severance is capable of interpretation as a disqualification. Probate Code, § 401 et seq." So in the instant case there is nothing on the face of the property settlement agreement showing that the existence of the will of the decedent, or any part or portion thereof, was before the contracting parties.

[3] In her next point the appellant discusses the rights of the legatees named in the will to take thereunder. Those questions are not involved on this appeal except to show the disqualification of Mrs. Forrest; and, as stated by the court in Re Estate of Maddux, supra, they do not show a disqualification.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; SPENCE, J.

17 Cal.2d 563

SANDERSON v. NIEMANN et al.

L. A. 17538.

Supreme Court of California.

March 7, 1941.

1. Husband and wife ⇐270(1)

A married woman has a separate right to bring an action in her own name for injuries to her person and she is a "necessary party" to that action, though her husband may join her therein.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Necessary Party".

2. Judgment ⇐502

Wife was not a "necessary party" to action in small claims court for damages to community-owned automobile and for financial loss to community from wife's injuries but where no objection was made to her joinder therein, complaint thereof could not be made on appeal from judgment in wife's separate action for injuries, particularly where cause of action for wife's injuries was not tendered as an issue in the small claims court.

3. Husband and wife ⇐19(15)

A husband must provide his wife with reasonable medical care and attention and is primarily responsible for payment of such services. Civ.Code § 174.

4. Statutes ⇐225

The scope and meaning of statute permitting a married woman without joinder of her husband to sue for personal injuries must be determined by considering it in the light of other statutes including those defining the property rights and interests of husband and wife. Code Civ.Proc. § 370; Civ.Code §§ 161a, 172, 172a, 174.

5. Husband and wife ⇐265

A husband and wife by statute are given an equal interest in the community property during continuance of the marriage relation, but they do not possess equal power of management, control or disposition, and husband has power of management and control. Civ.Code §§ 161a, 172, 172a.

6. Husband and wife ⇐270(1)

A husband must bring all actions that concern the community property, unless express statutory exceptions permit her to bring such action. Civ.Code §§ 161a, 172, 172a.

7. Husband and wife ⇐260

Consequential damages which may be recovered for expenses incurred by either husband or wife in the treatment of his or her injuries are presumably community property, in absence of allegation that separate property of either was obligated for payment of such expenses. Code Civ.Proc. § 370; Civ.Code §§ 161a, 172, 172a, 174.

8. Action ⇐50(3)

Cause of action by wife for injuries may be joined with cause of action by husband for consequential damages. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 370, 427.

9. Husband and wife ⇐270(1)
Judgment ⇐597

A husband has primary right, of which he is not divested by statute authorizing wife to sue for personal injuries, to seek recovery of consequential damages from financial loss to community, though such damages are result of injuries to wife, and hence wife's joinder in husband's action in small claims court for damages to community-owned automobile and consequential damages from financial loss to community as result of wife's injuries did not preclude wife, on ground that there had been a "splitting of causes of action", from maintaining separate action for injuries. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 370, 427; Civ.Code §§ 161a, 172a, 174.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Splitting of Causes of Action".

10. Automobiles ⇐234

Where recovery from automobile owner for injuries caused by negligence of driver was sought on theory of respondeat superior, driver was not a "necessary party". Vehicle Code § 402; St.1937, p. 2353.

11. Judgment ⇐542, 720

A judgment of any court whether of high or low jurisdiction, and of record or not, constitutes a complete bar against a second suit on the same cause of action, but constitutes merely an "estoppel" in a second suit on a different cause, or a conclusive determination of such issues only as were actually raised and litigated.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estoppel".

12. Courts ⇐175

The small claims court was established to obtain speedy settlement of small claims by informal proceedings conducted in a spirit of compromise and conciliation. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 117b, 117g, 117h, 117j.

13. Judgment ⇐639

Judgment against automobile owner in small claims court for damages to community-owned automobile and consequential damages from financial loss to community as result of injuries to wife was not "res judicata" of the issues of negligence and contributory negligence raised in superior court action by wife to recover damages for her injuries. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 117b, 117g, 117h, 117j.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clement D. Nye, Judge.

Action by Hazel Sanderson against Charles Niemann, Jr., individually and doing business as the Hillside Motor Company and others, to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in an automobile collision. Judgment in favor of the named defendant and plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

For prior opinion see 100 P.2d 508.

Jack R. Kates and Kenneth C. Miller, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Mills, Hunter, Dunn & Liljestrom and H. J. Hunter, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is an appeal from a judgment which was rendered in favor of the defendant Charles Niemann, Jr., individually, and doing business as Hillside Motor Company, in an action which was brought by the plaintiff, Mrs. Hazel Sanderson, to recover damages for injuries to her person. The damages were allegedly sustained as the result of an accident in which were involved an automobile owned as community property by plaintiff and her husband, Job Sanderson, and one owned by defendant, which automobile, at the time of the accident, was being operated by one William Frost. Plaintiff Hazel Sanderson was riding in the automobile which her husband was driving at the time when the collision occurred.

Subsequent to the happening of the accident and prior to the institution of the present action, Job and Hazel Sanderson filed an action in the small claims court of the city of Los Angeles against the defendant herein, Charles Niemann, Jr., for the recovery of a judgment for damages to their automobile, as well as for money which had been expended by the plaintiff husband for medical services rendered to the wife as a result of the injuries received by her in the said accident. The plaintiffs in that action were awarded a judgment in the sum of $12.58.

The complaint which was filed in the present action embraced two causes of action—in the first of which was set forth a claim for damages, for personal injuries, and in the second, in addition to the incorporation by reference of the allegations of the first cause of action, was set forth the claim that the judgment obtained in the small claims court was res judicata of the question of defendant's negligence and liability in connection with the accident. The court overruled a general demurrer to the complaint, but granted a motion to strike the second cause of action. Defendant's answer set forth the following as affirmative defenses: (1) contributory negligence of plaintiff, which was asserted to be imputable to her by reason of the fact that her husband was the operator of the Sanderson automobile at the time of the collision; (2) that the plaintiff, Hazel Sanderson, had split and divided her claim for personal injuries and therefore was estopped from maintaining the present action; and (3) that the former judgment was res judicata of all claims which plaintiff might have had as a result of the accident.

At the trial of the instant action, the record of the proceedings which were had in the small claims court was introduced in evidence, and in that connection testimony was given by plaintiff and by the judge who presided at the hearing of the former action. At the close of that testimony, defendant objected to the introduction of further evidence on the part of plaintiff. The trial court sustained that objection—whereupon plaintiff made an offer of proof with respect to the circumstances surrounding the happening of the accident, the extent of her injuries, etc., which offer was refused by the court. Thereafter, judgment was rendered in favor of defendant on the ground that the former judgment was a bar to the instant action, and that by virtue of the proceedings had in the small claims court plaintiff had "split" her cause of action against defendant and was es-topped from prosecuting the present action. From the latter judgment plaintiff has instituted this appeal.

Perhaps it should first be made clear that appellant and her husband did not incorporate in the pleadings which they filed in the former action the issue of damages for appellant's personal injuries. No relief in that respect was prayed for, nor was any evidence received by the court in that connection, except in the following respect: During the proceedings had in the former action the judge made certain inquiries of Mrs. Sanderson with regard to the nature of the medical treatment which assertedly was received by her because of her alleged injuries. According to the testimony that was given by the judge, he had asked those questions for the reason that the statement of indebtedness for medical treatment which the plaintiffs had offered in evidence did not disclose the extent of the medical services that were rendered to appellant Hazel Sanderson as a result of the injuries—as distinguished from medical treatments which, it appeared, she had received in connection with a physical ailment which was not related to the said injuries. The statements which Mrs. Sanderson thereupon made to the judge with regard to the nature of her injuries, and the treatment thereof, were solely in response to his inquiries. The record shows that her answers were not intended to have the effect of injecting into the issues the question of general damages in connection with those injuries; and the judge's testimony was to the effect that such statements were not so understood by him.

Both parties to the appeal concede that the identical question here presented has not heretofore been brought before the appellate courts of this state for consideration. The question is: Did the plaintiff wife—by joining her husband in an action for the recovery, in part, of "consequential" damages, i. e., financial loss resulting to the community, which were sustained from, and were solely incident to, the personal injuries which she suffered, —preclude herself from bringing a subsequent action in her own name for the recovery of general damages which were allegedly sustained by her strictly as a result of, and attributable solely to, the said personal injuries?

Respondent's argument is to the effect that—in view of the provisions of section 370, Code of Civil Procedure—since appellant joined her husband in the former action in which was tendered the issue of consequential damages for indebtedness incurred as the result of her injuries, she was compelled to litigate therein, if at all, any claim which she might have had for injuries to her person; and that her failure to do so, and the presentation by her of that issue in this action amounted to such a "splitting" of a cause of action that, by reason thereof, she should be effectively estopped from recovering in the present proceeding. Respondent contends that the basis of the claim presented in the small claims court was the negligence of defendant and, therefore, that the latter was entitled to have presented therein all claims which resulted from, or which in any way depended upon, his alleged negligence.

[1, 2] In this state it is well settled that the law has conferred upon a married woman a separate right to bring an action in her own name for damages for injuries to her person (§ 370, Code Civ.Proc.), and that she is a necessary party to that action (Redwing v. Moncravie, 131 Cal.App. 569, 21 P.2d 986), although her husband may join her therein. Such a right of action establishes an exception to the rule that the husband has control of the community property and that he must bring all actions which concern it. But appellant directs attention to the fact that two separate and distinct causes of action are involved in this proceeding,—namely, appellant's present action which was brought in her own name for injuries to her person, and the former action which was filed in the small claims court, to which her husband alone was a necessary party, wherein it was sought to collect damages sustained to the community-owned automobile, and consequential or incidental damages due to financial loss which resulted to the community by virtue of the wife's injuries. The wife was not a necessary party to the former action. However, no objection was made to her joinder therein as a party plaintiff and consequently none may now be made in that regard. See Webb v. Tischauser, 89 Cal.App. 267, 272, 264 P. 526, and cases there cited. Moreover, in the said former action respondent was not deprived of any substantial right by virtue of the joinder of the wife, since the husband was a necessary and proper party plaintiff therein, and the cause of action for which the wife is now seeking to recover damages for injuries to her person was not tendered as an issue. Asevado v.

Orr, 100 Cal. 293, 300, 34 P. 777; Daly v. Ruddell, 137 Cal. 671, 674, 70 P. 784. Therefore, unless it can be said that the provisions of section 370, Code Civ.Proc., authorize the bringing of an action by the wife to recover for incidental or consequential damages which may have been sustained by reason of financial loss to the community,—which right of action has heretofore been generally recognized as existing in the husband—there has been no "splitting" of a cause of action, and respondent's contentions may not be upheld. As amended in 1921, section 370, Code Civ. Proc., provides as follows:

"A married woman * * * may sue without her husband being joined as a party in all actions, including those for injury to her person, libel, slander, false imprisonment, or malicious prosecution, or for the recovery of her earnings, or concerning her right or claim to the homestead property." (Italics added.)

[3-6] However, under the provisions of section 174, Civil Code, a husband owes to his wife the duty of support. He must provide her with reasonable medical care and attention, for the payment of which services he is primarily responsible. Medical Finance Ass'n v. Allum, 22 Cal.App.2d Supp. 747, 66 P.2d 761; Davis v. Fyfe, 107 Cal.App. 281, 290 P. 468. And in determining the scope and meaning of the provisions of section 370, Code Civ.Proc., as sought to be applied herein, they must be considered in the light of other provisions of the law, including those sections of the Civil Code wherein are defined the property rights and interests of husband and wife. Although under the provisions of section 161a, Civil Code, the husband and wife have an equal interest in the community property during the continuance of the marriage relation, they do not possess equal power of management, control or disposition thereof. Frost v. Mighetto, 22 Cal.App.2d 612, 71 P.2d 932. The husband has the management and control of the community property. Myers v. Tranquility Irr. Dist., 26 Cal.App.2d 385, 388, 79 P.2d 419; section 172, 172a, Civ. Code. And, based on the foregoing considerations, the rule which has long been recognized in this state is that (except where express statutory exceptions have been made in favor of the wife with respect to her right to bring an action in connection with the community property) the husband must bring all actions that concern the community property. Johnson v. National Surety Co., 118 Cal.App. 227, 5 P.2d 39; 3 Cal.Jur.Supp. p. 612, and cases there cited.

[7] When read in the light of the Civil Code sections hereinbefore referred to, there is nothing in the language of section 370 of the Code of Civil Procedure which would imply that in enacting the provisions of that section the Legislature intended to divest the husband of the primary right (which theretofore had been recognized as existing in the husband) to bring an action for the recovery of damages due to financial loss which had resulted to the community through the wrongful act of another,—and, in lieu thereof, to vest that right in the wife, merely because the damages thus sought to be recovered may have been sustained as a result of injuries which were personal to the wife. In that regard, in one portion of his argument to this court, respondent concedes that "a wrongful act which causes an injury to the wife may involve two distinct wrongs, one to the wife for personal injury and another to the husband for consequential damages". Consequential damages which may be recovered for expenses incurred by either husband or wife in the treatment of his or her injuries—in the absence of an allegation that the separate property of either was obligated for the payment of such expenses—are presumably community property. Scoville v. Keglor, 27 Cal.App.2d 17, 29, 80 P.2d 162; Martin v. Costa, 140 Cal.App. 494, 498, 35 P.2d 362. Although a few decisions have been rendered in this state wherein, in an action instituted by a married woman, in her own name, for the recovery of general damages for injuries to her person, it was held that she might also recover consequential damages, —the weight of authority in this state is to the effect that the right of action for the recovery of consequential damages which may result from financial loss suffered by the community resides in the husband by virtue of his right of control of the community property. Thus, in the case of Redwing v. Moncravie, 131 Cal. App. 569, 572, 21 P.2d 986, 987, after stating that it was well settled that damages for personal injuries sustained by a married woman were not recoverable unless she was a party plaintiff in an action brought therefor, the court said: "He [the husband], as the sole plaintiff, could sue only for consequential or special damages suffered by him as the proximate result of the injuries to her." Also, in the case entitled Martin v. Costa, 140 Cal.App. 494, 498, 35 P.2d 362, 364, wherein it appeared that a married woman had brought an action for damages for personal injuries, the following was said: "The complaint in the present suit states a good cause of action for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff [wife]. Consequential damages were not alleged or sought. It was therefore not necessary for the husband of plaintiff to have been joined in the action. Code Civ.Proc. § 370." In each of the two last-mentioned decisions it is expressly recognized that the right exists in the husband to bring an action for consequential damages which may have resulted to the community by reason of personal injuries suffered by the wife; and both of those cases were decided subsequently to the enactment of section 370, Code Civ.Proc. Also, in the case entitled Johnson v. National Surety Co., 118 Cal. App. 227, 230, 5 P.2d 39, in referring to the provisions of section 370, Code Civ. Proc., in effect the court said that the section confers on a married woman no right to sue alone on an obligation where the right of action is given to the husband.

[8] Moreover, appellant directs attention to the fact that section 427, Code Civ. Proc., which pertains to the subject of joinder of causes of action, contemplates the existence of a separate right of action in the husband for the recovery of consequential damages sustained by reason of personal injuries to the wife. That section provides, in part, as follows: "* * * in any action brought by the husband and wife, to recover damages caused by any injury to the wife, all consequential damages suffered or sustained by the husband alone, including loss of the services of his said wife, moneys expended and indebtedness incurred by reason of such injury to his said wife, may be alleged and recovered without separately stating such cause of action arising out of such consequential damages suffered or sustained by the husband." (Italics added.)

The quoted language imports a recognition of two separate rights or causes of action for damages which may arise out of injuries to the wife, which have been sustained through the wrongful act of another; the one which exists in the wife for damages "caused by * * * injury to the wife", and the other in the husband, for the recovery of consequential damages suffered or "sustained by the husband alone", which may include "indebtedness incurred by reason of such injury to his said wife". The joinder in one action of both of those causes is authorized by the provisions of that section. Thomas v. Smith, 2 Cal.App.2d 701, 38 P.2d 827; Orrick v. Hoeptner, 110 Cal.App. 360, 294 P. 29; Martin v. Costa, 140 Cal.App. 494, 35 P.2d 362. But the language is permissive and not mandatory. Martin v. Costa, 140 Cal.App. 494, 35 P.2d 362; Lynch v. Kemp, 4 Cal.2d 440, 49 P.2d 817; Realty, etc., Mtg. Co. v. Superior Court, 165 Cal. 543, 132 P. 1048.

[9] In consideration of the foregoing, it follows that the action which was brought in the small claims court was essentially one by the husband for the recovery of damages which had been sustained by the community interests; that although the wife joined in that action she was not a necessary party thereto; and that since the cause of action on which she now seeks recovery was not involved as an issue therein, no "splitting" of a cause or causes of action has resulted.

The case of Kidd v. Hillman, 14 Cal. App.2d 507, 58 P.2d 662, which is cited and relied on by respondent, presents a factual situation that is distinguishable from the one here concerned. In that case the plaintiff brought two separate actions against the defendant therein,—in each of which she sought to recover for damages to personal property, where the respective damages were sustained as the result of one tort.

[10] Respondent also makes the contention—for the first time on this appeal—that appellant may not recover in the instant action for the reason that, in pursuance of the provisions of section 402, Motor Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 153, as amended by St.1937, p. 2353, in order to impose liability against respondent as the owner of the automobile which was alleged to have been negligently driven by another, it was necessary that William Frost (who at the time of the accident was driving respondent's automobile) be made a party defendant in these proceedings. It appears that William Frost was not made a party to the former action; and that although in the present action he was joined as a party defendant, during the proceedings had in the superior court.

appellant dismissed the action as against him. However, the ruling which was made in the case of Holland v. Kodimer, 11 Cal. 2d 40, 77 P.2d 843, does not support respondent's contention in that regard (see, also, cases cited therein).

Moreover, appellant contends that William Frost was not a necessary party to the instant action, in that in both the former and the present action liability was not predicated on the provisions of section 402, Motor Vehicle Code, but was sought to be imposed against respondent on the theory of respondeat superior. Appellant cites the cases entitled Shippy v. Peninsula Rapid Transit Co., 97 Cal.App. 367, 275 P. 515, and Daniel v. Jones, 140 Cal.App. 145, 35 P.2d 198, in support of her contention that where, as in this type of action, liability against a defendant is predicated on an employer-employee relationship, the joinder of the employee as a party defendant is not necessary. Furthermore, it is alleged in the complaint, and appellant offered to prove (which offer was erroneously rejected), that William Frost was the employee of respondent at the time the accident occurred, and that as such employee he was then driving the automobile of respondent during the course and in the scope of his employment.

[11] Appellant further contends that, in any event, the issues of negligence and contributory negligence were conclusively determined in the former action in the small claims court and therefore may not be raised in the present action. We cannot accept that contention. As is pointed out in the leading case of Todhunter v. Smith, 219 Cal. 690, 28 P.2d 916, the doctrine of res judicata has a dual aspect. The authorities indicate that although a judgment of any court whether of high or low jurisdiction, and of record or not, constitutes a complete bar against a second suit on the same cause of action,—in a second suit upon a different cause of action it constitutes but an estoppel or conclusive determination of such issues only as were actually raised and litigated. Inasmuch as the present litigation is based upon a different cause of action from that involved in the prior small claims suit, though tracing its origin to the same transaction, we are here solely concerned with the latter aspect of the doctrine of res judicata. It therefore is our problem to determine whether the judgment of a small claims court is res judicata on the issues of negligence and contributory negligence in a subsequent action in a higher court on a different cause of action. Our determination will be facilitated by a consideration of the nature of a small claims court.

[12] It is apparent that such a court was established in order to offer a means of obtaining speedy settlement of claims of small amounts. The theory behind its organization is that only by escaping from the complexity and delay of the normal course of litigation could anything be gained in a legal proceeding which may involve a small sum. Consequently, the small claims court functions informally and expeditiously. The chief characteristics of its proceedings are that there are no attorneys, no pleadings and no legal rules of evidence; there are no juries, and no formal findings are made on the issues presented. At the hearings the presentation of evidence may be sharply curtailed, and the proceedings are often terminated in a short space of time. The awards—although made in accordance with substantive law—are often based on the application of common sense; and the spirit of compromise and conciliation attends the proceedings. See, generally, Leuschen v. Small Claims Court, 191 Cal. 133, 137, 215 P. 391; Superior Wheeler C. Corporation v. Superior Court, 203 Cal. 384, 387, 264 P. 488; 34 Columbia Law Review 932; 9 St.Johns Law Review 247.

[13] An examination of the significant portions of the California statute creating a small claims court serves to emphasize its peculiarly informal character. The action is commenced by an affidavit which states a claim for money due from the defendant, with no indication of the nature of the claim. Code Civ.Proc., 117b. The claim must be prosecuted and defended by the parties themselves without the aid of attorneys. Code Civ.Proc., 117g. No formal pleading, other than the claim and notice, is necessary, and the hearing and disposition of all such actions is informal, "with the sole object of dispensing speedy justice between the parties". Code Civ.Proc., 117h. The judge or justice may also informally make any investigation of the controversy between the parties "either in or out of court and give judgment and make such orders as to time of payment or otherwise as may, by him, be deemed to be right and just". Code Civ.Proc., 117g. The judgment is conclusive upon the plaintiff; only the defendant may appeal. Code Civ.Proc., 117j.

The foregoing characteristics are of the utmost significance in disclosing sound theoretical grounds for refusing to apply the second aspect of the doctrine of res judicata to judgments of small claims courts. And we may reasonably assume that in an action arising out of an automobile collision, such as the case here involved, the technical aspects of proximate cause, contributory negligence, imputed negligence and the doctrine of last clear chance, of necessity have not been fully presented or considered. Nor would it seem probable that in proceedings had in a small claims court recognized rules of evidence could or would be observed. As was said in 1 Wigmore Evidence, 3d Ed., 1940, section 4d, page 106: "In small cases generally * * * it would be a defiance of common sense and a nullification of the main purpose, to enforce the jury-trial rules of evidence; for the parties are expected to appear personally without professional counsel, and they cannot be expected to observe rules which they do not know."

There are a number of cases which illustrate the application of the doctrine to inferior courts such as justices' and municipal tribunals, where such courts, though with lesser jurisdiction, nevertheless function as courts of law with some form of pleadings, and in accordance with legal rules of evidence and the right of representation by counsel. In such cases issues can be framed and decided and therefore may be given conclusive effect in a subsequent suit based on a different cause of action. But a small claims court is not a typical inferior court, and no case has been called to our attention wherein a judgment of a tribunal which operates in the entirely informal manner of a small claims court, as hereinbefore indicated, has been considered to come within the second aspect of the doctrine of res judicata.

The policy which underlies the institution of a small claims court has been recognized in the legislation which created the small claims court for the city of New York. Therein it was provided that a judgment rendered by the small claims court may be pleaded as res judicata only as to the amount involved in the particular action, and that it should not otherwise be deemed to be an adjudication of any fact at issue or found therein in any other action or court. See 34 Columbia Law Review pp. 932, 942, note 76. It is apparent that such a statutory provision was intended to prevent collateral findings made in such an informal proceeding from being conclusive in subsequent suits based on different causes of action.

For the reasons heretofore discussed on this point, it is our conclusion that the prior judgment which was rendered in the small claims court upon a different cause of action cannot be said to be determinative of the issues of negligence and contributory negligence here involved.

From the foregoing it follows that the judgment should be, and it hereby is, reversed.

HOUSER, J., took no part in the decision of this case.

17 Cal.2d 621

PEOPLE v. GRIGGS.

Cr. 4335.

Supreme Court of California.

March 12, 1941.

1. Criminal law ⇐274

A court may, in its discretion, permit a plea of guilty to be withdrawn and a plea of not guilty substituted at any time prior to judgment. Pen.Code, § 1018.

2. Criminal law ⇐274, 1149

The discretion of the trial court in matter of permitting plea of guilty to be withdrawn and a plea of not guilty to be substituted should be liberally exercised and determination of the trial court must be upheld unless abuse of discretion is clearly shown. Pen.Code, § 1018.

3. Criminal law ⇐274, 980(1)

The district attorney cannot bind the trial court by an agreement that a sentence of life imprisonment only will be imposed if defendant pleads guilty of murder in the first degree but the law should be particularly considerate of one who in good faith has acted on inducement of the district attorney and who later seeks to stand on his right to a trial, offering to produce substantial evidence of his innocence. Pen.Code, § 1018.

4. Homicide ⇐27

Chronic alcoholism and mental deterioration are grounds for defense against charge of murder in the first degree and may be urged in mitigation of punishment.

5. Criminal law ⇐53, 57

Drunkenness does not excuse crime, but, when insanity is the result of long continued intoxication, it affects responsibility in same way as insanity produced by other cause.

6. Criminal law ⇐55

Intoxication may be considered by court or jury to determine purpose, motive, or intent with which an act is done, such being of particular importance where degree of crime committed depends on defendant's state of mind, as in a homicide case.

7. Criminal law ⇐274, 1167(5)

Where accused withdrew pleas of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity and pleaded guilty to murder in the first degree after receiving assurance of district attorney that if he did so a sentence of life imprisonment would be imposed, but court after considering the evidence declared that it felt bound to impose death sentence, though it appeared that accused was intoxicated at time of offense, and physicians appointed by the court reported that accused was a chronic alcoholic suffering from mental deterioration, motion then made to withdraw the plea of guilty to murder in the first degree should have been granted and judgment sentencing accused to death would be reversed with directions to grant the motion. Pen.Code, §§ 22, 1018.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Chas. L. Allison, Judge.

Ralph Griggs was convicted of murder on his plea of guilty after motion to withdraw the plea had been denied, and he appeals.

Reversed with directions.

Raymond E. Hodge, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., Gilbert F. Nelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerome B. Kavanaugh, Dist. Atty., of San Bernardino, for respondent.

EDMONDS, Justice.

The appellant, charged with murder, pleaded guilty but later moved the court for leave to withdraw that plea. This motion was denied and he was sentenced to death. The sole ground upon which he relies for a reversal of the judgment is that, under the particular circumstances shown, it was an abuse of discretion for the trial judge to deny his motion.

The case is an unusual one. When the appellant was arrested he had the body of Gladys Long in his automobile. At that time she had been dead about ten days. He freely told the police officers that he had killed her and related the circumstances of the crime. Upon arraignment, he entered the pleas of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity. Later, upon the advice of his counsel, who had discussed the case with the district attorney, by leave of court he withdrew these pleas and pleaded guilty to murder in the first degree. The appellant contends that this action was taken upon the assurance of the district attorney that if he did so, a sentence of life imprisonment would be imposed; that there was no denial of the statements made by his counsel in open court; that the law seeks no unfair advantage over one charged with crime; and that in the interests of justice the court should have allowed him to withdraw a plea of guilty which was influenced by both hope and fear.

Upon the issue as to the sentence which should be imposed, the district attorney presented the facts pertaining to the commission of the crime as the appellant had given them to the officers. According to the appellant's statement, the crime occurred when he and Gladys Long, who had been living with him for some time, went on a trip and spent several days at a camp ground. One morning they arose early and began drinking. He stumbled against their tent and kicked some dirt into a frying pan. This angered the woman. He backed away trying to pacify her when she picked up a couple of rocks about as large as a fist and threw them at him. He then picked up a rough surfaced rock weighing about seven or eight pounds and threw it at her. He declares that as he threw it she was looking at him, but she turned her back to dodge and the rock struck her in the back of the head, causing injuries which resulted in her death within a very few minutes. He then wrapped the body in the bed covering, put it in the rear compartment of his automobile, and drove back to Los Angeles. After his arrival there he continued his drinking and remained in an intoxicated condition until the odor from the body led to his arrest.

The district attorney stated that he could produce other evidence which he summarized as follows: When the appellant returned to Los Angeles he had all of the woman's belongings with him. These consisted of her clothing and $840 in money. An acquaintance told the appellant that he was in no condition to carry this money around wiith him. He thereupon gave it to her and she deposited it in a bank to her own credit. During the time he had the money in his possession, he told several persons that it represented the proceeds of ore obtained from a gold mine he owned in San Bernardino county.

In concluding his presentation of the case the district attorney said that the only information he had concerning the killing was obtained from the appellant. He added, "Everything we have at the autopsy and his condition while he was in Los Angeles is all consistent with his statement that he made in regard to this matter."

Following some discussion as to the crime disclosed by this evidence, the trial judge announced that he felt it was his duty to impose the extreme penalty upon the appellant. His counsel then said in substance: "May I make a statement before that? Several days ago Mr. Knauf approached me and gave me the substance of the testimony the state would present here, and he assured me at the time that if I could persuade the defendant to enter a plea of guilty in the first degree he was certain life imprisonment would be imposed. I talked with the defendant about the matter and he complied with my suggestion because of the assurance I had from Mr. Knauf. I also informed him I would take the matter up with his sister in Los Angeles and tell her what had been passed on to me. I did do that and I assured her the extreme penalty would not be imposed, and with that understanding the plea was entered this morning. It puts me in a position that if the Court feels the death penalty should be imposed I certainly would like to withdraw my plea of guilty of murder in the first degree."

Later the appellant's counsel formally moved the court for permission to withdraw this plea of guilty for the purpose of reentering the plea of not guilty. In further support of his motion he stated, "I might say further, Your Honor please, that since talking with all his relatives with respect to the plea of not guilty by reason of insanity I find a great deal more evidence than I thought I would have or could have in support of that plea. I am convinced that this defendant is not mentally sound. I am convinced that he was not at the time this killing took place. I am convinced that I can produce considerable testimony as to his mental condition in addition to the fact that he is a chronic alcoholic."

[1-3] Prior to the judgment a court may at any time, in its discretion, permit a plea of guilty to be withdrawn and a plea of not guilty substituted. Pen.Code, sec. 1018. The discretion thus vested is one to be liberally exercised (People v. Miller, 114 Cal. 10, 45 P. 986), and the determination of the trial court must be upheld unless abuse of discretion is clearly shown. People v. Bostic, 167 Cal. 754, 141 P. 380. But the ruling upon the appellant's motion, under the circumstances shown, cannot be justified. The district attorney did not deny that he had made the representations stated by counsel for the appellant, and, unquestionably, the appellant pleaded guilty in reliance upon them. Of course, the district attorney had no authority to make any agreement which would bind the court, but the law should be particularly considerate of one who, in good faith, has acted upon the inducement of a prosecuting officer and later seeks to stand upon his right to a trial, offering to produce substantial evidence in support of his innocence of the crime charged against him. These principles are particularly applicable in the present case.

Although the appellant admits that Gladys Long met her death at his hands, there is considerable question concerning the crime which he committed. In the statement relied upon by the district attorney the appellant stated that at the time of the quarrel both he and the woman were drunk although, he added, "I was able to see and talk and walk around." Other evidence before the court showed a record of inebriation extending over many years. As the district attorney very fairly pointed out, the physicians appointed by the court reported that the appellant is a chronic alcoholic who at the time of their examination was suffering from mental deterioration or mental aberration.

[4-6] These facts are grounds for a defense against the charge of murder in the first degree and may also be properly urged in mitigation of punishment. For although drunkenness is no excuse for crime, when insanity is the result of long continued intoxication, it affects responsibility in the same way as insanity which has been produced by any other cause. People v. Hower, 151 Cal. 638, 91 P. 507. Also, the fact of intoxication may be considered by the court or jury for the purpose of determining the purpose, motive or intent with which an act is done. Sec. 22, Pen.Code; People v. Burkhart, 211 Cal. 726, 297 P. 11; People v. Murphy, 1 Cal.2d 37, 32 P.2d 635. This may be of particular importance where the degree of the crime committed depends upon the defendant's state of mind, as in a homicide case. People v. Sutton, 17 Cal.App.2d 561, 62 P.2d 397.

[7] The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to grant the appellant's motion to withdraw his plea of guilty to the crime of murder in the first degree and thereafter to permit him to enter such plea or pleas as he may be advised.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J.; SHENK, J.; TRAYNOR, J.; CURTIS, J.; CARTER, J.

17 Cal.2d 552

McLELLAN v. McLELLAN et al.

S. F. 15887.

Supreme Court, Department 1, California.

March 7, 1941.

Rehearing Denied April 3, 1941.

1. Executors and administrators ⇐315(6)

If decree of distribution which determined persons to whom decedent's estate should be distributed and the amount to which each person was entitled was erroneous, the remedy was by an appeal.

2. Executors and administrators ⇐315(6)

Where decree of distribution allowed no interest on trust legacy and the decree became final, and the trustees received no interest thereon the trustees could not be required to account in subsequent suit in equity for interest on the legacy.

3. Executors and administrators ⇐315(6)

Decree rendered under provisions of probate code relating to administration of trusts, when it becomes final, stands as a bar to any claim brought against a testamentary trustee who is also executor of the estate. Probate Code, § 1123.

4. Executors and administrators ⇐315(6)

Although testamentary trustee had duty to prevent estate from being mismanaged during course of administration, decree of distribution conclusively negatived any charge of mismanagement, negligence, or fraud on the part of the executor and determined that the trustee was under no duty to move to obtain trust assets contrary to the provisions of that decree. Probate Code, § 1123.

5. Executors and administrators ⇐315(6)

The law charges the probate court with the duty of scrutinizing the accounts of an executor in determining the issues presented by petition for distribution, and, where none of those issues is withdrawn from judicial investigation, the determination upon them is conclusive in favor of the executor and the testamentary trustee. Probate Code, § 1123.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; A. R. Cotton, Judge.

Action by Asher Bates McLellan, special administrator of the estate of Mary Bates McLellan, deceased, who was the beneficiary of a trust created by the will of Mary Belle McLellan, deceased, against Asa D. McLellan and others, wherein the controversy concerned the right of the beneficiary to interest from date of testatrix' death to the date of distribution of her estate. From an adverse judgment, the defendants appeal.

Reversed with directions to enter judgment for the defendants.

Hankins & Hankins and Olin F. Nuckolls, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Alfred J. Harwood, of San Francisco, for respondent.

EDMONDS, Justice.

The appellants, testamentary trustees of the estate of Mary Belle McLellan, are resisting a judgment entered against them in an action brought by the special administrator of the estate of Mary Bates McLellan, who was a beneficiary of one of the trusts created by Mrs. McLellan's will. They were also named as executors and residuary legatees of this will. The controversy concerns the right of the beneficiary to interest from the date of the testatrix's death to the date of distribution of her estate.

Among other bequests, Mrs. McLellan left money in trust with instructions to pay the income thereof, and such portion of the principal as the trustees deemed necessary or advisable, to or for the support and maintenance of Mary Bates McLellan. Almost exactly one year after the testator's death in 1927, her estate was distributed and the trustees received $3,941 under this provision of the will, which amount did not include any interest.

The trust fund was administered by the trustees until the death of Mary Bates McLellan in December, 1934. During the period interest and $500 of the principal was paid to her. The first and final account of the trustees was filed in 1935. Objections to this account were filed by Asher Bates McLellan, special administrator of his mother's estate (the respondent in the present action), upon the ground, among others, that it did not include interest from the date of death of the testatrix to the date of the decree of distribution. Upon appeal, it was held that the decree of distribution, having become final, was not subject to collateral attack in the subsequent proceeding for the settlement of the trustees' account. Estate of McLellan, 14 Cal.App.2d 271, 57 P.2d 1338. The respondent then commenced the present action in equity, charging that by reason of the trustees' failure to obtain distribution of interest upon the corpus of the trust, that they benefited as residuary legatees to the amount of $275.

Appellants contend that as the decree of distribution did not include interest, the probate court, in effect, found that no interest was due; that this decree is now final and relief from it can only be had upon a showing that it was procured by extrinsic fraud not the result of negligence of the respondent or his predecessor; that assuming a cause of action for extrinsic fraud has been stated, it is one to establish a constructive trust and lies only against appellants as individuals, and their demurrer, as trustees, should have been sustained on this ground; and, finally, that an action to establish a constructive trust has been barred by the statute of limitations.

Respondent answers that this is a suit in equity in which the court may grant relief from a decree of distribution which has become final; that the facts alleged in the complaint and found by the court show extrinsic fraud; and that the action is against the trustees of an express trust in which the trustees cannot rely upon the statute of limitations without a showing either that they have repudiated the trust or that the trust has terminated.

[1,2] The decree of distribution has long since become final. It determined the persons to whom the estate should be distributed and also the amount to which each person was entitled. If there was any error in the decree, the remedy was by appeal. Estate of Schmierer, 168 Cal. 747, 145 P. 99. In Estate of McLellan, supra, which concerned objections made by the respondent in the present action to an order of the probate court upon the ground that interest had not been collected by the trustees, it was held that they could not be required to account for interest not received by them. The same question was later presented to this court on behalf of another beneficiary under the will of Mrs. McLellan, and decided in favor of the trustees. Estate of McLellan, 8 Cal.2d 49, 63 P.2d 1120.

[3-5] Section 1123 of the Probate Code provides: "A decree rendered under the provisions of this chapter, when it becomes final, shall be conclusive upon all persons in interest, whether or not they are in being." Such a decree, this court has recently held, stands as a bar to any claim brought against a testamentary trustee who was also the executor of the estate. Although recognizing the duty of a testamentary trustee to prevent the estate from being mismanaged during the course of administration, it was held that the decree of distribution conclusively negatives any charge of mismanagement, negligence or fraud on the part of the executor and likewise determines that the trustee was under no duty to move to obtain trust assets contrary to the provisions of that decree. Carr v. Bank of America, etc. Ass'n, 11 Cal.2d 366, 79 P.2d 1096, 116 A.L.R. 1282. The basis of this decision is that the law charges the probate court with the duty of scrutinizing the accounts of the executor and determining the issues presented by a petition for distribution, and where none of those issues are withdrawn from judicial investigation, the determination upon them is conclusive in favor of the executor and also the testamentary trustee. That reasoning is particularly applicable to the controversy now before the court.

As these conclusions are determinative of the issues before the court, it is unnecessary to consider other points relied upon.

The judgment is reversed with directions to enter judgment in favor of the appellants.

We concur: SHENK, J.; CARTER, J.

17 Cal.2d 606

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. v. BOYD.

S. F. 16430.

Supreme Court of California.

March 12, 1941.

As Modified April 8, 1941.

1. Municipal corporations ⇐887

Under San Francisco charter providing for creation of a fund for reconstruction and replacements due to physical and functional depreciation of utilities under jurisdiction of the utilities commission, "functional" depreciation includes replacement of parts due to obsolescence and inadequacy as well as to complete decay, and research necessary to determine amount of reconstruction and replacement to be done is a proper charge against such fund, and the substitution of any means of transportation for a decayed or outmoded means in place would be an "improvement" contemplated by that provision.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Functional" and "Improvement"

2. Municipal corporations ⇐887

Where money transferred from surplus of municipal railway reconstruction and replacement fund for purpose of having plans prepared looking toward solution of transportation problem was to be used in connection with contemplated future improvement of transit system of San Francisco, that money was not in fact "transferred" to the use of another department within charter provision but was merely "set aside" for use of the railway and its improvement.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Set Aside" and "Transferred".

3. Automobiles ⇐49
Licenses ⇐33

Under statute providing that money derived from gasoline taxes and registration license fees should be deposited in a special road improvement fund and expended by the county for acquisition of realty or interests therein or construction, maintenance, or improvement of highways, bridges, or culverts, accrued surplus in county road fund transferred by state to county could be used by the City and County of San Francisco in connection with contract to procure services of a civil engineer to aid in solution of traffic and transit problems. St. 1937, p. 2562, § 1622.

4. Highways ⇐99¼

The County Road Fund Act should be construed liberally. St.1937, p. 2562, § 1622.

5. Municipal corporations ⇐296(1)

A San Francisco charter provision that all examinations, plans, and estimates required by supervisors in connection with any public improvements, exclusive of those to be made by the public utilities commission, should be made by the director of public works and that he should, when requested to do so, furnish information and data for use of supervisors, applies only to specific public improvements and does not apply to a general survey proposed to be carried on to aid in the solution of traffic and transit problems.

6. Municipal corporations ⇐867(2)

That San Francisco might lose some economic benefit from payment of a civil engineer's fee did not invalidate contract to procure engineer's services for five years to aid in the solution of traffic and transit problems under constitutional debt limit provision, nor was that provision violated because there was no showing that under no possibility would funds be available for future years. Const. art. 11, § 18.

7. Municipal corporations ⇐63(1), 228

Whether it was worth $20,000 per year to have a civil engineer merely to advise the San Francisco board of supervisors on matters developed by his investigation of traffic and transit problems and to submit reports was a matter for the board to determine, and it was not the function of the controller to attempt to defeat the board's purpose or of the Supreme Court to interfere with that determination.

8. Municipal corporations ⇐868(3)

Notwithstanding the limitation prescribed by charter on the passage of any ordinance or resolution for the expenditure of money, the San Francisco board of supervisors has broad powers as the lawmaking body to contract on behalf of the city and county, and its powers are extensive in all strictly municipal matters.

9. Municipal corporations ⇐868(3)

To promise payment of money upon the performance of a contract for expert professional temporary service out of an unencumbered and unexpended fund admittedly set aside for such expenditure is not to contract a "liability" in violation of San Francisco charter provision prohibiting the passage of an ordinance or resolution for the expenditure of money without certification that there is sufficient money for the proposed expenditure, since there is no "debt" until the service has been rendered, even though some of the contingent payments may become payable five years later.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Debt" and "Liability".

10. Municipal corporations ⇐868(3)

That an initial payment by San Francisco under contract for expert professional temporary services might prove to have been injudiciously made, and that the scheme might fail of execution for want of appropriation, are immaterial on question of validity of contract under charter provision prohibiting the passage of an ordinance or resolution for the expenditure of money without certification that there is sufficient money for the proposed expenditure.

11. Municipal corporations ⇐868(3)

Where each year's consideration is severable from the remainder of a proposed plan, and municipality's obligation to pay under a contract is conditioned upon the rendition of services, the contract is not prohibited by charter provision prohibiting the passage of an ordinance or resolution for the expenditure of money without certification that there is sufficient money for the proposed expenditure.

12. Municipal corporations ⇐868(3)

A municipality's contract to procure the services of an individual for a period of five years is not invalid under charter provision prohibiting the passage of any ordinance or resolution for the expenditure of money without certification that there is sufficient money available for the proposed expenditure and that revenue anticipated and properly applicable to meet the expenditure will be available to meet it as it becomes due, unless it is shown that any installment coming due in any year is in excess of the incoming revenue of that year.

13. Municipal corporations ⇐60

The delegation of the several powers of administration to officers, boards, and commissions was not intended by the framers of the charter of the City and County of San Francisco to deprive the board of supervisors of the power to plan, study, and legislate for civic betterment and improved conditions of municipal affairs. Const. art. 11, § 6.

14. Evidence ⇐83(2, 4)

On question of validity of a contract to procure the services of a civil engineer for five years to aid in the solution of traffic and transit problems of the City and County of San Francisco under charter provision requiring all positions to be included in the classified civil service and to be filled from lists of eligibles prepared by the civil service commission, excepting persons employed in positions in any department for expert professional temporary services, the Supreme Court was required to presume that the exception would be complied with by the commission by exempting the engineer and his aides from the classified service before executing the contract.

15. Municipal corporations ⇐216(1)

The provisions of the San Francisco charter specifying the positions which must be included in the classified civil service and filled from lists of eligibles prepared by the civil service commission indicate that it was the intention of the framers of the charter that civil service should apply only to persons employed in permanent positions in municipal departments to the end that public service should be free from political shifting and control resulting from changes in administration.

16. Municipal corporations ⇐216(1)

"Employees" of San Francisco under civil service occupy the relationship of "servant" to "master" and are subject to the control of the municipality, but persons hired by a civil engineer under contract requiring him to supply municipality with estimates, plans, programs, and reports of traffic and transit problems would in no respect occupy a "position" in a "department" as contemplated by the civil service provisions of the municipality's charter, nor would they become city "employees" in the sense of that word as used in reference to the classified service.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Department", "Employee", "Master", "Position", and "Servant".

17. Municipal corporations ⇐216(1)

Because the supervisors of San Francisco in exercising their discretion preferred to keep check on details of cost of work to be done by a civil engineer proposed to be hired for five years to aid in the solution of traffic and transit problems, rather than to contract for the survey to be done for a lump sum, did not alter the fact that engineer was employed as an "independent contractor" who was not within the civil service provisions of the San Francisco charter.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Independent Contractor".

18. Municipal corporations ⇐236

The employment of a person who is highly and technically skilled in his science or profession may properly be made by a municipality without competitive bidding.

In Bank.

Original proceeding for a writ of mandate by the City and County of San Francisco and others against Harold J. Boyd, etc.

Peremptory writ ordered to issue as prayed.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Walter A. Dold, Chief Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco, for petitioners.

B. J. Feigenbaum, of San Francisco (S. A. Ladar and Richard W. Jennings, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent Harold J. Boyd as Controller, etc.

MOORE, Justice pro tem.

This is an original proceeding for a writ of mandate whereby petitioners seek to compel the respondent to certify to the petitioners that there is a sufficient unencumbered balance in a fund that may legally be used for the proposed expenditure of the sum of $100,000 for the services of one Purcell, a civil engineer. The municipality seeks by a contract to procure the services of Purcell for a period of five years to aid in the solution of traffic and transit problems. The certification sought was also to cover the maximum additional sums that may be expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940. The petition recited that on or about the 18th day of March, 1940, the petitioners adopted a resolution No. 906, series 39, as follows: "* * * that there is a sufficient unencumbered balance in a fund that may legally be used for the proposed expenditure of $100,000, for the services of said * * * Purcell * * * and the maximum additional sums that may be expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, pursuant to said contract to reimburse said * * * Purcell, and that in the judgment of the controller revenues as anticipated in the appropriation ordinance for said fiscal year and properly applicable to meet such proposed expenditure will be available in the treasury in sufficient amount to meet the same when it becomes due; * * *"

On April 12, 1940, the controller notified the board in writing that there was not sufficient unencumbered funds that could legally be used for the proposed expenditure; that in his judgment revenue properly applicable to the proposed expenditure would not be available in the treasury in sufficient amount to meet the same and that the proposed expenditure could not legally be made for the purposes and in the manner provided even if funds were available.

The respondent has filed a demurrer and an answer to the petition herein. As originally filed the answer appeared to raise an issue of fact as to the existence of unencumbered funds. By stipulation of the parties subsequently filed it now appears, however, that there remains unencumbered and unexpended $110,000 appropriated by the petitioning board of supervisors in March, 1939, and thereafter approved by the mayor. One-half of this sum ($55,000) was appropriated by ordinance No. 101 from the surplus existing to the credit of the Municipal Railway reconstruction and replacement fund "for the purpose of having a plan or plans prepared looking toward solution of the transportation problem". The remaining one-half ($55,000) was appropriated by ordinance No. 102 from the accrued surplus in the county road fund "for the purpose of having a plan or plans prepared looking toward solution of the traffic problem". Inasmuch as the stipulation admits that the entire fund so appropriated "has not been expended", a consideration of the arguments and authorities advanced by respondent in support of his demurrer will serve to dispose of all legal issues with respect to the availability of such sum for the proposed contract above mentioned.

The proposed contract provides that the work contemplated is to be completed in five years; that Purcell as the contractor shall from time to time advise the petitioners relative to the solution of traffic and transit problems; that he shall submit to the mayor and the petitioners from time to time reports and recommendations as to the feasibility and costs of the proposed projects; that he shall devote his entire time to the work contemplated and shall post a bond of faithful performance in the sum of $25,000; that the city shall pay Purcell $20,000 per annum and all actual costs and expenditures incurred in the performance of his duties in the manner contemplated by the agreement; that no liability for such costs and expenses shall arise until the same shall have been actually incurred; that Purcell shall engage his own employees, not to exceed five in number, at certain specified salaries; that the city shall furnish Purcell suitable office quarters and shall reimburse him for expenses incidental thereto; that said employees shall be selected by Purcell as the contractor and that they shall have no claim for compensation against the city; that Purcell shall not be reimbursed for any expenditure incurred in any fiscal year from funds of any succeeding fiscal year; that "the cost of borings, traffic checks and the actual cost of reproducing maps and plans and the cost of performance of any duties not in the ordinary course of employment" of said employees is to be borne by the city; that Purcell shall be entitled to use the services of the several officers and departments of the city interested in the work which he is performing; that he shall not incur any expenses for which he has to be reimbursed unless there shall first have been regularly appropriated for the year in which the obligations are incurred a sufficient sum of money to provide for the payment of such obligations, and that if there shall be no lawful appropriation of such moneys in any year, the city shall be obligated only to the extent of said $20,000, payable to Purcell for his own services.

[1, 2] Preliminary to a consideration of respondent's contention that the unencumbered and unexpended $55,000 appropriated from the surplus of the municipal railway reconstruction and replacement fund may not legally be used for the proposed expenditure under the Purcell contract, it should be stated that section 77 of the charter provides that: "On the request of a department head and approved by the administrative officer, board or commission, respectively, and on the authority of the controller, funds appropriated for a specific purpose of such department which become surplus may be transferred and used for another specific purpose within the department." The public utilities commission already had adopted a resolution requesting the supervisors to appropriate from the unappropriated surplus of the municipal railway the sum of $55,000 to be used in payment of one-half the cost of retaining Purcell to make surveys, investigations, reports and recommendations relative to traffic and transit conditions and the extension and improvement of the municipal railway. Inasmuch as section 128.1 of the charter provides for the creation of a fund for reconstruction and replacements due to physical and functional depreciation of the utilities under the jurisdiction of the utilities commission, the suggested illegality in the appropriation from the surplus of the municipal railway must arise, if it does arise, upon the hypothesis that the proposed survey is not a reconstruction or a replacement. The word "functional" defining the depreciation of the utilities must include replacement of parts due to obsolescence and inadequacy as well as to complete decay. If the replacement of a property due to either inadequacy or obsolescence is to be paid out of the reconstruction and replacement fund, then the research necessary to determine the amount of reconstruction and replacement to be done is also a proper charge against such fund and the substitution of any means of transportation for a decayed or outmoded means now in place would be an "improvement" contemplated by the charter section. It will surely be conceded that any transit system that has been used for more than a quarter of a century must have many units that require replacement, if indeed the entire system, itself may not be outmoded. Whether it is outmoded, however, can be determined only by the survey of an expert in the field of transportation. Inasmuch as the moneys transferred from the surplus of the municipal railway are to be used in connection with the contemplated future improvement of the transit system of the city and county, they are not in fact transferred to the use of another department but are merely "set aside" for the use of the railway and its improvement. The case of Mobley v. Board of Public Works, 44 Cal.App. 167, 186 P. 412, offers no obstacle. It was concerned with the problem of whether or not the funds of the municipal railway system might be employed for the purpose of conducting an investigation as to the condition, availability and value of a private railway system. The case is not only factually distinguishable but arose under a former charter containing many provisions not in the present charter.

[3-5] As to the appropriation from the accrued surplus in the county road fund, the respondent contends that monies derived from gasoline taxes and registration license fees, and transferred by the state to the county, cannot be used in connection with the Purcell contract. We cannot accept the contention. Section 1622 of the Streets and Highways Code, St.1937, p. 2562, provides that such monies "shall be deposited in a 'special road improvement fund'" and shall be expended by the county "exclusively for the acquisition of real property or interests therein, or the construction, maintenance or improvement of highways, bridges or culverts in that county". That the County Road Fund Act should be construed liberally is indicated by our decision in Long Beach v. Payne, 3 Cal.2d 184, 44 P.2d 305, wherein it was held that highways included canals as an integral part of the highway system. Obviously, before the authorities can properly construct a bridge or a highway within the city and county of San Francisco some intelligent planning must be done with a view both to economy and to obtaining the maximum of service from the investment made. Nor do we think that section 106 of the charter offers any obstacle. That section provides that "All examinations, plans and estimates required by the supervisors in connection with any public improvements, exclusive of those to be made by the public utilities commission, shall be made by the director of public works, and he shall, when requested to do so, furnish information and data for the use of the supervisors". We are not inclined to apply this charter provision to a general survey such as is here proposed. Reasonably construed, the provision would appear to have application only to specific public improvements. Moreover, the director of public works is to furnish plans, etc., when "required" or "requested" by the board of supervisors. Such a provision does not purport to foreclose the procurement of the proposed assistance here sought.

The respondent next contends that revenues properly applicable to meet the proposed reimbursements of Purcell will not be available in the treasury in sufficient amounts to meet the same as they become due. Inasmuch as the stipulation above referred to discloses the availability of a sum in excess of the total sum payable to Purcell, we have only to consider whether the lack of an appropriation of sufficient monies payable on the contract for the future fiscal years invalidates the contract under article XI, section 18, of the Constitution which forbids any city to incur "any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof * * *."

Because the payment of the disbursements made by Purcell during each fiscal year as the work progresses is not provided for by any fund now on hand, respondent fears that the happening of some dire event might render unavailable such necessary moneys in the future and that consequently the sums paid to Purcell will be wholly lost to the municipality. Even though the contract were not completed and the final report were not to be made, yet we must assume that the prosecution of the work under the contract will proceed in a normal way and that partial reports will be made from time to time. It provides for the partial accomplishment of the project year by year and it provides for the furnishing of the money to pay for the work as it progresses.

[6,7] The fact that the municipality might lose some economic benefit from the payment of Purcell's fee does not invalidate the contract. In re City and County of San Francisco, 191 Cal. 172, 215 P. 549. The constitutional provision is not violated because there is no showing that under no possibility would funds be available for the future years. City of Oakland v. Williams, 15 Cal.2d 542, 103 P.2d 168. If the funds necessary for the current year are available, it is a fair presumption that the contract will be carried out by both parties and that the future needs for moneys will be met as the time arrives. The speculation that the engineer may die or that a tidal wave might destroy the city were suitable topics for consideration of only the legislative discretion and involve such risks as a municipality must always suffer in contracting for professional services covering a period of years. The fears of respondent that no economic benefits will be derived by the city in the event of a failure of the complete performance of his contract by Purcell are not justified in view of Purcell's obligation that at all times he shall furnish advice and make reports as to conditions found to exist and recommend methods for improving such conditions; that such repairs and services will be completed with promptness and submitted when completed; that on the first of July of each year a progress report for the preceding year shall be submitted, including surveys, recommendations and cost estimates; that Purcell shall develop his organization, which would be available to continue with the work in the event of his decease; that he shall attend meetings of the supervisors and all interested departments; that all of his plans and specifications, surveys and reports shall become the property of the city;—these things are of a definite economic value and justify the legislative body of the municipality in deciding to make the payments. If the board of supervisors should determine that it is worth $20,000 per annum to have Purcell merely to advise the board on matters developed by his investigation and to submit reports, that was a matter for the board to determine and it is not the function of respondent to attempt to defeat their purpose or of this court to interfere with such determination.

[8-12] Section 86 of the charter provides that "no ordinance or resolution for the expenditure of money, except the annual appropriation ordinance, shall be passed by the board of supervisors unless the controller first certify to such board that there is a sufficient unincumbered balance in a fund that may legally be used for such proposed expenditure" and that "in the judgment of the controller, revenue anticipated under the appropriation ordinance for such fiscal year and properly applicable to meet such expenditure will be available in the treasury in sufficient amount to meet the same as it becomes due". Notwithstanding the limitation prescribed by the quoted section, petitioners have broad powers as the lawmaking body to contract on behalf of the city and county. Their powers are extensive in all strictly municipal matters. Pasadena v. Charleville, 215 Cal. 384, 10 P.2d 745. To promise the payment of money upon the performance of a contract out of an unincumbered and unexpended fund admittedly set aside for such expenditure is not to contract a liability in violation of the charter. And this is true even though some of the contingent payments may become payable five years later. Krenwinkle v. City of Los Angeles, 4 Cal.2d 611, 51 P.2d 1098; Doland v. Clark, 143 Cal. 176, 76 P. 958. Where the city and county of San Francisco contracted to reimburse a sister city in the sum of $5,000 for expenses in obtaining plans for a hospital to be used by both cities and the auditor admitted the $5,000 was available, the validity of the contract was held no longer in question. Also, the possible inability of the city to meet future obligations from funds falling due in years to come was prematurely presented. That an initial payment might prove to have been injudiciously made is immaterial. Because the scheme might fail of execution for want of appropriation is immaterial. In re City and County of San Francisco, 191 Cal. 172, 215 P. 549; California Pac. Title and Trust Co. v. Boyle, 209 Cal. 398, 287 P. 968. Where each year's consideration is severable from the remainder of the proposed plan and the obligation to pay is conditioned upon the rendition of the services, the contract is not prohibited. California Pacific Title and Trust Co. v. Boyle, supra; McBean v. City of Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 44 P. 358, 31 L.R.A. 794, 53 Am.St.Rep. 191. Such a contract as that proposed is not invalid unless it be shown that any installment coming due in any year is in excess of the incoming revenue of that year. Wyckoff v. Force, 61 Cal. App. 246, 214 P. 489.

The authorities cited by respondent (Chester v. Carmichael, 187 Cal. 287, 201 P. 925; In re controversy between City and County of San Francisco and Thomas F. Boyle, as Auditor of said city, 195 Cal. 426, 233 P. 965; Mahoney v. City and County of San Francisco, 201 Cal. 248, 257 P. 49; Browne v. City of Boston, 179 Mass. 321, 60 N.E. 934) do not apply. In all of these cases the point decided was that a municipality does not have the power to incur an obligation against the city to make future payments for the purchase price of land, in default of which payments the city would forfeit its right to purchase and lose all sums theretofore paid.

[13] Respondent next contends that the contract is violative of the charter (1) in that it provides for an illegal duplication of the functions and duties of existing officers, departments and commissions; and (2) in that it ignores the civil service and residential provisions of the charter. Both claims are without merit. Numerous provisions of the charter are cited to show that the powers of the city and county mentioned therein are delegated to certain officials, boards and commissions named in the charter. A quotation of all of the charter provisions quoted by respondent would lengthen this opinion unduly. Suffice it to say that the delegation of the several powers of administration to officers, boards and commissions was not intended by the framers of the charter to deprive the board of supervisors of the power of legislating on behalf of the city and county. Prior to 1914, the legislative function of a city was confined to such powers only as were delegated by the charter but in that year rapid changes were occurring and others were certain to occur by reason of the growth of metropolitan centers and by reason of the available variety of implements and machinery required to function in the operation of the modern city, as well as in the extension of the comfort and convenience of the people. It was determined then to extend the powers of self-government to all municipalities who desired to accept and exercise such power. The City and County of San Francisco was one of those municipalities to accept the privilege thus extended. It adopted a charter under which it has full control of all "municipal affairs" except in those particulars limited or controlled by the constitution or by a specific charter provision.

This power of the city is contained in section 2 of the charter, which reads: "The city and county may make and enforce all laws * * * in respect to its affairs * * * subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in this charter. * * * the exercise of all rights and powers of the city when not prescribed in this charter shall be as provided by ordinance or resolution of the board of supervisors."

Section 9 provides: "The powers of the city and county, except the powers reserved to the people or delegated to other officers, boards or commissions by this charter, shall be vested in the board of supervisors. * * * The board of supervisors may by ordinance confer on any officer, board or commission such other and additional powers as the board may deem advisable."

While it is true that the charter provides for an independence of the various departments of the city in the performance of their respective duties, and while it is true that to the various commissions certain duties have been delegated, yet there is nothing in the language delegating such duties and functions to the police department, to the chief administrative officer, to the street traffic advisory board, to the city planning commission, to the department of public works and the public utilities commission,—nothing is said which suggests a limitation upon the powers of the board of supervisors to plan, study and legislate for civic betterment and improved conditions of municipal affairs.

This power of the board of supervisors has been the subject of numerous decisions by this court. We have consistently held that cities which have accepted the privilege of complete autonomy granted by article XI, sec. 6 of the constitution may "make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs, subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in their several charters" (Sec. 6); that "the enumeration of some powers does not exclude the exercise of powers not enumerated except as limited by the charter and the Constitution" (West Coast Advertising Co. v. San Francisco, 14 Cal.2d 516, 523, 95 P.2d 138, 143); that where a charter is silent a city may exercise powers conferred upon it by general law provided such general powers are not inconsistent with those granted by the charter; if no restrictions or limitations are found in the charter, the power of the city in municipal affairs is full and complete, assuming for the present purposes that sewage disposal generally is a municipal affair as distinguished from a state affair (City of Oakland v. Williams, supra); that a public agency may contract for expert services unless specifically prohibited by constitutional or statutory provision (State Compensation Insurance Fund v. Riley, 9 Cal.2d 126, 69 P.2d 985); that "in order to remove the * * * municipal affairs from the control of general laws it is sufficient if the city has availed itself of the offer extended to it by the Constitution * * *." City of Pasadena v. Charleville, supra [215 Cal. 384, 10 P.2d 748]. The trend has been universal in recent years to permit municipalities "a wider range in undertaking to promote the public welfare or enjoyment". Egan v. City of San Francisco, 165 Cal. 576, 133 P. 294, 295, Ann.Cas.1915A, 754.

The cases cited by respondent (Merriam v. Barnham, 116 Cal. 619, 48 P. 727; Denman v. Webster, 139 Cal. 452, 73 P. 139; Rafael v. Boyle, 31 Cal.App. 623, 161 P. 126; MacLeod v. Long, 110 Cal.App. 334, 294 P. 54; Allen v. Payne, 1 Cal.2d 607, 36 P.2d 614, and Tax Factors v. County of Marin, 20 Cal.App.2d 79, 66 P.2d 666) do not support his contention that the proposed contract is void by reason of its alleged illegal duplication of the functions and duties of existing officers, departments and commissions. In each of the cited cases the function which the contract had attempted to duplicate had been specifically, by statute, imposed upon a specified officer. In none of them was there involved such a city charter as that involved herein. In each of them the duties of some county official, specifically established by the general law, were to be duplicated by a contract for the services of an outside party.

[14] In the next place, respondent contends that the contract is illegal because it violates section 142 of the charter. Said section reads as follows: "All positions in all departments and offices of the city and county * * * shall be included in the classified civil service of the city and county, and shall be filled from lists of eligibles prepared by the civil service commission, excepting * * * (4) persons employed in positions in any department for expert professional temporary services, and when such positions are exempted from said classified civil service for a specified period of said temporary service, by order of the civil service commission." As to subdivision 4, we must presume that it will be complied with by the civil service commission by exempting the contractor and his aides from the classified service before executing the contract.

[15] But in considering the section respondent fails to observe the significance of the provisions of secs. 140, 141, 142, 145, 146, 148. Section 140 refers to "appointments in the public service"; section 141 refers to: "All places of employment in the departments and offices of the city"; section 142 refers to: "All positions in all departments and offices" but specifically excepts persons employed in positions in any department for expert temporary service; section 145 refers to: "Positions in the uniformed forces"; "Positions in the mechanical trades and occupations"; and for examination of laborers, allowing credit for military or naval service; section 146 refers to: "Promotion in the service". Section 148 provides that vacancies shall be filled upon requisition of the "appointing officer". A reading of the entire text of said several sections indicates clearly that it was the intention of the framers of the charter that civil service should apply only to persons employed in permanent positions in municipal departments to the end that public service should be free from political shifting and control resulting from changes in administration. If section 142 were to be given the literal application suggested by respondent, it would be impossible for the municipality to make an independent contract with any person or corporation to render an extraordinary service or to make surveys with a view of legislation on behalf of the municipality.

[16, 17] The proposed contractor is not to be placed in any position provided for by the charter. He is to be engaged under a contract to do a specific job and all of the assistants which he will employ from the typist in his office to his most highly paid engineer are to be instrumentalities of his own choosing and for whom he is to be responsible. They do not become city employees in the sense of that word, as used in reference to the classified service, but are to be employees of the engineer whose contract requires that he supply the city with estimates, plans, programs and reports, such as will enable the municipality to advance the public welfare by the improvement of conditions with respect to which his services will be rendered.

The contention presented by respondent with respect to ignoring the civil service provisions of the charter was answered in the City of Oakland v. Williams, supra. The contiguous cities having by agreement chosen Berkeley as sponsor of the proposed survey and custodian and disburser of the funds of the signatories, the city auditor insisted that the contract violated charter provisions relating to civil service. But this court held that those provisions were "without relevancy for, obviously, such provisions can have no application to the employees of those who contract with the City of Oakland". [15 Cal.2d 542, 103 P.2d 173.] Merely because Purcell's appointees will render services for the city does not place such appointees in a "position" or a "department" or in an "office". "Employees" under civil service occupy the relationship of servant to master and are, of course, subject to the control of the municipality but the position of the employees of the contractor will in no respect occupy a "position" in a "department" of the city as contemplated by the charter's civil service provisions. Because the supervisors in the exercise of their discretion prefer to keep check upon the details of the cost of the work to be done by the contractor rather than to contract for the survey to be done for a lump sum does not alter the fact that the contractor is employed as an independent contractor to do a specific job and to get for himself a definite profit.

[18] Respondent's suggestion that the contract is a violation of charter provisions requiring that bids be received on all contracts is without merit. The employment of a person who is highly and technically skilled in his science or profession is one which may properly be made without competitive bidding.

Let the peremptory writ issue as prayed.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; CARTER, J.

17 Cal.2d 594

TAYLOR v. OAKLAND SCAVENGER CO. et al.

S. F. 16470.

Supreme Court of California.

March 11, 1941.

1. Automobiles ⇐244(3)

In action for injuries sustained by 15-year-old high school girl who was struck by garbage truck while running across courtyard from gymnasium to athletic field, evidence that truck driver was familiar with courtyard between main high school building and gymnasium and knew that children frequently ran across the area, and that truck driver drove around blind corner without sounding horn or giving other warning at rate of 25 miles per hour, which was five miles in excess of prima facie speed limit set by Vehicle Code, warranted finding that truck driver was negligent. Vehicle Code, § 511, St.1935, p. 176.

2. Automobiles ⇐155

A truck driver has clear duty of care toward pedestrians and is required to exercise greater caution in a school yard than under ordinary circumstances.

3. Schools and school districts ⇐121

In action against school district for injuries sustained by 15-year-old high school girl who was struck by garbage truck while running from gymnasium to athletic field, evidence that principal had known for seven years of practice of physical education students to run to field, and that school authorities permitted 18 trucks to drive on school grounds subject to no safety requirements other than general provisions of Vehicle Code, warranted finding that school district was negligent. Vehicle Code, § 511, St.1935, p. 176.

4. Schools and school districts ⇐89

School authorities must supervise at all times conduct of children on school grounds and must enforce such rules and regulations as are necessary to their protection.

5. Schools and school districts ⇐89

A school district is liable for injuries resulting from failure of officers and employees to use ordinary care in supervising conduct of children on school grounds and enforcing rules and regulations necessary for protection of school children.

6. Schools and school districts ⇐89

The question whether there has been negligence in permitting vehicles on school premises subject only to provisions of Vehicle Code relating to traffic on highways should be determined on the facts of each case. Vehicle Code, § 511, St.1935, p. 176.

7. Schools and school districts ⇐89

The negligence of school authorities in permitting vehicles on school premises subject only to provisions of Vehicle Code relating to traffic on highways is established if reasonably prudent person would foresee that injuries of same general type would be likely to happen in absence of additional safeguards, and it is not necessary to prove that the very injury which occurred must have been foreseeable by school authorities in order to establish that their failure to provide additional safeguards constituted negligence. Vehicle Code, § 511, St.1935, p. 176.

8. Trial ⇐260(8)

In action against school district for injuries sustained by 15-year-old high school girl who was struck by truck on school grounds, failure to instruct that if school authorities were justified in relying on provisions of Vehicle Code as adequate for protection of children on grounds and were not guilty of any negligence, school district would not be liable was not error, where jury was instructed that only basis for imposing liability on district was negligence of its officers or employees, that provisions of Vehicle Code were applicable to vehicles on school grounds in absence of special regulations, and that question whether school authorities should have imposed special regulations was question of fact to be determined in light of conditions existing at time of accident. Vehicle Code, § 511, St.1935, p. 176.

9. Automobiles ⇐246(5)

In action against school district for injuries sustained by 15-year-old high school girl who was struck by truck while running across school grounds, trial court did not erroneously instruct jury that driver of truck was not obligated to follow applicable provisions of Vehicle Code, where trial court stated that relevant sections of Vehicle Code were applicable to traffic on school grounds in absence of special regulations, and further instructed that truck driver had clear duty to drive truck on grounds at careful and prudent speed. Vehicle Code, § 511, St.1935, p. 176.

10. Trial ⇐241

In action against school district for injuries sustained by 15-year-old high school girl who was struck by truck while running across school yard, trial court's use of language from opinion of Supreme Court when case was before Supreme Court on demurrer, in instructions to jury that general provisions of Vehicle Code might be inadequate for situations arising on school grounds, was not error. Vehicle Code, § 511, St.1935, p. 176.

11. Appeal and error ⇐1064(1)

In personal injury action wherein instruction as first given omitted element of proximate cause, subsequent withdrawal of erroneous instruction and re-reading it to members of jury and telling them to disregard it and issuing a proper instruction in place thereof was not prejudicial error.

12. Trial ⇐241

In action against school district for injuries sustained by 15-year-old high school girl who was struck by truck while running across school grounds, instruction in language of School Code that school district was liable for negligence of its officers and employees did not impose a greater burden on school district than that enjoined by law. School Code, § 2.801.

13. Negligence ⇐61(2), 62(3)

If an injury is produced by concurrent effect of two separate wrongful acts, each act is "proximate cause" of injury, and either act can operate as an efficient "intervening cause" with regard to the other.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Intervening Cause" and "Proximate Cause".

14. Negligence ⇐61(1)

The fact that neither party could reasonably anticipate the occurrence of the other concurrent cause will not shield him from liability so long as his own negligence was one of the causes of the injury.

15. Appeal and error ⇐996

In action against school district and owner and driver of truck for injuries sustained by 15-year-old high school girl who was struck by truck on school grounds, determination of jury that negligence of school district and owner and driver of truck contributed concurrently to girl's injury would not be disturbed on appeal, where more than one conclusion could reasonably be drawn from the conflicting evidence.

16. Negligence ⇐136(9)

Contributory negligence is a "question of law" only when court is impelled to say that from the facts reasonable men can draw but one inference pointing unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff contributing to his injury.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Law".

17. Automobiles ⇐223(2)
Schools and school districts ⇐89

A 15-year-old high school girl suing school district and owner and driver of garbage truck and company under contract with city to collect garbage, for injuries sustained when she was struck by truck on school grounds, was bound only to that duty of care which a normal child of the same age would be expected to exercise in such a situation.

18. Automobiles ⇐223(4)
Schools and school districts ⇐89

In determining contributory negligence of 15-year-old high school girl suing for injuries sustained when she was struck by truck while running from gymnasium to athletic field on school grounds, question was whether girl, as a 15-year-old girl in physical education class on grounds of high school used mainly for school activities and not as thoroughfare for automobiles, exercised proper caution in running to athletic field without being on the alert for sudden appearance of motor vehicle.

19. Automobiles ⇐244(55)
Schools and school districts ⇐121

In 15-year-old high school girl's action for injuries sustained when she was struck by truck while running from gymnasium to athletic field, evidence that girl had never seen automobiles or trucks pass gymnasium while children were on school grounds, and that it was customary for most of children in physical education classes to run to athletic field, warranted finding that girl was not contributorily negligent.

20. Master and servant ⇐300, 315

An employer is generally liable for negligent acts of employee performed within scope of employment, but, if an independent contractor rather than master and servant relationship exists, independent contractor usually is alone liable for such negligent acts.

21. Master and servant ⇐317

Where individual or corporation undertakes to carry on activity involving possible danger to public under license or franchise granted by public authority subject to certain obligations imposed by public authority, such liabilities cannot be evaded by delegating performance to independent contractor.

22. Automobiles ⇐243(12)

In action against driver and owner of garbage truck and company under contract with city to collect garbage, for injuries sustained when 15-year-old high school girl was struck by truck on school grounds, ordinance and contract between city and county, enunciating rule of policy to effect that, as a condition of exercising the garbage franchise, the company must assume master and servant liability for acts of persons engaged by company to collect garbage, were admissible to establish such rule of policy.

23. Automobiles ⇐194(1)

Where ordinance and contract between city and company to which garbage franchise was granted, enunciated rule of policy to the effect that, as condition of exercising franchise, the company must assume master and servant liability for acts of persons engaged by company to collect garbage, company could not escape liability for injuries sustained when plaintiff was struck by garbage truck, by delegating collection of garbage to independent contractor.

24. Automobiles ⇐243(12)
Trial ⇐127

In action against driver and owner of garbage truck and company under contract with city to collect garbage, for injuries sustained when plaintiff was struck by garbage truck, contract between city and company granting garbage franchise to company was admissible in an attempt to establish existence of master and servant relationship between driver and owner of truck and company as one basis of liability, and incidental disclosure by contract that owner was insured did not render contract inadmissible.

25. Appeal and error ⇐1060(1)

In personal injury action, any misconduct which might have existed on part of plaintiff's attorney, in questioning one of defendants' witnesses concerning attempt to photograph plaintiff without plaintiff's knowledge, was not sufficiently prejudicial to justify reversal, especially where trial court refused to grant new trial on such ground.

26. Damages ⇐132(6)

$20,000 damages for injuries sustained by 15-year-old girl when rear wheel of truck ran over foot and tore sole loose from foot in such a manner as to render foot permanently defective with possibility of eventual loss of foot, in view of accompanying pain, worry, embarrassment, and restriction of activity, were not excessive.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Action by Eleanor Taylor, a minor, by her guardian ad litem, Frank B. Taylor, against the Oakland Scavenger Company and others, for injuries sustained by the minor when struck by a garbage truck while she was on the premises of the Oakland High School District of Alameda County. From a judgment for the plaintiff, the defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

For prior opinion, see 103 P.2d 605.

Ralph E. Hoyt, Dist. Atty. of Oakland, Charles V. Barfield, of San Francisco, and Appelbaum & Mitchell, of Oakland, for appellant Oakland High School Dist.

Weinmann, Quayle & Berry, of Oakland, for appellant Oakland Scavenger Co. et al.

Elliott Johnson and Crozier C. Culp, both of Oakland, for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Plaintiff, a fifteen-year-old girl, was enrolled in the Castlemont high school in Oakland where she took the required course in physical education. On September 29, 1936, she and other members of the class assembled in the gymnasium, changed from street to gymnasium clothes, and received instructions from the teacher to go outdoors into the athletic field to play volley ball. As was their custom, most of the members of the class surged out of the gymnasium and commenced running to the field. Plaintiff took the lead, followed closely by a classmate, and ran north in a passageway between the main high school building and the gymnasium. As she approached the northeast corner of the gymnasium, a blind corner, a garbage truck came around the corner without warning and turned toward her at a rate of about twenty-five miles per hour. Plaintiff, unable to stop herself, struck the truck at the cab door and was knocked to the pavement. While in that position the right rear wheel of the truck ran over her left foot and tore the sole loose from the foot in such a manner as to render her foot permanently defective with a possibility of ultimate loss.

Plaintiff brought suit against Albert Santucci, the driver of the truck; Oresti Santucci, the owner of the truck; the Oakland Scavenger Company, under contract with the city to collect and dispose of garbage; and the Oakland High School District. She claimed that the truck was driven in a negligent manner, that the owner of the truck was an employee of the Oakland Scavenger Company, and that the school district was negligent in failing to take adequate precautionary measures to prevent such accidents.

The judgment of the trial court which sustained without leave to amend a demurrer of the defendant Oakland High School District was reversed by this court on appeal. 12 Cal.2d 310, 83 P.2d 948. Upon a trial of the case the jury awarded plaintiff damages in the amount of $25,000 against all of the defendants. The trial court denied a motion for a new trial on the condition that plaintiff accept a reduction of the amount to $20,000, and judgment was entered accordingly. All defendants have appealed.

The school district claims that there is no evidence establishing negligence on its part and that the negligence of the truck driver was an efficient intervening cause insulating it from liability. The Santuccis and the Oakland Scavenger Company claim that there is no evidence establishing the negligence of the driver of the truck, that the negligence of the school district is an efficient intervening cause insulating them from liability, that the trial court committed prejudicial error in admitting certain evidence, and that plaintiff's counsel was guilty of prejudicial misconduct. The Oakland Scavenger Company further denies liability on the ground that the owner of the truck was an independent contractor and not an employee. In addition, all of the defendants assert that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, that the trial court erred in giving certain instructions and withholding others, and that the damage award is excessive as a matter of law.

[1, 2] There is substantial evidence to support the finding by the jury that the driver of the truck was negligent. A driver has a clear duty of care toward pedestrians, and he is required to exercise greater caution in a school yard than under ordinary circumstances. Lampton v. Davis Bread Co., 48 Cal.App. 116, 191 P. 710. He was familiar with the courtyard where the accident occurred, and knew that children frequently ran across the area. He nevertheless drove around the blind corner without sounding his horn or giving other warning at a rate of about twenty-five miles per hour, five miles in excess of the prima facie speed limit set by the Vehicle Code, § 511, St.1935, p. 176, thereby causing injury to the plaintiff.

[3-7] There is likewise sufficient evidence to justify the finding of negligence on the part of defendant school district. It is the duty of the school authorities to supervise at all times the conduct of the children on the school grounds and to enforce those rules and regulations necessary to their protection. Bellman v. San Francisco High School Dist., 11 Cal.2d 576, 81 P.2d 894; Ogando v. Carquinez G. School Dist., 24 Cal.App.2d 567, 75 P.2d 641. The school district is liable for injuries which result from a failure of its officers and employees to use ordinary care in this respect. Id. The evidence in this case establishes that the principal of the Castlemont high school knew for seven years of the practice of students in physical education classes to surge out of the gymnasium and run along the courtyard to the playground. The school authorities likewise knew that at least six delivery trucks came into the grounds every morning, seven other trucks once a week, and five more trucks every week or two. They nevertheless took no precautions to minimize the danger of injury to the students after the trucks had entered the grounds other than to issue an instruction to the custodian of the grounds to supervise the traffic that came on the grounds and to caution people to drive carefully. They failed to post a danger sign or to warn the students against running across the courtyard. The eighteen trucks were permitted to drive on the school grounds at all times subject to no safety regulations other than the general provisions of the Vehicle Code. "The question whether there has been negligence in permitting vehicles on school premises subject only to the provisions of the Vehicle Code relating to traffic on the highways is to be determined on the facts of each case." Taylor v. Oakland Scavenger Co., 12 Cal.2d 310, 83 P.2d 948, 951. It is not necessary to prove that the very injury which occurred must have been foreseeable by the school authorities in order to establish that their failure to provide additional safeguards constituted negligence. Their negligence is established if a reasonable prudent person would foresee that injuries of the same general type would be likely to happen in the absence of such safeguards.

[8, 9] The school district contends that the trial court failed to instruct the jury that if the school authorities were justified in relying upon the provisions of the Vehicle Code as adequate for the protection of the children on the grounds and were not guilty of any negligence, the school district would not be liable. The trial court, however, covered this matter when it instructed the jury that the only basis for imposing liability on the school district is the negligence of its officers or employees, that the provisions of the Vehicle Code are applicable to vehicles on the school grounds in the absence of special regulations, and that the question whether the school authorities should have imposed special regulations and conditions governing traffic on the grounds is one of fact to be determined in light of the conditions existing at the time of the accident. Nor is there merit in the argument of the school district that the trial court erroneously instructed the jury that the driver of the truck was not obligated to follow the provisions of the Vehicle Code applicable to the circumstances. The court quoted the relevant sections of the Vehicle Code to the jury, told them that such provisions were applicable to traffic on the school grounds in the absence of special regulations, and further instructed them that the driver of the truck had a clear duty to drive his truck on the school grounds "at a careful and prudent speed, not greater than was reasonable and proper, under all the circumstances then and there existing, with special regard to the probability of encountering school children, moving, proceeding, walking or running upon said grounds and premises".

[10] The trial court's use of language from the opinion of this court when this case was before it on demurrer (Taylor v. Oakland Scavenger Co., supra) in its instructions to the jury that the general provisions of the Vehicle Code may be inadequate for situations arising on school grounds likewise does not constitute error. The instruction was sound as a matter of law, and left to the jury the determination of the facts.

[11] One of the instructions to the jury as first given omitted the element of proximate cause. The trial court subsequently withdrew the erroneous instruction, re-read it to the members of the jury, told them to disregard it, and issued a proper one in its place. This method of substitution of instructions, the only practical one available to the court, does not constitute prejudicial error. See 24 Cal.Jur. 867.

[12] In instructing the jury that the school district was liable for the negligence of its officers and employees, the trial court used the language employed in section 2.801 of the School Code and therefore did not impose a greater burden on the school district than that enjoined by law. Neither did it make the school district an insurer of the safety of its pupils, for it expressly instructed the jury that the district was not an insurer of the pupils and that the school authorities were required to exercise only ordinary care. Taken as a whole, the instructions to the jury present the proper legal principles and contain no prejudicial error.

[13-15] The school district maintains, however, that any breach of duty on the part of its employees was not a proximate cause of the injury to plaintiff because the negligence of the truck driver was an efficient intervening cause. Conversely, the Santuccis and the scavenger company contend that any breach of duty on the part of the truck driver was not a proximate cause of the injury because the negligence of the school authorities was an efficient intervening cause. If an injury is produced by the concurrent effect of two separate wrongful acts, each is a proximate cause of the injury, and either can operate as an efficient intervening cause with regard to the other. Rest.Torts, secs. 432(2), 439; Lacy v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 220 Cal. 97, 29 P.2d 781; Smith v. Schwartz, 14 Cal.App. 2d 160, 57 P.2d 1386. The fact that neither party could reasonably anticipate the occurrence of the other concurrent cause will not shield him from liability so long as his own negligence was one of the causes of the injury. Herron v. Smith Bros., Inc., 116 Cal. App. 518, 2 P.2d 1012; Sawdey v. Producers' Milk Co., et al., 107 Cal.App. 467, 290 P. 684. The arguments of defendants themselves make clear that more than one conclusion may reasonably be drawn from the conflicting evidence of this case, and the determination of the jury that the negligence of each defendant contributed concurrently to the plaintiff's injury cannot therefore be disturbed on appeal. Lacy v. Pac. Gas & Electric Co., supra; Smith v. Schwartz, supra.

[16-19] The defendants are united, however, in the contention that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The jury found plaintiff not guilty of contributory negligence. "Contributory negligence is a question of law only when the court is impelled to say that from the facts reasonable men can draw but one inference, and that an inference pointing unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff contributing to his injury." Smellie v. So. Pac. Co., 212 Cal. 540, at page 562, 299 P. 529, at page 538; Flores v. Fitzgerald, 204 Cal. 374, 268 P. 369. Plaintiff is bound only to that duty of care which a normal child of the same age would be expected to exercise in such a situation. Anderson v. Walters, 135 Cal.App. 380, 27 P. 2d 100; 19 Cal.Jur. 605. The question is not whether plaintiff must be viewed as an adult or as a child but simply whether the plaintiff as a fifteen-year-old girl in a physical education class on the grounds of a high school, used mainly for school activities and not as a thoroughfare for automobiles, exercised proper caution in running across the courtyard toward the athletic field without being on the alert for the sudden appearance of a motor vehicle. The answer is not so obvious that this court can say as a matter of law that the jury was unjustified in finding plaintiff free from fault (Shannon v. Central-Gaither U. School Dist., 133 Cal.App. 124, 23 P.2d 769), particularly when the record shows that plaintiff had never seen automobiles or trucks pass the gymnasium while children were on the school grounds. There is evidence indicating that it was customary for most of the children in the physical education classes to run across the courtyard to the athletic field. To hold that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law is to hold that a majority of average children in a like situation have been acting in a negligent manner, a result which contradicts the very standard utilized in determining the existence of negligence.

The Oakland Scavenger Company contends that under its contract with Oresti Santucci the latter was an independent contractor and that it therefore is not liable for any negligence of the truck driver. It points out that the truck was not owned by it but by Santucci and that it exercised little supervision or control over the col lection and disposal of the garbage by Santucci. Plaintiff introduced in evidence not only the garbage ordinance of the City of Oakland (852 N.S.), which makes it unlawful for any person other than a contractor with the city or a person in the employ of such contractor to collect garbage within the city, but the contract between the City of Oakland and the Oakland Scavenger Company in which it was agreed that any person collecting garbage for the scavenger company was to be considered an employee of such company. Plaintiff introduced also the contract between the Oakland Scavenger Company and Oresti Santucci which is expressly made subject to all regulations and ordinances of the City of Oakland, as well as to the requirements of other contracting parties with the scavenger company. It requires Oresti Santucci to keep his trucks insured against damage to persons and property in order to protect the scavenger company from any claim that might arise against it because of his accidental or wilful misconduct, to keep his truck numbered and painted in a uniform color to be determined by the scavenger company, and to supply his collectors with a special badge bearing a serial number determined by the scavenger company.

[20-23] An employer is generally liable for negligent acts of an employee performed within the scope of employment, but if an independent contractor rather than master and servant relationship exists, the independent contractor usually is alone liable for his negligent acts. If, however, an individual or corporation undertakes to carry on an activity involving possible danger to the public under a license or franchise granted by public authority subject to certain obligations or liabilities imposed by the public authority, these liabilities may not be evaded by delegating performance to an independent contractor. The original contractor remains subject to liability for harm caused by the negligence of the independent contractor employed to do the work. Res.Torts, secs. 428, 417; Snow v. Marian Realty Co., 212 Cal. 622, 299 P. 720; Luce v. Holloway, 156 Cal. 162, 103 P. 886; Colgrove v. Smith, 102 Cal. 220, 36 P. 411, 27 L.R.A. 590; Spence v. Schultz, 103 Cal. 208, 37 P. 220; Chicago Economic Fuel Gas Co. v. Myers, 168 Ill. 139, 48 N.E. 66; Cotton v. Ship-By-Truck Co., 337 Mo. 270, 85 S.W.2d 80, 81; West v. St. Louis, etc., Co., 63 Ill. 545; Murray v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 66 Conn. 512, 34 A. 506, 32 L.R.A. 539; 39 C.J. 1338. The Oakland Scavenger Company was franchised by the city to carry on an activity requiring the operation of large motor vehicles upon the public streets which clearly involved the risk of danger to the public. The city, by ordinance and by contract with the scavenger company, enunciated a rule of policy to the effect that as a condition of exercising the franchise the scavenger company must assume master and servant liability for the acts of persons engaged by it to collect garbage. Both the ordinance and the contract are admissible to establish this rule of policy. While they do not establish that Santucci was an employee of the scavenger company rather than an independent contractor, they fix a liability upon the scavenger company which it cannot escape by delegating performance to an independent contractor.

[24] Plaintiff introduced the contract between the scavenger company and Oresti Santucci for the purpose of showing that these parties themselves contemplated an employer-employee relationship. The scavenger company remains liable whether or not this contract actually established such a relationship, but plaintiff could properly introduce the contract in evidence in an attempt to establish the existence of a master and servant relationship as one basis of liability. The incidental disclosure by the contract that Santucci was insured does not render it inadmissible since proper grounds exist for its admission. Schellenberg v. Southern Cal. Music Co., 139 Cal. App. 777, 35 P.2d 156; Perry v. A. Paladini Inc., 89 Cal.App. 275, 264 P. 580.

[25] Any misconduct which may have existed on the part of plaintiff's attorney in questioning one of defendants' witnesses concerning an attempt to photograph the plaintiff without her knowledge is not sufficiently prejudicial to justify reversal, especially since the trial court refused to grant a new trial on this ground. See Imlay v. California Cab Co., 124 Cal.App. 68, 11 P.2d 1116; Alberts v. Lytle, 1 Cal. App.2d 682, 37 P.2d 705, at page 709.

[26] In view of the serious injury to plaintiff's foot with the accompanying pain, worry, embarrassment and restriction of activity as well as the possibility of eventual loss of the foot, the damages as finally assessed by the trial court are not excessive as a matter of law.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J.; EDMONDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; CARTER, J.

17 Cal.2d 555

McCREERY et al. v. McCOLGAN.

S. F. 16350.

Supreme Court of California.

March 7, 1941.

1. Taxation ⇐104

The purpose of the provision of the California Personal Income Tax Act of 1935, that for the purpose of the act a personal holding company shall not be recognized as a legal entity separate and distinct from its shareholders, is to reach the income of persons whose property has been transferred to holding companies to escape payment of income taxes. St.1935, §§ 1 et seq. and 34, pp. 1090, 1122.

2. Constitutional law ⇐92

A taxpayer can have no constitutional protection against any particular method of avoiding a tax, such as a state income tax.

3. Taxation ⇐25

The Legislature has the right to provide measures to reach all of a particular class of taxable property in imposing an income tax.

4. Taxation ⇐54

The Legislature, in providing a state income tax, is not hampered by the constitutional limitation of apportionment involved in federal legislation.

5. Corporations ⇐1

The corporate entity is not a bar to the taxation of corporate income to its shareholders.

6. Taxation ⇐104

Shareholders in a corporation may be liable for a state income tax on their proportionate shares of undistributed profits of the corporation.

7. Taxation ⇐104

Shareholders of personal holding company were liable for state income taxes on undistributed profits of the corporation. St. 1935, §§ 1 et seq. and 34, pp. 1090, 1122.

8. Constitutional law ⇐283

The enactment of provisions for taxes, such as income taxes, is governed by the due process clauses. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

9. Constitutional law ⇐229(1), 283
Statutes ⇐72
Taxation ⇐54

The provision of the California Personal Income Tax Act of 1935, that for the purposes of the act a personal holding company shall not be recognized as a legal entity separate and distinct from its shareholders, does not violate the provision of the State Constitution that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation, nor "due process of law" nor "equal protection of law" provisions of the Federal Constitution. St.1935, §§ 1 et seq. and 34, pp. 1090, 1122; Const.Cal. art. 1, § 11; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law" and "Equal Protection of the Law".

10. Constitutional law ⇐48

Presumption obtains that facts exist which support classification imposed by Legislature in assessing income tax.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank T. Deasy, Judge.

Actions by Mary C. McCreery and others against Charles J. McColgan, etc., to recover income taxes paid under protest. From judgments for the defendant, the plaintiffs appeal.

Judgments affirmed.

John C. Altman, of San Francisco (Willard L. Ellis, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Todd W. Johnson and Philip D. Johnston, both of Los Angeles, and Jesse H. Steinhart, B. J. Feigenbaum, and Chickering & Gregory, all of San Francisco, and Claude I. Parker, Ralph W. Smith, and Bayley Kohlmeier, all of Los Angeles (Richard W. Jennings, of San Francisco, of counsel), amici curia for appellants.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Valentine Brookes, and James J. Arditto, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

Four actions were brought by different plaintiffs to recover income taxes paid under protest. In each action an appeal was taken from the judgment entered for the defendant. These appeals are presented in one record and each involves the question of the constitutionality of section 34 of the California Personal Income Tax Act of 1935 (Stats.1935, pp. 1090, 1122), under which the taxes were imposed.

The act is entitled: "An act to provide for the levy and collection of a tax upon the incomes of individuals, estates and trusts, and to provide for the disposition of the revenues therefrom, and to provide that this act shall take effect immediately." Its provisions applied to tax incomes received or accrued after January 1, 1935. Section 34 provided: "For the purpose of this act a personal holding company whether or not organized under the laws of this State shall not be recognized as a legal entity separate and distinct from the shareholders thereof. Any such company having more than one shareholder shall be deemed a partnership." By section 22 the net income of a partnership was computed in the same manner and upon the same basis as in the case of an individual. Section 2(o) defined "personal holding company" as any corporation (with exceptions not pertinent here), "if (1) at least eighty per centum of its gross income for the taxable year is derived from royalties, dividends, interest, annuities, and (except in the case of regular dealers in stock or securities) gains from the sale of stock or securities, and (2) at any time during the last half of the taxable year more than fifty per centum in value of its outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for not more than five individuals. For the purpose of determining the ownership of stock in a personal holding company—(3) stock owned, directly or indirectly, by a corporation, partnership, estate, or trust shall be considered as being owned proportionately by its shareholders, partners or beneficiaries; (4) an individual shall be considered as owning, to the exclusion of any other individual, the stock owned, directly or indirectly, by his family, and this rule shall be applied in such manner as to produce the smallest possible number of individuals owning, directly or indirectly, more than fifty per centum in value of the outstanding stock; and (5) the family of an individual shall include only his brothers and sisters (whether by the whole or half blood) spouse, ancestors, and lineal descendants." The provisions quoted from sections 34 and 2(o) were repealed at the next session of the legislature (Stats.1937, p. 1831).

The following facts are admitted by the pleadings or by stipulation:

The Mary C. McCreery Trust, of which Mary C. McCreery was the beneficiary, owned 1,500 shares, and Richard S. McCreery, her husband, owned 3,000 shares of stock of Burlingame Investment Company, a California corporation, which during 1935 was a personal holding company as defined by the act. Each shareholder paid income tax for the year 1935. In June, 1938, the Franchise Tax Commissioner, after notice and over the protest of the McCreerys, levied a deficiency income tax of $580.83 on Mary C. McCreery and $772.88 on Richard S. McCreery, based on additions of income for 1935 by virtue of the provisions of section 34 of the Personal Income Tax Act of 1935. The deficiency taxes were paid under protest.

Lucie Stern owned stock of Northern Fisheries, Inc., a Washington corporation. That company was doing business in this state. It was a personal holding company within the definition of the act. Lucie Stern paid under protest a deficiency income tax of $90.45, determined pursuant to the provisions of said section 34 of the income tax act.

Similarly Eleanor H. Koshland paid a deficiency income tax for 1935 of $1,825.98, based on her pro rata share of the net undistributed income of Santa Inez Company and Iris Securities Company, as adjusted by the commissioner. The Santa Inez Company and the Iris Securities Company were domestic corporations defined as personal holding companies under the act.

It is stipulated that the computations of the commissioner in all cases were correct and that the several deficiency taxes were properly imposed, if section 34 of the Personal Income Tax Act of 1935 was constitutional.

The trial court based its judgments for the defendant on findings that the respective pro rata shares of undistributed income represented taxable income of the respective plaintiffs for the year 1935; that section 34 violated neither the due process nor the equal protection clauses of the Federal Constitution, Amend. 14, nor section 11 of Article I of the State Constitution providing that all laws of a general nature should have a uniform operation. It is the contention of the several plaintiffs that the court erroneously concluded that sections 34 and 2(o) did no violence to the above mentioned constitutional provisions.

[1] Unquestionably the purpose of the legislation was to reach the income of persons whose property had been transferred to holding companies to escape payment of income taxes. The subject matter had long been a problem to both federal and state authorities. Section 117 of the Internal Revenue Act of 1864 (13 Stat. at Large, 281), taxing shareholders of certain corporations on corporate income, whether divided or otherwise, was upheld in The Collector v. Hubbard, 12 Wall. 1, 79 U.S. 1, 20 L.Ed. 272. By the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution congress for the first time was empowered to tax incomes without apportionment among the several states. The Federal Income Tax Act of 1913 (38 Stat. 114, 166), provided that for the purpose of computing the graduated additional tax known as surtax the individual taxpayer's income should embrace his proportion of profits, whether divided or not, in a corporation formed or fraudulently availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of that tax. The Revenue Act of 1916 (39 Stat. 756, 758) provided that dividends be included in net income, whether distributed in cash or in stock of the corporation, the stock dividend to be considered income to the amount of its cash value. In Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189, 40 S.Ct. 189, 64 L.Ed. 521, 9 A.L.R. 1570, the tax was held invalid because it was a levy on capital, which congress was not empowered to exercise without apportionment. Of the case of Collector v. Hubbard, supra, it was said that insofar as it seemed to uphold the right of congress to tax without apportionment a stockholder's interest in accumulated earnings prior to dividend it must be regarded as overruled by Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 158 U.S. 601, 15 S.Ct. 912, 39 L.Ed. 1108. Congress thereupon repealed the provision taxing stock dividends. However, the rule of Eisner v. Macomber was not followed in cases where dividends were issued in stock of a reorganized corporation (United States v. Phellis, 257 U.S. 156, 42 S.Ct. 63, 66 L.Ed. 180); where common stock was issued as a dividend to holders of preferred stock of the same company (Koshland v. Helvering, 298 U.S. 441, 56 S.Ct. 767, 80 L.Ed. 1268, 105 A.L.R. 756); or where preferred stock dividends were issued to holders of common shares of the same corporation. Helvering v. Gowran, 302 U.S. 238, 58 S.Ct. 154, 82 L.Ed. 224. In such cases the dividend stock was held to be income and not capital.

[2-4] Eisner v. Macomber, supra, is relied upon as support for the contention that to tax a shareholder on his pro rata share of the undivided profits of a corporation amounts to a tax on capital or property, as distinct from a tax on income. It is, therefore, claimed that the provisions of the act here in question were invalid because they embraced a subject not expressed in the title. Sec. 24, Art. IV, Calif. Const. It is also urged that treatment of undivided corporate profits as income of the shareholders for the purposes of the act was a measure of the tax upon one person's income by reference to the income of another, contrary to the due process and equal protection clauses as exemplified in Hoeper v. Commission, 284 U.S. 206, 52 S.Ct. 120, 76 L.Ed. 248, 78 A.L.R. 346. Neither of those cases, however, presents an obstacle to valid state legislation enacted to prevent income tax evasion. A taxpayer can have no constitutional protection in any particular method of tax avoidance. The legislature has the right to provide measures to reach all of the particular class of taxable property. See Helvering v. National Grocery Co., 304 U.S. 282, 58 S.Ct. 932, 82 L.Ed. 1346. It is not hampered by the constitutional limitation of apportionment involved in federal legislation. See Eisner v. Macomber, supra, 252 U.S. at page 217, 40 S.Ct. 189, 64 L.Ed. 521, 9 A.L.R. 1570; State v. Nygaard, 174 Wis. 597, 183 N.W. 884; State v. Cary, 181 Wis. 564, 191 N.W. 546.

[5, 6] Since the case of Eisner v. Macomber, congress has enacted various provisions imposing higher income tax rates on personal holding corporations. It has also provided for taxation to resident stockholders on their proportionate shares of the accumulations of income of foreign holding companies. Recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court indicate that the corporate entity may not be a bar to the taxation of corporate income to its shareholders. See Heiner v. Mellon, 304 U.S. 271, 58 S.Ct. 926, 82 L.Ed. 1337, and Helvering v. National Grocery Co., 304 U.S. 282, 58 S.Ct. 932, 82 L.Ed. 1346. The decision in the latter case discloses that shareholders may be made liable for an income tax on their proportionate shares of undistributed profits of a corporation.

[7] The conclusion that the legislature may impose an income tax on shareholders of personal holding corporations on the basis of the undistributed profits of such corporations is determinative of the appeals herein. The contention that the legislature should have accorded different treatment to domestic and to foreign corporations, as has been done by the federal government, is not meritorious. It is true that the federal government has imposed income surtaxes on domestic personal holding companies (Sec. 500, 26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev.Code, 52 Stat. 557), and has imposed income taxes on shareholders of foreign personal holding corporations based on the undistributed profits of such corporations. Sec. 337, 26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev.Code, 52 Stat. 549. The test provided in each instance as to what constitutes a personal holding corporation is similar to that contained in the California act. This separate treatment, however, cannot be said to proceed from any predetermination that so to tax the shareholders of domestic corporations would result in taking property without due process of law. If the state legislature may tax the shareholders on corporate profits of personal holding corporations, whether distributed or not, it may be required under the fourteenth amendment, to tax alike the shareholders of domestic and foreign personal holding corporations. It is not necessary herein to decide that question.

[8] It is true that the enactment of taxing provisions is governed by the due process clauses. Heiner v. Donnan, 285 U.S. 312, 52 S.Ct. 358, 76 L.Ed. 772; Coolidge v. Long, 282 U.S. 582, 51 S.Ct. 306, 75 L.Ed. 562; Blodgett v. Holden, 275 U.S. 142, 276 U.S. 594, 48 S.Ct. 105, 72 L.Ed. 206; Nichols v. Coolidge, 274 U.S. 531, 47 S.Ct. 710, 71 L.Ed. 1184, 52 A.L.R. 1081; Brushaber v. Union Pac. R. Co., 240 U.S. 1, 36 S.Ct. 236, 60 L.Ed. 493, L.R.A.1917D, 414, Ann.Cas. 1917B, 713. Such cases have held unconstitutional, attempts to impose taxes retroactively, or taxes based on an incontrovertible presumption of fact.

The federal courts, however, have upheld the classification of personal holding corporations provided by the federal act imposing income surtaxes on domestic personal holding corporations. Foley Securities Corp. v. Commissioner, 8 Cir., 106 F.2d 731; Noteman v. Welch, D.C., 26 F.Supp. 437, affirmed, 1 Cir., 108 F.2d 206. The court in the Foley Securities Corporation case relied on decisions of the United States Supreme Court to the effect that except in rare and special instances the due process of law clause of the fifth amendment was not a limitation upon the taxing power conferred upon congress and that no reason existed for applying a different rule against a state in the case of the fourteenth amendment. It placed special reliance on Magnano Co. v. Hamilton, 292 U.S. 40, 44, 54 S.Ct. 599, 601, 78 L.Ed. 1109, where it was said: "That clause [the fifth amendment] is applicable to a taxing statute such as the one here assailed only if the act be so arbitrary as to compel the conclusion that it does not involve an exertion of the taxing power, but constitutes, in substance and effect, the direct exertion of a different and forbidden power, as, for example, the confiscation of property. * * * Nor may a tax within the lawful power of a state be judicially stricken down under the due process clause simply because its enforcement may or will result in restricting or even destroying particular occupations or businesses * * * unless, indeed, as already indicated, its necessary interpretation and effect be such as plainly to demonstrate that the form of taxation was adopted as a mere disguise, under which there was exercised, in reality, another and different power denied by the Federal Constitution to the state." In Noteman v. Welch, 1 Cir., 108 F.2d 206, a company coming within the definition of personal holding corporation was held covered by the act even though in fact it might not have been formed for the purpose of tax evasion.

[9, 10] In the present case there can be no question of confiscation, tax disguise, or arbitrary classification. The statute was clearly one imposing an income tax, which the legislature had the power to do, upon shareholders of personal holding corporations as defined by the act. The statute clearly imposed on resident shareholders of all such personal holding corporations a tax on undistributed profits of such corporations. It therefore operated uniformly on all alike throughout the state. Arbitrary discrimination cannot be held to result because a test of tax evasion was not made the basis for the imposition of the tax on shareholders. Inasmuch as such a basis was not made the test of tax liability, it cannot be said that the present case is governed by Heiner v. Donnan, 285 U.S. 312, 52 S.Ct. 358, 76 L.Ed. 772, holding that a statute which imposes a tax based upon an incontrovertible assumption of fact is violative of the fourteenth amendment. No good reason is presented why the legislature may not define personal holding corporations and classify them for income tax purposes in accordance with the provisions of the statute. That such classification resulted in a different treatment of the shareholders of such companies, i. e., as partners, was not an insuperable obstacle to the constitutionality of the provisions. The plaintiffs have not met the burden of showing that there could not have been any reasonable basis for the judgment of the legislature in providing for the different treatment. In fact the presumptions are to the contrary, namely, that facts existed which supported such a basis of classification and that the same, therefore, was reasonable.

The judgments are affirmed.

TRAYNOR, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

43 Cal.App.2d 418

LAKESIDE PARK ASS'N OF KELSEYVILLE v. KEITHLY.

KEITHLY v. NORTON et al.

Civ. 6517.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 10, 1941.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇐290(2), 291(2)

Suit for unlawful detainer was properly instituted against lessee for restitution of the property after notice was served on him as provided by law for failure to pay rent at time and in the manner specified in lease. Civ.Code, § 791; Code Civ.Proc. § 1161.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇐290(5)

Neither a cross-complaint nor a counterclaim may be properly filed in a suit for unlawful detention of property though the alleged cause therein contained grows out of the subject matter involved in the original suit. Code Civ.Proc. § 1161.

3. Appeal and error ⇐236(2)

Where cross-complaint was improperly filed in unlawful detainer action, but no motion to strike the cross-complaint was made and the issues presented therein were determined by the trial court without objection, the right to file the cross-complaint would not be questioned on appeal by defendant from judgment for plaintiff.

4. Landlord and tenant ⇐92(1)

Where land acquired by nonprofit corporation for park purposes was rented to a private party under a lease giving him an option to purchase the property on the same conditions that it was offered for sale to any other proposed purchaser, a proposal by the corporation to county that county assume payment of unpaid purchase price and take over and maintain the property as a park was not an "offer to sell" which would entitle lessee to purchase the property on the same terms, since option contemplated an absolute sale as distinguished from a donation on condition, particularly in absence of evidence that county ever intended to accept the proposal.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Offer to Sell".

5. Landlord and tenant ⇐37

The meaning of a clause in a lease is determined by applying the same rules of construction as are applied in construing other contracts.

6. Landlord and tenant ⇐37

Entire lease should be read together to determine purpose and intention of the parties as expressed in a particular clause.

7. Evidence ⇐65

Where property was acquired by nonprofit corporation for park purposes, corporation was in existence for several years, and lessee's wife was a member thereof, lessee who was given option to purchase the property on same conditions that it was offered for sale to any other proposed purchaser would be presumed to have known importance of attaching to proposal by corporation that county take over the property and assume payment of only the unpaid balance of the purchase price the condition that county maintain the property as a park.

8. Specific performance ⇐49(2), 51

A contract must be reasonable and the consideration therefor adequate before it will be specifically enforced.

9. Specific performance ⇐121(3)

Where lessee cross-complained for specific performance of option to purchase, evidence that the property cost lessor $5,000, and that it had paid approximately $3,500 toward the purchase price furnished prima facie proof, in absence of contrary evidence, that $1,474.25 offered by lessee was so grossly inadequate as to warrant refusal of specific performance. Code Civ.Proc. § 1161.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County; Benjamin C. Jones, Judge.

Action by the Lakeside Park Association of Kelseyville against Glenn Keithly for unlawful detention of real property, wherein the defendant filed a cross-complaint against Fred H. Norton and others for specific performance of an option to purchase the property. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Ralph V. Devoto, of Lakeport, for defendant and appellant.

Lovett K. Fraser, of Lakeport, for plaintiff and respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice.

In a suit for unlawful detention of real property under section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendant and cross-complainant for unpaid rent in the sum of $111.80, and for restitution of the property in the event that sum was not paid within five days after notice of the entry of judgment. The rent was not paid. In his cross-complaint the defendant asked for specific performance of an option contained in the lease authorizing him to purchase the property "upon the same terms and conditions" it was offered for sale to any other proposed purchaser. The judgment directed that the defendant take nothing by reason of his cross-complaint. From that judgment this appeal was perfected.

June 17, 1920, F. J. Norton and other residents of Lake county organized a non-profit corporation under the name of Lakeside Park Association of Kelseyville, to purchase land and operate a recreation park in that vicinity. Mr. P. Q. Robinson was elected president of the company. Many residents of that community became members of the association and contributed to the enterprise the sum of $25 apiece for that purpose. The wife of the defendant Glenn Keithly was a member of the company. June 10, 1920, the association bought from the Yolo Water and Power Company 62 acres of land at Kelseyville on Clear Lake for the agreed sum of $5,000 to be used as a recreation park. The sum of $2,500 was then paid in cash toward the purchase price. By consent of the association the title to the land was taken and held in the name of F. J. Norton as trustee for the company. Two years later ten acres of that land were sold and conveyed to George Kitto for $1,250. That sum was applied toward the payment of the balance of the purchase price. July 1, 1935, there remained unpaid on the purchase price of the land a balance of $1,474.25, including principal and interest. On the last-mentioned date, with the consent of the association, Norton executed a written five-year lease of the remaining 52 acres of land to the defendant, Glenn Keithly. At the same time, and as a part of that transaction, Keithly loaned to the lessor the sum of $1,474.25, with which to pay the balance of the original purchase price of the land. Norton executed and delivered to him his note for that amount to be paid in five years at seven per cent interest per annum. The note was secured by a trust deed on the same premises. The lease provides for annual rental to be paid in an amount "equivalent to seven (7%) per cent interest on Fourteen hundred seventy four and 25/100ths ($1474.25) Dollars", together with all taxes assessed against the land. It is also provided that so long as the aforesaid indebtedness remains unpaid, the rental for the land shall be credited upon the note to offset the interest due thereon. For failure to pay the rent when due, or for breach of any other covenant of the lease, the lessee reserves the right to re-enter the premises, or to terminate the lease, at his option. The instrument provides that the lessor may sell the demised premises, or any part thereof, at any time during the term thereof, after first granting to the lessee an option to purchase the land "upon the same terms and conditions as then being offered to any other intending purchaser".

October 19, 1938, F. J. Norton, the trustee, conveyed the 52-acre tract to the Lakeside Park Association. Soon thereafter, Mr. P. Q. Robinson, the president of the company, proposed to the board of supervisors of the county of Lake to deed the land to that county and to donate to it the association's equity in the 52-acre tract if the county would assume the balance of the indebtedness for the purchase price of the land, and maintain it as a perpetual public park. He said in relation to that proposition:

"I recapitulated a little of the history of the park; told them we were proposing to make a perpetual public park for the county under the name of the Lakeside Park, but the depression came along and hard times and we were unable to make the payments and in order to safeguard our rights and perpetuate the park we would donate our $3500 equity in the park if they would assume the indebtedness and take the park under their management as a perpetual park."

The board did not accept the proposition, but merely agreed to "take it under advisement". It appears that the board of supervisors never did accept the proposition. The only action which the board took in that regard was to adopt a resolution authorizing one of its members to consult with the district attorney with respect to the proposition. September 26, 1938, Glenn Keithly wrote a letter to Mr. Norton, saying that he had learned the property had been offered for sale to Lake county for the sum of $1,474.25, and that he elected to accept his option to purchase the property at that price. The lessee did not offer to fulfill the condition attached to that proposal for the county to agree to maintain the property as a public park. The offer of the appellant to purchase the land for the sum of $1,474.25 was therefore refused. November 7, 1939, the association served written notice on the lessee under section 791 of the Civil Code, demanding possession of the property for breach of the covenant unless the stipulated rent, in the sum of $34.40 to March 1, 1939, was paid within three days thereafter and also demanding possession unless the further sum of $103.40 was paid for rent due to the time of the expiration of the lease, July 1, 1940. The defendant failed and refused to pay or credit to the lessor on the note any part of the rent. March 6, 1939, the association paid the defendant the full amount of its indebtedness, including principal and interest, amounting to the sum of $1,521.84, which was accepted by him. Satisfaction of the obligation was then duly executed and recorded.

This suit for unlawful detainer was then commenced. The defendant filed an answer to the complaint denying the material allegations thereof, and he also filed a cross-complaint in which specific performance of his alleged option to buy the land for said sum of $1,474.25 was demanded, on the theory that an unconditional sale of the land for that amount had been offered to the county of Lake. The cause was tried by the court sitting without a jury. Findings were adopted by the court favorable to the plaintiff in every respect. Judgment was rendered against the defendant as previously stated. From that judgment this appeal was perfected.

[1] This suit for unlawful detainer was properly instituted, after notice was served as provided by law for failure to pay rent at the time and in the manner specified in the lease. Mariposa Commercial & Mining Company v. Peters, 215 Cal. 134, 8 P.2d 849; 15 Cal.Jur. 782, § 200. In the present case there is no doubt the lessee was in default of payment of the installment of rent which was due under the provisions of the lease for the year ending July 1, 1939.

The appellant, however, does not contend he was not in default in his payment of rent, nor does he assert the lessor failed to properly exercise the option to terminate the lease by serving notice thereof in the manner required by law. The appeal is prosecuted on the sole theory that the lessee had a right under his option to purchase the land for the sum of $1,474.25 for the reason that it had been unconditionally offered to the county of Lake for that price. The evidence is adequate to support the findings and judgment of the court that the lessor is entitled to possession of the property for failure on the part of the lessee to pay rent as provided by the terms of the lease.

The ground for reversal of the judgment urged by the appellant is that he is entitled to specific performance, under the provisions of the lease, for the purchase of the property for the sum of $1,474.25 independently of any condition to maintain the tract as a public park. This problem necessitates a construction of that provision in the lease which clearly reads that the lessor may sell the land, or any portion thereof, during the term of the lease, after first giving the lessee an opportunity to refuse to purchase it "upon the same terms and conditions * * * offered to any other intending purchaser". That issue was presented by the cross-complaint which was filed by the defendant.

[2] The rule is firmly established in California that neither a cross-complaint nor a counterclaim may be properly filed in a suit for unlawful detention of property, even though the alleged cause therein contained grows out of the subject-matter involved in the original suit. Schubert v. Lowe, 193 Cal. 291, 223 P. 550; Knight v. Black, 19 Cal.App. 518, 527, 126 P. 512; Rydell v. Beverly Hills Printing & Pub. Co., 88 Cal.App. 216, 262 P. 818; 15 Cal. Jur. 865, § 292. The reason for this rule is that the statute provides for the action of unlawful detainer as a summary proceeding, to secure possession of premises which are wrongfully withheld from the owner, and that the injecting of other issues extrinsic to the right of possession may defeat the very purpose of the statute.

[3] Since no motion to strike the cross-complaint from the record was made, and the issues presented therein were determined by the court without objection, we are not disposed to question that right on this appeal. The court found that the cross-defendants did not sell or offer to sell to the county of Lake the property in question for the sum of $1,474.25, within the meaning of the clause in the lease with respect to sales of property. Such a disposal of the property was not contemplated by the parties to that instrument. On the contrary the court determined that the lessor offered to give the property to the county on condition that it would assume the indebtedness and pay the balance of the agreed purchase price of the land, and that the county would perpetually maintain the property as a public park. The court also found that the cross-complainant never did agree to exercise its option to purchase the land upon the same terms or conditions for the reason that he did not consent to maintain a public park thereon. The court further found that the price for which the cross-complainant offered to purchase the property, to-wit, $1,474.25, was neither a fair nor an adequate value of the land. Specific performance was thereupon denied.

[4] We think the foregoing findings and judgment are adequately supported by the evidence. The option in the lease, upon which the cross-complainant relies for specific performance, clearly contemplates an absolute sale of the property, or some portion thereof, as distinguished from a gift or donation of a large proportion of the value of the land, upon condition that the grantee would maintain it perpetually as a public park. The moving consideration for that proposed conveyance to Lake county was to accomplish the very purpose for which the Lakeside Park Association was organized, namely, for the creation and maintenance of a recreation park for the benefit of the public. That was the specific condition upon which the offer to convey the land to Lake county was proffered. Moreover, the offer was not accepted by the board of supervisors. The county was not an "intending purchaser". There is no evidence that the board ever intended to accept that offer.

We are of the opinion the respective parties to the lease did not intend or contemplate that a conveyance of the property, under such circumstances, would constitute a sale which would entitle the lessee to purchase it upon the same terms. Certainly, in view of the express terms of the lease, it was not intended that the lessee would be permitted to purchase 52 acres of land costing $5,000 for the sum of only $1,474.25, free of the condition requiring it to be maintained as a perpetual public park, which was the chief object of the lessor in making that proposition to the board of supervisors.

[5-7] In determining the meaning of a clause contained in a lease, the same rules of construction apply which are controlling in construing other contracts. The entire instrument should be read together to determine the purpose and intention of the parties in that regard. 15 Cal.Jur. 625, § 31. In the present case it must be assumed the appellant knew that the incorporation of the park association and the acquiring of the land in question were accomplished solely for the purpose of maintaining a public recreation park. His own wife was a member of that association. The association had been in existence for several years. Numerous citizens in that small community were members of the company and were interested in that public enterprise. He must be presumed to have known the importance of attaching the condition of maintaining the park to the lessor's offer to convey the land to the county of Lake upon its assuming to pay only a small portion of the actual value of the land.

[8, 9] Moreover, it is a primary requisite to the enforcing of specific performance that the consideration therefor shall be adequate and the contract reasonable.

Haddock v. Knapp, 171 Cal. 59, 151 P. 1140; 23 Cal.Jur. 438, § 16. The inadequacy of consideration is held to be sufficient ground for denying specific performance. Clearly, the amount offered by the appellant for the land in question was inadequate. The evidence is undisputed that it cost $5,000. The association had already paid approximately $3,500 toward the purchase price. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, that furnishes prima facie proof in support of the findings of the court that $1,474.25 is so grossly inadequate as to warrant the court in refusing to grant specific performance.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PULLEN, P. J.; TUTTLE, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 430

PEOPLE v. BROWN.

Cr. 2131.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 12, 1941.

1. Criminal law ⇐1134(3)

Error, if any, in excluding evidence introduced to support codefendant's defense that he had committed crime in fear of his life could not be reviewed on defendant's appeal from conviction for first degree robbery and assault with intent to commit murder in so far as that evidence related to codefendant, where codefendant was acquitted. Pen.Code, § 26, subd. 8.

2. Criminal law ⇐1170(1)

Where counsel for defendant in an offer of proof stated that he desired to prove by substantial evidence that defendant had been suffering from a mental ailment causing periodic losses of consciousness, but counsel did not offer evidence that defendant was not conscious of his acts when crimes involved were admittedly committed, allegedly erroneous exclusion of that evidence which, if admitted, would have proved that when crimes were committed defendant was not conscious of what he was doing and was not therefore criminally responsible could not be urged as ground for reversal of conviction. Pen.Code, § 26, subd. 5.

3. Criminal law ⇐1036(3)

Counsel desiring to predicate an appeal on error in the exclusion of testimony must fully and clearly state the purpose of such offered testimony to the trial court.

4. Criminal law ⇐354
Homicide ⇐179

In prosecution for first degree robbery and assault with intent to commit murder, proffered testimony that defendant suffered from a mental ailment sometimes resulting in a loss of consciousness and akin to insanity was not admissible on guilt issue under statute, if ailment was such that defendant was insane or partially insane, or if evidence related to an alleged subnormal mental condition. Pen.Code, § 26, subd. 5, § 1026.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George J. Steiger, Judge.

Kenneth H. Brown was convicted of first degree robbery and assault with intent to commit murder, and he appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Nathan C. Coghlan and J. B. Zimdars, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Dennis Hession, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Appellant, Kenneth H. Brown, and his brother, Dwight W. Brown, were jointly charged with first degree robbery and assault with intent to commit murder. Kenneth was also charged with two prior convictions, which he admitted. Both defendants pleaded not guilty, and, in addition, Kenneth pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity. The jury acquitted Dwight Brown and convicted Kenneth of both offenses charged. Kenneth thereupon withdrew the insanity plea. He appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The charges upon which appellant was convicted grew out of the holdup of a liquor store in San Francisco by appellant and his brother. After the holdup, in which a gun was used, appellant and his brother attempted to escape in their automobile, but were caught after a chase by a private citizen and the police. Dwight, who had no police record, admitted participation in the offense, took the stand in his own defense, and predicated his defense on the ground that when he entered the store with appellant he was under the impression that they were to buy liquor there; that both had been drinking; that there was no preconceived plan to commit a robbery; that he was dumfounded when his brother produced a pistol and told the proprietor, "This is a stick up"; that he had obeyed his brother's order to take the money from the cash register because he was afraid that his brother would shoot the proprietor or would shoot him.

Appellant, who did not take the stand, does not challenge the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the judgment, but urges, as the sole ground for a reversal, that the trial court erroneously excluded evidence that appellant suffered from periods of unconsciousness by reason of a mental ailment. It is urged that this testimony, if admitted, would tend to prove that at the time the crimes were committed appellant was not conscious of what he was doing and, therefore, is not criminally responsible under section 26, subdivision 5, of the Penal Code. That section, in listing the persons incapable of committing crimes, includes in subdivision 5, "Persons who committed the act charged without being conscious thereof." It has been held that this section applies to somnambulists and persons suffering from fever or drugs. People v. Methever, 132 Cal. 326, 64 P. 481. Appellant urges that this subdivision should also be applicable to persons who suffer "unconsciousness" by reason of a mental ailment; that such "unconsciousness" is something different from insanity, and evidence thereof should be admitted under the plea of not guilty, and is not confined to the plea of not guilty by reason of insanity.

[1] At various stages during the trial, counsel for appellant tried unsuccessfully to get evidence into the record as to the past mental condition of appellant. A reading of the record demonstrates that these attempts were made on behalf of Dwight Brown to support his defense under Penal Code section 26, subdivision 8, that he had committed the crime in fear of his life. Any error in excluding that evidence, in so far as it relates to Dwight Brown, in view of his acquittal, cannot, of course, be reviewed on this appeal. Near the conclusion of the trial counsel made an offer of proof. In this offer counsel stated that he desired to prove "by substantial evidence, by intimate acquaintances, by the family of Kenneth Brown, that during a number of years he has been suffering from a mental ailment; that that mental ailment may be and may not be insanity,—that it is only akin to it; that there is a loss of consciousness, that that loss of consciousness is not entirely periodic, that there are cessations of evidence of that loss of consciousness, sometimes running over months of time, and then there is a recurrence of not only an utter absence of memory, but of any knowledge of what he is doing". Counsel went on to state that on the night in question Dwight was accompanying his brother because he knew he was an ex-convict and that he had suffered from lapses of memory, and that he had been delegated by the family to watch over appellant. After reciting some history of the life of appellant, counsel in his offer of proof then stated, "And to get to the precise point of this proof, that when he [Dwight] heard, as he stated here on the witness stand, words indicating that there was a holdup, he turned and was dumfounded and was put in fear, because of these things that he knew concerning his brother. He knew that the life of the complaining witness was in danger, and that possibly his own life was in danger, and that is why he obeyed the commands of Kenneth Brown upon the occasion in question, and not because he had any guilty intention.

"We offer to prove that, your Honor, as we have heretofore, but we wanted to make it clear so the record is there.

"The Court: Well, I have allowed the defendant Dwight to testify on that, but I don't see how I can go any further on this issue. I will have to deny the motion for proof by other witnesses as to what was said and so on.

"Mr. Coghlan: This offer, your Honor, was made under—"The Court: Under section 26?

"Mr. Coghlan:—under section 26 of the Penal Code.

"The Court: Yes, I understand. I will have to deny that motion."

[2, 3] A fair reading of the offer of proof, and of the questions asked various members of the family of appellant to which objections were sustained, demonstrates to a certainty, that what counsel was trying to prove was that defendant Dwight Brown knew of the past mental condition and acts of his brother, and was delegated by his family to watch over appellant, and was in fear of his life at the time of the holdup. The trial court permitted Dwight to testify to most of these facts. Whatever error may have occurred in excluding the other evidence on this point, so far as it relates to Dwight, is not involved on this appeal. Neither the offer of proof nor the questions asked of various witnesses to which objections were sustained disclosed that the proffered testimony was offered for the reason now suggested by counsel. At no time did counsel offer evidence that, at the time of crimes here involved were admittedly committed, Kenneth was not conscious of his acts. At most, all he offered to prove was that appellant, in the past, suffered from a mental ailment, without describing it, which, in the past, had rendered him "unconscious" of his acts; that he had committed various felonious acts in the past while in this condition; that Dwight knew this; that, "to get to the precise point" of the offered testimony, Dwight was in fear of his life when his brother, the appellant, ordered the proprietor of the store to put up her hands. There is no proper offer to prove that the appellant committed the crimes charged without being conscious of his acts. Even if it be assumed that, had proper testimony on this issue been offered, it would have been admissible on the guilt issue, we cannot hold, on the present state of the record, that any error was committed. If counsel desired to predicate an appeal upon error in the exclusion of evidence he was duty bound to fully and clearly state the purpose of such offered testimony to the trial court. This, he did not do. It would result in a miscarriage of justice to permit counsel to tell the trial court that testimony is offered for one purpose, and then, after the trial court has ruled, permit it to be urged on appeal that it was offered for an entirely different purpose.

[4] There is another complete answer to the contentions of appellant. The offer of proof demonstrates that the proffered testimony related to an alleged subnormal mental condition of the appellant. Thus, counsel stated that he desired to prove that, in the past, appellant suffered from a "mental ailment" which sometimes resulted in a loss of consciousness, and that this undescribed ailment may or may not be insanity—that it is "akin" to insanity. In the offer of proof, in addition to the facts already set forth in this opinion, in reciting the background of appellant, counsel stated: "This boy Kenneth Brown has been a problem for years. Originally he was a fine boy, worked when he was a young boy of 12, 14, 15, 16 years old, turning over his wages to his family. And that there arose between him and his father an antagonism not shared by the mother against him, which resulted with the father putting him in the Ione Institution through no charges whatever, through Judge Buck of San Mateo County. The mother and the father joined in it, but the mother under compulsion from the father. That he was not even an incorrigible from the standpoint of one of his parents. And he, of course, while he was there, spent sleepless nights, months and months of sleepless nights. And escaped, didn't remember how, found himself at liberty from that institution, and that from there he went from town to town, went to Los Angeles, went to Fresno, was gathered up by the authorities in California for something that he does not remember even yet, personally, excepting by hearsay, knows nothing about the doing of it. Was incarcerated in the Colorado prison and was there thrown into that portion of the prison which is used by those that are insane, where they put the insane patients. And that while there he gave evidence of violent manifestations, and that he was accused of something there at the prison that he has no knowledge of, didn't remember, and that he protested against his guilt when the charge was made against him, whatever it was, some act of violence; and that first they put him in what they call the 'hole', the place where they put incorrigibles, and then the Warden of the institution assigned him to this portion of the prison where the insane or suspected of being insane are kept in that prison." There were several other statements of the same general tenor. Nothing can be clearer that such proffered testimony related to the alleged diseased mental condition of the defendant. If the ailment was such that appellant was insane, then, of course, no evidence as to that fact could properly be introduced during the trial of the guilt issue under section 1026 of the Penal Code. But the rule goes even further than that. If the undescribed ailment resulted in what has sometimes been referred to as "partial insanity" such evidence was likewise not admissible on the guilt issue. People v. Troche, 206 Cal. 35, 273 P. 767. If the offered evidence related to an alleged subnormal mental condition of appellant, it likewise was not admissible on the trial of the guilt issue. People v. Phillips, 102 Cal.App. 705, 283 P. 821; see, also, People v. Lazarus, 207 Cal. 507, 279 P. 145; People v. Leong Fook, 206 Cal. 64, 273 P. 779.

Whether, under the present law of this state governing the trial of criminal actions as it has been construed in the cases just cited, a defendant, at the trial of the general issue raised by his plea of not guilty, may be permitted, under subdivision 5 of section 26 of the Penal Code, as interpreted in People v. Methever, 132 Cal. 326, 64 P. 481, to introduce evidence for the purpose of showing that he committed the act charged without being conscious thereof, involves a point we are not called upon to consider or decide, for it is quite obvious that the testimony here sought to be introduced, at most, related to the alleged diseased mental condition of the defendant, and, therefore, was clearly inadmissible under section 1026 of the Penal Code.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; WARD, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 339

GALLO et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.

Civ. 11250.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 6, 1941.

Hearing Denied May 1, 1941.

1. Railroads ⇐350(28)

In action for death of motorist whose automobile was struck by train on heavily traveled railroad crossing which was usually protected by mechanical warning devices, including gates, contributory negligence of motorist who had used the crossing on many occasions and approached it during storm at speed of from 15 to 18 miles per hour and slowed down to about 10 miles per hour as he came to the tracks, at a time when no warning devices were in operation, and whose automobile was struck by train which was traveling at a speed of about 40 miles per hour, was for jury.

2. Railroads ⇐348(3, 5)

In action for death of motorist whose automobile was struck by train on heavily traveled railroad crossing which was usually protected by mechanical warning devices, including gates, evidence showing that because of storm crossing watchman failed to operate gates and signal devices and did not give ample warning to motorist of approach of train, and establishing that train was traveling at speed of 40 miles per hour at time of the collision, was sufficient to establish negligence of railroad so as to sustain judgment for the plaintiffs.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1064(1)

In action for death of motorist whose automobile was struck by train at railroad crossing, any error in giving instruction in which trial court read to jury Civil Code provisions relating to requirement for ringing of a bell or sounding of a whistle by a locomotive without qualification embracing issues of proximate cause and contributory negligence was without prejudice to defendants, where record disclosed that only slight, if any, stress was laid upon question of whether bell was rung or whistle blown. Civ.Code, § 486.

4. Railroads ⇐348(5), 351(2)

Evidence showing that train was proceeding over heavily traveled crossing within city limits during a severe storm at speed of at least 40 miles per hour at time the train struck automobile was sufficient to warrant giving of instruction regarding necessity for operating train at a speed which was reasonable in view of all circumstances, and to support a finding of negligence on part of railroad.

5. Railroads ⇐351(2)

In action for death of motorist whose automobile was struck by train at railroad crossing, giving of instruction that jury was not bound to decide in conformity to declarations of any number of witnesses, which did not produce conviction in minds of jurors, against a less number or against a presumption or other evidence satisfying minds of jurors, was not error, where the presumption that motorist when he started across the railroad track exercised ordinary care for his own safety was not as a matter of law dispelled. Code Civ.Proc. § 2061, subd. 2.

6. Death ⇐18(3)

Wrongful death action could be maintained by parents of decedent who left surviving a widow, without evidence establishing that decedent actually gave parents monetary assistance.

7. Death ⇐88, 95(3)

Damages in death actions are limited to the "pecuniary loss" to the surviving heirs, but such loss includes the loss of the comfort, protection, and society of the decedent.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Pecuniary Loss".

8. Death ⇐60

In action for wrongful death, refusal to allow defendants, on cross-examination of decedent's widow, to ask her whether she contemplated remarriage in the near future was not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Aylett R. Cotton, Judge.

Action by Eileen Gallo and others against the Southern Pacific Company and others for death of a motorist resulting from a collision between an automobile and a train. From an adverse judgment, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Louis Oneal, Arthur G. Shoup, and Duncan Oneal, all of San Jose, for appellants.

Francis N. Foley, of San Mateo, and Robert Beale, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiffs are the widow and parents of Joseph J. Gallo, deceased. They brought this action seeking damages for the death of said deceased, which death was alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendants. Upon a trial by a jury, plaintiffs recovered judgment in the sum of $10,000. Defendants appeal from said judgment.

The death of said deceased occurred on the morning of December 10, 1937, when the automobile which he was driving was struck by a Southern Pacific train at the main Grand avenue crossing just south of the Southern Pacific station at South San Francisco. Deceased was driving his car in a general westerly direction and was struck by a northbound passenger train. At said main crossing, there are seven tracks running in a northerly and southerly direction. A single street car track runs along Grand avenue and crosses said seven tracks. Grand avenue does not cross the tracks at right angles but runs slightly south of west in the direction in which the deceased was proceeding. Grand avenue is over 80 feet in width where it crosses said tracks and the street car track is located to the south of the center thereof.

This crossing is heavily traveled and is what is commonly known as a guarded crossing. It is equipped with gates, bells and lights to give warning of the approach of trains. A gateman's tower is located on the west side of the crossing and to the south thereof. There are two gate standards and two gates on the west side of the crossing, one being located at the north side and the other being located at the south side of Grand avenue. There is but one gate standard and one gate on the east side of the crossing and it is located at the north side of Grand avenue. Near each gate standard is located a signal bell and a signal light to further warn persons of the approach of trains. There are also lights on the gates which operate when the gates are lowered. All of these warning devices are operated from the gateman's tower. The gates are operated by compressed air supplied by a hand pump. The signal bells and signal lights are electrically operated by means of switches. Apparently the defendant railroad kept a gateman in attendance at this crossing at all hours but, in any event, it is clear that for a long period of time before the accident, the defendant railroad kept a gateman in attendance throughout the morning hours. The time when the accident occurred was about 7:50 a. m. It is conceded by defendants that at the time of the accident no gate was lowered, no signal bell was rung and no signal light was lighted.

Some further description of the crossing is required before proceeding to a discussion of the questions presented on this appeal. The two main line tracks are approximately in the center, there being two tracks to the west and three tracks to the east of said mainline tracks. The northbound train was proceeding on the track which was the fourth track from the east side which was the side from which the deceased approached. It is conceded by all that there were numerous freight cars located on the first and second tracks crossed by the deceased. There is some conflict as to the number and exact location of said freight cars, but there was ample evidence to show that there were long strings of cars on said tracks and that the northerly ends of said strings were in very close proximity to the southerly side of Grand avenue. The defendant engineer testified that these freight cars obstructed his view to the right and it seems clear that said freight cars likewise obstructed the view of the deceased to the left as he started to make the crossing.

At the time of the accident there was a very heavy wind and rain storm. On previous occasions, the gateman had found that it was impossible to lower all or at least some of the gates when there was a heavy wind. When the gateman who was on duty at the time of the accident went to work at 7 a. m. he was advised by the gateman who was being relieved that the latter had been able to operate the gates only part of the time. The gateman on duty then attempted to operate the gates and found that he could not lower the gate on the east side or the north gate on the west side. In other words the south gate on the west side was the only gate which he was able to lower. He made no report to anyone regarding his inability to operate said gates.

During this heavy storm and shortly before the accident the deceased had driven across the tracks to the east side for the purpose of taking his wife to her place of employment. He was returning from the east side at about 7:50 a. m. and driving in a westerly direction for the purpose of going to his place of employment when the accident occurred. He had made such trips in the morning and evening for many months prior to the accident and was familiar with the crossing and the warning devices used. A truck was driven in a westerly direction across the crossing about half a block ahead of deceased and a street car was being operated in a westerly direction to the rear of the deceased as he approached the crossing. The testimony shows that deceased approached the crossing in this storm at a speed of from 15 to 18 miles per hour and that he slowed down to about 10 miles per hour as he came to the tracks. As above stated, there were no warning devices in operation at the time. As deceased drove onto the tracks his car was struck by the northbound train, which was traveling at a speed of about 40 miles per hour, and he died almost instantly.

With respect to the actions of the gateman's tower, the testimony showed that he was in the second story of the gateman's tower, reached by a stairway on the outside, when he first noticed the approach of the train. He made no attempt to lower the gates, or any of them, and he did not turn the switches to put the signal bells and signal lights in operation. He did leave the tower to go on the ground carrying with him a stop sign and a flag. With respect to the warning bells and lights he was asked, "You walked right out of that tower without even taking the precaution of reaching up here and turning those on?" and he answered, "Yes, sir." There is a slight conflict in the testimony as to just when the gateman reached the ground and as to just what he did upon reaching ground. We believe, however, that the evidence clearly indicates that he reached the ground very shortly before the accident; that he took a position near the west side of the crossing and at a point to the south of the street car track; and that he faced west toward the heavy east-bound traffic and directed his attention thereto. It further appears that he held his stop-sign in front of his face toward the southwest in order to protect his face from the storm and that he held his flag motionless down at his side. As one witness described it "he was making no move" and "he stood like a statue". If we assume that the gateman arrived on the ground soon enough to give timely warning to the east-bound traffic by means of his stop-sign and flag and that he would have been visible on a clear day to west-bound traffic although he was at the opposite side of this wide crossing, it does not appear, when the circumstances are considered such as the weather, the vehicles and pedestrians on and near the crossing, the position taken by the gateman on the south side of the road and his failure to put his flag or his stop-sign in motion, that his actions would have been such to give any effective warning to west-bound traffic, more particularly in the light of the fact that all traffic at said crossing was accustomed to relying upon the gates and other mechanically operated warning devices.

[1] Defendants contend that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, but we find no merit in this contention. The above summary of the evidence appears sufficient to demonstrate that the question of whether the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence was a question of fact for the jury's determination. Crawford v. Southern Pacific Company, 3 Cal.2d 427, 45 P.2d 183; Robbins v. Southern Pacific Company, 102 Cal.App. 744, 283 P. 850.

[2] Defendants made no claim that the evidence was insufficient to show negligence on the part of said defendants and it is apparent that there was ample evidence to show negligence in many particulars. They do contend, however, that the trial court committed prejudicial error in the giving of certain instructions relating to the issues of negligence and contributory negligence.

[3] Defendants first attack an instruction in which the trial court read to the jury the provisions of section 486 of the Civil Code relating to the requirement for the ringing of a bell or sounding of a whistle by a locomotive. It is claimed that the giving of such instruction without proper qualification embracing the issues of proximate cause and contributory negligence was error. Smellie v. Southern Pacific Company, 128 Cal.App. 567, 18 P.2d 97, 19 P.2d 982. We may assume, without deciding, that the giving of said instruction in the form in which it was given was error despite the fact that the issues of proximate cause and contributory negligence were thoroughly covered by other instructions. There remains, however, the question of whether the assumed error in giving said instruction was prejudicial. Lawrence v. Southern Pacific Company, 189 Cal. 434, 208 P. 966. A review of the record discloses that little, if any, stress was laid upon the question of whether defendants' locomotive did or did not ring a bell or sound a whistle on approaching the crossing. In their brief defendants state that the plaintiffs' opening statement to the jury was "a fair statement of plaintiffs' theory of the case and a fair statement of the facts of the case". Said statement outlined in detail plaintiffs' claims of negligence, but no mention was made therein of any claimed failure of the locomotive to ring a bell or sound a whistle. Again in defendants' brief defendants state that defendants' negligence "was predicated principally, if not entirely upon the failure of the crossing gates to be lowered". Upon the trial, there were witnesses on both sides whose testimony was to the effect that there was no failure of the defendants to comply with said section 486. A reading of the record including the evidence and all of the instructions given leads us to the conclusion that the error, if any, in the giving of said instruction was not prejudicial to the defendants under the circumstances.

[4] Defendants further contend that it was error to give an instruction regarding the necessity for operating a train "at a speed which is reasonable in view of all the circumstances" because of the claimed absence of any evidence which would warrant a finding of a negligent speed. We find no merit in this contention. There was the evidence of the witness Strong to show that the train was proceeding over a heavily traveled crossing within the city limits during a severe storm at a speed of "at least 40 miles per hour". Such evidence was sufficient to warrant the giving of said instruction and to support a finding of negligence.

Defendants further contend that the trial court committed error in the giving of several instructions relating to the rights and duties of the deceased in approaching and traversing the guarded crossing. It would serve no useful purpose to set forth all of said instructions. A reading of the entire charge to the jury convinces us that the jury was fully and fairly instructed and that there was no prejudicial error. We believe that all of the challenged instructions relating to the rights and duties of the deceased find support in the rules laid down in Crawford v. Southern Pacific Company, supra, and Robbins v. Southern Pacific Company, supra, and that the only justifiable criticism which might be directed at the charge as a whole is that some of the instructions, given at the request of defendants, were more favorable to the defendants than they were entitled to have them.

[5] Defendants further contend that "the presumption that the decedent used due care cannot be indulged in this case". Under this heading, defendants claim it was error to instruct the jury that "you are not bound to decide in conformity to the declarations of any number of witnesses, which do not produce conviction in your minds, against a less number or against a presumption or other evidence satisfying your minds". See Code Civ. Proc., sec. 2061, par. 2. We find no error in the giving of said instruction. At the request of defendants, the trial court instructed the jury as follows: "You are instructed that the law presumes that when the decedent started across the railroad track, he exercised ordinary care for his own safety and such presumption is evidence in this case." This statement was followed by a statement that if the jury found that such presumption was contradicted by the testimony of plaintiffs or of plaintiffs' witnesses or that the circumstances of the case could not be reconciled with such presumption, then such presumption was dispelled. As defendants requested these last-mentioned instructions, they must have been of the opinion at that time that the question of whether the presumption was thus dispelled was a question of fact for the jury to determine from the evidence. As above indicated, we cannot say as a matter of law that said presumption was dispelled, and it was therefore proper to give the challenged instruction.

[6, 7] Defendants further contend that the trial court erred in denying their motion for a nonsuit and particularly as against plaintiffs James Gallo and Margaret Gallo, the parents of the deceased. From what has already been said, it is clear that defendants were not entitled to have their motion granted generally. As to the parents of the deceased, the motion was based particularly upon the ground that there was no evidence to show that the parents "were in any way dependent on the decedent, or were damaged to any extent by his death". In our opinion, said motion was properly denied as to said parents as well as to the widow. While there was no evidence to show that the decedent had been actually giving his parents monetary assistance such evidence was not essential. It is true that damages in death cases are limited to the "pecuniary loss" to the surviving heirs, but such loss includes the "loss of the comfort, protection and society of the deceased". Duclos v. Tashjian, 32 Cal.App.2d 444, 453, 90 P.2d 140, 145.

[8] Defendants further contend that the trial court committed prejudicial error in sustaining an objection to the following question asked on cross-examination of the widow: "Mrs. Gallo, have you any plan of contemplating remarriage in the near future?" We believe this contention to be likewise without merit. Defendants have not called to our attention any authority in this jurisdiction supporting their position and we know of none. The great weight of authority appears to support the trial court's ruling. 17 C.J. 1343, sec. 226 and cases cited.

Defendants finally contend that the trial court erred in denying their motion for a new trial. No new points are raised in support of this contention and it follows from what has been said that said motion was properly denied.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 387

In re BRAIG'S ESTATE.

WITTENBERG et al. v. MUELLER et al.

Civ. 11639.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 10, 1941.

Hearing Denied May 8, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐927(7)

In determining propriety of order directing verdict for respondents, reviewing court was required to view the evidence in light most favorable to appellants.

2. Trial ⇐139(1)

Motion for directed verdict should be denied if there is any evidence in the record of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of the party against whom the motion is directed.

3. Evidence ⇐290

In view of difficulty of proving pedigree without aid of public records, the law has made provision for proof of pedigree under certain circumstances by evidence of common reputation in the family as shown by the acts and declarations of the members of the family. Code Civ.Proc. § 1852; § 1870, subds. 4, 11.

4. Evidence ⇐313

Evidence of common reputation in the family, as shown by acts and declarations of the members of the family, concerning pedigree, may constitute "substantial evidence" which will support a verdict in favor of one relying thereon. Code Civ.Proc. § 1852; § 1870, subds. 4, 11.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Substantial Evidence".

5. Descent and distribution ⇐71(7)

In proceeding to determine heirship, whether employer of decedent's mother, who married the employer at a time subsequent to decedent's birth, was decedent's father as contended by parties claiming to be decedent's paternal nieces and nephew, was for jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank T. Deasy, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Harry Peter Braig, alias, deceased, wherein proceeding to determine heirship was brought by Bertha R. Wittenberg and others against Helene Mueller and others. From an adverse judgment, Bertha R. Wittenberg and others appeal.

Reversed.

Van A. Neher, James E. Colston, Richard C. O'Connor, and Charles F. Jonas, all of San Francisco, and W. A. Brandenburger and William A. White, both of Sacramento, for appellants.

Bradford, Cross & Prior, of Sacramento, for respondents.

SPENCE, Justice.

In a proceeding to determine heirship, the trial court directed a verdict against appellants and in favor of respondents and judgment was entered accordingly. Appellants appeal from said judgment.

The deceased was a former lieutenant on the San Francisco police force. He died in 1937, leaving neither wife nor issue. He was originally known as Harry Peter Breig and later changed the spelling of his last name to Braig. It was conceded by all that his mother was Helena Breig, formerly Helena Boehm. Respondents claimed that they were the maternal first cousins of the deceased. Appellants claimed that the deceased was the son of John Breig and Helena Breig and that appellants were the paternal nieces and nephew of the deceased. There appears to be no conflict in the evidence with respect to certain relationships, that is to say, the relationship of respondents to Helena Breig and the relationship of appellants to John Breig. It is further undisputed that John Breig and Helena Breig were husband and wife for many years and that they were divorced in 1882. The main subject in dispute is whether the deceased was the son of John Breig.

It is difficult to determine from the evidence the exact date of the birth of the deceased. The parties seem agreed that he was born around 1870, but no record, public or private, or other evidence was produced to establish definitely the exact date. If he was born in San Francisco, as claimed by appellants, no public record of the birth was available.

[1] In support of the claim that the deceased was the son of John Breig and Helena Breig, appellants produced numerous witnesses to give testimony concerning the history of the family and to establish the pedigree of the deceased through testimony of common reputation in the family as evidenced by the acts and declarations of the members of the family. Code Civ.Proc., secs. 1852 and 1870, subds. 4 and 11. In determining the propriety of the trial court's order directing a verdict in favor of respondents, we must view this evidence in the light most favorable to appellants and when so viewed, the following facts appear.

John Breig was a German immigrant who established himself in San Francisco as a soda water manufacturer in the early 1860's. His first wife was Caroline Breig, by whom he had three children; Edward Breig, Amelia Breig and Theresa Breig. Edward was the father of appellant Emma S. Durr. Amelia was the mother of appellants Bertha R. Whittenberg and George Grover Roemer. Both Edward and Amelia predeceased Harry Braig. Theresa predeceased Harry Braig, leaving no issue.

In the late 1860's, Caroline Breig became ill and John Breig engaged Helena Boehm, then a young German girl, as a domestic and nurse. Caroline Breig lived for a few years thereafter but she became progressively worse and was mentally unbalanced. During said illness of Caroline Breig and during said employment of Helena Boehm in the household, said Helena Boehm gave birth to Harry, the deceased. Helena Boehm was unable to nurse said child and John Breig induced one of his relatives, who had given birth to a child at about the same time, to nurse the infant. Said relative did so over the objections of her own husband and there ensued domestic difficulties in that family as a result. John Breig offered to pay said relative for such nursing. She refused such payment but she did thereafter accept gifts, consisting of a brooch and earrings, given to her by John Breig in appreciation for what she had done. John Breig referred to said child as his child, gave it the name of Harry Breig and raised him as his own along with his other children. After Caroline had died, John Breig married Helena Boehm and the family lived together in San Francisco until 1882. At that time Helena Breig left the home of John Breig, taking her son Harry Breig, and thereafter she obtained a divorce from John Breig. There was evidence of declarations of relatives, since deceased, to the effect that Harry Breig was the son of John Breig and Helena Breig, born out of wedlock prior to their marriage. There was also abundant evidence to show that the other children of John Breig commonly referred to Harry as their brother or half-brother and that they commonly referred to him, in speaking to appellants, as appellants' "Uncle Harry". The testimony might be set forth at greater length and in greater detail but we deem it unnecessary to do so for the purpose of this discussion.

[2] Appellants contend that the trial court erred in directing a verdict in favor of respondents and in our opinion this contention must be sustained. The rules governing the trial court in passing upon a motion for a directed verdict are well settled (In re Estate of Flood, 217 Cal. 763, 21 P.2d 579; In re Estate of Lances, 216 Cal. 397, 15 P.2d 768), and if there is any evidence in the record of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of the party against whom the motion is directed, the motion should be denied.

[3-5] The difficulty of proving pedigree without the aid of public records has long been recognized. The law has therefore made provision for the proof of pedigree under certain circumstances by evidence of common reputation in the family as shown by the acts and declarations of the members of the family. Code Civ.Proc., secs. 1852 and 1870, subds. 4 and 11. Such evidence is often the only evidence which is available and it is held to be substantial evidence which will support a verdict in favor of one relying thereon. In re Estate of Flood, supra; In re Estate of Hartman, 157 Cal. 206, 107 P. 105, 36 L.R.A.,N.S., 530, 21 Ann.Cas. 1302; In re Estate of Heaton, 135 Cal. 385, 67 P. 321; In re Estate of Williams, 128 Cal. 552, 61 P. 670, 79 Am. St.Rep. 67; In re Estate of Barton, 16 Cal. App.2d 246, 60 P.2d 471; In re Estate of Clark, 13 Cal.App. 786, 110 P. 828. Our review of the record convinces us that there was substantial evidence as above indicated to support a verdict in favor of appellants and that it was therefore error to direct a verdict against them.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 356

INGALLS v. BELL et al. (two cases).

Civ. 2566.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 7, 1941.

Hearing Denied May 5, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐809

Plaintiff's appeal from order granting defendants a new trial must be considered before defendants' appeal from judgment on verdict for plaintiff, and appeal from judgment would become important only if order granting new trial were reversed.

2. Principal and surety ⇐3

The statutes abolishing distinction between sureties and guarantors and defining rights and obligations of sureties were not applicable to rights acquired under contract of guaranty dated before enactment of such statutes. Civ.Code, §§ 2787, 2807, 2845.

3. Guaranty ⇐1

A "guaranty", as defined by statute in effect in 1933 as a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, was an undertaking or promise of one person to take upon himself the fulfillment of the obligation of another, in case the other defaults in performance thereof. Civ.Code, § 2787.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Guaranty".

4. Guaranty ⇦1

Under statute in effect in 1933, a guaranty was a collateral undertaking which could not exist without a main or substantive liability to which it was collateral, and although guaranty contract was collateral to contract of principal debtor, the two were distinct and independent. Civ.Code, § 2787.

5. Guaranty ⇦9

As long as agreement established intention of creating a contract of guaranty, no set words and form were required to constitute a "guaranty" as defined by statute in effect in 1933. Civ.Code, § 2787.

6. Principal and surety ⇦162(2)

Whether promise alleged to constitute a guaranty under statute in effect in 1933 was original or collateral was a fact question for jury, but if negotiations of the parties were incorporated into an unambiguous written contract, it was for the court. Civ.Code, § 2787.

7. Guaranty ⇦4

Under statutes in effect in 1933, contracts of "guaranty" and of "warranty" were similar, in that purpose of both was to save one of the contracting parties from loss which the parties contemplated might happen, but a contract of "warranty" was a primary obligation, whereas a "guaranty" was collateral. Civ.Code, § 2787.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Warranty".

8. Principal and surety ⇦6

Under statutes in effect in 1933, both a "guarantor" and a "surety" were bound for another person, but a "surety" was usually bound with his principal by the same instrument executed at the same time and on the same consideration, whereas a "guarantor" was not. Civ.Code, §§ 2787, 2831.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Guarantor" and "Surety".

9. Principal and surety ⇦6

Under statutes in effect in 1933, a "guaranty" always assumed the presence of a guarantor who was personally liable, so if there was no personal liability a contract of "suretyship" and not of "guaranty" resulted. Civ.Code, §§ 2787, 2831.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Suretyship".

10. Pleading ⇦36(1)

Under statutes in effect in 1933, one whose pleadings admitted a contract to be one of guaranty could not later deny that fact and set up that contract was one of suretyship. Civ.Code, §§ 2787, 2831.

11. Guaranty ⇦4

Under statutes in effect in 1933, in a "guaranty" liability was fixed by principal debtor's failure to pay at maturity or when payment was guaranteed, irrespective of whether debtor could pay the debt, but in "indemnity" no liability accrued until after, by use of due and reasonable diligence, there had been failure to collect the debt from principal debtor or the one indemnified had actually suffered loss against which the contract protected him. Civ.Code, § 2787.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Indemnity".

12. Guaranty ⇦4

Under statutes in effect in 1933, in case of either guaranty or indemnity, remedies against principal debtor must have been exhausted in order to authorize recovery, where parties so provided in their contract. Civ.Code, §§ 2807, 2823.

13. Guaranty ⇦45, 46(1), 70, 77(2)

Under statutes in effect in 1933, a guarantor was liable immediately upon default of principal, without demand or notice, and so creditor was not required to exhaust remedies against debtor, and creditor's mere delay or failure to proceed against principal debtor did not exonerate guarantor unless the contract provided that such action must be taken. Civ.Code, §§ 2807, 2823.

14. Subrogation ⇦7(1)

A guarantor is entitled to certain rights of subrogation as against the principal debtor and may enforce any remedy which creditor has against the principal debtor.

15. Guaranty ⇦77(1), 100

It is not a "condition precedent" to recovery upon a guaranty that creditor assign all his rights against debtor over to guarantor, and guarantor who pays the principal obligation is entitled to reimbursement.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Condition Precedent".

16. Guaranty ⇦97

Under statutes in effect in 1933, guarantor could not compel creditor to avail himself of remedies against the debtor unless he paid the obligation, in which case he could compel the creditor to act by a proceeding in equity. Civ.Code, §§ 2848, 2849.

17. Guaranty ⇐75

An action against a guarantor must be brought specially upon the contract of guaranty itself, and such action is not for collection of the principal debt, as such, but is independent of any action upon the principal obligation.

18. Guaranty ⇐85(1)

In action against a guarantor, complaint must allege execution of guaranty and that guarantor has not paid the obligation.

19. Pleading ⇐229

In actions against guarantor, amendments to pleadings are allowed in accordance with general rules.

20. Pleading ⇐36(3, 5)

In action against guarantor, all material allegations of the complaint, on a guaranty not denied by answer, are deemed admitted and are not put in issue, and all admissions in the answer are binding on defendant.

21. Principal and surety ⇐6

Where purchasers of royalty interest, in order to obtain seller's consent to assignment of such interest and modification of the purchase agreement, agreed that within 30 days after notice that assignee had violated the purchase contract, purchasers would pay to seller the balance remaining on account of purchase price, and guarantee faithful performance in every respect, and that purchasers should be subrogated to seller's interest in event of such payment, the agreement was an independent collateral contract for direct payment of money, constituting a "guaranty" and not a "suretyship" under statutes in effect in 1933, and seller's right to sue purchasers arose not as result of enforcing the purchase contract against assignee, but as result of guaranty, and hence tender of the assignment or exhaustion of remedies against assignee was not necessary before suing purchasers. Civ.Code, §§ 1439, 2787, 2807, 2823, 2831, 2845, 2846, 2848, 2849, 3307, 3386, 3392.

22. Jury ⇐14(13)

In action against purchasers of royalty interest in minerals, on their agreement guaranteeing performance of purchase contract by assignees of such contract, jury trial was authorized, as against contention that action was in the nature of specific performance. Code Civ.Proc. § 592.

23. New trial ⇐41(2)

Alleged error in permitting plaintiff to reopen case to prove demand was not ground for new trial, where defendants' counsel stated after case was reopened that he would not raise a question about the demand.

24. Appeal and error ⇐856(5)

It could not be urged on appeal that trial court was justified in granting new trial because it erred in admitting testimony to prove a point which counsel admitted.

25. Pleading ⇐35

An amendment of complaint to allege tender, in accordance with court's erroneous opinion that tender was necessary, was "surplusage" and might be disregarded as unnecessary to cause of action.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Surplusage".

Appeals from Superior Court, Kern County; Robert B. Lambert, Judge.

Action by Ruth P. Ingalls against H. H. Bell and another to recover on guaranty agreement. From a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff, defendants appeal, and from an order granting defendants a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

Order granting new trial reversed, and judgment affirmed.

Brittan & Mack, of Bakersfield, for plaintiff, appellant and respondent.

Alfred Siemon and Bennett Siemon, both of Bakersfield, for defendants, respondents and appellants.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

[1] There are two appeals in this case. Defendants appeal from the judgment entered on the verdict of the jury and plaintiff appeals from an order granting defendants a new trial. Since each side is thus appealing, we will refer throughout this opinion to plaintiff and defendants in order to avoid confusion. The appeal from the order granting a new trial must be first considered, and the appeal from the judgment becomes important only in case the order granting a new trial is reversed. Jackson v. Dolan, 202 Cal. 468, 261 P. 706; San Jose Safe Deposit Bank of Savings v. Bank of Madera, 121 Cal. 543, 54 P. 85.

Plaintiff's complaint, stripped of unnecessary minutiae, alleges: (1) that on or about March 28, 1932, plaintiff was the owner of a six per cent royalty interest in the minerals of certain lands; (2) that on said day she and the other owners of similar royalty interests in the minerals entered into an agreement for the sale of their interests in the minerals to defendants for $106,000, payable in installments from the proceeds of the sale of oil, with certain minimum payment requirements; (3) that thereafter defendants became desirous of assigning their rights under the contract to Shamrock Petroleum Corporation (hereinafter referred to as Shamrock) and of securing certain modifications; (4) that on March 6, 1933, an agreement and assignment was accordingly made between plaintiff and her said co-owners on the one part and Shamrock on the other part, modifying the contract of sale in certain respects, including a reduction in the purchase price, and providing that the entire amount of the purchase price should be paid on or before March 6, 1936; (5) that in consideration thereof defendants at the same time executed and delivered to plaintiff a separate agreement guaranteeing the payment by Shamrock to plaintiff, a copy of which is attached to the complaint; (6) that the sum of $3,688.80 had become due plaintiff from Shamrock and remained unpaid; (7) that Shamrock had refused to pay; and (8) that she was still the owner of the royalty and offered to convey on the condition that the balance of the purchase price be paid to her. The prayer was for the full amount remaining unpaid.

The obligations of Shamrock but not defendants under the sales contract as modified may be briefly stated as follows: (a) royalty holders agree to sell leasehold rights, and reserve the right to forfeit on breach or default; (b) Shamrock agrees to pay the stated price in installments. These installments matured prior to March 6, 1936. The agreement of March 28, 1932, provided: "13. Upon the full payment of the purchase price above provided for, the sellers agree to execute and deliver to the buyers, a good and sufficient assignment conveying all of their right, title and interest in and to said leasehold interest unto the said buyers." Portions of the separate agreement of guaranty dated March 6, 1933, provided in part: "Whereas, on the 28th day of March, 1932, Ruth P. Ingalls agreed to sell * * * a six per cent (6%) interest * * * of all oil, gas and other hydrocarbon substances developed * * * and whereas on said day H. H. Bell and Archie Mayes agreed to buy the interest of said Ruth P. Ingalls for an agreed consideration of $6,000, which was payable out of the production of oil from said premises. And Whereas, H. H. Bell and Archie Mayes are unable to continue with said contract and they are desirous of permitting the Shamrock * * to purchase the same interests as were being purchased by the said H. H. Bell and Archie Mayes under and by virtue of said contract, but for a reduced price of $4,245.30, so far as Ruth P. Ingalls is concerned, and whereas, Ruth P. Ingalls is willing that said reduction be made providing that she have assurance on the part of H. H. Bell and Archie Mayes that she will receive the full purchase price of $4,245.30 for her interest in said property herein mentioned * * * That H. H. Bell and Archie Mayes and each of them do hereby agree that * * * Ruth P. Ingalls shall receive a total consideration equalling $4,245.30 for her interests in and to said land and premises * * * that if and in the event the said Shamrock * * * shall for any reason violate any of the terms and conditions of said contract, a notice of such violation shall be given H. H. Bell and Archie Mayes. Then within a period of thirty (30) days the said H. H. Bell and Archie Mayes individually, jointly and severally * * * shall pay to the said Ruth P. Ingalls the balance remaining on account of the purchase price of her interest in said property; and hereby guarantee the faithful performance thereof in every respect. * * * It is understood and agreed that in all events Ruth P. Ingalls is to receive and will be paid a total consideration of $4,245.30 for her interest in said property, and payment thereof by H. H. Bell and Archie Mayes is hereby guaranteed in said amount * * * that if and in the event the said Shamrock * * * for any reason fail or neglect to perform any act or thing in the time or manner therein prescribed or in the event there might be a waiver of strict performance on the part of said Shamrock * * * that nevertheless, H. H. Bell and Archie Mayes agree to be bound by this contract, and pay the balance remaining for the purchase of said property this day sold or agreed to be sold by her to the said Shamrock * * * that if and in the event the said H. H. Bell and Archie Mayes pay the amount agreed to be paid by the Shamrock * * * then and in that event they shall be subrogated to the right, title and interest of the said Ruth P. Ingalls in and to said contract of purchase."

The answer of defendants admitted the due execution of the agreements; admitted, by failure to deny, the allegation that "* * * defendants have failed, neglected and refused to make any payments whatsoever under said agreement of March 6, 1933, or at all * * * there is now due, owing and unpaid on account of the purchase price of said contract on said property, the sum of Three thousand six hundred eighty-eight and 80/100 dollars ($3,688.80) as principal * * * That demand has been made on said defendants that they pay said sum, but they have neglected, failed and refused so to do * * *."

The complaint further alleges that Shamrock Petroleum Corporation, prior to the filing of the complaint, and after January 4, 1935, filed a petition for reorganization under the Bankruptcy Act of the United States, 11 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq., and thereafter failed, neglected and refused to pay any sum or sums on said contract whatsoever.

The answer admits this fact but as an affirmative defense alleges that from March 6, 1933, to the time of the filing of the bankruptcy proceedings, plaintiff neglected "to enforce the obligation of Shamrock * * by legal proceedings or otherwise, or to forfeit or terminate the right or interest of Shamrock * * * to said property * * individually and collectively consented to and acquiesced in a course of persistent and continuous and uninterrupted violation of its obligations by Shamrock * * * and neglected to present any claim or demand whatever in said bankruptcy proceeding * * * and that by failing to present her said claim the plaintiff lost and waived her security as well as the interest or rights in the property which she was obligated to sell to these defendants", and is estopped from making any claim or demand against them.

A trial by jury was demanded by plaintiff. She offered in evidence the two contracts and read them to the jury. In view of the admissions in the answer no further material evidence was produced. Plaintiff rested. Defendant offered in evidence certain documentary evidence and rested. At plaintiff's request the case was reopened for the purpose of proving demand for payment. Considerable evidence was offered on the subject. Demand was clearly established. Plaintiff again rested. Defendants moved for a directed verdict, and argued that neither under the pleadings nor the evidence was it shown that an offer had been made by plaintiff to execute an assignment or make a tender of her leasehold interest before the action was instituted, and also challenged the right of a jury to pass upon the issues as presented. Plaintiff moved to amend the complaint by showing that she now "offers to convey to the person entitled thereto, upon the payment to said plaintiff of the sum hereinafter demanded in this complaint". This amendment, as well as another amendment, was allowed over strenuous objection. Plaintiff again moved to reopen the case for the purpose of putting on proof in support of the amendments. Defendants objected again and asked the court for a continuance to meet the new issues presented. This continuance was denied. Plaintiff was then allowed to testify that she had not, before the complaint was filed, made a tender of any assignment, but now offered to "turn it over" when the contract was paid. A dispute also arose as to whether plaintiff was at that time owner of the interest and was able to turn it over. Defendants offered to prove that plaintiff lost her ownership of the particular interest, which offer of proof was rejected. Defendants again moved, for the reasons stated, for a directed verdict, which was refused. The court then instructed the jury that if "for any reason said Shamrock * * * has failed to pay the plaintiff * * * any sum of money agreed to be paid by said corporation * * as a result of the contract * * * and if the jury further believe that the plaintiff * * * within a reasonable time after the failure of the Shamrock * * * to pay Ruth P. Ingalls, * * * demanded the payment thereof from the defendants Bell and Mayes, and if the jury further believe that * * * Bell and Mayes have failed to pay said sum or sums not paid by the Shamrock * * *, then your verdict should be for the plaintiff * * * for such sums found to be due".

Defendants first complain because plaintiff was allowed, over objection, to reopen her case to prove demands not pleaded when there had been no defense on the ground that demand had not been made; that after plaintiff had rested her case the second time and after defendants had moved the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict for defendants, plaintiff, over the objection of defendants, was given permission to amend her complaint to allege an offer to convey upon the payment of the sum demanded in the complaint; that plaintiff was again allowed, over the objection of defendants, to reopen for further proof, and was permitted to prove that she had never conveyed her 6 per cent royalty interest; that by reason of such amendments and proof, the action became one for specific performance; that the court erroneously instructed the jury to the effect that plaintiff could recover from defendants without having tendered Shamrock a conveyance and without a demand on Shamrock for payment, thereby permitting the jury to pass on plaintiff's claim for the price without requiring the conveyance; that the liability of defendants under their contract of guaranty or suretyship, if any, was a liability to respond to the same extent as Shamrock was liable to respond to an action for specific performance, citing Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., 123 Cal. 1, 10, 55 P. 713, 43 L.R.A. 199, 69 Am.St.Rep. 17.

It is further argued that this is not an action for damages, as found by the verdict, because plaintiff is asking for the whole purchase price, and has alleged no facts from which the damages accruing to her under Civil Code, section 3307, could be ascertained; that in fact, it is not alleged that she has been damaged at all; and that where a party asks payment of the purchase price, it is held that the action is one in the nature of specific performance, citing Smith v. Tristam, 130 Cal.App. 750, 20 P. 2d 770; Ehrhart v. Mahony, 170 Cal. 148, 148 P. 934; White v. Sage, 149 Cal. 613, 87 P. 193; that no party is entitled to specific performance unless he has performed, or can be compelled to perform, Civ.Code, sec. 3386; that specific performance cannot be enforced in favor of a party who has not fully and fairly performed all conditions precedent on his part, Civ.Code, sec. 3392; that where the title remains in the vendor, he has no cause of action for the purchase price (Cuthill v. Peabody, 19 Cal. App. 304, 308, 125 P. 926); that whether defendants were guarantors or sureties, they were liable only when their principal Shamrock became liable, and defaulted; that a guarantor is liable only on default of the principal, Civ.Code, sec. 2807; that a surety is responsible for performance by the debtor, Civ.Code, sec. 2831 [repealed in 1939]; 24 Am.Jur. sec. 73, p. 922; Brock v. A. G. Priester, Inc., 17 Cal.App.2d 328, 61 P.2d 1183; Anderson v. Shaffer, 98 Cal. App. 457, 462, 277 P. 185; that a party seeking to compel the payment of the purchase price that has matured must offer to convey in order to mature the right to put the other party in default. Civ.Code, sec. 1439; Fenn v. Pickwick Corp., 117 Cal. App. 236, 4 P.2d 215; McElwee v. Beckwith, 198 Cal. 341, 345, 244 P. 1084; Lewis Publishing Co. v. Henderson, 103 Cal.App. 425, 429, 284 P. 713; Kerr v. Reed, 187 Cal. 409, 411, 202 P. 142; Booth v. Chapman, 59 Cal. 149, 153; Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 297, 110 P. 947, 139 Am. St.Rep. 126; Sausalito Bay L. Co. v. Sausalito Imp. Co., 166 Cal. 302, 308, 136 P. 57; Hermosa Beach, etc., Co. v. Law Credit Co., 175 Cal. 493, at 495, 166 P. 22; Neher v. Kauffman, 197 Cal. 674, at 681, 242 P. 713; Benedict v. Calkins, 19 Cal.App.2d 416, 65 P.2d 831.

The principal argument is that it is clear from the contract that defendants became liable only on default of Shamrock; that if the whole of the purchase price had accrued, there could be no default by Shamrock until a conveyance was offered to Shamrock and a demand made on Shamrock for the payment of the balance; that it was not necessary to offer a conveyance to defendants, as they had assigned their right to a conveyance; nor could Shamrock be placed in default by any such tender.

In reply plaintiff contends that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to allege and prove a tender of an assignment before commencing or as a condition to maintaining her suit against the defendants on their agreement. Plaintiff recognizes the general rule regarding tender of a deed by a seller as a concurrent condition of the right to maintain a suit against the buyer for the balance of the purchase price, citing Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., supra; 25 Cal.Jur. p. 659, sec. 146; but argues that the rule is not applicable here; that one of the accepted and well-established exceptions to the rule is that a tender is not required where it would be a useless act, citing 25 Cal.Jur. p. 661, sec. 147; Hoppin v. Munsey, 185 Cal. 678, 685, 198 P. 398; Dean v. Hawes, 21 Cal.App. 350, 131 P. 885; Sausalito Bay L. Co. v. Sausalito Imp. Co., supra; 66 C.J. p. 998, sec. 726; that, if tender to Shamrock was necessary, it was excused under the uncontradicted evidence in this case; that Shamrock was admittedly unable to pay; that in fact it was in bankruptcy reorganization during all of the latter period of the contract; that it had neglected to pay, in spite of considerable correspondence asking it to do so; that there was no attempt on the part of defendants to show Shamrock's ability to pay; that if they had sincerely believed that Shamrock could have responded to a tender they, after demand was served on them for payment, could have brought an action against Shamrock compelling it to pay Mrs. Ingalls upon receiving a deed or assignment, citing Civ.Code, sec. 2846; Kreling v. Kreling, 118 Cal. 413, 50 P. 546; 23 Cal.Jur. p. 1072, sec. 59 et seq; Duerr v. Sloan, 50 Cal.App. 512, 518, 195 P. 475; 23 Cal.Jur. p. 1039, sec. 34; Gaffigan v. Lawton, 1 Cal.2d 722, 37 P.2d 79; Pacific M. & T. Co. v. Massachusetts Bonding, etc., Co., 192 Cal. 278, 285, 219 P. 972; Blackwood v. McCallum, 187 Cal. 655, 659, 203 P. 758; that the rights of the defendants were not affected by the lack of tender; that plaintiff's right to sue Bell and Mayes arose not as the result of enforcing the contract of purchase against Shamrock, but as a result of the new agreement with the former buyers; that the language of the contract itself obviates tender because it provides that upon payment by defendants, they shall have, by subrogation, the right, title and interest of plaintiff in said Shamrock contract, citing Civ.Code, secs. 2848–2849; 23 Cal.Jur. p. 1078, sec. 64; Ryland v. Commercial, etc., Bank, 127 Cal. 525, 59 P. 989; Schlitz v. Thomas, 61 Cal. App. 635, 638, 216 P. 51; that therefore the right to an assignment, either under the terms of the contract with plaintiff or under the general rules of subrogation applicable, did not arise in any event until the defendants actually paid Mrs. Ingalls; that their demand for an assignment as a concurrent condition could have been ignored by plaintiff, and therefore plaintiff was not compelled to make a tender to them of a deed before starting suit; that it is not a case of mutual and dependent covenants, citing 25 Cal.Jur. p. 598, sec. 108; and that the rule of Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., supra, does not apply where the covenants are not concurrent, citing Cook v. Enright, 134 Cal. 1, 66 P. 3; Schwerin Estate Realty Co. v. Slye, 173 Cal. 170, 159 P. 420; 25 Cal.Jur. p. 659, sec. 146; 66 C.J. p. 760, sec. 345; Security-First National Bank v. Chapman, Cal.App., 106 P.2d 431; and Loeb v. Christie, 6 Cal.2d 416, 57 P.2d 1303.

[2] The legislature in 1939 abolished all distinction between sureties and guarantors, sec. 2787, Civ.Code and a surety who has assumed liability for payment to a creditor is liable immediately upon the default of the principal and without demand or notice, sec. 2807, Civ.Code, and a surety may now, under section 2845 of the Civil Code, require his creditor to proceed against the principal, or to pursue any other remedy in his power which the surety cannot himself pursue (and which would lighten his burden); and if in such case the creditor neglects to do so the surety is exonerated to the extent to which he is thereby prejudiced. However, these sections were not effective until 1939, and are not applicable to plaintiff's rights acquired under its contract of guaranty dated March 6, 1933. Bennett v. Superior Court, 5 Cal.App.2d 13, 42 P.2d 80.

A proper determination of the questions here presented resolves itself into the legal interpretation to be given the instrument according to the law then in effect and upon which the cause of action was based, i.e., whether it was a contract of guaranty or of suretyship.

[3-7] A guaranty, as defined by section 2787 of the Civil Code, then in effect, was "a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person", which in effect was an undertaking or promise of one person to take upon himself the fulfillment of the obligation of another, in case such other person defaults in the performance thereof (Lightstone v. Laurencel, 4 Cal. 277), and was a collateral undertaking which could not exist without a main or substantive liability to which it was collateral (Kilbride v. Moss, 113 Cal. 432, 45 P. 812, 54 Am.St.Rep. 361), and although the contract of guaranty was collateral to the contract of the principal debtor the two were distinct and independent. Cooke v. Mesmer, 164 Cal. 332, 128 P. 917. As long as the agreement established the intention of creating a contract of guaranty, no set words and form were required. Whether the promise was original or collateral was a question of fact for the jury, or in case the negotiations of the parties were incorporated into an unambiguous written contract, it was for the court to determine. Harris v. Frank, 81 Cal. 280, 22 P. 856; 6 Cal.Jur. sec. 193, p. 328, et seq.; 13 Cal.Jur. p. 87, sec. 3. From the standpoint of legal significance, there was a great distinction between contracts of guaranty and of warranty. They were similar in that the purpose of both was to save one of the contracting parties from loss which the parties contemplated might happen, but a contract of warranty was a primary obligation, whereas a guaranty was collateral.

[8-11] Cases often occurred in which it was difficult to determine in which category a given contract belonged. There were, however, certain characteristics which distinguished the two relations. Both a guarantor and a surety were bound for another person, but a surety was usually bound with his principal by the same instrument executed at the same time and on the same consideration, whereas a guarantor was not. Treweek v. Howard, 105 Cal. 434, 39 P. 20. A guaranty always assumed the presence of a guarantor who was personally liable, so if there was no personal liability a contract of suretyship and not of guaranty resulted. Sather Banking Co. v. Briggs Co., 138 Cal. 724, 72 P. 352. One who by his pleadings admitted a contract to be one of guaranty could not later deny that fact and set up that his contract was one of suretyship. Adams v. Wallace, 119 Cal. 67, 51 P. 14. There was, prior to the amendment of Civil Code sections 2787 et seq., a marked difference between a contract of guaranty and one of indemnity. In a guaranty of payment the liability was fixed by the failure of the principal debtor to pay at maturity or at the time when payment was guaranteed. It was immaterial whether the debtor could or could not pay the debt. Cunningham v. Norton, 5 Cal.Unrep. 35, 40 P. 491; Adams v. Wallace, supra.

[12-18] In an indemnity against loss as the result of the nonpayment of a debt, or for other loss, no liability accrued until after, by the use of due and reasonable diligence, there had been a failure to collect the debt from the principal debtor or the one indemnified had actually suffered loss against which the contract protected him. Ohio Electric Car Co. v. Le Sage, 182 Cal. 450, 188 P. 982. In either case, however, remedies against the principal debtor must, of course, have been exhausted where the parties so provided in their contract. Bouche v. Louttit, 104 Cal. 230 37 P. 902; Cooke v. Mesmer, supra. Under section 2807 of the Civil Code then in effect, a guarantor of payment or of performance was liable to the guarantee immediately upon the default of the principal and without demand or notice. So there was no duty resting on the creditor to exhaust the remedies against the debtor, and mere delay or failure on the part of the creditor to proceed against the principal debtor did not exonerate the guarantor unless the contract of guaranty provided that such action must be taken. Civ. Code, sec. 2823; San Francisco T. Seminary v. Monterey, etc., Co., 179 Cal. 166, 175 P. 693; Cooke v. Mesmer, supra; 13 Cal.Jur. sec. 22, p. 110. A guarantor of an obligation is entitled to certain rights of subrogation as against the principal debtor, and may enforce any remedy which the creditor has against the principal debtor (Clark v. Chapman, 98 Cal. 110, 32 P. 812, 33 P. 750), and it is not a condition precedent to recovery upon a guaranty that the creditor assign all his rights against the debtor over to the guarantor, and where the guarantor pays the principal obligation he is entitled to reimbursement. Roush v. Kirkman, 42 Cal.App. 115, 183 P. 353. A guarantor had no right to compel the creditor to avail himself of the remedies against the debtor unless he paid the obligation, in which case he could have compelled the creditor to act by a proceeding in equity. Whiting v. Clark, 17 Cal. 407; 13 Cal.Jur. sec. 30, p. 122; W. H. Marston Co. v. Kochritz, 109 Cal.App. 331, 293 P. 120. An action against a guarantor must be brought specially upon the contract of guaranty itself. San Francisco T. Seminary v. Monterey, etc., Co., supra. The action so brought is not for the collection of the principal debt, as such, and is in fact independent of any action upon the principal obligation. Adams v. Wallace, supra. The complaint must allege the execution of the guaranty and that the defendant has not paid the obligation. Roberts v. Treadwell, 50 Cal. 520.

[19, 20] Amendments to pleadings in this class of actions are allowed in accordance with general rules. Segaloff v. Furman, 209 Cal. 301, 287 P. 92. All material allegations of the complaint, on a guaranty not denied by answer, are deemed admitted and are not put in issue, and all admissions in the answer are binding on the defendant. Adams v. Wallace, supra.

[21] Under these established principles of law, plaintiff's right to sue Bell and Mayes arose not as the result of enforcing the contract of purchase against Shamrock, but as the result of a new agreement of guaranty with them. If she had brought suit against Shamrock, and Shamrock had been asked to pay, then the rule of tender perhaps would have been applicable. Ross v. McDougal, 31 Cal.App.2d 114, 87 P.2d 709.

Guided by the general rules then in effect, we must conclude that the instrument in question was (1) an independent collateral contract for the direct payment of money; (2) it possessed all the elements of a contract of guaranty; and (3) it was not a contract of suretyship.

The evidence and pleadings clearly established the fact that notice of default and demand for payment was given, and under the cited cases no tender of the assignment or exhaustion of remedies against the principal at that time was necessary. California Bank v. Kenoyer, 2 Cal.App.2d 367, 37 P.2d 836; Rice Securities Co. v. Daggs, 63 Cal.App. 273, 218 P. 484; Union Collection Co. v. Rogers, 18 Cal.App. 205, 122 P. 970; Birkhofer v. Krumm, 4 Cal.App.2d 43, 40 P.2d 553; Somers v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 191 Cal. 542, 217 P. 746; Bank of America v. Granger, 115 Cal.App. 210, 1 P.2d 479; Security-First National Bank v. Chapman, supra; Wilcoxson v. Stitt, 65 Cal. 596, 4 P. 629, 52 Am.Rep. 310; Loeb v. Christie, 6 Cal.2d 416, 57 P.2d 1303; Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 487, 27 P. 429.

[22-25] A jury trial was authorized under section 592 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Platt v. Havens, 119 Cal. 244, 51 P. 342. Defendants contend that it was error for the court to permit the reopening of plaintiff's case to prove demand. If this were error, it did not constitute sufficient grounds for granting a new trial, because during the presentation of proof of demand after the case was reopened, defendants' counsel stated: "I will not raise a question about the demand, anyway." It cannot now be urged that the trial court was justified in granting a new trial because it erred in admitting testimony to prove a point which counsel admitted. Union Collection Co. v. Rogers, supra. The amendment of plaintiff's complaint to allege that she was the owner of the six per cent interest and was now offering to "turn it over" upon payment, was surplusage and may be disregarded. It was made in accordance with the court's opinion that tender was necessary, and may be similarly regarded as any other allegation which is not necessary to a plaintiff's cause of action. Kidwell v. General Petroleum Corp., 212 Cal. 720, 300 P. 1, 76 A.L.R. 830.

It becomes immediately apparent from the record that the sole reason for the trial court being led into granting a new trial was that "it was not alleged that a tender had been made nor was it proved that a tender was made * * * (See Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 487, 27 P. 429.)" From the interpretation that must be given this instrument and for the reasons expressed, the cited case is not applicable and the court erroneously granted the motion for a new trial. The issue as presented to the jury was determined under proper instructions. Under the undisputed evidence the defendants were unquestionably liable. The amount claimed as due was undisputed. The judgment rendered on the verdict was proper and should be affirmed.

Therefore, the order granting the motion for new trial is reversed and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 351

EL CAMINO LAND CORPORATION v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF TEHAMA COUNTY et al., (HILL et al., Interveners).

Civ. 6535.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 6, 1941.

Hearing Denied May 1, 1941.

1. Mandamus ⇐1

The remedy of mandamus being of equitable nature, presupposing a wrong to be redressed and a right to be restored, principles of equity are frequently resorted to in determining whether the writ should issue.

2. Mandamus ⇐7

The issuance of writ of mandamus is not altogether a matter of right, but involves consideration of its effect in promoting justice, so that granting or refusal thereof lies, to considerable extent, within sound judicial discretion of court to which application is made.

3. Mandamus ⇐15, 16(1), 143(2)

The court is not bound to allow writ of mandamus merely because applicant therefor shows a clear legal right, for which mandamus is appropriate remedy, though applicant would otherwise be without remedy, but may deny writ, even under such circumstances, if public would be injuriously affected by its issuance, if it would operate inequitably on defendant, be nugatory or unavailing, or injuriously affect third persons' rights, or if there has been laches in seeking remedy.

4. Mandamus ⇐174

In proceeding for writ of mandamus to compel county board of supervisors to assess all of such lands within irrigation district in amount sufficient to pay all district's outstanding matured bonds and coupons, facts found by Superior Court held sufficient to invoke its legal discretion in favor of denying the writ. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3854, § 39b.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; C. A. Paulsen, Judge.

Proceeding by the El Camino Land Corporation for a writ of mandamus to compel the Board of Supervisors of Tehama County to assess lands within such district in amount sufficient to pay all of its outstanding matured bonds and coupons, in which Clarence G. Hill and others intervened as plaintiffs. From a judgment denying the writ, petitioner appeals.

Affirmed.

A. L. Garvey, of San Francisco, and Curtiss E. Wetter, of Red Bluff, for appellant.

Claire Engle, of Red Bluff, for respondent Board of Sup'rs.

A. L. Cowell, of Stockton, amicus curiae for respondent.

L. C. Smith, of Redding, for intervening plaintiffs and respondents.

TUTTLE, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment denying to petitioner and appellant herein a writ of mandamus.

Petitioner is the owner of $275,000 par value out of a total of $423,000 par value of bonds issued by El Camino Irrigation District. It seeks by mandamus to compel respondent Board of Supervisors of Tehama County, California, to cause to be prepared an assessment roll of all assessable lands within said district situated within said county, and to levy an assessment thereon in an amount sufficient to pay and retire all matured bonds and coupons of said district then outstanding, as provided by section 39b of Act 3854, General Laws 1937, commonly known as the California Irrigation District Act. Intervening plaintiffs and respondents are owners and in possession of land within the exterior boundaries of said district.

The court found facts which show that it was the legal duty of respondent Board to levy the assessment, but further found certain facts of an equitable nature which precluded the issuance of the writ. The latter findings are as follows:

"It is true that in taking into account said bond issue and the interest accumulations thereon and the obligations of the land in said District to the holders of said securities by reason of said indebtedness that the reasonable market value of the land which would be required to bear the burden of a one hundred twenty-eight and twenty-six/100 dollar ($128.26) assessment per acre is as follows: Twenty-five per cent (25%) of the land within said El Camino Irrigation District has a value of twenty-five dollars ($25.00) per acre; ten per cent (10%) of the land within said District has a value of sixty dollars ($60.00) per acre; and approximately sixty-five per cent (65%) of the land within said District has a value of twenty dollars ($20.00) per acre, there being a nominal area thereof immediately adjacent to the California State Highway, a portion of which has a probable value for industrial purposes.

"It is true that there are seven thousand five hundred forty-six (7,546) acres of land situated within the exterior boundaries of the El Camino Irrigation District and that said District has acquired and is now the owner of all of said land except two thousand sixty-two and forty-eight/100 (2,062.48) acres thereof, and that the assessment sought to be levied by petitioner herein would require a levy on each acre of land left in private ownership and not held by the District in the sum of one hundred twenty-eight and twenty-six/100 dollars ($128.26).

"It is true that the revenues derived from the operation of the lands within said El Camino Irrigation District are wholly insufficient to pay said sum of one hundred twenty-eight and twenty-six/100 dollars ($128.-

26) per acre and that no part or portion of the lands within said District is able to bear the burden of such an assessment; and that a levy of one hundred twenty-eight and twenty-six/100 dollars ($128.26) per acre as requested and demanded by petitioner herein would yield no funds for the payment of bond interest and bond principal but would throw the affairs of said District into a more complicated state of chaos and confusion and would be fatal to the landholders in said District and said landholders owning lands would lose title thereto for non-payment of assessments without benefit to the bondholders or holders of matured interest coupons.

"It is true that it is not within the ability of the lands within the said District, the title to which is now vested in private ownership, to pay an assessment in excess of those heretofore levied by the Board of Directors of the El Camino Irrigation District and that to levy a rate in excess of those heretofore levied by the Board of Directors of the El Camino Irrigation District would be detrimental to the bondholders and landholders alike and would tend to and would destroy to a marked degree the possibility of securing revenue for the bondholders of the El Camino Irrigation District.

"It is true that to levy the assessment prayed for by petitioner would create a burden upon the lands situated within the El Camino Irrigation District so great and excessive that it would be neither practical nor possible for the landholders therein to pay the same and would yield no revenue to said District for the purpose of paying bond principal or bond interest and destroy its present meager ability to pay the cost of maintenance and operation of said District and thereby promote a collapse of the powers of said District to raise any sum by assessments upon the lands still remaining in private ownership causing said District to cease to function for lack of sufficient funds, destroying the security of creditors of said District and confiscating the equities of the landholders therein; and would result in gross inequities and serious damage; that the writ prayed for, if granted, would lead to chaos and confusion and would accomplish no useful purpose to the petitioner but only tend to destroy the District's ability to yield revenue to petitioner and lead to inequities detrimental to all parties and result in a public mischief and destroy the spirit of equity and said District could not discharge its trusts.

"It is true that at the time of the filing of petitioner's petition herein and for a long time prior thereto the El Camino Irrigation District, in fact, was insolvent and/or unable to pay its obligations in full as they matured and that it has no funds or source from which to obtain funds with which to pay its obligations,—past, present or future,—in full, or in an amount comparable to the obligations due.

"It is true that an assessment as required by petitioner would exceed the actual reasonable value of the lands upon which it would be levied from two to five times; and that it would be impractical and unreasonable to expect any material return therefrom, and the court finds it would result in no advantage to petitioner but would result only in disadvantages and impairment of equities of petitioner and intervenors and the El Camino Irrigation District."

It is not contended by appellant that the findings are not supported by the evidence. No attempt is made by it to show wherein such findings lack evidentiary support. Appellant contends, in effect, that the findings do not support the judgment; particularly, that the findings quoted are not a defense to proceeding, and that, having established a bare legal right to the writ, it was the duty of the trial court to grant the relief sought.

[1] "The remedy of mandamus being of an equitable nature, presupposing a wrong to be redressed and a right to be restored, principles of equity are frequently resorted to in determining whether the writ should issue." 16 Cal.Jur., p. 769, sec. 8.

[2] "The issuance of the writ is not altogether a matter of right, but involves consideration of its effect in promoting justice. The granting or refusing of the writ lies, therefore, to a considerable extent, within the sound judicial discretion of the court where the application is made. Cases may therefore arise where the applicant for relief has an undoubted right, for which mandamus is the appropriate remedy, but where the court may, in the exercise of a wise discretion, still refuse the relief." 16 Cal.Jur. p. 768, sec. 7.

[3] In 38 C.J., pages 549, 550, it is said: "Nevertheless, the court in the exercise of its discretion, may and should take into consideration a wide variety of circumstances in determining whether the writ should issue. It is elementary that the court is not bound to allow the writ merely because the applicant shows a clear legal right for which mandamus would be an appropriate remedy, even though without mandamus the applicant for the writ would be without remedy. Even under these circumstances the court may deny the writ where by its issuance the public would be injuriously affected, or where it would operate inequitably upon defendant, or where it would be nugatory or unavailing, or would injuriously affect the rights of third persons, or where there has been laches in seeking the remedy."

In 18 R.C.L., pages 138, 139, section 53, it is stated: "This discretion will not be exercised in favor of applicants unless some just purpose may be answered by the writ, and it would be wholly improper for the court to lend its aid to the effectuation of a palpable injustice, or to grant the writ where the relator does not come with clean hands. . . . Under the guise of enforcing a public right the writ will not issue if in fact it will operate to the detriment rather than to the benefit of the general public, or cause great disorder and confusion in the fiscal affairs and duties of the officers of a public or quasi public corporation, or will be attended with manifest hardship and difficulties."

In the case of Clough v. Baber, 38 Cal. App.2d 50, 100 P.2d 519, 520, this court refused mandamus in a case where the legal duty of the officers of an irrigation district was admitted and conceded, upon the ground that the issuance of the writ would result in an injustice. We there said: "Mandamus, however, is an extraordinary remedy which is equitable in its nature. There is no absolute right to the writ. The necessity of issuing the writ must be clearly established. It will not issue in doubtful cases. It will not issue if the writ would result in grievous public or private wrong in conflict with the spirit of the statute, even though it be in compliance with the technical letter of the law. Duncan Townsite Co. v. Lane, 245 U.S. 308, 38 S.Ct. 99, 62 L.Ed. 309; Hutchison v. Reclamation Dist. [No. 1619], supra [81 Cal.App. 427, 254 P. 606]; High's Extraordinary Legal Remedies, 3rd Ed., [p.] 12 sec. 9; 16 Cal.Jur. 776, secs. 13, 14."

[4] We are of the opinion that under the law, as we have stated it, the facts found by the court were sufficient to invoke its legal discretion in favor of denying the writ. It is unnecessary to recapitulate or further comment upon such facts. They speak for themselves.

Other questions are raised, but we do not deem it necessary to discuss them.

No abuse of discretion appearing in the refusal of the writ, the judgment should be, and it is, hereby affirmed.

We concur: PULLEN, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 402

EMERY v. PACIFIC TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO.

Civ. 6408.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 10, 1941.

Hearing Denied May 8, 1941.

1. Electricity ⇐19(4)

In action by lineman employed by city electrical maintenance department against a telephone company for injuries sustained when lineman came in contact with a power line while working on pole which carried company's wires and city's electric power line, where company's answer contained denial that company owned and maintained pole jointly with city, a contract between city and company respecting maintenance of poles was admissible to answer denial and to prove joint ownership of pole and to establish relationship between lineman and company at time of accident.

2. Electricity ⇐15(2)

Where pole, upon which lineman employed by city electrical maintenance department was working when injured, was owned jointly by city and a telephone company, and under terms of contract between city and company respecting maintenance of poles each contracting party was bound to exercise due care for safety of employees of the other, an "invitor and invitee relationship" existed between lineman and company at time of accident, and hence company was bound to exercise ordinary care for lineman's safety while working upon pole.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Invitor and Invitee Relationship".

3. Witnesses ⇐374(1)

In action by lineman employed by city electrical maintenance department against a telephone company for injuries sustained when lineman came in contact with a power line while working on pole which carried company's wires and city's electric power line, where city employees were called as witnesses by company, a contract between company and city respecting maintenance of poles was admissible to prove prejudice by such witnesses, especially where it appeared from contract that city might be obligated to pay part of judgment obtained by lineman.

4. Trial ⇐48

If evidence is admissible for any purpose, it must be received even though it may be improper for another purpose.

5. Trial ⇐255(4)

Failure to request trial court to limit, as evidence for certain purposes only, a contract which was admitted in evidence, was a "waiver" of objection that contract should have been admitted in evidence only for certain purposes.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waiver".

6. Appeal and error ⇐204(1)

Complaint as to admission of evidence could not be made for first time on appeal.

7. Electricity ⇐19(5)

In action by lineman employed in city electrical maintenance department against a telephone company for injuries sustained when lineman came in contact with a power line while working on pole which carried company's wires and city's electric power line, where an invitor and invitee relationship existed between lineman and company at time of accident, evidence justified judgment for lineman on ground that pole was not reasonably safe for purpose for which intended.

8. Electricity ⇐18(3)

A lineman with one year's experience, who was engaged in work on a pole carrying city's electric power line and wires of a telephone company, was bound to choose safest and most efficient method for accomplishing work.

9. Negligence ⇐136(26)

Generally, existence or absence of contributory negligence is for jury.

10. Negligence ⇐136(9)

If but one conclusion can reasonably be reached from evidence respecting contributory negligence, question of contributory negligence is a "question of law" for trial court, but if one sensible and impartial person might decide that plaintiff exercised ordinary care, and another equally sensible and impartial person might decide that plaintiff did not exercise such care, question of contributory negligence must be left to jury.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Law".

11. Master and servant ⇐231(1)

An employee had a right to assume that employer had provided employee with a reasonably safe place to work.

12. Master and servant ⇐231(1)

A servant has a right to rely upon master's inquiry respecting condition of things with which servant must work, and servant may assume that such things are fit and suitable for use which he is directed to make of them.

13. Master and servant ⇐217(7)

An employee is not bound to use any degree of care to discover defects in things with which employee must work, and employee will be held to have assumed risk of defects only when he knew thereof.

14. Master and servant ⇐234(4)
Negligence ⇐66(1)

An employee will be held to have known of defects in things with which employee must work when defects are so obvious that employee must have known thereof, or refused to open his eyes and see, or when employee was put upon inquiry by some discovery or suggestion of danger which it was gross carelessness for him to neglect, and such principle is applicable to an invitee.

15. Electricity ⇐19(13)

In action by lineman employed in city electrical maintenance department against a telephone company for injuries sustained when lineman came in contact with a power line while working on pole carrying company's wires, an instruction that, if injuries were proximately caused by latent defects in a defective pole, lineman was not, in absence of knowledge as to defects, bound to conduct an investigation of his own as to existence of defects, was not objectionable as prohibiting jury from finding that lineman was contributorily negligent.

16. Appeal and error ⇐1064(1)

An instruction with respect to contributory negligence, that the law requires that plaintiff exercise for his own safety that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person, with plaintiff's knowledge and experience, would have exercised under similar circumstances, was not prejudicial under evidence to defendant as sanctioning a lower standard of care by one than by another with more knowledge and experience.

17. Appeal and error ⇐217

Appellant's counsel, who claimed to have seen allegedly prejudicial acts by jurors, "waived" objection when he did not call matter to trial court's attention or ask that jury be instructed to disregard improperly obtained information.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waived".

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; Andrew R. Schottky, Judge.

Action by Edwin D. Emery against the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, and Neumiller & Ditz, of Stockton, for appellant.

Gumpert & Mazzera, of Stockton, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is an appeal by defendant Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company from a judgment in a personal injury action in favor of plaintiff.

On the day of the injury, October 29, 1937, appellant, for the purpose of carrying on its business, maintained cables, wires and poles in the city of Lodi. The city of Lodi, a municipal corporation, was then engaged in the business of distributing electric power to consumers in its limits, and for that purpose owned, used and maintained power lines, poles and electrical equipment.

For the joint ownership of certain poles in the city of Lodi, appellant and the city had, in 1919, entered into a written agreement. In 1923 appellant, by purchase, became the owner of a one-half interest in certain poles in the city of Lodi, including the pole here in question. This pole was one of a string of several such poles and supported the electric power lines of the city and the communication lines of appellant.

The power line of the city on this string consisted of four copper wires, three of which were charged with 2300 volts, the fourth being a ground wire carrying no electric current. These lines were carried on wooden cross-arms near the top of the poles, while appellant's wires were attached to cross-arms a few feet above the middle of the pole and about 20 feet from the ground.

On the day preceding this accident the city, in order to install a new ground wire and to take up the sag in the power wires, had untied its wires and left the wires lying on the top of the cross-arms.

On the day in question employees of the city electrical department, including plaintiff, were sent to complete this work and to "tie in" or secure these wires to the insulators. In the regular progress of this work plaintiff reached the pole in question. This pole was a 40-foot western cedar 34 feet above the surface of the ground and six feet below the ground, imbedded in concrete. The cross-arm supporting the power wires was within six inches of the top. A few feet below this cross-arm was a street light, supported by an iron bracket, and a third arm, known as a buck arm. Below these attachments was the cross-arm carrying the lines of appellant.

Plaintiff was equipped with spurs or hooks fastened to each foot to assist in climbing the poles. He also had about his waist a leather safety belt, leather and rubber gloves, and tools and parts necessary in his work. When he reached the top of the pole he adjusted his safety belt, donned his rubber gloves and proceeded to tie in the most northerly wire by reaching over the nearer wire. This is known to linemen as "working from above" to distinguish that method from one where the lineman reaches above and places and attaches the wire.

Plaintiff testified that in shifting his weight in order to reach or lift the wire, the pole began to sway, causing his weight to shift, bringing an additional weight onto his hooks, which gave way. As he started to slip he attempted to strike his hooks into the pole, get back into a vertical position and to throw his arms above his head in an effort to miss the wires if he should fall. That is all he remembers, but apparently he came in contact with one of the power wires, causing him to lose consciousness and inflicting the injuries here complained of.

Appellant urges upon this appeal the court erred in admitting in evidence the contract between the city and appellant, and particularly Paragraph D of Article Third in that the definition of defective poles therein did not establish a standard for maintenance or replacement, but was applicable only to poles in which one of the contracting parties might desire to acquire a part interest.

It is also contended plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, that the court erred in its instructions to the jury, and that the jury were guilty of prejudicial misconduct.

It must be conceded that the agreement was not attempting to fix a standard of safety—the purpose was to fix a basis for the acceptance or replacement of poles in place at the time the joint ownership agreement went into effect.

Article First of the agreement applies to the joint maintenance of the poles. It provides that the poles shall be constructed, erected and maintained in accordance with "specifications for joint use of poles by Telephone, Electric Light and Power Companies" a copy of which is incorporated in the contract as an exhibit. Paragraph B of Article First provides that if at any time repairs, reconstructions, renewals or removal of any pole or poles owned jointly by the parties shall be deemed necessary, the expense of such repairs or removal shall be jointly borne, and if the parties cannot agree as to the necessity for such repairs, etc., a provision is made for arbitration.

Article Third is in part as follows: "The purchase or exchange of joint ownership in existing poles or pole lines, which may be agreed upon between the parties hereto, shall be arranged on the following basis: * * *"

Paragraph D defines defective poles and provides they shall be replaced at joint expense. Defective poles are defined as follows:

"One. Less than the requisite circumference of sound wood at the ground line.

"Two. More than the allowable size of hollow heart.

"Three. Badly rotted poles above ground, woodpecker holes, cracks or other defects."

This paragraph also contains a schedule for minimum circumference of sound wood, which specifies for a 40-foot pole, 44 inches at the ground, and for a 40-foot pole, a shell of sound wood of at least three inches thick.

This contract was offered in evidence and read in full to the jury by respondent. An objection was made first as to authority of the officials of the city to bind the municipality. That objection was overruled and no point is made of that ruling. An objection to its admissibility was then urged that it was irrelevant to any issue in the case. That objection was overruled and that ruling is now under attack. It was proper evidence for certain purposes at least.

[1, 2] Appellant in its answer denied that it jointly, with the city of Lodi, owned and maintained the pole in question. The agreement was properly admitted to answer that denial. And not only was the contract admissible to prove joint ownership but it was also competent to establish the relationship between plaintiff and defendant at the time of the accident. Under its terms each of the contracting parties was bound to exercise due care for the safety and protection of the employees of the other, and at the time of the accident the relation of invitor and invitee existed between plaintiff and defendant, and therefore defendant was legally bound to exercise ordinary and reasonable care for the safety of plaintiff as its invitee while working upon the pole jointly owned by it and the city of Lodi. Hanna v. Central States Electric Co. et al., 210 Iowa 864, 232 N.W. 421.

[3] Also, inasmuch as certain officials and employees of the city of Lodi were called as witnesses on behalf of defendant, the contract was properly admitted to prove bias or prejudice, for it appeared from the contract that the city might be obligated to pay one-half of any judgment obtained by plaintiff. The only way this bias could be shown was by the agreement itself.

[4] As often said, if evidence is admissible for any purpose it must be received, even though it may be improper for another purpose. Inyo Chemical Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 5 Cal.2d 525, 55 P.2d 850; Smith v. Dean, 25 Cal.App.2d 671, 78 P.2d 448.

[5, 6] No specific objection to the introduction of this contract was made nor a request to the court to limit it as evidence for a particular purpose only, and failure to so request the court to limit its effect must be deemed a waiver of the objection, and complaint cannot be made for the first time on appeal. Barsha v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 32 Cal.App.2d 556, 90 P.2d 371.

The evidence discloses that plaintiff was an employee of the city of Lodi, and assigned as a lineman in its electrical maintenance department, and that he was engaged in his employment when he climbed the pole in question. The testimony is uncontradicted that while engaged in tying a wire the pole abnormally swayed, throwing him off balance, causing his climbing hook to slip, whereby he fell, and came in contact with a high voltage wire. It is also in evidence the pole was rotted at the base and lacked sufficient sound wood to support it. The conclusion of the jury was that if defendant and the city of Lodi had exercised ordinary care and supervision to maintain this pole in a safe condition the accident would not have happened.

[7] Whether or not the provisions in the contract were intended as a standard of soundness as to the poles in regard to their purchase only or whether the two contracting parties had in mind the safety of their employees is not of initial importance here. We have been cited to no statement of counsel for plaintiff wherein he argued that a violation of the standards set forth in the agreement constituted negligence as to plaintiff. It is not claimed that the agreement was admissible to show a violation of a duty to plaintiff and thereby to establish negligence on the part of defendant. At most it showed a standard of defectiveness when it came to acquiring title in the poles. The jury could, and as far as the record discloses, came to their conclusions upon other and sufficient evidence that the pole was not reasonably safe for the purpose it was intended.

[8-10] It is also urged that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in that he selected a dangerous and hazardous method to do his work. It must be conceded that there was no safe way to do this hazardous work, surrounded by high voltage wires on a wet and foggy day 30 feet above the street. He was a lineman of at least one year's experience and it devolved upon him to choose the safest and most efficient method to accomplish his task. The evidence is not that he came in contact with a charged wire by reason of his work or because of thoughtlessness. It does not appear that a rubber "snake", a heavy rubber tube which could be placed over hot wires with which he might come in contact,—would have saved him. His injury was caused by his spur or hook slipping because of the swaying pole, and no criticism is made of his use or adjustment of his hooks. The jury and the trial court heard all the witnesses who told how the work should or should not have been done, and the jury found the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, which finding was accepted as true by the court upon the motion for a new trial.

"* * * That the existence or absence of contributory negligence is in general a matter primarily for the jury there can be no doubt. * * * 'If but one conclusion can reasonably be reached from the evidence, it is a question of law for the court; but if one sensible and impartial man might decide that the plaintiff had exercised ordinary care, and another equally sensible and impartial man that he had not exercised such care, it must be left to the jury.'"

That statement is from the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Jacobson v. Oakland Meat & Packing Co., 161 Cal. 425, 119 P. 653, 654, Ann.Cas.1913B, 1194.

Appellant complains of two instructions. The court gave the following: "If you believe that plaintiff Emery's injuries, if any, were solely and proximately caused by any latent defects in an unsound and defective pole, if it was such a pole, and if it was jointly owned, used and maintained by the City of Lodi, and the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, in the absence of any knowledge on the part of Emery as to such latent defect, if any, or of any facts which would in the exercise of ordinary care put him upon inquiry, then I instruct you that the law did not require Emery to conduct an investigation on his own account as to the existence of latent defects, if any, in the pole which was provided for the doing of his assigned work."

Appellant claims that under this instruction the jury were prohibited from finding respondent contributorily negligent even though they believed from the evidence that an ordinarily prudent person under the same circumstances would have inspected and tested the pole before climbing it.

[11] The court was here discussing latent defects, of which plaintiff had no knowledge or knew of no fact that would put him upon inquiry. Plaintiff, as an employee of the city of Lodi had a right to assume his employer had provided him a reasonably safe place to work. He also knew the city maintained an inspection department and made regular inspections of its poles and equipment.

In Price v. Northern Electric Ry. Co., 168 Cal. 173, 142 P. 91, 94, it is said: "In the absence of actual knowledge to the contrary, or circumstances under which he would be held to be required to have such knowledge, he had the right to assume, when directed to assist in removing the scaffolding, that the bent had been so braced that it would not fall when the scaffolding was removed."

[12-14] In Starr v. Kreuzberger, 129 Cal. 123, 61 P. 787, 789, 79 Am.St.Rep. 92, this rule of law is stated: " 'The servant has a right to rely upon the master's inquiry, because it is the master's duty so to inquire, and the servant may justly assume that all these things are fit and suitable for the use which he is directed to make of them.' Mr. Justice Temple, in the Silveira Case [Silveira v. Iversen, 128 Cal. 187, 60 P. 687], said: 'The employe is not required to use any degree of care or diligence to discover defects. He will be held to have assumed the risk only when he knew, and will be held to have known when the defect was so obvious that he must have known, or simply refused to open his eyes and see, or when he was put upon inquiry by some discovery or suggestion of danger which it was gross carelessness for him to neglect.' "

[15] This principle is as applicable to an invitee, as was plaintiff, as to that of an employee.

Another instruction is urged by appellant as erroneous. It was dealing with the degree of care required of respondent as affecting the allegation of contributory negligence. The court instructed the jury that the law required of plaintiff that he exercise for his own safety that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person, with his knowledge and experience would have exercised under similar circumstances.

In Giraudi v. Electric Improvement Co., 107 Cal. 120, 40 P. 108, 111, 28 L.R.A. 596, 48 Am.St.Rep. 114, the court, in considering the refusal to give an instruction with reference to contributory negligence, said: "The instruction asked had reference only to the alleged contributory negligence of plaintiff. As to that it has been said: 'As there are different classes in society, with widely different degrees of intelligence, the plaintiff was not required to exercise more care than is usual under similar circumstances among careful and prudent persons of the class to which he belongs.' " Shearman and Redfield on Negligence, sec. 87.

[16] Plaintiff testified he had experience in handling high voltage wires and fully appreciated their dangerous qualities, and that he should take every precaution to protect himself. Even if it might be argued that in some instances the instruction would sanction a lower standard of care by one than by another with more knowledge and experience, in the instant case that condition from the evidence did not exist and appellant could not have been prejudiced by the instruction even if subject to criticism.

Finally it is claimed certain of the jury were guilty of prejudicial misconduct. On next to the last day of the trial the jury were taken to view the scene of the accident and the pole. They were accompanied by the judge and respective counsel. While at the scene, one of the jurors, in the presence of counsel, made certain measurements of the pole by means of a small caliper. Another juror inserted his hand in a cavity in the side of the pole.

[17] Counsel for appellant, who assert they saw these acts by the particular jurors, made no objection, did not call the matter to the attention of the court, nor ask any instruction to the jury to disregard such information so obtained. By their failure to act they have waived any objection they might have. Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 P. 513; Kershaw v. Tilbury, 214 Cal. 679, 8 P.2d 109.

After carefully reading the rather lengthy record and studying the authorities by respective counsel we can find no errors of sufficient seriousness to justify a reversal. The judgment is affirmed.

FAGEOL TRUCK & COACH CO. v. PACIFIC INDEMNITY CO. et al. *

Civ. 10969.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 5, 1941.

Hearing Granted May 1, 1941.

1. Insurance ⇐580(1)

In the absence of agreement between vendor and vendee with respect to insurance, neither the vendor nor the vendee has any interest in the insurance procured by the other.

2. Insurance ⇐124

An "insurance policy" is not insurance of a specific thing without regard to ownership, but is a special agreement of indemnity with a person insuring against such loss or damage as the insured may sustain, and therefore in the absence of agreement the insurance is not a substitute for the property, and a policy of insurance does not pass with title to property.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Insurance Policy".

3. Insurance ⇐581

Under an "open" or "loss payable" clause as distinguished from a "union" or "standard" clause, the party named in such clause does not become an "insured" under the policy, but is merely an appointee of the fund, and the policy is regarded merely as additional security for the payment of the obligation outstanding between the insured and the party named in loss payable clause.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Insured".

4. Insurance ⇐582

Where obligee, having the option, upon breach of contract of terminating the contract, by repossessing the property, or of suing upon the debt, elected to terminate the contract, the obligee not only lost his right to sue for the debt, but by terminating the contract also lost his right to resort to the collateral given as additional security for the payment of the debt, such as rights under "loss payable" rider.

5. Insurance ⇐582

Where buyer of truck, who was not required by conditional sales contract to carry collision or upset insurance, carried such insurance for his own protection and seller's only interest therein was such as accrued under "loss payable" rider, seller, exercising option to terminate sales contract and repossessing truck before commencing action on policy, thereby extinguished his right to recover on insurance policy, since under the policy seller was not an "insured", but as to him the insurance was merely "additional security" for payment of purchase price.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Additional Security".

6. Insurance ⇐582

Under a simple "loss payable" rider attached to insurance policy, the creditor named therein is not deemed to be the "insured" under the policy, but becomes appointee of the fund and is entitled to the proceeds of the policy only as his interest may appear.

7. Insurance ⇐581, 582

Notwithstanding conditional sales contract does not create a lien as security for payment of a debt and title remains in the seller or passes to the buyer accordingly as conditions of sales contract are broken or fulfilled, the doctrine that insurance proceeds payable under a simple "loss payable" rider attached to policy are merely "additional security" for payment of the debt applies whether the transaction is in the form of a mortgage or conditional sale, so that seller's right to recover on policy depends upon continuance of his right under contract to sue for the purchase price.

8. Sales ⇐477(5)

Extension of time for the payment of an installment of purchase price due under conditional sales contract did not extend time for payment of another installment subsequently to become due, so as to render unlawful the seller's repossession of property upon default in payment of second installment.

9. Insurance ⇐504

Where seller by repossessing truck, sold under conditional sales contract, had lost right to recover on collision insurance policy, in which his only interest accrued under simple "loss payable" rider, seller's right to recover under "single interest collision coverage endorsement" attached to policy issued by different company, and which named seller as insured, was not barred by policy bearing loss payable rider, notwithstanding provision of "single interest endorsement" that it constituted "excess insurance" and requiring that "specific insurance" in the name of or for benefit of insured must be first exhausted before resort could be had to the "excess insurance" policy.

* Subsequent opinion 117 P.2d 661.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Peter J. Crosby, Judge.

Action by the Fageol Truck & Coach Company against the Pacific Indemnity Company and Detroit Fire and Marine Insurance Company to recover a collision loss under two policies of insurance issued respectively by the defendants and covering a truck sold by plaintiff under a conditional sales contract to third person. From a judgment for plaintiff against the defendants separately for the full amount of the loss, the Detroit Fire and Marine Insurance Company appeals.

Judgment reversed and remanded, with directions.

White, Wakefield, Leighton & White, Dunn, White & Aiken, and Carlos G. White, all of Oakland, for appellant.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

The plaintiff, Fageol Truck & Coach Co., brought this action to recover a collision loss claimed to be due under two policies of insurance issued respectively by the defendants Pacific Indemnity Company and Detroit Fire and Marine Insurance Company, covering a truck sold by plaintiff under a conditional sales contract to D. M. Thomas, doing business under the name of Empire System. Plaintiff was given judgment against each defendant, separately, for $3,146.81, the full amount of the loss; but the judgment against Pacific Indemnity Company was conditioned that no part thereof was collectible until plaintiff had satisfactorily established that it was unable to satisfy its judgment against Detroit Fire and Marine Insurance Company. The defendants took separate appeals, which are presented on separate records. However, the main legal problems involved in each appeal are interrelated and arise out of the same facts.

The conditional sales contract was executed on November 28, 1932, and the truck was delivered during the latter part of the following month. Both transactions took place at Fageol's branch plant in Seattle. The purchase price was $9,871.76 and a $2,000 down payment was made prior to delivery. An additional payment of $500 fell due on December 21, 1932, and the balance was divided into eighteen equal installment payments of $410 each. The first fell due on January 10, 1933, and the others monthly thereafter, except that no payments were required to be made during the months of February and March, 1933. The contract provided that title to the truck was reserved in the seller until the purchase price was fully paid, and the seller was given the right of repossession in case of default in any of the payments. It also provided that the purchaser should carry insurance against specific risks, such as fire and theft, etc. (collision and upset were omitted); that the amount of insurance should not be less than the unpaid balance of the purchase price, and that the insurance should be carried with a company satisfactory to the seller, with loss, if any, payable to the seller or the purchaser or both, as their interests might appear.

The Pacific Indemnity Company was Fageol's regular insurer, and on the day of the execution of the sales contract, Pacific, at Fageol's request, issued its policy naming Thomas as the insured, with loss payable to Thomas and Fageol as their interests might appear. However, that policy insured only against such risks as fire and theft; consequently an endorsement was attached thereto designated as "Single Interest Collision Coverage Endorsement", or "VSI", insuring Fageol alone against the perils of collision or upset. Thomas was not protected by said endorsement, Fageol alone being named therein as the assured, and the loss if any made payable to Fageol. The endorsement expressly provided that the insurance should be considered as "excess insurance" and that in case any "specific" insurance existed in the name of or for the benefit of the assured, the insurance provided for by the endorsement should not apply or contribute to the loss until such specific insurance should have been exhausted. Furthermore it provided that the loss occasioned by collision or upset was payable only if at the time of the collision or upset the truck was in the possession of the purchaser, the purchaser had defaulted in payments thereon, and the assured had repossessed the truck.

Thomas was aware that he was not protected by the "VSI" endorsement or otherwise under the Pacific policy against the risks of collision or upset; consequently he sought through his brokers in Seattle to obtain a policy giving him coverage against those particular risks; but he was advised that he could secure the same only by taking out a combination policy covering also loss by fire and theft; and on December 20, 1932, the Detroit company issued and delivered to him such a policy, naming him as the assured. That part of the policy pertaining to loss by collision or upset was of a type known as "$250 deductible", that is, it provided that in the event of loss the insurer would pay only that part in excess of $250. It also provided that no recovery should be had under the policy "if at the time a loss occurs there be any other insurance, whether such other insurance be valid and/or collectible or not, covering such loss, which would attach if this insurance had not been effected". Annexed to the policy by way of an endorsement was a "loss payable clause" which read: "Loss, if any, subject to all the terms and conditions of this policy, is payable to Fageol Truck & Coach Company;" and the policy itself contained provisions which read: "Name of Assured. Don M. Thomas d/b/as Empire System * * * loss, if any, payable, as interest may appear, to Assured and (See Endorsements Attached)."

Shortly after the issuance of the Detroit policy, Fageol's Seattle office strongly advised the main office in Oakland to cancel its policy with Pacific and accept in lieu thereof the Detroit policy; but the main office refused so to do; and on January 18, 1933, the truck was damaged in collision.

At the time of the collision the truck was in the possession of the purchaser en route from Spokane to Seattle, and at that time also the purchaser was in default in one of his payments under the sales contract. A thirty-day extension had been granted him on the $500 payment, but he had failed to meet the January 10th installment of $410. On the day the collision happened Thomas requested Fageol to have the truck brought in to its Seattle plant and repaired, but he was advised to get in touch with his insurance company, which he did, and as a result a representative of the Detroit company requested Fageol to bring in the truck, and furnish Detroit with an estimate of the repair costs. Such estimate was submitted on January 25, 1933, and was approved by a Detroit representative, and on January 27, 1933, Fageol started to rebuild the truck. Meanwhile correspondence continued between Fageol's Seattle office and the main office in Oakland in an effort to induce the main office to cancel its Pacific policy and accept in lieu thereof the Detroit policy, which the main office still declined to do. Apparently one of the reasons for such refusal was because of the existence of the $250 deductible clause in the Detroit policy, and the fact that there was a premium due thereon of $243.10. As a result of the discussion which had arisen over the matter of insurance, Fageol on January 31, 1933, through its main office, ordered the repair work stopped. Also at the same time it indicated to its Seattle branch that it intended to repossess the truck; and on February 20, 1933, it exercised its right in this behalf by serving notice on Thomas that because of his default in making the January 10th payment his interest in said truck and the conditional sales contract was terminated. Pacific was notified accordingly.

L. A. Lundstrom, president and manager of Fageol, maintained his offices at the main plant in Oakland, and all of the transactions and correspondence relating to the matter of the insurance were carried on with him. On March 6, 1933, which as will be noted was subsequent to the repossession of the truck, a representative of Pacific called on Lundstrom and after some preliminary discussion relating to the confusion about the insurance stated in substance that in order that the repair work might proceed Pacific was willing to assume the payment of the premium of $243.10 to Detroit, and, also to pay Fageol the $250 deductible under the Detroit policy, adding that his company would handle the matter with Detroit. Lundstrom replied that if the two companies "got together" it was agreeable to him, but that he wanted it definitely understood that he was "going to look to the Pacific Indemnity Company for full recovery" under the policy which it had issued to Fageol. The truth of the matter was that two days prior to this conference and on March 4, 1933, the Seattle representative of Pacific had furnished Thomas with the necessary money to pay the premium on the Detroit policy, and on the following day, March 5th, Thomas paid the same in full to Detroit. In connection with this transaction the evidence shows that Detroit had threatened to cancel its policy as of March 4, 1933, unless the premium was paid, and therefore Pacific gave Thomas the money to pay the same, pursuant to an understanding with Thomas that the Detroit policy should shortly thereafter be cancelled by him and that the returned unearned premium should be repaid to Pacific. Shortly after the conference with Lundstrom on March 6th the rebuilding of the truck was resumed, and at Thomas' request he was furnished an estimate of the costs of the repair job so that he could file proof of loss with Detroit. This he did on March 14, 1933.

In said proof of loss Thomas made no mention of the existence of the Pacific policy; but about that time a Detroit adjuster in checking the repair bill heard that there was other insurance on the truck, and the matter was then referred to Detroit's attorney. After some difficulty he learned of the existence of Pacific's policy, but was informed that Pacific would contribute nothing toward the payment of the loss. Said attorney also learned from Fageol's representative that a letter had been written by someone connected with Fageol terminating the Thomas contract, but that there was a question about the authority of the Fageol employee to write the letter; and the attorney was given to understand that plans were being worked out whereby Thomas would be allowed to retain the truck. In fact neither said attorney nor Detroit knew that Fageol had repossessed the truck until long thereafter; and in the absence of such knowledge said attorney proceeded to obtain a settlement of the loss. To that end and in June, 1933, he obtained drafts for the payment of the loss to be delivered to Thomas and Fageol; and he prepared a form of receipt for them to sign, which he forwarded to them for that purpose. Some several months elapsed, but the receipts were never signed or returned. Meanwhile, in May, 1933, Fageol sold the rebuilt truck to a third party; and on July 14, 1933, Thomas surrendered his policy to Detroit for cancellation and Detroit returned the unearned premium thereon. Several months afterwards the present action was filed.

From the foregoing it is apparent that the real controversy here is between the two insurance companies, that is as to which of the two is liable to Fageol for the payment of the loss it sustained as the result of the collision; and while the determination of that question would seem to be of little concern to Fageol, it has taken the definite position on these appeals that Detroit is primarily liable for the full amount of the loss, and that Pacific's liability is merely secondary, and that therefore the judgment should be affirmed in the form in which it was rendered. We are unable to sustain this view.

The vital issue upon which the decision in the case turns is whether the repossession of the truck by Fageol on February 20, 1933, terminated any right it may have had to recover any of the insurance called for by the policy taken out by Thomas with Detroit. If it did, then necessarily Fageol's loss is collectible only under the VSI endorsement to the policy it took out with Pacific. It is our conclusion that the contentions made by Detroit in this behalf are fully supported by the authorities and the facts.

[1-4] It is held generally that in the absence of agreement as to the matter of insurance, neither the vendor nor the vendee has any interest in the insurance procured by the other; and although it is frequently said that the property is insured, the fact is that an insurance policy is not insurance of the specific thing without regard to ownership, but is a special agreement of indemnity with the person insuring against such loss or damage as he may sustain; and therefore, in the absence of agreement the insurance is not a substitute for the property and the policy does not pass with title thereto. Alexander v. Security First Nat. Bank, 7 Cal.2d 718, 62 P.2d 735. Furthermore, it is held that under an "open" or "loss payable" clause, as distinguished from a "union" or "standard" clause the party named in the clause does not become an "insured" under the policy; he is simply an appointee of the fund (Holbrook v. Baloise Fire Ins. Co., 117 Cal. 561, 49 P. 555; Hayward Lumber, etc., Co. v. Lyders, 139 Cal.App. 517, 34 P.2d 805), and the policy is regarded merely as additional security for the payment of the obligation outstanding between the insured and the party named in the loss payable clause. Reynolds v. London, etc., Ins. Co., 128 Cal. 16, 60 P. 467, 79 Am.St.Rep. 17; 124 A.L.R. 1034, note. And the law is well settled that the right of an obligee to resort to additional security depends necessarily on his right to sue and recover upon the debt; and that where a breach occurs and the obligee is given the option of terminating the contract by taking or repossessing the property, or of suing upon the debt, and he elects to terminate the contract, he not only loses his right to sue for the debt, but by terminating his contract he loses his right to resort to the collateral given as additional security for the payment of the debt. Reynolds v. London, etc., Ins. Co., supra; Murphy v. Hellman Commercial, etc., Bank, 43 Cal. App. 579, 185 P. 485; Frankel v. Rosenfield, 95 Cal.App. 647, 273 P. 122.

[5] In the present case Thomas was not required by the conditional sales contract to take out collision or upset insurance, but he did so for his own protection; and he alone was named in the policy as the insured; the only interest Fageol acquired in that policy or to the proceeds payable thereunder was by reason of the "loss payable" endorsement. Therefore as to Fageol the policy served merely as additional security for the payment of the debt due from Thomas under the conditional sales contract; and Fageol concedes that long before the commencement of this action, exercising the option granted by the conditional sales contract, it elected to extinguish the debt and repossess the truck. In this regard the notice it served on Thomas stated: "* * * we are repossessing the above mentioned truck, and are cancelling the balance owing us by you on said contract." And subsequently Fageol resold the truck as its own. Therefore, under the authorities cited, by extinguishing the debt, Fageol likewise extinguished its right to resort to the collateral given as additional security for the payment of the debt.

[6] In support of its contention that repossession of the truck did not terminate its right to collect under the Detroit policy, Fageol relies principally upon the case of Brown v. Northwestern Mutual Fire Ass'n, 176 Wash. 693, 30 P.2d 640. But factually that case is essentially different from the present one, mainly for the reason that it was not founded on a simple type of "loss payable" clause such as we have here attached by way of rider. That case involved the proceeds of a fire insurance policy which the vendees were required to take out for the benefit of the vendors under a conditional sales contract for the sale of real property; and the clause in question was couched in such language that when considered in the light of the peculiar facts of that case the court was warranted in holding as it did that the vendors "were just as much insured" under the policy as the vendees; hence that the vendors were entitled to the benefits of the policy. As shown by earlier decisions, however, notably Inland Finance Co. v. Home Ins. Co., 134 Wash. 485, 236 P. 73, 48 A.L.R. 121, the state of Washington fully recognizes and adheres to the doctrine prevailing in practically all jurisdictions (see note 124 A.L.R. 1034) that under a simple "loss payable" rider such as we have here the creditor named therein is not deemed to be the "insured" under the policy, but becomes merely an appointee of the fund and is entitled to the proceeds of the policy only as his interest may appear. There is nothing to be found in the decision in Brown v. Northwestern Mutual Fire Ass'n., supra, indicating an intention to repudiate the above universal doctrine.

[7] It is further contended that the doctrine declaring that insurance proceeds payable under a simple "loss payable" rider shall be considered merely as additional security for the payment of debt applies only in cases of mortgages, because there the relationship of debtor and creditor exists; and in support of such contention Fageol quotes Washington cases to the effect that conditional sales contracts "do not create a lien as security for the payment of a debt, nor do they ordinarily create the relationship of debtor and creditor between the contracting parties"; that "title remains in the vendor or passes from him to the vendee accordingly as the conditions of the sale contract are broken or fulfilled * * *." Barbour v. Hodge, 99 Wash. 578, 170 P. 115, 119; Holt Mfg. Co. v. Jassaud, 132 Wash. 667, 233 P. 35, 38 A.L.R. 1312; Lahn & Simons v. Matzen Woolen Mills, 147 Wash. 560, 266 P. 697. But no authority has been cited from any jurisdiction which holds that the additional security doctrine governing in the case of mortgages does not apply to conditional sales contracts, nor have any sound reasons been advanced why said doctrine should not apply alike to both. Manifestly in both situations there is an existing debt which in the case of a mortgage the mortgagor agrees to pay and in the case of a conditional sales contract the vendee agrees to pay, either by the terms of the instrument itself or by a separate writing. It is true that in a conditional sale "title" does not pass but is retained by the seller as a security, while in the case of a mortgage "title" passes and the seller retains only a "lien" as security. But, fundamentally, in both transactions security for the indebtedness is the important feature of the transaction. The economic function of the two types of instruments is identical. Under such circumstances important rights and duties of the parties should not be made to depend on the mere form of the transaction. In Bank of Italy, etc., Ass'n v. Bentley, 217 Cal. 644, 657, 20 P.2d 940, 945, the court in discussing deeds of trust and mortgages, after pointing out that under a deed of trust "title" passes to the trustee, while in a mortgage only a "lien" is created, stated: "Considering all these cases, we do not feel justified in holding, merely because 'title' passes by a deed of trust, while only a 'lien' is created by a mortgage, that, in reference to the necessity of exhausting the security before enforcing the obligation secured, deeds of trust and mortgages are so different that in one case the security must be exhausted before suit on the personal obligation, while, in the other, no such necessity exists. Fundamentally, it cannot be doubted that in both situations the security for an indebtedness is the important and essential thing in the whole transaction. The economic function of the two instruments would seem to be identical. Where there is one and the same object to be accomplished, important rights and duties of the parties should not be made to depend on the more or less accidental form of the security." For the same reasons there is ample justification for holding that the doctrine that insurance proceeds payable under a simple "loss payable" rider shall be considered as additional security for the payment of the debt should apply whether the transaction is in the form of a mortgage or conditional sale.

[8] In view of the conclusion reached on the vital issue above discussed, it is unnecessary to inquire into the remaining points raised by the respective appeals, except the one urged by Pacific in furtherance of its appeal, to the effect that the repossession of the truck by Fageol was unlawful, and that therefore there can be no recovery against Pacific. In this connection it is conceded that Fageol actually repossessed the truck and afterwards sold it as its own property; but Pacific asserts that the extension of time granted by Fageol to Thomas to make the $500 payment operated to extend also the time to pay the installment upon which the repossession purports to have been based. Assuming that Pacific is in a position to raise this point, the record shows that it is without merit. It clearly appears therefrom that except as to the $500 payment Fageol at all times insisted upon prompt payment, and did nothing to lull Thomas into the belief that prompt performance would not be insisted upon. In fact there is no evidence in the record that Thomas ever believed that plaintiff would not require prompt performance.

[9] For the reasons hereinabove set forth, it is ordered that the judgment be reversed with directions to the trial court to revise its conclusions of law to conform to the views hereinabove expressed; that thereupon judgment be entered in favor of the defendant Detroit Fire and Marine Insurance Company, and an unconditional judgment be entered against the Pacific Indemnity Company in favor of Fageol Truck & Coach Co. for the full amount of the collision loss sustained by it. It is further ordered that on appeal No. 10969 Detroit Fire and Marine Insurance Company recover its costs against Fageol Truck & Coach Co., and that on appeal No. 10976, 110 P.2d 1090, Fageol Truck & Coach Co. recover its costs against Pacific Indemnity Company.

We concur: PETERS, P. J.; WARD, J.

FAGEOL TRUCK & COACH CO. v. PACIFIC INDEMNITY CO. et al.*

Civ. 10976.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 5, 1941.

Hearing Granted May 3, 1941.

Insurance ⇐504

Where seller by repossessing truck sold under conditional sales contract had lost right to recover on collision insurance policy in which his only interest accrued under simple "loss payable" rider, seller's right to recover under "single interest collision coverage endorsement" attached to policy issued by different company, and which named seller alone as insured, was not barred by policy bearing loss payable rider, notwithstanding provision of "single interest

* Subsequent opinion 117 P.2d 669.

endorsement" that it constituted "excess insurance" and requiring that "specific insurance" in the name of or for benefit of insured must be first exhausted before resort could be had to the "excess insurance" policy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Peter J. Crosby, Judge.

Action by Fageol Truck & Coach Company against the Pacific Indemnity Company and others to recover a collision loss claimed to be due under two policies of insurance issued, respectively, by the named defendant and another insurance company and covering a truck sold by plaintiff under conditional sales contract to third person. From a judgment for plaintiff against each defendant separately for full amount of the loss, the named defendant appeals.

Judgment reversed and remanded, with directions.

Bronson, Bronson & McKinnon and Kirke LaShelle, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

This is a companion appeal to Fageol Truck & Coach Co. (a corporation), Plaintiff and Respondent, v. Pacific Indemnity Company (a corporation), and Detroit Fire and Marine Insurance Company (a corporation), Defendants, Detroit Fire and Marine Insurance Company (a corporation), Appellant, 110 P.2d 1085, this day decided. For the reasons and upon the grounds stated in the opinion filed therein it is ordered that the judgment be reversed with directions to the trial court to revise its conclusions of law to conform to the views expressed in said opinion; that thereupon judgment be entered in favor of the defendant Detroit Fire and Marine Insurance Company, and an unconditional judgment be entered against the Pacific Indemnity Company in favor of Fageol Truck & Coach Co. for the full amount of the collision loss sustained by it. It is further ordered that on the present appeal Fageol Truck & Coach Co. recover its costs against Pacific Indemnity Company.

We concur: PETERS, P. J.; WARD, J.

43 Cal.App.2d 435

FERGUSON v. NAKAHARA et al.

CUSACK v. NAKAHARA et al.

Civ. 2548, 2549.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 12, 1941.

1. Appeal and error ⇐996, 1002

In determining appellants' contention that jury's verdicts are contrary to evidence and that contributory negligence, barring respondents' recovery for personal injuries, property damage and wrongful death, appears as matter of law, evidence must be reviewed under rule that if there is any real and substantial conflict in evidence or reasonable inferences therefrom, appellate court will not set aside jury's fact findings.

2. Automobiles ⇐245(79)

In actions for injuries to owner, and death of driver, of automobile colliding with truck, questions whether it was practical and safe for decedent to drive automobile into and along center lane of highway and whether such lane was clearly visible ahead of him and clear of traffic for safe distance were fact issues, on which reasonable men might differ, so that question of decedent's contributory negligence was for jury. Vehicle Code, § 526, St.1935, p. 181.

3. Automobiles ⇐245(15)

In actions for injuries to owner, and death of driver, of automobile colliding with truck, whether defendant truck driver pulled truck sharply to left into center lane of highway behind another truck and directly in front of approaching automobile and should have returned to right lane behind such other truck and thereby avoided collision were fact issues, on which reasonable men might differ, so that question of truck driver's negligence was for jury. Vehicle Code, § 526, St.1935, p. 181.

4. Automobiles ⇐226(2)

In actions for injuries to owner, and death of driver, of automobile colliding with truck, decedent's negligence, if believed by jurors, was only one element of contributory negligence and of no significance unless they also believed from preponderance of evidence that such negligence proximately caused or contributed to injuries and death.

5. Negligence ⇐136(9)

When evidence on question of contributory negligence is conflicting and reasonable men might differ as to proper inferences or conclusions therefrom, issue as to whether such negligence was proximate cause of injuries complained of is for jury to determine.

6. Trial ⇐237(3)

In actions for injuries to owner, and death of driver, of automobile colliding with truck, instruction that if jury found that greater weight of all evidence was in favor of contributory negligence as proved fact, or if evidence on issues was evenly balanced or preponderated against such negligence, it was not proved, and jury should find that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, was erroneous as imposing on defendants impossibility of proving contributory negligence, except possibly by criminal rule of beyond reasonable doubt and to moral certainty. Code Civ.Proc. § 2061.

7. Negligence ⇐135

A party having affirmative of issue of contributory negligence in civil action is not required to prove such negligence beyond reasonable doubt and to moral certainty. Code Civ.Proc. § 2061.

8. Trial ⇐296(8)

In determining whether jury may have been misled by erroneous instruction as to evidence required to prove contributory negligence, it must be construed in connection with other instructions on subjects of burden of proof and weight of evidence.

9. Trial ⇐295(1)

All instructions of trial court must be considered and construed as a whole to determine whether they contain reversible error.

10. Trial ⇐296(1)

The omission of essential element of cause in single instruction, correctly declaring law so far as it goes, is ordinarily cured by correctly giving such element in another instruction.

11. Trial ⇐296(1)

Prejudicial error in instruction, containing materially incorrect statement of essential principle of law, is not ordinarily cured by correct declaration of same principle in another instruction.

12. Appeal and error ⇐1064(1)

The giving of instructions which are contradictory in essential elements may warrant reversal of judgment on jury's verdict because it is impossible to determine which charge controlled jury's determination.

13. Appeal and error ⇐1064(1)

In actions for injuries to owner, and death of driver, of automobile colliding with truck, the giving of erroneous instruction that if greater weight of evidence was in favor of contributory negligence as proved fact or evidence on issues was evenly balanced or preponderated against such negligence, it was not proved, and jury should find that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, held prejudicial error as in direct conflict with other more general and correct instructions on burden of proof and weight of evidence.

14. Automobiles ⇐246(25)

In actions for injuries to owner, and death of driver, of automobile colliding with truck, defendants, relying on provisions of statute governing operation of vehicles on three-lane highways to establish defense of decedent's contributory negligence in driving in center lane of highway, were entitled to instruction that violation of such statute constituted negligence as matter of law, not merely that such violation constituted some evidence of negligence. Vehicle Code, § 526, St.1935, p. 181.

15. Automobiles ⇐147

The violation of a section of Vehicle Code generally constitutes negligence as matter of law, not merely some evidence of negligence. Vehicle Code, § 1 et seq., St.1935, p. 93 et seq.

16. Trial ⇐296(4)

In actions for injuries to owner, and death of driver, of automobile colliding with truck, error in giving instruction that violation of any provision of Motor Vehicle Code constitutes some evidence of negligence, instead of instruction that such violation constitutes negligence as matter of law, was not corrected by giving of instruction that such owner and decedent were guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery, if decedent failed to use care of reasonably prudent person in not keeping appropriate lookout or not operating and controlling automobile with ordinary care.

17. Appeal and error ⇐1064(1)

In actions for injuries to owner, and death of driver, of automobile colliding with truck, giving of erroneous instruction that violation of any provision of Motor Vehicle

Code constitutes some evidence of negligence, instead of instruction that such violation constitutes negligence as matter of law, in connection with instruction quoting provisions of code section governing operation of vehicles on three-lane highways, was prejudicial to defendants as permitting jurors to exercise their independent judgments as to whether decedent's violation of such section constituted negligence imputable to plaintiffs. Vehicle Code, § 526, St.1935, p. 181.

18. Appeal and error ⇐1064(1)

In actions for injuries to owner, and death of driver, of automobile colliding with truck, where evidence was not only conflicting, but quite evenly balanced on issues of defendants' negligence and contributory negligence of plaintiff owner and decedent, giving of erroneous instructions on such issues was prejudicial to defendants, so as to require reversal of judgments on verdicts for plaintiffs.

Appeals from Superior Court, Kern County; W. L. Bradshaw, Judge.

Two actions, consolidated for trial, by F. C. Ferguson and Lettie Cusack, respectively, against George Nakahara and others for personal injuries to plaintiff Ferguson, damage to his automobile, and wrongful death of plaintiff Cusack's husband, William Cusack. Judgments for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Borton, Petrini, Conron & Borton, of Bakersfield, for appellants.

Brittan & Mack, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

MORAN, Justice pro tem.

Defendants have appealed from judgments rendered against them in these two actions, consolidated for trial and now considered together on appeal as they present identical issues.

Both actions arise out of a collision between a Ford sedan driven by William Cusack and owned by F. C. Ferguson who was riding therein at the time, and a GMC truck driven by George Nakahara and owned by Harry Nagai Produce Company. Ferguson was injured and his Ford damaged. William Cusack was killed.

Ferguson filed suit against the driver and the owner of the truck to recover damages for alleged personal injuries sustained and damage suffered to his automobile.

Lettie Cusack, the widow of William Cusack, instituted the second action to recover damages for the alleged wrongful death of her husband. The two cases were tried together before a jury and resulted in verdicts in favor of both plaintiffs.

[1] The first of three grounds relied upon by appellants for a reversal of the judgments is that the verdicts are contrary to the evidence and that contributory negligence appears as a matter of law without substantial conflict in the evidence. In determining this contention of appellants it is necessary that we review the evidence under the rule that if there is any real and substantial conflict in the evidence or reasonable inferences that may be drawn therefrom, the appellate court will not set aside the findings of fact made by the jury in the lower court.

Viewing the evidence most favorable to the respondents the following facts appear: The collision of the Ford and the GMC truck occurred at about 9:30 p. m., June 26, 1938, in the center lane of U. S. highway No. 99, about a mile north of Lebec, in the county of Kern. The paved portion of the highway at that point, and for some distance on either side thereof, was straight and extended in a northerly and southerly direction. The pavement was thirty feet in width and marked with white lines into three traffic lanes, each ten feet in width, with an asphalt shoulder eight feet in width on each side.

The deceased, William Cusack, was driving the Ford sedan in a northerly direction at a speed of from forty-five to fifty miles an hour. He passed a vehicle driven by Glenn Burd, proceeding in the same direction, and then returned to the east traffic lane behind an unidentified vehicle which was also traveling north in the easterly lane. Cusack next drove the Ford to his left and partially within the center lane so that its left wheels were about two feet west of the white line dividing the east and center traffic lanes. The Ford continued in this position, following the unidentified vehicle, without any alteration of its course or change of speed until shortly before the collision of the Ford with the GMC truck, when it was turned back slightly to the east.

As the Ford was proceeding north, defendant Nakahara was driving the GMC truck in a southerly direction behind a one and one-half ton Reo Speedwagon which was being driven by August Gnese and was loaded with boxes of figs weighing between four and five tons and stacked to a height of eight feet from the ground. A semi-truck and trailer was directly in front of the Reo and was proceeding in the same direction. Gnese blinked the lights of the Reo and the driver of the semi-truck and trailer then blinked its lights as a signal that the Reo might pass. Gnese then drove into the center lane of traffic to pass the semi-truck and trailer and seeing the Ford sedan approaching from the south at a distance of two hundred fifty feet, "or probably farther", applied his brakes and immediately turned to his right; the driver of the semi-truck and trailer pulled his truck slightly to his right and Gnese drove back into the west lane behind the semi-truck and trailer. Nakahara, traveling about fifty feet behind the Reo and at a speed of about twenty-five miles an hour, and gaining on the Reo, when about one hundred feet north of the point of collision, pulled the GMC truck into the middle lane behind the Reo, which obstructed his view of northbound traffic, and, as the Reo slowed down and turned into the west traffic lane, Nakahara, then twenty-five feet back of it and without applying his brakes, attempted to go around the Reo to its left. The collision of the Ford and the GMC truck immediately followed, the left front fender and wheel of the Ford coming into contact with the left front corner of the bed of the GMC truck, at a point about fourteen inches west of the white line dividing the east and center traffic lanes. The Ford was badly damaged and William Cusack and Carl Cross, who was also riding in the Ford, were killed, and the plaintiff Ferguson, who was asleep at the time, was seriously injured.

The eyewitnesses to the collision were Burd, Gnese and Nakahara. Burd and Gnese testified at the trial, but as Nakahara was not present, his deposition, previously taken, was read into the evidence. The testimony of these witnesses was conflicting in many respects with the testimony of the others and the testimony of each of them contains conflicting and contradictory statements within itself. As it would serve no useful purpose and would unduly extend the length of this decision, we will not discuss these conflicts.

It is admitted by the parties that any negligence or contributory negligence on the part of Cusack would be imputed to Ferguson and to Mrs. Cusack.

Appellants contend that Cusack violated the provisions of subdivision a of section 526 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 181, by driving the Ford partially within both the east and center lanes of travel when it was not safe for him to do so and at a time when there were no other vehicles to his right in the easterly lane; that he also violated the provisions of subdivision b of this section by driving the Ford into the center lane in overtaking and passing another vehicle where the roadway ahead was clearly visible but the center lane was not clear of traffic within a safe distance, and that these acts on his part constituted negligence as a matter of law, citing the cases of Reeves v. La Pinta, 25 Cal.App.2d 680, 78 P.2d 465, and Mazgedian v. Swift & Co., 22 Cal.App.2d 570, 71 P.2d 833.

Section 526 of the Vehicle Code, in effect at the time of the accident, governing the driving of vehicles upon a three-lane highway, provided:

"Whenever any roadway has been divided into three or more clearly marked lanes for traffic the following rules in addition to all others consistent herewith shall apply:

"(a) A vehicle shall be driven as nearly as practical (practicable) entirely within a single lane and shall not be moved from such lane until the driver has first ascertained that such movement can be made with safety.

"(b) Upon a roadway which is divided into three lanes a vehicle shall not be driven in the center lane except when overtaking and passing another vehicle where the roadway ahead is clearly visible and such center lane is clear of traffic within a safe distance, * * *."

[2, 3] The members of the jury may have believed from the evidence that Cusack drove the Ford into the center lane at a distance of more than two hundred and fifty feet south of the Reo, with the intention of passing the unidentified vehicle proceeding north in the east lane ahead of him, at about the same time the Reo entered it, or that Gnese started to drive the Reo back into the west lane at the same time, or at approximately the same time that Cusack entered the center lane, thereby conceding the right-of-way to him, and that Nakahara turned the GMC truck sharply to his left into the center lane directly in front of the Ford, to avoid a collision with the rear end of the Reo which had slowed down and turned to its right, and that Cusack could not have seen and had no way of knowing that the GMC truck was following the Reo so closely, until almost the moment the collision occurred.

The questions as to whether it was practical and safe for Cusack to drive the Ford into the center lane and then pursue the line of travel that he followed; whether the center lane was clearly visible ahead of him and clear of traffic for a safe distance, and whether Nakahara pulled his truck sharply to his left into the center lane back of the Reo and directly in front of the Ford, or whether he should have returned to the west lane of travel behind the Reo and thereby have avoided the collision, were all of fact for the jury, and, we believe, were issues of facts on which reasonable men might differ.

[4, 5] Furthermore, if the members of the jury believed that Cusack was negligent in the operation of the Ford, such negligence was only one element of contributory negligence and was of no significance in these cases unless the members of the jury also believed, from a preponderance of the evidence, that such negligence proximately caused or proximately contributed to the injuries of Ferguson and the death of Cusack. When the evidence is conflicting and reasonable men might differ as to the inferences or conclusions which ought to be drawn from it, the issue of proximate cause is also one for the jury to determine. Ketchum v. Pattee, 37 Cal.App.2d 122, 98 P.2d 1051; Rivera v. Hasenjaeger, 29 Cal. App.2d 431, 432, 85 P.2d 167.

As we have heretofore indicated, the question of negligence on the part of the defendant Nakahara, and the question of contributory negligence on the part of Cusack, were matters for the determination of the jury and were properly submitted to it.

[6-8] The second contention of appellants is that the court erred in giving an instruction offered by plaintiffs, purporting to deal with the burden of proof upon the issues of negligence and contributory negligence. The instruction complained of appears in the last sentence of the following instruction given by the court: "In determining the issue of negligence and of contributory negligence the court instructs you that the burden of proving negligence is upon the party asserting such negligence; but in determining whether there has been such negligence you will consider all of the evidence bearing upon that subject regardless of which party introduced the same. That is to say, if you find the greater weight of all the evidence is in favor of the negligence of the defendants, you should accept that as a proved fact in the case; while of the evidence on that issue is, in your judgment, evenly balanced or preponderates against such negligence, it is not proved, and you should find that the defendants were not negligent. If you find that the greater weight of all the evidence is in favor of the contributory negligence as a proved fact, or if the evidence on the issues, is, in your judgment, evenly balanced, or preponderates against such contributory negligence it is not proved, and you should find that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence." (Emphasis ours.)

The last sentence of this instruction, specifically referring to contributory negligence, most obviously, was bungled, in that it instructed the jurors that if they should find that the greater weight of all the evidence was in favor of the contributory negligence as a proved fact, then, notwithstanding that weight of the evidence they must find that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.

Standing alone, this erroneous instruction imposed upon the appellants the impossibility of ever proving contributory negligence, except possibly by the criminal rule of beyond reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty, which would place upon them an undue burden that is not required of a party having the affirmative of such issue in a civil action. Sec. 2061, Code Civ. Proc.; Cooper v. Spring Valley Water Co., 16 Cal.App. 17, 116 P. 298; Berry v. Maywood Mutual Water Co., 11 Cal.App.2d 479, 53 P.2d 1032. In determining whether the jury may have been misled by this erroneous instruction, it must be construed in connection with the other instructions given by the court, touching upon the subjects of burden of proof and weight of the evidence. In the first instruction given in regard thereto, the court defined burden of proof in general terms correctly, but did not direct the jury's attention to the subjects of negligence and contributory negligence. Then, after giving the instruction above quoted, the court defined proximate cause and next advised the jury as follows: "In order, therefore, to find a verdict for the plaintiff, you must not only find from a preponderance of all the evidence that the defendants were negligent, but also that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff, and you must further find that the evidence fails to show by a preponderance thereof that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence contributing proximately thereto." In another instruction the court stated: "You are instructed that contributory negligence as used in these instructions is such negligence on the part of the plaintiffs as contributed to the accident complained of. If the deceased William Cusack failed to use the care of a reasonably prudent person under the same or similar circumstances, either in driving too fast or in not seeing the things of the traffic that he should have seen, or failed to operate and control his automobile with ordinary care, then the plaintiffs Lettie Cusack and F. C. Ferguson are guilty of contributory negligence, and if such negligence contributed even in the slightest degree to the injuries complained of plaintiffs cannot recover in this action."

[9-12] All instructions of the court are to be considered and construed as a whole to determine whether they contain reversible error. "If a single instruction omits an essential element of the cause, but is a correct declaration of the law so far as it goes, and the omitted element is correctly given in another instruction, the omission will ordinarily be cured thereby. If, however, an essential principle of law is stated to the jury materially incorrect, this prejudicial error will not ordinarily be cured by a correct declaration of the same principle in another instruction. The giving of instructions which are contradictory in essential elements may warrant the reversal of a judgment, for the reason that it is impossible to determine which charge controlled the determination of the jury." Soda v. Marriott, 118 Cal.App. 635, 5 P.2d 675, 678. See, also, Akers v. Cowan, 26 Cal.App.2d 694, 80 P.2d 143.

[13] It is evident from a reading and consideration of all the instructions given by the court in these cases that the erroneous instruction is in direct conflict with the other more general and correct instructions upon the subjects of burden of proof and weight of the evidence, especially those referring to contributory negligence, and we are convinced that this conflict cannot be disregarded as it may have had a controlling influence upon the minds of the jurors.

[14, 15] Appellants also contend that the court committed prejudicial error in instructing the jury, at the request of respondents, that: "The violation of any provision of the Motor Vehicle Code, except as you are otherwise instructed in these instructions, also constitutes some evidence of negligence."

Respondents offered an instruction quoting the provisions of section 526 of the Vehicle Code, and another quoting section 531 of the same code. Both of these instructions were given by the court, but neither of them nor any other instruction given, contained a statement that a violation of these sections, or either of them, constituted negligence as a matter of law.

Appellants relied upon the provisions of section 526 of the Vehicle Code to establish their defense of contributory negligence, and even though the provisions of that section applied alike to them and to respondents, they were entitled to an instruction that a violation thereof constituted negligence as a matter of law, rather than that such a violation was merely some evidence of negligence. It has long been established that the violation of a section of the Vehicle Code St.1935, p. 93, (with a few express exceptions not applicable here) constitutes negligence as a matter of law and not merely some evidence of negligence. Reeves v. La Pinta, supra; Mazgedian v. Swift & Co., supra.

[16, 17] Although the court further instructed the jury that if William Cusack failed to use the care of a reasonably prudent person in not keeping an appropriate lookout or in not operating and controlling his car with ordinary care, then the plaintiffs were guilty of contributory negligence and if such negligence contributed to their injuries they could not recover, did not correct the error created by the giving of the faulty instruction. The effect of the giving of this erroneous instruction in connection with the instruction quoting the provisions of section 526 of the Vehicle Code, was to permit the jurors to exercise their independent judgments as to whether or not a violation of this section, if they found that Cusack violated any of the provisions thereof, constituted negligence on his part, imputable to respondents, when appellants were entitled to a specific and definite instruction that a violation of the section constituted negligence as a matter of law, without any further proof.

[18] The evidence in these cases was not only conflicting but was quite evenly balanced upon the issues of negligence and contributory negligence. Appellants were entitled to have had the cases presented on correct and proper instructions. The giving of the two erroneous instructions must be held to have been prejudicial.

The judgments are reversed and both causes are remanded for new trial.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

43 Cal.App.2d Supp. 851

SILVER SWAN LIQUOR CORPORATION v. ADAMS.

No. 1392.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, California.

Feb. 5, 1941.

1. Automobiles ⇐235
Infants ⇐89

A nonresident minor motorist, on whom personal service was made in Canada by duly qualified officer, was properly served with process under provision in Vehicle Code relating to service of process on nonresident motorist. Vehicle Code, § 404, St. 1935, p. 154; Civ.Code, § 33.

2. Automobiles ⇐235
Infants ⇐89

The statutory designation of Director of Motor Vehicles as attorney upon whom process may be served in action against nonresident motorist is binding on minor nonresident motorist using highways of state, notwithstanding the general rule that delegation of power attempted by minor himself is void. Vehicle Code, § 404, St.1935, p. 154; Civ.Code, § 33.

Action by the Silver Swan Liquor Corporation against John R. Adams, for damages allegedly sustained by the plaintiff as result of the negligent operation of an automobile by the defendant. From an order granting defendants motion to quash service of process on the defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

Order reversed.

Shipper & Benard, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, for respondent.

McWILLIAMS, Judge.

Plaintiff and appellant filed suit against defendant for damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff as a result of the negligent operation by defendant of an automobile which he was driving. As counsel for respondent correctly states: "The sole question before this court is whether or not service can be effected under Sec. 404 of the California Vehicle Code, St. 1935, p. 154, where the defendant, a non-resident of California, was (1) a minor at the time of the collision, and (2) without the United States at the time service was attempted."

The requirements of that section of the Vehicle Code appear to have been fully complied with by personal service on the defendant at Quebec, Canada, by a fully qualified officer. Nevertheless, defendant's motion to quash upon the ground that the service made did not comply with Section 404(e) of the Code was granted by the lower court.

[1, 2] Respondent urges in support of the ruling of that court that the service having been made outside the territorial boundaries of the United States was void. In support of this position defendant's counsel cite the New York case of Scott v. Dickerson, 169 Misc. 1047, 8 N.Y.S.2d 656, 657. That case obviously is not in point. The statute there involved provided for service on the nonresident by an attorney "qualified to practice in the state" where such service was made. Hence the New York court held in effect that by clear implication service in a foreign jurisdiction was not authorized under the language of the statute. Our Vehicle Code provides, it will be noted, for service "in the State or jurisdiction where the defendant is found."

Respondent also contends in support of the ruling of the lower court that service on a nonresident motorist under the section involved is invalid when the defendant is a minor. In support of this contention respondent cites Section 33 of the California

Civil Code. That section provides that a minor cannot give a delegation of power. In answer to respondent's contention appellant cites the New York case of Gesell v. Wells, 229 App.Div. 11, 240 N.Y.S. 628, 631 which was affirmed by the Court of Appeals, 254 N.Y. 604, 173 N.E. 885. The New York Supreme Court held that the provision for service on a nonresident was enacted under the police power of the state and that the provision was one reasonably calculated to promote care and accountability on the part of all who used the highways of that state for the operation of dangerous machines, such as motor vehicles. As the court further said:

"Surely they are not less dangerous in the hands of minors. It is inconceivable that there should have been any legislative intent to exclude minors. But it is urged that the statute in question is based upon an implied agreement which, in the case of an infant, may be repudiated at his election. It would be strange if a police regulation of the state could be thus evaded."

Respondent attempts to distinguish this case on the ground that in New York a minor's delegation of power is voidable, whereas in California it is void. It is true that such is the general rule in this state when the minor himself attempts to delegate power as by the appointment of an attorney in fact. But the situation here presented does not involve a voluntary appointment by a minor. The law has made the appointment and the defendant by using the highways of the state has, under the express terms of Sub. (b) of Sec. 404 of the Vehicle Code, signified his acquiescence in such appointment. Surely the minor may not thereafter be permitted to deny the validity of the appointment. It would be as reasonable to contend that when a court appointed a guardian ad litem for a minor when he was sued the minor could thereafter repudiate the appointment.

The order of the lower court is reversed.

We concur: GRIFFIN, P. J.; FOLEY, J.

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
3 1786 10047 2023

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

SAN DIEGO

NON-CIRCULATING

